27 By faith he left Egypt, not fearing the king’s fierceness; for he endured as though seeing the Invisible One.

28 By faith he celebrated the Pasch and the pouring out of blood, lest the one devastating the firstborn should touch them.

29 By faith they passed through the Red Sea as through dry land; when the Egyptians tried this, they were devoured.

30 By faith the walls of Jericho fell after seven days of circling.

31 By faith Rahab the prostitute did not perish with the unbelieving, receiving the explorers with peace.

32 And what more shall I say? For time will fail me in recounting Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, David, Samuel, and the prophets,

33 who through faith conquered kingdoms, practiced justice, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions,

34 quenched the force of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, became strong out of weakness, were made valiant in war, and routed the camps of foreigners.

35 Women received their dead by resurrection; but others were stretched, not accepting redemption, so that they might find a better resurrection.

36 But others experienced mockeries and blows, and moreover chains and prisons;

37 they were stoned, they were cut apart, they were tested, they died in the slaughter of the sword, they went about in sheepskins, in goatskins, needy, distressed, afflicted—

38 those of whom the world was not worthy—wandering in deserts, in mountains, in caves, and in caverns of the earth.

39 And all these, approved by the testimony of faith, did not receive the promise,

40 God providing something better for us, so that they should not be brought to completion without us.

Chapter 12

1 Therefore we also, having so great a cloud of witnesses laid upon us, laying aside every weight and the sin surrounding us, let us run with endurance toward the contest set before us,

2 looking to Jesus, the author and consummator of faith, who, for the joy set before him, endured the cross, despising shame, and sits at the right hand of the throne of God.

3 For consider him who endured such contradiction against himself from sinners, so that you may not grow weary, growing faint in your spirits.

4 For you have not yet resisted to the point of blood, fighting against sin;

5 and you have forgotten the consolation that speaks to you as to sons, saying: “My son, do not neglect the discipline of the Lord, nor grow weary while you are reproved by him.

6 For whom the Lord loves, he chastens; and he scourges every son whom he receives.”

7 Persevere in discipline. God offers himself to you as to sons; for what son is there whom a father does not correct?

8 But if you are outside discipline, of which all have been made participants, then you are adulterers and not sons.

9 Then indeed we had the fathers of our flesh as instructors, and we revered them; shall we not much more obey the Father of spirits, and live?

10 And they indeed instructed us for a time of few days, according to their own will; but he instructs us toward what is useful in receiving his sanctification.

11 Now every discipline, for the present, indeed seems to be not of joy but of sorrow; but afterward it will render the most peaceful fruit of justice to those trained by it.

12 Therefore raise up the drooping hands and loosened knees,

13 and make straight steps for your feet, so that whoever limps may not stray, but rather be healed.

14 Pursue peace with all, and holiness, without which no one will see God,

15 watching lest anyone fall short of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness, springing upward, hinder, and through it many be defiled;

16 lest anyone be a fornicator or profane like Esau, who for one meal sold his rights as firstborn.

17 For know that afterward also, desiring to inherit the blessing, he was rejected; for he found no place of repentance, although he had sought it with tears.

18 For you have not approached a mountain that can be touched, and a fire that can be kindled, and whirlwind, and darkness, and storm,

19 and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; those who heard it excused themselves, lest the word be spoken to them.

20 For they could not bear what was being said: “And if a beast touches the mountain, it shall be stoned.”

21 And so terrible was what appeared. Moses said: “I am terrified and trembling.”

22 But you have approached Mount Zion, and the city of the living God, heavenly Jerusalem, and the assembly of many thousands of angels,

23 and the church of the firstborn, who are enrolled in the heavens, and God the judge of all, and the spirits of the just made perfect,

24 and Jesus the mediator of the new testament, and the sprinkling of blood speaking better than Abel.

25 See that you do not refuse the one speaking. For if they did not escape, refusing him who spoke upon earth, much more shall we not escape, we who turn away from the one speaking to us from heaven.

26 His voice moved the earth then; but now he promises, saying: “Yet once more, and I will move not only the earth but also heaven.”

27 Now his saying “Yet once more” declares the removal of movable things, as of things made, so that those things which are immovable may remain.

28 Therefore, receiving an immovable kingdom, we have grace; through it let us serve, pleasing God, with fear and reverence.

29 For indeed our God is a consuming fire.

Chapter 13

1 Let brotherly charity remain in you,

2 and do not forget hospitality; for through it some were unaware when angels were received as guests.

3 Remember those in bonds, as though bound together with them, and those who suffer, as though you yourselves also remain in the body.

4 Marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled. For God will judge fornicators and adulterers.

5 Let your conduct be without avarice; be content with present things, for he himself said: “I will not forsake you, nor abandon you,”

6 so that we may confidently say: “The Lord is my helper; I will not fear what man may do to me.”

7 Remember your leaders, who spoke to you the word of God; contemplating the end of their way of life, imitate their faith.

8 Jesus Christ yesterday and today—he himself also through the ages.

9 Do not be led away by varied and foreign doctrines. For it is best to establish the heart by grace, not by foods, which did not profit those walking in them.

10 We have an altar from which those who attend upon the tabernacle have no power to eat.

11 For the bodies of those animals whose blood is brought into the Holy Places by the high priest for sin are burned outside the camp.

12 For this reason Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people through his own blood, suffered outside the gate.

13 Let us therefore go out to him outside the camp, bearing his reproach.

14 For here we have no city that remains, but we seek the one to come.

15 Through him, therefore, let us always offer to God a sacrificial offering of praise, that is, the fruit of lips making confession to his name.

16 But do not forget beneficence and fellowship, for by such sacrificial offerings God is pleased.

17 Obey your leaders and be subject to them. For they keep vigilant watch as those who will render an account for your souls, so that they may do this with joy and not groaning; for this is not advantageous to you.

18 Pray for us; for we trust that we have a good conscience, wishing to conduct ourselves well in all things.

19 But I beseech you all the more to do this, that I may be restored to you more quickly.

20 Now may the God of peace, who brought from the dead the great shepherd of the sheep, in the blood of the eternal testament, our Lord Jesus Christ,

21 fit you in every good thing, that you may do his will, doing in you what may please before him through Jesus Christ, to whom is glory through the ages of ages. Amen.

22 But I ask you, brothers, to endure the word of consolation. For indeed I wrote to you in very few words.

23 Know that our brother Timothy has been released; with him, if he comes more quickly, I will see you.

24 Greet all your leaders and all the saints. The brothers from Italy greet you.

25 Grace with you all. Amen.

James

Chapter 1

1 James, a servant of God and of our Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes that are in dispersion: greetings.

2 Regard it as all joy, my brothers, when you fall into various temptations,

3 knowing that the proving of your faith works patience.

4 Patience, however, has a perfect work, so that you may be perfect and whole, lacking in nothing.

5 But if any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask of God, who gives to all abundantly and does not reproach; and it will be given to him.

6 But let him ask in faith, without hesitating at all; for he who hesitates is like a wave of the sea, moved by the wind and carried about.

7 Therefore let that man not suppose that he will receive anything from the Lord.

8 A man double in mind is unstable in all his ways.

9 But let the lowly brother glory in his exaltation,

10 but the rich in his lowliness, because he will pass away like a flower of grass;

11 for the sun rose with burning heat and dried the grass, and its flower fell and the beauty of its face perished; so also the rich will wither in his journeys.

12 Blessed is the man who endures temptation, because when he has been proved, he will receive the crown of life, which God has promised to those who love him.

13 Let no one, when tempted, say that he is tempted by God; for God is no tempter of evils, but he himself tempts no one.

14 But each one is tempted by his own desire, drawn away and enticed.

15 Then desire, when it has conceived, gives birth to sin; but sin, when it has been completed, begets death.

16 Therefore do not go astray, my most beloved brothers.

17 Every excellent thing given and every perfect gift comes from above, descending from the Father of lights, with whom there is no change, nor shadowing of variation.

18 For he willingly begot us by the word of truth, so that we might be some beginning of his creation.

19 You know, my most beloved brothers. But let every man be swift to hear, yet slow to speak and slow to anger.

20 For the anger of man does not work the justice of God.

21 Therefore, casting off all uncleanness and abundance of malice, receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls.

22 But be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving yourselves.

23 For if anyone is a hearer of the word and not a doer, he will be compared to a man considering the face of his birth in a mirror;

24 for he considered himself and went away, and immediately forgot what he was like.

25 But he who has looked closely into the perfect law of liberty and has remained in it, not having become a forgetful hearer but a doer of work—this one will be blessed in his deed.

26 But if anyone thinks that he is religious, not restraining his tongue but leading his own heart astray, his religion is empty.

27 Religion clean and unstained before God and the Father is this: to visit orphans and widows in their tribulation, and to keep oneself unstained from this age.

Chapter 2

1 My brothers, do not hold the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ of glory with acceptance of persons.

2 For if a man having a gold ring, in white clothing, enters your assembly, and a poor man in filthy attire also enters,

3 and you look intently at the one clothed in splendid clothing and say to him, “You, sit well here,” but say to the poor man, “You, stand there,” or, “Sit beneath the footstool of my feet,”

4 do you not judge among yourselves, and have you become judges of unjust thoughts?

5 Listen, my most beloved brothers: has God not chosen the poor in this world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom, which God has promised to those who love him?

6 But you have dishonored the poor man. Do not the rich oppress you by force, and do they themselves not drag you into courts?

7 Do they themselves not blaspheme the good name that has been invoked over you?

8 Yet if you fulfill the royal law according to the Scriptures, “You shall love your neighbor as yourself,” you do well;

9 but if you accept persons, you work sin, convicted by the law as transgressors.

10 But whoever may have kept the whole law, yet should stumble in one, has become guilty of all.

11 For he who said, “You shall not commit adultery,” also said, “You shall not kill.” But if you do not commit adultery, yet do kill, you have become a transgressor of the law.

12 So speak, and so act, as those who are beginning to be judged through the law of liberty.

13 For judgment without mercy is for him who has not done mercy; but mercy exalts itself above judgment.

14 What will it profit, my brothers, if someone says that he has faith but has no works? Can faith save him?

15 But if a brother and a sister are naked and lack daily sustenance,

16 and someone among you should say to them, “Go in peace; be warmed and be filled,” but you have not given them what is necessary for the body, what will it profit?

17 So faith also, if it has no works, is dead in itself.

18 But someone will say, “You have faith, and I have works. Show me your faith without works, and I will show you my faith from works.”

19 You believe that God is one. You do well; and the demons believe, and shudder.

20 But do you wish to know, O empty man, that faith without works is dead?

21 Was not Abraham our father justified from works, offering Isaac his son upon the altar?

22 Do you see that faith was working together with his works, and that from the works faith was completed?

23 And the Scripture was fulfilled, saying, “Abraham believed God, and it was reckoned to him as justice,” and he was called a friend of God.

24 Do you see that a man is justified from works, and not from faith alone?

25 Likewise, was not Rahab the prostitute also justified from works, receiving the messengers and sending them out by another way?

26 For just as the body without the spirit is dead, so also faith without works is dead.

Chapter 3

1 My brothers, do not become teachers in great numbers, knowing that you receive a greater judgment.

2 For we all stumble in many things. If anyone does not stumble in word, he is a perfect man; he is also able to lead the whole body around with a bridle.

3 But if we put bridles into horses' mouths to make them consent to us, we also turn their whole body around.

4 Behold, ships also, though they are great and are driven by strong winds, are turned around by a small rudder wherever the impulse of the one steering wills.

5 So also the tongue is indeed a small member, and exalts great things. Behold how great a fire sets so great a forest ablaze!

6 And the tongue is a fire, the totality of iniquity. The tongue is set among our members: it stains the whole body and sets ablaze the wheel of our birth, itself set ablaze by Gehenna.

7 For every nature—of beasts, birds, serpents, and the rest—is tamed, and has been tamed, by human nature:

8 but no one among men can tame the tongue: a restless evil, full of deadly poison.

9 With it we bless God and the Father; and with it we curse men, who were made according to the likeness of God.

10 From the same mouth comes blessing and curse. My brothers, these things ought not to be so.

11 Does a spring send forth sweet and bitter water from the same opening?

12 Can a fig tree, my brothers, make grapes, or a vine figs? So neither can what is salty make sweet water.

13 Who among you is wise and trained? Let him show, from good conduct, his work in the meekness of wisdom.

14 But if you have bitter zeal, and contentions are in your hearts, do not boast, and do not be liars against the truth:

15 for this wisdom is not descending from above, but is earthly, soulish, diabolical.

16 For where there are zeal and contention, there are instability and every wicked work.

17 But the wisdom that is from above is first indeed chaste, then peaceful, modest, persuadable, consenting to good things, full of mercy and good fruits, not judging, without pretense.

18 But the fruit of justice is sown in peace for those who make peace.

Chapter 4

1 From where do the wars and quarrels among you come? Is it not from here: from your desires, which wage war in your members?

2 You desire and do not have; you kill and envy, and cannot obtain; you quarrel and wage war, and do not have, because you make no request.

3 You ask and do not receive, because you ask badly, so that you may spend it on your desires.

4 Adulterers, do you not know that friendship with this world is hostile to God? Whoever, therefore, wills to be a friend of this age is constituted an enemy of God.

5 Or do you think that Scripture says in vain, “The spirit that dwells in you desires toward envy”?

6 But greater grace is given. Therefore it is said: “God resists the proud, but gives grace to the humble.”

7 Therefore be subject to God, but resist the devil, and he will flee from you.

8 Draw near to God, and he will draw near to you. Cleanse your hands, sinners, and purify your hearts, double in mind.

9 Be miserable, and mourn, and weep; let your laughter be turned into mourning, and your joy into sorrow.

10 Be humbled in the sight of the Lord, and he will exalt you.

11 Brothers, do not speak against one another. Whoever speaks against a brother, or judges his own brother, speaks against the law and judges the law. But if you judge the law, you are not a doer of the law, but a judge.

12 There is one lawgiver and judge, who is able to destroy and to set free.

13 But who are you, who judge your neighbor? Behold now, you who say, “Today or tomorrow we will go into that city, and we will indeed spend a year there, and trade, and make a profit”—

14 you who do not know what tomorrow will be.

15 For what is your life? It is a vapor, appearing for a little while, and afterward it will disappear; instead, you should say: “If the Lord wills.” And: “If we live, we will do this or that.”

16 But now you exult in your boastings. Every such exultation is evil.

17 Therefore, for the one who knows to do good and does not do it, it is sin.

Chapter 5

1 Come now, you rich: weep, howling in your miseries that will come upon you.

2 Your riches have rotted, and your garments have been eaten by moths.

3 Your gold and silver have rusted; and their rust will be a witness to you and will eat your flesh like fire. You have stored up wrath for yourselves in the last days.

4 Behold, the wage of the workers who reaped your lands, which has been withheld by you, cries out; and their cry has entered into the ears of the Lord (YHWH) Sabaoth.

5 You have feasted upon the earth, and amid indulgences you have fattened your hearts on the day of slaughter.

6 You have condemned and killed the just one, and he did not resist you.

7 Be patient, therefore, brothers, until the coming of the Lord. Behold, the farmer awaits the precious fruit of the earth, bearing patiently until he receives the early and the late.

8 Be patient, therefore, you too, and strengthen your hearts, because the coming of the Lord has drawn near.

9 Do not groan, brothers, against one another, so that you may not be judged. Behold, the judge stands before the door.

10 Take, brothers, as an example of the outcome of evil, labor, and patience, the prophets who spoke in the name of the Lord.

11 Behold, we call blessed those who have endured. You have heard the suffering of Job and have seen the end of the Lord, because the Lord is merciful and compassionate.

12 But before all things, my brothers, do not swear—neither by heaven, nor by earth, nor by any other oath whatsoever. But let your speech be: Yes, yes; no, no; so that you may not fall under judgment.

13 Is anyone among you distressed? Let him pray. Is anyone in an even frame of mind? Let him sing psalms.

14 Is anyone among you sick? Let him summon the presbyters of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord:

15 and the prayer of faith will save the sick one, and the Lord will raise him up; and if he is in sins, they will be remitted to him.

16 Therefore confess your sins to one another, and pray for one another so that you may be saved; for the assiduous supplication of a just person avails much.

17 Elijah was a man like us, susceptible to suffering; and with prayer he prayed that it might not rain upon the earth, and it did not rain for three years and six months.

18 And he prayed again; and heaven gave rain, and the earth gave its fruit.

19 My brothers, if anyone among you should stray from the truth, and someone should turn him back:

20 he must know that the one who causes a sinner to turn from the error of his way will save his soul from death and will cover a multitude of sins.

First Peter

Chapter 1

1 Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the elect sojourners of the dispersion—of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia—

2 according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, in the sanctification of the Spirit, in obedience and the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. Grace to you, and peace be multiplied.

3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, according to his great mercy, has begotten us anew into a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,

4 into an incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading inheritance, kept in the heavens in you,

5 who by the power of God are guarded through faith for a salvation ready to be revealed at the last time.

6 In this you will exult, though now for a little, if it is necessary to be grieved amid various temptations,

7 so that the proving of your faith, far more precious than gold—which is tested by fire—may be found unto praise, glory, and honor in the revelation of Jesus Christ;

8 whom, although you have not seen, you love; in whom, though even now you do not see, you believe; but believing, you will exult with joy unspeakable and glorified,

9 receiving the end of your faith: the salvation of souls.

10 Concerning this salvation, the prophets sought and searched, who prophesied of the grace to come in you,

11 searching what time, or what kind of time, the Spirit of Christ in them signified, foretelling the sufferings that are in Christ and the glories that follow;

12 to whom it was revealed that they were ministering not to themselves but to you the things now announced to you by those who evangelized you, through the Holy Spirit sent from heaven, into whom angels desire to look.

13 Therefore, with the loins of your mind girded, and being sober, hope fully in the grace that is offered to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ,

14 as children of obedience, not conformed to the former desires of your ignorance;

15 but according to the Holy One who called you, be holy yourselves also in all your conduct,

16 for it is written: “You will be holy, because I am holy.”

17 And if you invoke as Father him who judges without acceptance of persons according to each one’s work, conduct yourselves in fear during the time of your sojourning,

18 knowing that you were redeemed from the vain conduct of your paternal tradition, not with corruptible things, gold or silver,

19 but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb immaculate and undefiled,

20 foreknown indeed before the foundation of the world, but manifested in the last times for your sake,

21 who through him have faith in God, who raised him from the dead and gave him glory, so that your faith and hope might be in God.

22 Having purified your souls in the obedience of charity, in the love of brotherhood, love one another more earnestly from a simple heart,

23 reborn not from corruptible seed but from incorruptible seed, through the word of the living God, who abides forever;

24 for all flesh is like grass, and all its glory like the flower of grass; the grass withered, and its flower fell.

25 But the word of the Lord (YHWH) abides forever; and this is the word that was proclaimed to you as good news.

Chapter 2

1 Therefore, laying aside all malice and all deceit, and pretenses and envies, and all detractions,

2 as infants newly born, long for the rational milk, without guile, so that in it you may grow into salvation,

3 if indeed you have tasted that the Lord is sweet.

4 Coming to him, a living stone, rejected indeed by men, but chosen and honored by God,

5 you yourselves also, like living stones, are being built up, a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ.

6 For this reason Scripture contains: “Behold, I lay in Zion a chief cornerstone, chosen, precious; and whoever believes in him will not be confounded.”

7 To you, therefore, who believe, honor; but to those who do not believe, “The stone which the builders rejected—this has become the head of the corner,”

8 and “a stone of offense and a rock of scandal,” to those who take offense at the word and do not believe, in which also they have been placed.

9 But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people of acquisition, that you may proclaim the excellences of him who called you out of darkness into his admirable light.

10 You who were once not a people, but now are the people of God; who had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

11 Beloved, I beseech you, as sojourners and pilgrims, to abstain from fleshly desires, which wage war against the soul,

12 keeping your conduct good among the nations, so that in that for which they disparage you as evildoers, when they observe you by your good works, they may glorify God on the day of visitation.

13 Therefore be subject to every human creature for God’s sake: whether to the king as preeminent,

14 or to governors as sent by him for the punishment of evildoers, but for the praise of those who do good;

15 for so is the will of God, that by doing good you may cause the ignorance of foolish men to fall silent,

16 as free, yet not having freedom as a veil for malice, but as servants of God.

17 Honor everyone; love the brotherhood; fear God; give honor to the king.

18 Servants, be subject in all fear to your masters, not only to the good and modest, but also to the difficult.

19 For this is grace, if, because of conscience toward God, someone endures sorrows, suffering unjustly.

20 For what glory is it if, sinning and being struck with fists, you endure? But if, doing good, you endure patiently, this is grace with God.

21 For to this you have been called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving you an example, that you may follow his footprints,

22 who did no sin, neither was deceit found in his mouth;

23 who, when he was cursed, did not curse; when he suffered, did not threaten; but handed himself over to one judging him unjustly;

24 who himself bore our sins in his own body upon the wood, so that we, dead to sins, might live to justice; by whose bruise you were healed.

25 For you were like wandering sheep, but now you have returned to the shepherd and overseer of your souls.

Chapter 3

1 Likewise, let wives be subject to their own husbands, so that even if some do not believe the word, they may be won without a word through the conduct of the wives:

2 as they observe your chaste conduct in fear.

3 Let your adornment not be outward: the arrangement of hair, the encircling of gold, or the adornment of clothing;

4 but the hidden person of the heart, in the incorruptibility of a quiet and modest spirit, who is rich in the sight of God.

5 For in this way formerly the holy women also, hoping in God, adorned themselves, subject to their own husbands.

6 Thus Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord; whose daughters you are, doing good and not fearing any disturbance.

7 Husbands likewise, dwell together according to knowledge, bestowing honor as to the weaker, female vessel, as also to coheirs of the grace of life, so that your prayers may not be hindered.

8 Finally, however, all of you be of one mind, compassionate, lovers of brotherhood, merciful, modest, humble:

9 not repaying evil for evil, nor curse for curse, but on the contrary blessing, because for this you were called: that you may possess a blessing as an inheritance.

10 For he who desires to love life and to see good days, let him restrain his tongue from evil, and his lips so that they speak no deceit.

11 Let him turn away from evil and do good; let him seek peace and follow it:

12 because the eyes of the Lord are upon the just, and his ears toward their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against those who do evil.

13 And who is there to harm you, if you become zealous followers of good?

14 But even if you suffer something because of justice, blessed are you. Yet do not fear their fear, and do not be troubled.

15 But sanctify the Lord Christ in your hearts, always ready to make a defense to everyone who asks you for an account concerning the hope that is in you;

16 yet with modesty and fear, having a good conscience, so that in the very matter in which they speak against you, those who slander your good conduct in Christ may be confounded.

17 For it is better to suffer while doing good—if the will of God so wills—than while doing evil.

18 Because Christ also died once for our sins, the just for the unjust, that he might offer us to God, put to death indeed in flesh but made alive in spirit.

19 In which also, coming, he preached to the spirits who were in prison:

20 who had once been unbelieving, when they awaited the patience of God in the days of Noah, while the ark was being built; in which a few—that is, eight souls—were saved through water.

21 And baptism, of a form like this, has now saved you also—not the removal of the filth of the flesh, but the inquiry of a good conscience toward God—through the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

22 Who is at the right hand of God, swallowing death so that we might be made heirs of eternal life; having gone into heaven, with angels, powers, and virtues subjected to him.

Chapter 4

1 Therefore, Christ having suffered in the flesh, arm yourselves also with the same thought, because the one who has suffered in the flesh has ceased from sins:

2 so that, for what remains of time in the flesh, he may live no longer for human desires, but for the will of God.

3 For the past time is sufficient for accomplishing the will of the nations, for those who walked in excesses, desires, drunkenness, revelries, drinking bouts, and unlawful worship of idols.

4 In this they marvel that you do not run together into the same confusion of excess, and they blaspheme.

5 They will give an account to him who is ready to judge the living and the dead.

6 For because of this the gospel was proclaimed also to the dead: that they might indeed be judged according to men in flesh, but live according to God in spirit.

7 But the end of all things has drawn near. Therefore be prudent, and be vigilant in prayers.

8 But before all things, have continual mutual charity among yourselves, because charity covers a multitude of sins.

9 Be hospitable to one another without murmuring.

10 As each one has received grace, minister it to one another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.

11 If anyone speaks, let it be as words of God; if anyone ministers, let it be as from the power that God supplies, so that in all things God may be honored through Jesus Christ, to whom are glory and dominion for ages of ages. Amen.

12 Beloved, do not be as strangers amid the heat that is brought upon you for trial, as though something new were happening to you:

13 but, sharing in the sufferings of Christ, rejoice, so that at the revelation of his glory you also may rejoice, exulting.

14 If you are reproached in the name of Christ, you will be blessed, because that which is of honor, glory, and the power of God—and which is his Spirit—rests upon you.

15 But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or a reviler, or one who covets what belongs to others.

16 But if he suffers as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; rather, let him glorify God in this name:

17 for it is time for judgment to begin from the house of God. But if first from us, what will be the end of those who do not believe the Gospel of God?

18 And if the just person will scarcely be saved, where will the impious and the sinner appear?

19 Therefore, let those also who suffer according to the will of God entrust their souls to the faithful Creator in good deeds.

Chapter 5

1 Therefore I entreat the elders who are among you—I, a fellow elder and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, who am also a sharer in the glory that is to be revealed in the future:

2 shepherd the flock of God that is among you, exercising oversight not under compulsion, but willingly according to God; not for the sake of shameful gain, but freely;

3 nor as lording it over the allotted portions, but becoming, from the heart, a pattern for the flock.

4 And when the Prince of Shepherds appears, you shall receive the unfading crown of glory.

5 Likewise, you younger ones, be subject to the elders. And all of you, impress humility upon yourselves toward one another, because God resists the proud, but gives grace to the humble.

6 Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in the time of visitation,

7 casting all your anxious care upon him, because he himself has care for you.

8 Be sober and vigilant, because your adversary the devil circles like a roaring lion, seeking someone to devour;

9 resist him, strong in faith, knowing that the same suffering is taking place in your brotherhood throughout the world.

10 But the God of all grace, who has called us into his eternal glory in Christ Jesus, after we have suffered a little, will himself perfect, confirm, and establish us.

11 To him be glory and dominion unto ages of ages. Amen.

12 Through Silvanus, a faithful brother to you, as I account him, I have written briefly, entreating and testifying that this is the true grace of God, in which you stand.

13 The church that is in Babylon, co-elect with you, greets you, as does Marcus, my son.

14 Greet one another with a holy kiss. Grace be to all of you who are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

Second Peter

Chapter 1

1 Simon Peter, servant and apostle of Jesus Christ, to those who have been allotted a faith coequal with ours, in the justice of our God, and of the Savior Jesus Christ.

2 May grace and peace be fulfilled for you in the knowledge of God and of Christ Jesus our Lord:

3 just as all things of his divine power that pertain to life and piety have been given to us through the knowledge of him who called us by his own glory and virtue,

4 through whom he gave us the greatest and precious promises, so that through these you may become sharers of divine nature, fleeing the corruption of the desire that is in the world.

5 But you, bringing to bear all care, supply virtue in your faith, and knowledge in virtue,

6 and abstinence in knowledge, and patience in abstinence, and piety in patience,

7 and the love of brotherhood in piety, and charity in the love of brotherhood.

8 For if these things are present with you and abound, they will render you neither empty nor without fruit in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 For he to whom these things are not at hand is blind and groping with his hand, receiving forgetfulness of the purification of his former offenses.

10 Therefore, brothers, labor all the more so that through good works you may make your calling and election certain; for in doing these things, you will not sin at any time.

11 For thus an entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ will be abundantly ministered to you.

12 For this reason I shall begin always to remind you of these things, though indeed you know them and are confirmed in the present truth.

13 Yet I judge it just, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you by reminder,

14 certain that the laying aside of my tabernacle is swift, according as our Lord Jesus Christ also signified to me.

15 But I shall also endeavor to have you, after my death, frequently make remembrance of these things.

16 For it was not by following learned fables that we made known to you the power and presence of our Lord Jesus Christ, but by having become eyewitnesses of his magnificence.

17 For he received honor and glory from God the Father, when a voice of this kind descended to him from the magnificent glory: “This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear him.”

18 And this voice we heard brought from heaven, when we were with him on the holy mountain.

19 And we have the firmer prophetic word, to which you do well to attend, as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawns and the daystar arises in your hearts,

20 understanding this first: that no prophecy of Scripture comes about by private interpretation.

21 For prophecy was not at any time brought by human will; rather, inspired by the Holy Spirit, holy people of God spoke.

Chapter 2

1 But there were also false prophets among the people, just as among you there will also be lying teachers, who will introduce sects of destruction; and they deny the Lord who bought them, bringing swift destruction upon themselves.

2 And many will follow their sexual excesses, through whom the way of truth will be blasphemed;

3 and in greed, with fabricated words, they will make merchandise of you; for them judgment has not ceased since long ago, and their destruction does not sleep.

4 For if God did not spare the angels when they sinned, but handed them over—dragged down with ropes of hell into Tartarus—to be tormented and reserved for judgment;

5 and did not spare the original world, but preserved Noah as the eighth, a herald of justice, bringing a flood upon the world of the impious;

6 and, reducing the cities of the Sodomites and Gomorrheans to ashes, condemned them by overthrow, setting an example of those who will act impiously;

7 and rescued just Lot, oppressed by the injury and sexually excessive conduct of abominable people—

8 for by sight and hearing he was just, dwelling among those who, from day to day, tormented his just soul with lawless works—

9 the Lord (YHWH) knows how to rescue the pious from temptation, but to reserve the unjust for the day of judgment to be tormented,

10 especially, however, those who walk after the flesh in the desire of uncleanness and despise dominion—audacious, self-pleasing, they do not fear to introduce sects while blaspheming;

11 where angels, though greater in strength and power, do not bear an execrable judgment against themselves.

12 But these, like irrational beasts, by nature for capture and destruction, blaspheming in the things they do not know, will perish in their own corruption,

13 receiving the wage of injustice, considering daytime delicacies a pleasure; defilements and stains, abounding in delicacies, living in excess with you in their own feasts,

14 having eyes full of adultery and of unceasing sin. Enticing unstable souls, having a heart trained in greed, children of curse,

15 abandoning the straight way, they went astray, having followed the way of Balaam from Bosor, who loved the wage of iniquity;

16 but he received correction for his own madness: a yoked mute animal, speaking with a human voice, restrained the prophet’s foolishness.

17 These are springs without water and clouds driven by whirlwinds, for whom the gloom of darkness is reserved.

18 For, speaking proud things of vanity, they entice, through the fleshly desires of excess, those who escape but a little, who conduct themselves in error;

19 promising them freedom, while they themselves are slaves of corruption; for by whomever someone has been overcome, of that one he is also a slave.

20 For if, having fled the defilements of the world through knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled in these and overcome, the latter things have become worse for them than the former.

21 For it was better for them not to know the way of justice than, after recognition, to turn backward from the holy command that was handed down to them.

22 For that saying of the true proverb has befallen them: “A dog having returned to its own vomit”; and, “a sow, washed, in a wallowing place of mud.”

Chapter 3

1 Behold, beloved, I write this second epistle to you; in these I awaken your sincere mind by reminder,

2 that you may remember the words which I foretold, from the holy prophets, and the commandments of your apostles, of the Lord and Savior.

3 Know this first: that in the last days there will come, in deception, mockers walking according to their own desires,

4 saying, “Where is the promise, or his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue thus from the beginning of creation.”

5 For by their own will this is hidden from them: that the heavens were of old, and the earth—out of water and through water, standing together by the word of God—

6 through which things the world that then was, flooded with water, perished.

7 But the heavens that now are, and the earth, have been stored by the same word, reserved for fire unto the day of judgment and the destruction of impious men.

8 But let this one thing not be hidden from you, beloved: that one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.

9 The Lord does not delay his promise, as some suppose, but acts patiently for your sake, not willing any to perish, but all to return to repentance.

10 But the day of the Lord will come as a thief, in which the heavens will pass away with great force; the elements will be dissolved by heat, and the earth and the works within it will be burned up.

11 Since, therefore, all these things are to be dissolved, what manner of persons ought you to be in holy conducts and pieties,

12 awaiting and hastening unto the coming of the day of the Lord, through which the heavens, burning, will be dissolved, and the elements will melt away in the ardor of fire?

13 But according to his promises we await new heavens and a new earth, in which justice dwells.

14 Therefore, beloved, awaiting these things, strive to be found by him immaculate and inviolate, in peace;

15 and account the long-suffering of our Lord as salvation, just as our dearest brother Paul, according to the wisdom given to him, wrote to you,

16 as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things, in which there are certain things difficult to understand, which the unlearned and unstable distort, as also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction.

17 You therefore, brothers, knowing beforehand, guard yourselves lest, led away by the error of the foolish, you fall from your own firmness;

18 but grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and unto the day of eternity. Amen.

First John

Chapter 1

1 That which was from the beginning, that which we heard, that which we have seen with our eyes, that which we gazed upon, and that which our hands handled, concerning the word of life—

2 and the life was manifested, and we have seen, and we testify, and we announce to you the eternal life which was with the Father and appeared to us—

3 that which we have seen and heard, we announce to you, so that you also may have fellowship with us, and our fellowship may be with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ.

4 And these things we write to you so that you may rejoice, and your joy may be full.

5 And this is the announcement which we heard from him and announce to you: that God is light, and darkness in him is none whatever.

6 If we say that we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie and do not do the truth.

7 But if we walk in the light just as he also is in the light, we have fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanses us from every sin.

8 If we say that we do not have sin, we ourselves lead ourselves astray, and the truth is not in us.

9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just, so that he may forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all iniquity.

10 If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

Chapter 2

1 My little children, these things I write to you so that you may not sin. But even if anyone should sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the just;

2 and he himself is the propitiation for our sins; but not for ours only, but also for those of the whole world.

3 And by this we know that we have known him: if we observe his commandments.

4 Whoever says that he knows him and does not keep his commandments is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

5 But whoever keeps his word, truly in him the charity of God has been perfected; and by this we know that we are in him.

6 Whoever says that he remains in him ought himself also to walk just as he walked.

7 Dearest, I write you not a new command, but the old command which you had from the beginning. The old command is the word which you heard.

8 Again, I write you a new command, which is true both in him and in you, because the darkness has passed and the true light now shines.

9 Whoever says that he is in the light and hates his brother is in darkness until now.

10 Whoever loves his brother remains in the light, and there is no scandal in him.

11 But whoever hates his brother is in darkness and walks in darkness and does not know where he goes, because the darkness has blinded his eyes.

12 I write to you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you on account of his name.

13 I write to you, fathers, because you have known him who is from the beginning. I write to you, adolescents, because you have overcome the malignant one.

14 I write to you, infants, because you have known the Father. I write to you, young men, because you are strong, and the word of God remains in you, and you have overcome the malignant one.

15 Do not love the world, nor the things that are in the world. If anyone loves the world, the charity of the Father is not in him;

16 for all that is in the world is the desire of the flesh, and the desire of the eyes, and the pride of life; which is not from the Father but is from the world.

17 And the world passes away, and its desire; but whoever does the will of God remains forever.

18 Little children, it is the last hour; and just as you have heard that antichrist comes, even now many antichrists have been made; from this we know that it is the last hour.

19 They went out from us, but they were not from us; for if they had been from us, they would surely have remained with us; but so that they may be manifest, because not all are from us.

20 But you have an anointing from the Holy One, and you know all things.

21 I have not written to you as to those ignorant of the truth, but as to those who know it, and because every lie is not from the truth.

22 Who is the liar, unless it is he who denies that Jesus is the Christ? This one is antichrist, who denies the Father and the Son.

23 Everyone who denies the Son does not have the Father either; whoever confesses the Son has the Father also.

24 As for you, let that which you heard from the beginning remain in you. If that which you heard from the beginning remains in you, you also will remain in the Son and the Father.

25 And this is the re-promise which he himself promised us: eternal life.

26 These things I have written to you about those who lead you astray.

27 And as for you, let the anointing which you received from him remain in you. And you have no need that anyone teach you; but as his anointing teaches you concerning all things, and it is truth and is not a lie, and just as it taught you, remain in him.

28 And now, little children, remain in him, so that when he appears we may have confidence and not be confounded by him at his advent.

29 If you know that he is just, know that everyone also who does justice has been born from him.

Chapter 3

1 Behold what manner of charity the Father has given us: children of God—so we should be called, and so we are. For this reason the world does not know us, because it does not know him.

2 Beloved, now we are children of God; and what we shall be has not yet appeared. We know that when he appears, we shall be like him, because we shall see him just as he is.

3 And everyone who has this hope in him sanctifies himself, just as he himself is holy.

4 Everyone who does sin also does iniquity; and sin is iniquity.

5 And you know that he appeared to take away our sins; and in him there is no sin.

6 Everyone who remains in him does not sin; and everyone who sins has neither seen him nor come to know him.

7 Little children, let no one lead you astray. Whoever does justice is just, just as he himself is just.

8 Whoever does sin is from the devil, because the devil sins from the beginning. For this the Son of God appeared: that he might dissolve the works of the devil.

9 Everyone who is born from God does not do sin, because his seed remains in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born from God.

10 In this the children of God and the children of the devil are manifest. Everyone who is not just is not from God, and neither is he who does not love his brother:

11 because this is the announcement you heard from the beginning: that you should love one another.

12 Not like Cain, who was from the malignant one and killed his brother. And why did he kill him? Because his works were evil, but his brother's were just.

13 Do not marvel, brothers, if the world hates you.

14 We know that we have been transferred from death to life, because we love the brothers. He who does not love remains in death.

15 Everyone who hates his brother is a murderer. And you know that no murderer has eternal life remaining within himself.

16 In this we have come to know the charity of God: because it was his soul he laid down for us; and it is our souls we ought to lay down for the brothers.

17 Whoever has the substance of this world, and sees that his brother has need, and closes his bowels against him—how does the charity of God remain in him?

18 My little children, let us love neither in word nor in tongue, but in deed and truth:

19 in this we recognize that we are from the truth; and in his sight we shall persuade our hearts.

20 For if our heart reproaches us, God is greater than our heart and knows all things.

21 Beloved, if our heart does not reproach us, we have confidence toward God;

22 and whatever we ask, we shall receive from him, because we keep his commands and do those things that are pleasing before him.

23 And this is his command: that we should believe in the name of his Son, Jesus Christ, and love one another, just as he gave command to us.

24 And he who keeps his commands remains in him, and he in him; and in this we know that he remains in us: from the Spirit whom he gave us.

Chapter 4

1 Beloved, do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits, whether they are from God, because many false prophets have gone out into the world.

2 By this the Spirit of God is recognized: every spirit that confesses Jesus Christ to have come in the flesh is from God;

3 and every spirit that dissolves Jesus is not from God; and this is the antichrist, of whom you have heard that he comes, and is now already in the world.

4 You are from God, little children, and you have overcome him, because greater is he who is in you than he who is in the world.

5 They are from the world; therefore they speak from the world, and the world hears them.

6 We are from God. He who knows God hears us; he who is not from God does not hear us. By this we recognize the Spirit of truth and the spirit of error.

7 Beloved, let us love one another, because charity is from God. And everyone who loves is born from God and knows God.

8 He who does not love does not know God, because God is charity.

9 In this the charity of God appeared in us: because his only-begotten Son was sent by God into the world, so that we might live through him.

10 In this is charity: not as though we loved God, but because he first loved us and sent his Son as propitiation for our sins.

11 Beloved, if God so loved us, we also ought to love one another.

12 No one has ever seen God. If we love one another, God remains in us, and his charity is perfected in us.

13 By this we recognize that we remain in him, and he in us: because he has given us from his Spirit.

14 And we have seen and testify that the Father sent his Son as Savior of the world.

15 Whoever confesses that Jesus is the Son of God, God remains in him, and he in God.

16 And we have come to know, and have believed in, the charity that God has in us. God is charity; and he who remains in charity remains in God, and God in him.

17 In this the charity of God is perfected with us: that we may have confidence on the day of judgment, because just as he is, we also are in this world.

18 Fear is not in charity; but perfect charity casts out fear, because fear has punishment. But he who fears is not perfect in charity.

19 Therefore let us love God, because God first loved us.

20 If anyone should say, “I love God,” and hates his brother, he is a liar. For he who does not love his brother whom he has seen—God, whom he has not seen—how can he love?

21 And this command we have from God: that he who loves God should love his brother also.

Chapter 5

1 Everyone who believes that Jesus is the Christ is born of God. And everyone who loves him who begot loves also him who was born of him.

2 In this we know that we love those born of God: when we love God and do his commandments.

3 For this is the charity of God: that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not heavy.

4 For everything that is born of God conquers the world; and this is the victory that conquers the world: our faith.

5 Who is he who conquers the world, except he who believes that Jesus is the Son of God?

6 This is he who came through water and blood, Jesus Christ: not in water only, but in water and blood. And it is the Spirit who testifies that Christ is truth.

7 For there are three who give testimony in heaven: the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit; and these three are one.

8 And there are three who give testimony on earth: the spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three are one.

9 If we receive the testimony of men, the testimony of God is greater; for this is the testimony of God, which is greater: that he has testified concerning his Son.

10 He who believes in the Son of God has the testimony of God in himself. He who does not believe the Son makes him a liar, because he does not believe in the testimony which God has testified concerning his Son.

11 And this is the testimony: that God has given us eternal life; and this life is in his Son.

12 He who has the Son has life; he who does not have the Son does not have life.

13 These things I write to you so that you may know that you have eternal life, you who believe in the name of the Son of God.

14 And this is the confidence which we have toward him: that whatever we ask according to his will, he hears us.

15 And we know that he hears us, whatever we ask; we know that we have the petitions which we ask from him.

16 He who knows that his brother is sinning a sin not unto death, let him ask, and life shall be given to him who sins not unto death. There is a sin unto death; I do not say that anyone should ask for that.

17 Every iniquity is sin; and there is a sin unto death.

18 We know that everyone who is born of God does not sin; but the generation of God preserves him, and the malignant one does not touch him.

19 We know that we are from God; and the whole world is placed in the malignant one.

20 And we know that the Son of God came and gave us sense, so that we may know the true God and may be in his true Son. This is the true God and eternal life.

21 Little children, guard yourselves from idols. Amen.

Second John

Chapter 1

1 The Elder to the Elect Lady and her children, whom I love in truth—and not I alone, but also all who have come to know the truth—

2 on account of the truth that remains in us and will be with us forever.

3 May grace, mercy, and peace be with you from God the Father and from Christ Jesus, the Son of the Father, in truth and charity.

4 I rejoiced greatly because I found some of your children walking in truth, just as we received a command from the Father.

5 And now I ask you, Lady—not as though writing a new command to you, but writing what we had from the beginning—that we love one another.

6 And this is charity: that we walk according to his commands. For this is the command: that, just as you heard from the beginning, you should walk in it.

7 For many deceivers have gone out into the world, who do not confess Jesus Christ to have come in the flesh. This is the deceiver and the antichrist.

8 Look to yourselves, lest you lose the things you have wrought, but that you may receive a full reward.

9 Everyone who departs and does not remain in the doctrine of Christ does not have God; he who remains in the doctrine, this one has both the Father and the Son.

10 If anyone comes to you and does not bring this doctrine, do not receive him into the house, nor say to him, “Hail.”

11 For he who says to him, “Hail,” shares in his malignant works.

12 Having more to write to you, I was unwilling to write by paper and ink; for I hope that I shall be with you and speak mouth to mouth, so that your joy may be full.

13 The children of your Elect sister greet you.

Third John

Chapter 1

1 The Elder to Gaius, most beloved, whom I myself love in truth.

2 Most beloved, concerning all things I pray that you may fare prosperously and be in health, just as your soul fares prosperously.

3 I rejoiced greatly when brothers came and bore testimony to your truth, just as you walk in truth.

4 I have no greater grace than these: that I should hear my children walking in truth.

5 Most beloved, you act faithfully in whatever you work toward the brothers—and this toward strangers—

6 who have rendered testimony to your charity in the sight of the church; whom, doing well, you will lead onward worthily of God.

7 For on account of his name they went forth, receiving nothing from the nations.

8 Therefore we ought to receive such persons, so that we may be co-workers of truth.

9 Perhaps I might have written to the church; but Diotrephes, who loves to hold primacy among them, does not receive us.

10 Because of this, if I come, I will call his works to mind, chattering against us with malignant words. And as though these things were not enough for him, neither does he himself receive the brothers; and he forbids those who receive them and casts out those same persons from the church.

11 Most beloved, do not imitate evil, but what is good. He who does good is from God; he who does evil has not seen God.

12 To Demetrius testimony is rendered by all, and by truth itself; but we too bear testimony, and you know that our testimony is true.

13 I had many things to write to you; but I was unwilling, by ink and reed, to write to you.

14 But I hope soon to see you, and mouth to mouth we will speak. Peace to you. The friends greet you. Greet the friends by name.

Jude

Chapter 1

1 Jude, a servant of Jesus Christ, but brother of James, to those who are beloved in God the Father, and preserved in Christ Jesus, and called.

2 May mercy and peace and charity be fulfilled for you.

3 Most beloved, exercising all solicitude to write to you concerning your common salvation, I found it necessary to write to you, entreating you to contend beyond measure for the faith once delivered to the saints.

4 For certain people have entered secretly—who long ago were written beforehand into this judgment—impious, transferring the grace of our God into luxury and denying the only Sovereign and our Lord Jesus Christ.

5 But I wish to remind you, though you know all things once for all, that Jesus, after saving the people from the land of Egypt, secondly destroyed those who did not believe;

6 but the angels who did not keep their principality, but abandoned their dwelling, he reserved under darkness in eternal bonds for the judgment of the great day.

7 Just as Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighboring cities, having fornicated in like manner and gone after other flesh, were made an example, sustaining the punishment of eternal fire.

8 In like manner these also indeed defile the flesh, but despise dominion and blaspheme majesty.

9 When Michael the Archangel, disputing with the devil, contended over the body of Moses, he did not dare to bring a judgment of blasphemy, but said, “May the Lord (YHWH) command you.”

10 But these blaspheme whatever things indeed they do not know; and whatever things they know naturally, like mute animals, in these they are corrupted.

11 Woe to them, because they have gone in the way of Cain, and have poured themselves out in the error of Balaam for a wage, and have perished in the contradiction of Core!

12 These are spots in their feasts, feasting together without fear, feeding themselves; clouds without water, which are carried about by winds; autumnal trees, fruitless, twice dead, uprooted;

13 wild waves of the sea, foaming out their shames; wandering stars, for whom the storm of darkness has been reserved forever.

14 And Enoch, seventh from Adam, prophesied also concerning these, saying, “Behold, the Lord comes in his holy thousands

15 to execute judgment against all, and to convict all the impious concerning all works of their impiety by which they acted impiously, and concerning all hard things that impious sinners have spoken against God.”

16 These are murmurers, querulous, walking according to their desires; and their mouth speaks proud things, admiring persons for the sake of gain.

17 But you, most beloved, be mindful of the words that were foretold by the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ,

18 who were saying to you that in the last time mockers will come, walking according to their desires in impieties.

19 These are they who separate themselves, soulish, not having the Spirit.

20 But you, most beloved, building yourselves upon your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Spirit,

21 keep yourselves in the love of God, awaiting the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

22 And reprove these, who have been judged;

23 but save those, snatching them from the fire. And have mercy on others in fear, hating even the stained garment that is fleshly.

24 But to him who is able to preserve you without sin and to set you immaculate before the sight of his glory, in exultation, at the advent of our Lord Jesus Christ,

25 to the only God our Savior, through Jesus Christ our Lord, be glory and magnificence, dominion and power, before every age, and now, and unto all ages of ages. Amen.

Revelation

Chapter 1

1 The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave him to make manifest to his servants the things that must happen soon; and he signified it, sending through his angel to his servant John,

2 who bore testimony to the word of God and to the testimony of Jesus Christ—to whatever things he saw.

3 Blessed is he who reads and hears the words of this prophecy, and keeps the things written in it; for the time is near.

4 John, to the seven churches that are in Asia. Grace to you and peace from him who is, and who was, and who is to come; and from the seven spirits who are before his throne;

5 and from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, the firstborn of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth; who loved us and washed us from our sins in his blood,

6 and made us a kingdom and priests to God and his Father. To him be glory and dominion unto ages of ages. Amen.

7 Behold, he comes with the clouds, and every eye will see him, even those who pierced him. And all the tribes of the earth will lament over him. Yes. Amen.

8 “I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end,” says the Lord (YHWH) God, “who is, and who was, and who is to come, the Almighty.”

9 I, John, your brother and a sharer in tribulation and kingdom and patience in Christ Jesus, was on the island called Patmos because of the word of God and the testimony of Jesus.

10 I was in spirit on the Lord’s Day, and I heard behind me a great voice, like that of a trumpet,

11 saying, “What you see, write in a book, and send it to the seven churches that are in Asia: to Ephesus, and Smyrna, and Pergamum, and Thyatira, and Sardis, and Philadelphia, and Laodicea.”

12 And I turned to see the voice that was speaking with me; and having turned, I saw seven golden lampstands,

13 and in the midst of the seven golden lampstands, one like the Son of Man, clothed in a long garment and girded at the breasts with a golden belt.

14 But his head and hair were white like white wool and like snow, and his eyes like a flame of fire;

15 and his feet were like orichalcum, as in a burning furnace, and his voice like the voice of many waters;

16 and he had seven stars in his right hand, and from his mouth came a sword sharpened on both sides, and his face was like the sun shining in its power.

17 And when I had seen him, I fell at his feet as though dead. And he placed his right hand upon me, saying, “Do not be afraid. I am the first and the last,

18 and the living one. I was dead, and behold, I am living unto ages of ages; and I have the keys of death and of the realm of the dead.

19 Therefore write the things you have seen, and the things that are, and the things that must happen after these.

20 The mystery of the seven stars that you saw in my right hand, and the seven golden lampstands: the seven stars are the angels of the seven churches, and the seven lampstands are the seven churches.”

Chapter 2

1 “To the angel of the church of Ephesus write: Thus says he who holds the seven stars in his right hand, who walks in the midst of the seven golden lampstands:

2 I know your works and labor and patience, and that you cannot endure evil people; and you tested those who say they are apostles and are not, and found them liars;

3 and you have patience, and have endured for my name, and have not failed.

4 But I have this against you: that you have forsaken your first charity.

5 Therefore remember from where you have fallen, and do penance, and do the first works. But if not, I am coming to you and will move your lampstand from its place, unless you do penance.

6 But this you have: that you hate the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate.

7 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers, I will give to eat from the tree of life, which is in the paradise of my God.

8 And to the angel of the church of Smyrna write: Thus says the first and the last, who was dead and lives:

9 I know your tribulation and your poverty—but you are rich—and that you are blasphemed by those who say they are Jews and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan.

10 Fear none of the things you are about to suffer. Behold, the devil is about to cast some of you into prison, so that you may be tested; and you will have tribulation for ten days. Be faithful unto death, and I will give you the crown of life.

11 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. He who conquers will not be harmed by the second death.

12 And to the angel of the church of Pergamum write: Thus says he who has the sword sharpened on both sides:

13 I know where you dwell, where the throne of Satan is; and you hold fast my name and have not denied my faith. Even in those days Antipas was my faithful witness, who was slain among you, where Satan dwells.

14 But I have a few things against you: because you have there those who hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel: to eat and to fornicate.

15 So you also have those who hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans.

16 In like manner, do penance. Otherwise I will come to you soon and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.

17 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers I will give the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone; and on the stone, a new name written, which no one knows except the one who receives it.

18 And to the angel of the church of Thyatira write: Thus says the Son of God, who has eyes like a flame of fire, and his feet like orichalcum:

19 I know your works and faith and charity and ministry and patience, and your last works, which are more than the former.

20 But I have a few things against you: because you permit the woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce my servants to fornicate and to eat things sacrificed to idols.

21 And I gave her time to do penance, but she is unwilling to repent of her fornication.

22 Behold, I will cast her into a bed; and those who commit adultery with her will be in the greatest tribulation, unless they do penance from their works.

23 And I will slay her children with death, and all the churches will know that I am he who searches the kidneys and hearts; and I will give to each one of you according to your works. But to you I say,

24 and to the rest who are in Thyatira—all who do not have this doctrine and who have not known the depths of Satan, as they say—I will not cast another burden upon you.

25 Nevertheless, hold fast what you have until I come.

26 And he who conquers and keeps my works unto the end, I will give him authority over the nations,

27 and he will rule them with a rod of iron, and like a potter’s vessel they will be shattered,

28 just as I also received from my Father; and I will give him the morning star.

29 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.”

Chapter 3

1 “And to the angel of the church of Sardis write: Thus says he who has the seven spirits of God and the seven stars: I know your works, that you have a name that you are alive, and you are dead.

2 Be watchful, and strengthen the remaining things that were about to die. For I do not find your works full before my God.

3 Therefore keep in mind how you received and heard, and keep it, and do penance. Therefore, if you do not watch, I will come to you like a thief, and you will not know at what hour I will come to you.

4 But you have a few names in Sardis who have not defiled their garments; and they will walk with me in white, because they are worthy.

5 He who conquers will thus be clothed in white garments, and I will not blot his name from the book of life, and I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels.

6 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.

7 And to the angel of the church of Philadelphia write: Thus says the Holy and True One, who has the key of David; who opens, and no one shuts; shuts, and no one opens:

8 I know your works. Behold, I have set before you an open door that no one can shut, because you have a little strength, and have kept my word, and have not denied my name.

9 Behold, I will give some from the synagogue of Satan, who say they are Jews and are not, but lie. Behold, I will make them come and worship before your feet; and they will know that I have loved you,

10 because you have kept the word of my patience; and I will keep you from the hour of temptation that is to come upon the whole world, to test those who dwell on the earth.

11 Behold, I come soon. Hold fast what you have, so that no one may take your crown.

12 He who conquers, I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God, and he will no longer go outside; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God—the new Jerusalem, which descends from heaven from my God—and my new name.

13 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.

14 And to the angel of the church of Laodicea write: Thus says the Amen, the faithful and true witness, who is the beginning of the creation of God:

15 I know your works: that you are neither cold nor hot. Would that you were cold or hot!

16 But because you are lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will begin to vomit you out of my mouth;

17 because you say, ‘I am rich and have been enriched, and I need nothing,’ and you do not know that you are wretched and pitiable and poor and blind and naked.

18 I counsel you to buy from me gold fired and tested, so that you may become rich; and to be clothed in white garments, so that the shame of your nakedness may not appear; and anoint your eyes with eye-salve, so that you may see.

19 Those whom I love, I reprove and chastise. Therefore be zealous, and do penance.

20 Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears my voice and opens the door to me, I will enter to him and will sup with him, and he with me.

21 He who conquers, I will give him to sit with me on my throne, just as I also conquered and sat with my Father on his throne.

22 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.”

Chapter 4

1 After these things I saw, and behold, a door opened in heaven; and the first voice, which I had heard like a trumpet speaking with me, said, “Ascend here, and I will show you the things that must happen after these.”

2 And immediately I was in spirit; and behold, a throne had been set in heaven, and one sitting upon the throne.

3 And he who sat there was like, in appearance, a jasper stone and a carnelian; and around the throne was a rainbow like the appearance of an emerald.

4 And around the throne were twenty-four seats; and upon the thrones sat twenty-four elders, wrapped in white garments, and on their heads were golden crowns.

5 And from the throne proceeded lightning and voices and thunder; and seven lamps burned before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God.

6 And before the throne was something like a glassy sea, like crystal; and in the midst of the throne and around the throne were four living creatures, full of eyes before and behind.

7 And the first living creature was like a lion, and the second living creature like a calf, and the third living creature had a face like that of a man, and the fourth living creature was like a flying eagle.

8 And the four living creatures, each one of them, had six wings; and around and within they were full of eyes. And they had no rest day or night, saying, “Holy, Holy, Holy, the Lord God Almighty, who was, and who is, and who is to come.”

9 And when those living creatures gave glory and honor and blessing to him who sits upon the throne, who lives unto ages of ages,

10 the twenty-four elders would fall down before him who sits upon the throne, and would worship him who lives unto ages of ages, and would cast their crowns before the throne, saying,

11 “You are worthy, O Lord our God, to receive glory and honor and power, because you created all things, and by your will they were, and were created.”

Chapter 5

1 And I saw in the right hand of him who sat upon the throne a book written within and without, sealed with seven seals.

2 And I saw a mighty angel proclaiming with a great voice, “Who is worthy to open the book and loose its seals?”

3 And no one was able—neither in heaven, nor on earth, nor beneath the earth—to open the book or to look upon it.

4 And I wept greatly, because no one was found worthy to open the book or to see it.

5 And one of the elders said to me, “Do not weep. Behold, the Lion from the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, has conquered, to open the book and loose its seven seals.”

6 And I saw; and behold, in the midst of the throne and of the four living creatures, and in the midst of the elders, a Lamb standing as though slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book from the right hand of him who sat upon the throne.

8 And when he had opened the book, the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders fell before the Lamb, each having harps and golden bowls full of fragrances, which are the prayers of the saints;

9 and they sang a new song, saying, “You are worthy, O Lord, to take the book and open its seals, because you were slain and redeemed us for God in your blood, from every tribe and tongue and people and nation;

10 and you made us a kingdom and priests to our God, and we shall reign over the earth.”

11 And I saw, and I heard the voice of many angels around the throne and the living creatures and the elders; and their number was thousands of thousands,

12 saying with a great voice, “Worthy is the Lamb who was slain to receive power and divinity and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing.”

13 And every creature that is in heaven and upon the earth and beneath the earth, and the things that are in the sea and that are in it—I heard them all saying, “To him who sits upon the throne, and to the Lamb, be blessing and honor and glory and might unto ages of ages.”

14 And the four living creatures said, “Amen.” And the twenty-four elders fell upon their faces and worshiped him who lives unto ages of ages.

Chapter 6

1 And I saw that the Lamb had opened one of the seven seals, and I heard one of the four living creatures saying, like a voice of thunder, “Come and see.”

2 And I saw; and behold, a white horse, and he who sat upon it had a bow. And a crown was given to him, and he went out conquering so that he might conquer.

3 And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second living creature saying, “Come and see.”

4 And another horse went out, red; and to him who sat upon it, it was given to take peace from the earth, so that they might slay one another; and a great sword was given to him.

5 And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third living creature saying, “Come and see.” And behold, a black horse; and he who sat upon it had a balance in his hand.

6 And I heard something like a voice in the midst of the four living creatures, saying, “Two pounds of wheat for a denarius, and three two-pound measures of barley for a denarius; and do not harm the wine and oil.”

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth living creature saying, “Come and see.”

8 And behold, a pale horse; and he who sat upon it—his name was Death—and the realm of the dead followed him. And authority was given to him over the four parts of the earth, to slay by sword, by famine, by death, and by the beasts of the earth.

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw beneath the altar the souls of those slain because of the word of God and because of the testimony that they held.

10 And they cried out with a great voice, saying, “How long, O Lord—holy and true—do you not judge and avenge our blood upon those who dwell on the earth?”

11 And to each of them a white robe was given; and it was said to them that they should rest yet a little time, until their fellow servants and their brothers, who are to be slain just as they were, should be completed.

12 And I saw when he had opened the sixth seal; and behold, a great earthquake occurred, and the sun became black like a sackcloth of hair, and the whole moon became like blood;

13 and the stars from heaven fell upon the earth, as a fig tree casts its unripe figs when it is shaken by a great wind;

14 and heaven withdrew like a book rolled up, and every mountain and the islands were moved from their places;

15 and the kings of the earth, and the princes, and the tribunes, and the rich, and the strong, and every bondservant and free person hid themselves in caves and among the rocks of the mountains;

16 and they say to the mountains and the rocks, “Fall upon us and hide us from the face of him who sits upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb;

17 for the great day of their wrath has come, and who will be able to stand?”

Chapter 7

1 After these things I saw four angels standing upon the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, so that they would not blow upon the earth, nor upon the sea, nor upon any tree.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the rising of the sun, having the seal of the living God; and he cried with a great voice to the four angels to whom it was given to harm the earth and the sea,

3 saying, “Do not harm the earth, or the sea, or the trees, until we seal the servants of our God on their foreheads.”

4 And I heard the number of those sealed: one hundred forty-four thousand sealed, from every tribe of the children of Israel.

5 From the tribe of Judah, twelve thousand sealed; from the tribe of Reuben, twelve thousand sealed; from the tribe of Gad, twelve thousand sealed;

6 from the tribe of Asher, twelve thousand sealed; from the tribe of Naphtali, twelve thousand sealed; from the tribe of Manasseh, twelve thousand sealed;

7 from the tribe of Simeon, twelve thousand sealed; from the tribe of Levi, twelve thousand sealed; from the tribe of Issachar, twelve thousand sealed;

8 from the tribe of Zebulun, twelve thousand sealed; from the tribe of Joseph, twelve thousand sealed; from the tribe of Benjamin, twelve thousand sealed.

9 After these things I saw a great multitude that no one could number, from all nations and tribes and peoples and tongues, standing before the throne and in the sight of the Lamb, clothed in white robes, with palms in their hands;

10 and they cried with a great voice, saying, “Salvation to our God, who sits upon the throne, and to the Lamb.”

11 And all the angels stood around the throne and the elders and the four living creatures; and they fell before the throne upon their faces and worshiped God,

12 saying, “Amen. Blessing and brightness and wisdom and thanksgiving, honor and power and strength, to our God unto ages of ages. Amen.”

13 And one of the elders answered and said to me, “These who are clothed in white robes—who are they, and from where have they come?”

14 And I said to him, “My lord, you know.” And he said to me, “These are they who have come out of the great tribulation, and they washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

15 Therefore they are before the throne of God and serve him day and night in his temple; and he who sits upon the throne will dwell over them.

16 They will hunger no more, nor thirst any more; neither will the sun fall upon them, nor any heat;

17 because the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne will shepherd them and lead them to the fountains of waters of life, and God will wipe away every tear from their eyes.”

Chapter 8

1 And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven for about half an hour.

2 And I saw seven angels standing before God, and seven trumpets were given to them.

3 And another angel came and stood before the altar, having a golden censer; and much incense was given to him, so that he might offer it with the prayers of all the saints upon the golden altar that is before the throne of God.

4 And the smoke of the incenses from the prayers of the saints ascended from the hand of the angel before God.

5 And the angel took the censer and filled it from the fire of the altar and cast it upon the earth; and there came thunder and voices and lightning and a great earthquake.

6 And the seven angels who had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound the trumpet.

7 And the first angel sounded the trumpet, and there came hail and fire mingled in blood, and it was cast upon the earth; and a third part of the earth was burned, and a third part of the trees was consumed, and all green grass was burned.

8 And the second angel sounded the trumpet; and something like a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea, and a third part of the sea became blood,

9 and a third part of their creatures that had souls in the sea died, and a third part of the ships perished.

10 And the third angel sounded the trumpet; and a great star fell from heaven, burning like a torch, and it fell upon a third part of the rivers and upon the fountains of waters.

11 And the name of the star is called Wormwood; and a third part of the waters became wormwood, and many of the people died from the waters because they had become bitter.

12 And the fourth angel sounded the trumpet; and a third part of the sun was struck, and a third part of the moon, and a third part of the stars, so that a third part of them was darkened, and the day did not shine for its third part, and the night likewise.

13 And I saw and heard the voice of one eagle flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a great voice, “Woe, woe, woe to those who dwell on the earth, because of the remaining voices of the three angels who were about to sound the trumpet.”

Chapter 9

1 And the fifth angel sounded the trumpet; and I saw a star that had fallen from heaven to the earth, and the key of the pit of the abyss was given to it.

2 And it opened the pit of the abyss, and smoke ascended from the pit like the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by the smoke of the pit.

3 And from the smoke of the pit locusts went out upon the earth, and power was given to them like the power the scorpions of the earth have.

4 And they were commanded not to harm the grass of the earth, nor anything green, nor any tree, but only the people who do not have the mark of God on their foreheads.

5 And it was given to them not to kill them, but to torment them for five months; and their torment was like the torment of a scorpion when it strikes a person.

6 And in those days people will seek death and will not find it; and they will desire to die, and death will flee from them.

7 And the likenesses of the locusts were like horses prepared for battle; and upon their heads were what seemed like crowns resembling gold, and their faces were like the faces of people.

8 And they had hair like the hair of women, and their teeth were like the teeth of lions.

9 And they had breastplates like iron breastplates, and the sound of their wings was like the sound of chariots of many horses rushing into war.

10 And they had tails like scorpions, and stings were in their tails; and their power was to harm people for five months.

11 And they had over them as king the angel of the abyss, whose name in Hebrew is Abaddon, but in Greek Apollyon, having in Latin the name Destroyer.

12 One woe has passed away; and behold, two woes are still coming after these things.

13 And the sixth angel sounded the trumpet; and I heard one voice from the four horns of the golden altar that is before the sight of God,

14 saying to the sixth angel, who had the trumpet, “Release the four angels who are bound at the great river Euphrates.”

15 And the four angels were released, who had been prepared for the hour, and the day, and the month, and the year, so that they might kill a third part of humanity.

16 And the number of the cavalry army was two hundred million; and I heard their number.

17 And in this manner I saw the horses in the vision: those who sat upon them had fiery and hyacinth-colored and sulfurous breastplates; and the heads of the horses were like the heads of lions, and from their mouths proceeds fire and smoke and sulfur.

18 And by these three plagues a third part of humanity was killed: by the fire and the smoke and the sulfur that proceeded from their mouths.

19 For the power of the horses is in their mouths and in their tails; for their tails are like serpents, having heads, and with these they do harm.

20 And the rest of humanity, who were not killed by these plagues, neither did penance for the works of their hands, so that they would not worship demons and idols of gold and silver and bronze and stone and wood, which can neither see, nor hear, nor walk;

21 and they did not do penance from their murders, nor from their sorceries, nor from their fornication, nor from their thefts.

Chapter 10

1 And I saw another mighty angel descending from heaven, clothed with a cloud, and a rainbow upon his head; and his face was like the sun, and his feet like pillars of fire.

2 And he had in his hand an open little book; and he set his right foot upon the sea, but his left upon the earth.

3 And he cried out with a great voice, as when a lion roars. And when he had cried out, the seven thunders uttered their voices.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write; and I heard a voice from heaven saying to me, “Seal the things that the seven thunders have spoken, and do not write them.”

5 And the angel whom I saw standing upon the sea and upon the earth raised his hand to heaven,

6 and swore by him who lives unto ages of ages, who created heaven and the things that are in it, and the earth and the things that are in it, and the sea and the things that are in it, that there will be no more time;

7 but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he begins to sound the trumpet, the mystery of God will be consummated, as he evangelized through his servants the prophets.

8 And I heard the voice from heaven speaking with me again and saying, “Go and take the open book from the hand of the angel standing upon the sea and upon the earth.”

9 And I went to the angel, saying to him that he should give me the book. And he said to me, “Take the book and devour it; and it will make your belly bitter, but in your mouth it will be sweet like honey.”

10 And I took the book from the hand of the angel and devoured it; and in my mouth it was sweet like honey, and when I had devoured it, my belly became bitter.

11 And he said to me, “You must prophesy again to nations and peoples and tongues and many kings.”

Chapter 11

1 And a reed like a rod was given to me, and it was said to me, “Arise and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and those worshiping in it.

2 But the court that is outside the temple, cast it outside, and do not measure it, because it has been given to the nations; and they will trample the holy city for forty-two months.

3 And I will give to my two witnesses, and they will prophesy for one thousand two hundred sixty days, clothed in sackcloth.”

4 These are the two olive trees and the two lampstands standing in the sight of the Lord of the earth.

5 And if anyone should wish to harm them, fire will go out from their mouths and devour their enemies; and if anyone should wish to injure them, thus must he be killed.

6 These have power to close heaven, so that it may not rain during the days of their prophecy; and they have power over the waters to turn them into blood, and to strike the earth with every plague as often as they wish.

7 And when they have finished their testimony, the beast that ascends from the abyss will make war against them and conquer them and kill them.

8 And their bodies will lie in the streets of the great city, which is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified.

9 And those from tribes and peoples and tongues and nations will see their bodies for three and a half days, and they will not permit their bodies to be placed in tombs.

10 And those dwelling upon the earth will rejoice over them and make merry; and they will send gifts to one another, because these two prophets tormented those who dwelt upon the earth.

11 And after three and a half days, the spirit of life from God entered into them. And they stood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon those who saw them.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven saying to them, “Ascend here.” And they ascended into heaven in a cloud, and their enemies saw them.

13 And in that hour a great earthquake occurred, and a tenth part of the city fell; and in the earthquake, names of people—seven thousand—were killed; and the rest were cast into fear and gave glory to the God of heaven.

14 The second woe has passed away; and behold, the third woe will come soon.

15 And the seventh angel sounded the trumpet; and there came great voices in heaven, saying, “The kingdom of this world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he will reign unto ages of ages. Amen.”

16 And the twenty-four elders, who sit in their seats in the sight of God, fell upon their faces and worshiped God, saying,

17 “We give thanks to you, O Lord God Almighty, who are, and who were, and who are to come, because you have taken your great power and have reigned.

18 And the nations became angry, and your wrath came, and the time for the dead to be judged, and to give reward to your servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to those who fear your name, small and great, and to destroy those who corrupted the earth.”

19 And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and the ark of his testament was seen in his temple; and there came lightning and voices and an earthquake and great hail.

Chapter 12

1 And a great sign appeared in heaven: a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon beneath her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars.

2 And being with child, she cried out in labor and was tormented so that she might give birth.

3 And another sign was seen in heaven; and behold, a great red dragon having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his heads seven diadems.

4 And his tail drew a third part of the stars of heaven and cast them to the earth; and the dragon stood before the woman who was about to give birth, so that when she had given birth he might devour her son.

5 And she gave birth to a male son, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron; and her son was caught up to God and to his throne.

6 And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she had a place prepared by God, so that there they might feed her for one thousand two hundred sixty days.

7 And a great battle took place in heaven: Michael and his angels fought with the dragon, and the dragon and his angels fought.

8 And they did not prevail, nor was their place found any longer in heaven.

9 And that great dragon was cast down, the ancient serpent, who is called the devil and Satan, who seduces the whole world; and he was cast down to the earth, and his angels were sent down with him.

10 And I heard a great voice in heaven saying, “Now have come the salvation and the power and the kingdom of our God and the authority of his Christ, because the accuser of our brothers has been cast down, who accused them before the sight of our God day and night.

11 And they themselves overcame him because of the blood of the Lamb and because of the word of their testimony, and they did not love their souls even unto death.

12 Therefore rejoice, O heavens, and you who dwell in them. Woe to the earth and the sea, because the devil has descended to you, having great wrath, knowing that he has little time.”

13 And after the dragon saw that he had been cast down to the earth, he persecuted the woman who had given birth to the male.

14 And the two wings of a great eagle were given to the woman, so that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time and times and half a time, away from the face of the serpent.

15 And the serpent sent from his mouth, after the woman, water like a river, so that he might cause her to be dragged away by the river.

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened its mouth and swallowed the river that the dragon sent from his mouth.

17 And the dragon was angry with the woman; and he went away to make war with the rest of her seed, who keep the commands of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

18 And he stood upon the sand of the sea.

Chapter 13

1 And I saw a beast ascending from the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon its horns ten diadems, and upon its heads names of blasphemy.

2 And the beast that I saw was like a leopard, and its feet like the feet of a bear, and its mouth like the mouth of a lion. And the dragon gave it his strength and great authority.

3 And I saw one of its heads as though slain to death, and its mortal wound was healed. And the whole earth marveled after the beast.

4 And they worshiped the dragon, who gave authority to the beast; and they worshiped the beast, saying, “Who is like the beast, and who will be able to fight with it?”

5 And a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies was given to it; and authority was given to it to act for forty-two months.

6 And it opened its mouth in blasphemies against God, to blaspheme his name and his tabernacle and those who dwell in heaven.

7 And it was given to it to make war with the saints and to conquer them. And authority was given to it over every tribe and people and tongue and nation;

8 and all who dwell upon the earth worshiped it, whose names have not been written in the book of life of the Lamb, who was slain from the origin of the world.

9 If anyone has an ear, let him hear.

10 He who shall lead into captivity will go into captivity; he who shall kill by the sword must be killed by the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

11 And I saw another beast ascending from the earth, and it had two horns like the Lamb, and it spoke like the dragon.

12 And it exercised all the authority of the first beast in its sight; and it caused the earth and those dwelling in it to worship the first beast, whose mortal wound was healed.

13 And it performed great signs, so that it even caused fire to descend from heaven to the earth in the sight of people.

14 And it seduced those dwelling upon the earth because of the signs it was given to perform in the sight of the beast, telling those dwelling upon the earth to make an image of the beast that has the wound of the sword and lived.

15 And it was given to it to give breath to the image of the beast, so that the image of the beast would speak, and to cause whoever would not worship the image of the beast to be killed.

16 And it will cause all—the small and the great, the rich and the poor, the free and the bondservants—to have a mark on their right hand, or on their foreheads,

17 and that no one may be able to buy or sell except the one who has the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of its name.

18 Here is wisdom. He who has understanding, let him compute the number of the beast. For it is the number of a man, and its number is six hundred sixty-six.

Chapter 14

1 And I saw; and behold, the Lamb stood upon Mount Sion, and with him one hundred forty-four thousand, having his name and the name of his Father written upon their foreheads.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven like the voice of many waters and like the voice of great thunder; and the voice that I heard was like harpists harping upon their harps.

3 And they sang what seemed like a new song before the throne and before the four living creatures and the elders; and no one was able to utter the song except those one hundred forty-four thousand who were purchased from the earth.

4 These are they who were not defiled with women, for they are virgins. These follow the Lamb wherever he goes. These were purchased from among humanity as firstfruits to God and to the Lamb;

5 and in their mouth no lie was found, for they are without blemish before the throne of God.

6 And I saw another angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the eternal Gospel, so that he might evangelize those sitting upon the earth, and every nation and tribe and tongue and people,

7 saying with a great voice, “Fear the Lord and give him honor, because the hour of his judgment has come; and worship him who made heaven and earth, the sea and the fountains of waters.”

8 And another angel followed, saying, “Fallen, fallen is that great Babylon, who made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.”

9 And a third angel followed them, saying with a great voice, “If anyone worships the beast and its image, and receives the mark on his forehead or on his hand,

10 he also will drink from the wine of the wrath of God, which is mixed with pure wine in the cup of his wrath, and he will be tormented with fire and sulfur in the sight of the holy angels and before the sight of the Lamb.

11 And the smoke of their torments will ascend unto ages of ages; and they have no rest day or night, those who worshiped the beast and its image, and if anyone received the mark of its name.

12 Here is the patience of the saints, who keep the commands of God and the faith of Jesus.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven saying to me, “Write: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. From now on, says the Spirit, let them rest from their labors, for their works follow them.”

14 And I saw; and behold, a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sitting like the Son of Man, having upon his head a golden crown and in his hand a sharp sickle.

15 And another angel went out from the temple, crying with a great voice to him who sat upon the cloud, “Send forth your sickle and reap, because the hour to reap has come, for the harvest of the earth has grown dry.”

16 And he who sat upon the cloud sent his sickle into the earth, and the earth was reaped.

17 And another angel went out from the temple that is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

18 And another angel went out from the altar, who had authority over fire; and he cried with a great voice to him who had the sharp sickle, saying, “Send forth your sharp sickle and gather the clusters of the vineyard of the earth, because its grapes are ripe.”

19 And the angel sent his sharp sickle into the earth and gathered the vineyard of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God.

20 And the winepress was trodden outside the city, and blood went out from the winepress up to the bridles of the horses, for one thousand six hundred stadia.

Chapter 15

1 And I saw another sign in heaven, great and wonderful: seven angels having the seven last plagues, because in them the wrath of God was consummated.

2 And I saw what seemed like a glassy sea mingled with fire, and those who had conquered the beast and its image and the number of its name, standing upon the glassy sea, having the harps of God;

3 and singing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, “Great and wonderful are your works, O Lord God Almighty; just and true are your ways, O King of the ages.

4 Who will not fear you, O Lord, and magnify your name? For you alone are holy, because all nations will come and worship in your sight, because your judgments have been made manifest.”

5 And after these things I saw; and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of testimony was opened in heaven,

6 and from the temple went out the seven angels having the seven plagues, clothed in clean and bright linen and girded about their breasts with golden bands.

7 And one of the four living creatures gave to the seven angels seven golden bowls, full of the indignation of God, who lives unto ages of ages.

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the majesty of God and from his power; and no one was able to enter into the temple until the seven plagues of the seven angels were consummated.

Chapter 16

1 And I heard a great voice from the temple saying to the seven angels, “Go and pour out the seven bowls of the wrath of God upon the earth.”

2 And the first went and poured out his bowl upon the earth, and a fierce and most grievous wound came upon the people who had the mark of the beast and upon those who worshiped its image.

3 And the second angel poured out his bowl upon the sea, and it became blood like that of a dead person; and every living soul in the sea died.

4 And the third poured out his bowl upon the rivers and upon the fountains of waters, and they became blood.

5 And I heard the angel of the waters saying, “Just are you, O Lord, who are and who were, the Holy One, because you have judged these things;

6 because they poured out the blood of saints and prophets, and you have given them blood to drink, for they are worthy.”

7 And I heard another from the altar saying, “Yes, O Lord God Almighty, true and just are your judgments.”

8 And the fourth angel poured out his bowl upon the sun, and it was given to it to afflict people with heat and with fire;

9 and the people were scorched with great heat and blasphemed the name of God, who has authority over these plagues, and they did not do penance so as to give him glory.

10 And the fifth angel poured out his bowl upon the throne of the beast, and its kingdom became dark; and they chewed their tongues because of pain,

11 and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their wounds, and they did not do penance from their works.

12 And the sixth angel poured out his bowl upon that great river Euphrates, and dried up its water, so that a way might be prepared for the kings from the rising of the sun.

13 And I saw from the mouth of the dragon and from the mouth of the beast and from the mouth of the false prophet three unclean spirits in the manner of frogs.

14 For they are spirits of demons performing signs, and they go out to the kings of the whole earth to gather them for battle on the great day of Almighty God.

15 “Behold, I come like a thief. Blessed is he who watches and keeps his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame.”

16 And he will gather them into the place that in Hebrew is called Armagedon.

17 And the seventh angel poured out his bowl into the air, and a great voice went out from the temple, from the throne, saying, “It is done.”

18 And there came lightning and voices and thunders, and a great earthquake occurred, such as had never occurred since people were upon the earth—such an earthquake, so great.

19 And the great city became three parts, and the cities of the nations fell. And great Babylon came into remembrance before God, to give her the cup of the wine of the indignation of his wrath.

20 And every island fled, and the mountains were not found.

21 And great hail, like a talent in weight, descended from heaven upon the people; and the people blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail, for it became exceedingly great.

Chapter 17

1 And one of the seven angels who had the seven bowls came and spoke with me, saying, “Come; I will show you the condemnation of the great harlot who sits upon many waters,

2 with whom the kings of the earth committed fornication, and those who inhabit the earth were made drunk from the wine of her prostitution.”

3 And he carried me away in spirit into a desert. And I saw a woman sitting upon a scarlet beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

4 And the woman was clothed round with purple and scarlet, and gilded with gold and precious stone and pearls, having in her hand a golden cup full of the abomination and uncleanness of her fornication.

5 And upon her forehead was a name written: “Mystery: Babylon the great, mother of fornications and of the abominations of the earth.”

6 And I saw the woman drunk from the blood of the saints and from the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. And when I saw her, I wondered with great wonder.

7 And the angel said to me, “Why do you wonder? I will tell you the mystery of the woman and of the beast that carries her, which has seven heads and ten horns.

8 The beast that you saw was, and is not, and will ascend from the abyss and go into destruction; and those who inhabit the earth—whose names have not been written in the book of life from the foundation of the world—will wonder when they see the beast, which was and is not.

9 And here is the understanding that has wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains upon which the woman sits, and they are seven kings.

10 Five have fallen; one is, and the other has not yet come. And when he comes, he must remain a brief time.

11 And the beast that was and is not: it itself is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goes into destruction.

12 And the ten horns that you saw are ten kings who have not yet received a kingdom, but will receive authority as kings for one hour after the beast.

13 These have one counsel, and they will hand over their strength and authority to the beast.

14 These will fight with the Lamb, and the Lamb will conquer them, because he is Lord of lords and King of kings; and those who are with him are called, elect, and faithful.

15 And he said to me, “The waters that you saw, where the harlot sits, are peoples and nations and tongues.

16 And the ten horns that you saw upon the beast: these will hate the harlot and make her desolate and naked, and they will eat her flesh and burn her with fire.

17 For God has given into their hearts to do what is pleasing to him: that they give their kingdom to the beast until the words of God are consummated.

18 And the woman that you saw is the great city that has a kingdom over the kings of the earth.

Chapter 18

1 And after these things I saw another angel descending from heaven, having great authority; and the earth was illuminated by his glory.

2 And he cried out in strength, saying, “Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great; and she has become the habitation of demons, and a cage for every unclean spirit, and a cage for every unclean and hateful bird.

3 For all nations have drunk from the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth became rich from the power of her delights.”

4 And I heard another voice from heaven saying, “Come out of her, my people, lest you become partakers of her offenses and receive from her plagues.

5 For her sins have reached even to heaven, and the Lord has remembered her iniquities.

6 Repay her as she herself repaid you, and double the double according to her works; in the cup in which she mixed, mix for her a double portion.

7 As much as she glorified herself and lived in delights, so much give her torment and mourning; because in her heart she says, ‘I sit as queen, and I am not a widow, and mourning I shall not see.’

8 Therefore in one day her plagues will come—death and mourning and famine—and she will be burned with fire, because strong is God, who will judge her.”

9 And the kings of the earth who committed fornication with her and lived in delights will weep and lament over her when they see the smoke of her burning,

10 standing far away because of fear of her torments, saying, “Woe, woe, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! For in one hour your judgment has come.”

11 And the traders of the earth will weep and mourn over her, because no one will buy their merchandise any longer:

12 merchandise of gold and silver and precious stone and pearl and fine linen and purple and silk and scarlet (and every thyine wood, and every vessel of ivory, and every vessel of precious stone and bronze and iron and marble,

13 and cinnamon), and perfumes and ointment and incense and wine and oil and fine flour and wheat and beasts of burden and sheep and horses and chariots and bondpersons and souls of people.

14 And the fruits desired by your soul have departed from you, and all rich and splendid things have perished from you, and they will no longer find them.

15 The merchants of these things, who became rich from her, will stand far away from her because of fear of her torments, weeping and mourning,

16 and saying, “Woe, woe, that great city, which was clothed in fine linen and purple and scarlet, and was gilded with gold and precious stone and pearls!

17 For in one hour such great riches have been laid waste.” And every shipmaster and everyone who sails into the lake, and the sailors and those who labor at sea, stood far away,

18 and cried out when they saw the place of her burning, saying, “What city is like this great city?”

19 And they cast dust upon their heads and cried out, weeping and mourning, saying, “Woe, woe, that great city, in which all who had ships at sea became rich from her prices! For in one hour she has been made desolate.”

20 Exult over her, O heaven, and holy apostles and prophets, because God has judged your judgment against her.

21 And one mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone and cast it into the sea, saying, “With this force Babylon, that great city, will be cast down, and she will no longer be found.

22 And the voice of harpists and musicians and flute-players, and the sound of the trumpet, will no longer be heard in you; and every artisan of every craft will no longer be found in you; and the voice of a mill will no longer be heard in you;

23 and the light of a lamp will no longer shine in you; and the voice of bridegroom and bride will no longer be heard in you. For your merchants were the princes of the earth, because by your sorceries all nations went astray.

24 And in her was found the blood of prophets and saints, and of all who were slain upon the earth.”

Chapter 19

1 After these things I heard what seemed like the voice of great crowds in heaven, saying, “Alleluia! Salvation and glory and power belong to our God,

2 because his judgments are true and just: he has judged the great harlot who corrupted the earth in her prostitution, and has avenged the blood of his servants from her hands.”

3 And again they said, “Alleluia!” And her smoke ascends unto ages of ages.

4 And the twenty-four elders and the four living creatures fell down and worshiped God, who sits upon the throne, saying, “Amen. Alleluia!”

5 And a voice went out from the throne, saying, “Speak praise to our God, all his servants and you who fear him, small and great.”

6 And I heard what seemed like the voice of a great multitude and like the voice of many waters and like the voice of great thunders, saying, “Alleluia! For the Lord our God Almighty has reigned.

7 Let us rejoice and exult and give glory to him, because the marriage of the Lamb has come, and his wife has prepared herself.”

8 And it was given to her that she should clothe herself in fine linen, shining and white. For the fine linen is the justifications of the saints.

9 And he said to me, “Write: Blessed are those who have been called to the supper of the marriage of the Lamb.” And he said to me, “These words of God are true.”

10 And I fell before his feet to worship him. And he says to me, “See that you do not do it. I am a fellow servant of yours and of your brothers who have the testimony of Jesus. Worship God. For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.”

11 And I saw heaven opened; and behold, a white horse, and he who sat upon it was called Faithful and True, and with justice he judges and fights.

12 And his eyes were like a flame of fire, and upon his head were many diadems; he had a name written that no one knows except himself.

13 And he was clothed in a garment sprinkled with blood, and his name is called the Word of God.

14 And the armies that are in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

15 And from his mouth proceeds a sharp sword edged on both sides, so that with it he may strike the nations. And he will rule them with an iron rod, and he treads the winepress of the wine of the fury of the wrath of Almighty God.

16 And he has written upon his garment and upon his thigh: “King of kings and Lord of rulers.”

17 And I saw one angel standing in the sun, and he cried with a great voice, saying to all the birds that flew through the midst of heaven, “Come and gather together for the great supper of God,

18 so that you may eat the flesh of kings and the flesh of tribunes and the flesh of the mighty and the flesh of horses and of those sitting upon them, and the flesh of all—free and enslaved, small and great.”

19 And I saw the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies gathered to make war with him who sat upon the horse and with his army.

20 And the beast was seized, and with it the false prophet who performed signs before it, by which he deceived those who received the mark of the beast and who worshiped its image. These two were cast alive into the lake of fire burning with sulfur;

21 and the rest were slain by the sword of him who sat upon the horse, which proceeds from his mouth, and all the birds were filled with their flesh.

Chapter 20

1 And I saw an angel descending from heaven, having the key of the abyss and a great chain in his hand.

2 And he seized the dragon, the ancient serpent, who is the devil and Satan, and bound him for one thousand years;

3 and he cast him into the abyss and shut it and sealed it over him, so that he would no longer deceive the nations until the thousand years were consummated; and after these things he must be loosed for a little time.

4 And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them; and I saw the souls of those beheaded because of the testimony of Jesus and because of the word of God, and those who did not worship the beast or its image, nor receive its mark upon their foreheads or upon their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ for one thousand years.

5 The rest of the dead did not live until the thousand years were consummated. This is the first resurrection.

6 Blessed and holy is he who has a part in the first resurrection. Over these the second death has no power; but they will be priests of God and of Christ, and will reign with him for one thousand years.

7 And when the thousand years have been consummated, Satan will be loosed from his prison and will go out and deceive the nations that are upon the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, and will gather them for battle; their number is like the sand of the sea.

8 And they ascended over the breadth of the earth and surrounded the camp of the saints and the beloved city.

9 And fire descended from God out of heaven and devoured them; and the devil who deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and sulfur, where also the beast

10 and the false prophet will be tormented day and night unto ages of ages.

11 And I saw a great white throne and the one sitting upon it, from whose sight earth and heaven fled, and no place was found for them.

12 And I saw the dead, great and small, standing in the sight of the throne, and books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life. And the dead were judged from those things that were written in the books, according to their works.

13 And the sea gave up the dead who were in it, and death and the realm of the dead gave up their dead who were in them; and each one was judged according to his works.

14 And the realm of the dead and death were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

15 And whoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

Chapter 21

1 And I saw a new heaven and a new earth. For the first heaven and the first earth passed away, and the sea is now no more.

2 And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, descending from heaven from God, prepared like a bride adorned for her husband.

3 And I heard a great voice from the throne saying, “Behold, the tabernacle of God is with humanity, and he will dwell with them. And they will be his people, and God himself with them will be their God;

4 and God will wipe away every tear from their eyes, and death will be no more; neither mourning nor crying nor pain will be any more, because the first things have passed away.”

5 And he who sat upon the throne said, “Behold, I make all things new.” And he said to me, “Write, because these words are most faithful and true.”

6 And he said to me, “It is done. I am alpha and omega, the beginning and the end. To him who thirsts I will give freely from the fountain of the water of life.

7 He who conquers will possess these things; and I will be his God, and he will be my son.

8 But the timid and unbelieving and accursed and murderers and fornicators and sorcerers and idolaters and all liars—their portion will be in the lake burning with fire and sulfur, which is the second death.”

9 And one of the seven angels who had the bowls full of the seven last plagues came and spoke with me, saying, “Come, and I will show you the bride, the wife of the Lamb.”

10 And he carried me away in spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me the holy city Jerusalem descending from heaven from God,

11 having the glory of God; and its light was like a precious stone, like a jasper stone, like crystal.

12 And it had a great and high wall, having twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels and inscribed names, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel:

13 on the east three gates, and on the north three gates, and on the south three gates, and on the west three gates.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and upon them the twelve names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

15 And he who spoke with me had a golden measuring reed, so that he might measure the city and its gates and wall.

16 And the city is set in a square, and its length is as great as its width. And he measured the city with the golden reed: twelve thousand stadia; and its length and height and width are equal.

17 And he measured its wall: one hundred forty-four cubits, by the measure of a man, which is that of an angel.

18 And the structure of its wall was of jasper stone, but the city itself was pure gold, like clean glass.

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were adorned with every precious stone. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, chalcedony; the fourth, emerald;

20 the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, carnelian; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, topaz; the tenth, chrysoprase; the eleventh, hyacinth; the twelfth, amethyst.

21 And the twelve gates are twelve pearls, one for each; and each individual gate was of a single pearl. And the street of the city was pure gold, like translucent glass.

22 And I saw no temple in it, for the Lord God Almighty is its temple, and the Lamb.

23 And the city has no need of sun or moon to shine in it, for the glory of God has illuminated it, and its lamp is the Lamb.

24 And the nations will walk in its light, and the kings of the earth will bring their glory and honor into it.

25 And its gates will not be shut by day, for there will be no night there.

26 And they will bring the glory and honor of the nations into it.

27 Nothing defiled will enter into it, nor anyone who does abomination and a lie, but only those who are written in the book of life of the Lamb.

Chapter 22

1 And he showed me a river of the water of life, splendid like crystal, proceeding from the throne of God and of the Lamb.

2 In the midst of its street and on either side of the river was the tree of life, bearing twelve fruits, yielding its fruit in each month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

3 And every curse will be no more; but the thrones of God and of the Lamb will be in it, and his servants will serve him.

4 And they will see his face, and his name will be upon their foreheads.

5 And night will be no more, and they will need neither the light of a lamp nor the light of the sun, because the Lord God will illuminate them, and they will reign unto ages of ages.

6 And he said to me, “These words are most faithful and true. And the Lord God of the spirits of the prophets sent his angel to show his servants what must happen soon.

7 And behold, I come swiftly. Blessed is he who keeps the words of the prophecy of this book.”

8 And I, John, am he who heard and saw these things. And after I had heard and seen, I fell to worship before the feet of the angel who showed me these things;

9 and he said to me, “See that you do not do it, for I am a fellow servant of yours and of your brothers the prophets and of those who keep the words of the prophecy of this book. Worship God.”

10 And he says to me, “Do not seal the words of the prophecy of this book, for the time is near.

11 He who does harm, let him do harm still; and he who is in filth, let him become filthy still; and he who is just, let him be justified still; and he who is holy, let him be sanctified still.

12 Behold, I come soon, and my reward is with me, to render to each one according to his works.

13 I am alpha and omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end.

14 Blessed are those who wash their robes in the blood of the Lamb, so that theirs may be the right to the tree of life, and through the gates they may enter into the city.

15 Outside are dogs and sorcerers and the unchaste and murderers and those serving idols, and everyone who loves and makes a lie.

16 I, Jesus, have sent my angel to testify these things to you in the churches. I am the root and stock of David, the bright and morning star.”

17 And the Spirit and the bride say, “Come.” And let him who hears say, “Come.” And let him who thirsts come; and let him who wills receive the water of life freely.

18 For I bear witness to everyone who hears the words of the prophecy of this book: if anyone adds to these things, God will add upon him the plagues written in this book.

19 And if anyone takes away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God will take away his part from the book of life and from the holy city and from the things written in this book.

20 He who bears testimony to these things says, “Yes, I come soon.” Amen. Come, Lord Jesus.

21 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with all of you. Amen.

CODICI EDITORIAL — STUDY REFERENCE

Editorial rationale and study commentary presented separately from the Scripture text.

EDITORIAL CONTENTS

Genesis 1972

Exodus 2018

Leviticus 2034

Numbers 2045

Deuteronomy 2060

Joshua 2074

Judges 2085

Ruth 2095

First Samuel 2097

Second Samuel 2114

First Kings 2126

Second Kings 2138

First Chronicles 2150

Second Chronicles 2165

Ezra 2184

Nehemiah 2190

Esther 2197

Job 2205

Psalms 2225

Proverbs 2316

Ecclesiastes 2334

Song of Songs 2341

Isaiah 2346

Jeremiah 2384

Lamentations 2414

Ezekiel 2418

Daniel 2452

Hosea 2462

Joel 2472

Amos 2475

Obadiah 2482

Jonah 2483

Micah 2486

Nahum 2492

Habakkuk 2495

Zephaniah 2498

Haggai 2501

Zechariah 2503

Malachi 2514

Matthew 2517

Mark 2537

Luke 2548

John 2565

Acts 2583

Romans 2609

1 Corinthians 2626

2 Corinthians 2640

Galatians 2654

Ephesians 2662

Philippians 2669

Colossians 2675

First Thessalonians 2682

Second Thessalonians 2686

First Timothy 2691

Second Timothy 2697

Titus 2703

Philemon 2710

Hebrews 2713

James 2741

First Peter 2751

Second Peter 2760

First John 2766

Second John 2775

Third John 2777

Jude 2779

Revelation 2781

Genesis — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

Genesis opens with God creating heaven and earth, then ordering what is “empty and void” by speech, division, naming, and blessing. The recurring movement—God speaks, the thing comes to be, God sees that it is good, evening and morning follow—gives the chapter its measured force. Creation advances from light and firmament to land, vegetation, lights, living souls, and finally man in God’s image. The singular “man” opens into “male and female”, and the sixth day closes not merely with goodness but with all things “very good.”

Why the JNV reads this way

The opening keeps the Latin’s singular `cælum`: “In the beginning God created heaven and earth.” At 1:2, `spiritus Dei ferebatur` becomes “the spirit of God was borne over the waters”, retaining the passive motion rather than deciding what carried the spirit. The “face of the abyss” preserves the concrete surface image.

The JNV repeatedly uses “firmament” for `firmamentum` (1:6–8, 14–17, 20). A smoother cosmological substitute would hide the Vulgate’s recurring object. The day formula also follows the Latin numbers: 1:5 ends “one day”, while the later days are “a second day”, “a third day”, and so forth.

Several singular collectives remain singular: “the green plant,” “the fruit-bearing tree”, “the moving creature with a living soul,” and “the living soul”. At 1:26–27, “Let us make man” and “he created him” give way to “male and female he created them.” The English preserves that number shift rather than regularizing it.

Vulgate character preserved

At 1:21, `cete grandia` is “the great sea monsters”, not the former broader `sea creatures`. Animals are repeatedly described through `anima`: “every living and moving soul”, and the later food grant says what moves upon the earth “has a living soul”. Seed-bearing vegetation likewise keeps the concrete `semen` vocabulary.

Ambiguities preserved

The passive “was borne” in 1:2 retains the source’s motion without adding an agent. The plural divine deliberation “Let us make” is left unexplained; the editorial does not impose a doctrinal resolution upon the grammar.

Corrections made in review

Verse 1:12 formerly pluralized the vegetation as “green plants” and `trees`. The final text restores the Vulgate’s singular collectives: “the green plant” and “the tree”. Literary review then refined `making fruit` to the equally faithful “producing fruit,” matching the lucid choice in 1:11. At 1:20, the unclear `moving creature of a living soul` became “the moving creature with a living soul,” preserving `anima` while making the relationship intelligible. At 1:21, `great sea creatures` became the more exact “the great sea monsters”.

Terms carried forward

“Heaven”, “firmament”, “seed,” and “soul” establish binding vocabulary. The chapter also establishes the policy of preserving singular collectives and consequential shifts between singular and plural.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

The creation sequence reaches completion, rest, blessing, and sanctification on the seventh day. The narrative then turns from the whole array of heaven and earth to the formation of one man from clay, the planting of the paradise of delight, the command concerning its trees, the naming of living souls, and the building of the woman from the man’s rib. The chapter ends with recognition, kinship, one flesh, and unashamed nakedness.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 2:4, the first divine `Dominus` in Genesis appears as “the Lord (YHWH)”. The parenthetical is the project’s transparent book-opening identifier; the Latin itself reads `Dominus`. Later occurrences use “the Lord”. The strange purpose construction in 2:3 remains “which God had created to make”, because replacing it with a theological summary would add content.

The Vulgate’s material language governs 2:7: “the Lord God formed man from the clay of the earth and breathed the breath of life into his face, and man became a living soul.” The “paradise of delight” renders `paradisus voluptatis`; the JNV does not insert the name Eden where this Latin passage has not supplied it. The rivers retain equally marked details: gold is “born” in Havilah, and the Tigris runs “opposite the Assyrians.”

The command in 2:16 is direct: “Eat from every tree of the paradise”. At 2:18 and 2:20, “a helper like himself” preserves the possible force of correspondence or likeness without expanding the role. At 2:22, the Lord God “built” the rib into a woman. Adam’s “She will be called Woman, because she was taken from man” conveys as much of `Virago ... viro` as English permits without an explanatory gloss. Verse 24 keeps the Latin preposition: “the two will be in one flesh.”

Vulgate character preserved

The garden is the “paradise of delight,” the river divides into “four heads”, and the naming scene describes each creature as a “living soul.” These features preserve the Clementine wording instead of substituting familiar geography or generalized creature language.

Ambiguities preserved

The compressed case relation in 2:19 was clarified without resolving what the Latin does not: “For each living soul, whatever Adam called it is its name.” The final “surely die” at 2:17 expresses the force of `morte morieris`; a proposed `die by death` was not adopted because it would be needlessly unnatural in English.

Corrections made in review

At 2:10, former past-tense wording made both river actions past. The final text preserves the Latin’s shift: “a river was flowing” and “from there it is divided into four heads.” At 2:16, `You may eat` was corrected to the imperative “Eat from every tree of the paradise”. At 2:19, the former order could suggest that Adam called every animal “a living soul”; the final wording makes the naming relation clear while retaining the present “is its name.”

Terms carried forward

This chapter establishes “the Lord (YHWH)” once per book, then “the Lord”; “paradise of delight”; “living soul”; and the concrete one-flesh vocabulary.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

The serpent’s question unsettles the divine command, the woman and man eat, and opened eyes lead not to mastery but to nakedness and concealment. God’s questions draw the action into speech: Adam names fear, shifts blame to the companion given him, and the woman names deception. The judgments move from serpent to woman to Adam and the earth. Naming, clothing, expulsion, cherubim, and the turning flaming sword close the way to the tree of life.

Why the JNV reads this way

The serpent asks why God commanded them “not to eat from every tree of the paradise” (3:1). That scope follows `ne ... de omni ligno`; it is not silently rewritten as `any tree`. The woman’s “lest perhaps we die” retains `forte`, and the serpent’s promise is plural: “you will be like gods”.

At 3:8, the grammar makes `deambulantis` modify the Lord God, so the JNV says they heard “the voice of the Lord God walking in the paradise in the afternoon breeze”. They hide “from the face of the Lord God”, preserving the repeated bodily image. The interrogations retain their directness and do not supply motives.

The Clementine reading in 3:15 is especially consequential: `ipsa conteret` has a feminine subject. The final text therefore reads, “She will crush your head, and you will lie in wait for her heel.” It does not conform the subject or make both actions forms of crushing. At 3:16, the woman is “under the power of” her husband; at 3:17, “cursed is the earth in your work.” The source’s difficult claims remain concrete rather than softened.

Vulgate character preserved

The JNV retains the paradise, the plural “gods,” the woman as the one who will crush the serpent’s head, and the singular “tree of the paradise” in which the pair hide. At 3:22, divine speech breaks off after the prospect that Adam might “eat, and live forever—”. The dash preserves that unfinished preventative syntax instead of inventing its conclusion.

Ambiguities preserved

The phrase “her seed” keeps `semen` as a singular collective without specifying how the collective should be distributed. The abrupt ending of 3:22 remains open, and no doctrinal explanation is inserted into the serpent judgment.

Corrections made in review

Verse 3:8 formerly said `among the trees of the paradise`, but `ligni` is singular; the final text reads “in the midst of the tree of the paradise.” At 3:16, `greatly multiply` was reduced to “multiply”, removing intensity absent from the simple `multiplicabo`. At 3:18, `plants of the earth` became the source’s singular collective, “the plant of the earth.”

Terms carried forward

The term “seed” is fixed as the normal rendering of `semen`. “paradise of delight”, “face”, and the concrete language of earth, dust, thorns, and bodily pain remain available without euphemism.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

Birth and work lead to offerings; unequal divine regard leads to anger, warning, murder, interrogation, and exile. The earth that received Abel’s blood refuses Cain its fruit, yet Cain also receives a protective mark. His line builds a city and develops pastoral life, music, and metalwork, while Lamech’s short poem intensifies the chapter’s violence. The birth of Seth and Enosh turns the ending toward another seed and the calling upon the Lord’s name.

Why the JNV reads this way

Eve says, “I have acquired a man through God”, preserving `per Deum` within its instrumental or mediating field without deciding whether “through” is best understood as agency or means. In 4:4–5, the Lord “looked upon” Abel and his gifts but “did not look” upon Cain and his gifts. The JNV does not replace the repeated `respexit` with `accepted` or `approved`, because the Latin leaves the precise effect of the look unstated.

God’s warning in 4:7 keeps its difficult concrete nouns and positions: “you will receive” has no supplied object; “sin will immediately be present at the doors”; “its appetite will be beneath you”; and Cain “will rule over it.” The clause “if you act badly” supplies the English verb already expressed in the parallel condition without adding an object to “receive”.

Abel’s blood has a “voice” that cries from the earth, and the earth has a “mouth” that received it. Cain’s answer, “My iniquity is too great for me to deserve pardon”, preserves `iniquitas` rather than deciding that the noun means only guilt, punishment, or burden.

Vulgate character preserved

The Latin says only that the Lord set a `signum`, so the JNV calls it a “mark” without describing its form or bodily location. Jubal remains father of those who play “the lyre and organ”; `organo` is not narrowed to a conjectured instrument. Lamech’s violence is retained in terse poetic form.

Ambiguities preserved

The relationship between the slain man and Lamech’s “wound,” and between the young man and his “bruise” remains compressed. The final wording does not claim that the two victims caused those injuries. Cain’s statement about iniquity and pardon likewise remains morally and judicially open.

Corrections made in review

At 4:15, former wording placed the mark `upon Cain`. The final “set a mark for Cain” removes the invented location. At 4:23, `for wounding me` and `for bruising me` became “for my wound” and “for my bruise”, restoring the source nouns and avoiding invented agency. At 4:24, `seventy-sevenfold` was corrected to the materially different “seventy times seven.” Literary review also repaired the fragment `But if badly` to “But if you act badly”.

Terms carried forward

The chapter reinforces “seed” for `semen`, “the Lord” for divine `Dominus`, and the policy of retaining concrete moral and bodily nouns where interpretation remains open.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

The chapter recasts creation as genealogy: “This is the book of Adam’s generations.” God’s likeness is recalled, male and female together receive the name Adam, and Adam fathers Seth according to his own image and likeness. A steady pattern follows—age, fathering, further years, sons and daughters, total days, death. Enoch interrupts the death refrain by walking with God and ceasing to appear because God took him. The line reaches Lamech, whose naming of Noah looks toward consolation from the cursed earth, then closes with Noah’s three sons.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 5:2, the JNV says, “He called their name Adam”. The singular `nomen` and plural recipients are both visible; the name is not limited to the male or changed to an abstract label for humanity. Verse 3 deliberately echoes chapter 1 while shifting the relationship: Adam fathers a son “according to his own image and likeness”.

The genealogical cadence is not varied for stylistic novelty. Repeated forms such as “he lived”, “he fathered sons and daughters”, “All the days”, and “he died” carry the chapter’s structure and its accumulating mortality. Exact ages and totals remain as the Clementine text supplies them. Familiar English forms—Kenan, Mahalalel, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech, Noah—make identities accessible without changing the source’s relationships or numbers.

Enoch’s departure is kept in the Vulgate’s own terms: “He walked with God, and he did not appear, because God took him.” The English does not insert death, translation, or destination into `non apparuit` and `tulit eum Deus`. This restraint makes the exception to the chapter’s repeated “and he died” audible.

Vulgate character preserved

The heading is a “book” of generations, not merely a list. The collective naming “their name Adam” and the repeated death formula are retained. Lamech’s explanation at 5:29 speaks of consolation “from the works and labors of our hands in the earth that the Lord has cursed”, keeping the Vulgate’s connection between Noah, human toil, and the cursed earth.

Ambiguities preserved

The editorial does not specify how Enoch ceased to appear or where God took him. Noah’s name and Lamech’s prediction are presented as the Latin gives them without claiming that the wording exhausts the name’s significance.

Corrections made in review

Verse 5:29 formerly said Noah would comfort humanity `in the works and labors` of their hands. The governing `ab` expresses separation or relief. The final text therefore reads, “This one will comfort us from the works and labors of our hands”, preventing the consolation from being misrepresented as occurring within the toil rather than relieving it. Independent review found no other required change in the chapter.

Terms carried forward

The chapter establishes the repeated genealogy and death formulas, retains “book of Adam’s generations”, and confirms familiar English name forms where identity is certain.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

Human multiplication opens into the unions of the sons of God and daughters of men, the presence of giants, and mighty men of ancient renown. The focus then narrows to the continual evil of the human heart and God’s regret and inward grief. Judgment is announced against living flesh, but Noah finds grace. His justice, perfection, and walk with God lead into the ark commission: its material, rooms, measurements, opening, levels, occupants, provisions, and the first promise of covenant.

Why the JNV reads this way

The JNV retains “sons of God,” “daughters of men”, “giants”, and “mighty men of ancient times, men renowned” in 6:2–4. The Latin names these groups but does not settle their identities or give a complete account of their relationships. At 6:3, “My spirit will not remain in man forever, because he is flesh; his days will be one hundred twenty years” preserves both the contrast of spirit and flesh and the unqualified number.

Divine emotion is not explained away. At 6:6, God “regretted that he had made man upon the earth, and he was inwardly touched by grief of heart.” This directly represents `pœnituit` and `dolore cordis intrinsecus` without importing a theory of divine change.

The ark is made from “smoothed timbers”, with “small rooms”, pitch inside and out, exact cubit dimensions, a window, a side door, “lower parts, upper rooms, and third stories”. These render the material and architectural vocabulary as given, including the difficult three-level sequence. The flood will kill “all flesh beneath heaven in which there is the spirit of life.”

Vulgate character preserved

“The earth is filled with iniquity because of their presence,” retaining the causal attachment of `a facie eorum` to `repleta est terra iniquitate`. Noah finds “grace before the Lord”, a narrator’s statement distinct from later social formulas of finding favor in someone’s sight. God promises, “I will establish my covenant with you”, using “covenant” for `fœdus`.

Ambiguities preserved

The one hundred twenty years may concern human lifespan or a period remaining before judgment; the English does not choose. The identities of the sons of God, giants, and mighty men also remain unresolved.

Corrections made in review

Independent Latin review found no required correction in this chapter. Literary review made three applied refinements without changing content: at 6:5, `intent upon evil at every time` became the natural “intent on evil at all times”; at 6:6, `touched inwardly with grief` became “inwardly touched by grief”; and at 6:21, the potentially confusing `collect it with you` became “gather it to yourself.”

Terms carried forward

The term “grace” governs this narrator’s divine-grace statement; `fœdus` begins the binding “covenant” vocabulary. The terms “spirit” and “flesh” and the exact ark terminology remain available for the flood narrative.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

The Lord calls Noah and his household into the ark, distinguishing clean from unclean creatures and announcing a seven-day delay before forty days and nights of rain. Entry is narrated through repeated lists, sexes, kinds, dates, and obedience. Then the springs of the great abyss and the floodgates of heaven open. The Lord shuts Noah in from outside; waters lift and bear the ark, cover the mountains, consume all land-breathing life, and hold the earth for one hundred fifty days.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 7:2–3, `septena et septena` remains “seven and seven,” while the unclean creatures are “two and two”. The English does not decide whether the first phrase counts individuals or pairs. The purpose is stated through the canonical image: “so that seed may be saved over the face of the whole earth.”

The chronology remains exact: seven more days, forty days and forty nights, Noah’s six hundredth year, the second month and seventeenth day, then one hundred fifty days. The cosmic sources are the “springs of the great abyss” and “floodgates of heaven”. The chapter’s many repetitions of “according to its kind,” “male and female,” “all flesh,” and “upon the earth” are structural, not clutter to be edited away.

At 7:16, “the Lord shut him in from outside” preserves `inclusit eum Dominus deforis`, including divine agency and the exterior position. The ark “was borne upon the waters”, keeping the passive motion. At 7:23, the immediate Latin sentence leaves the subject of `delevit` unexpressed; “he wiped away every substance” does not replace that grammar with the interpretive labels “God” or “the flood.”

Vulgate character preserved

The Clementine account gives “seven and seven,” a seventeenth-day onset, water fifteen cubits above the covered mountains, and a one-hundred-fifty-day dominion. The JNV retains every number and the comprehensive sequence from birds and beasts to creeping things and “all men.”

Ambiguities preserved

The counting force of “seven and seven” remains open. The unexpressed agent in 7:23 also remains pronominal rather than being named editorially.

Corrections made in review

At 7:4, the former `For seven days from now I will rain` could be heard as seven days of rain and then collided with the stated forty. The final text separates the exact phrases “when seven more days have passed” and “for forty days and forty nights,” making the delay and duration distinct. At 7:14–15, cross-verse review found that former “They entered” in both verses turned one Latin clause into two entry actions. Verse 14 is an unfinished nominative subject list, `ipsi et omne animal ... omnesque volucres`; its sole finite predicate, `ingressæ sunt`, begins verse 15. The final English therefore leaves 7:14 open with an em dash and begins 7:15 “entered the ark with Noah,” restoring the subject-predicate dependency without merging the verse keys. An applied literary refinement at 7:18 changed `filled all things over the surface` to “filled all things upon the surface”, repairing the English attachment while preserving the location.

Terms carried forward

“seed”, “abyss”, “floodgates of heaven”, “spirit of life”, and the formula “according to its kind” continue the book’s established vocabulary.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

God’s remembrance turns the flood narrative from prevailing waters toward diminution, rest, testing, and renewed habitation. A wind passes over the earth; springs and floodgates close; the ark rests on the mountains of Armenia. Noah releases a raven and then a dove through successive periods of waiting. Dry ground appears, God commands the household and creatures out, and Noah answers with an altar and burnt offerings. The Lord receives the fragrance and promises the continuing rhythms of the earth despite the human heart’s inclination to evil.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 8:1, `spiritum` is “a wind” because it is brought over the floodwaters and causes them to diminish. This contextual rendering does not weaken the binding use of “spirit” where the noun denotes the spirit of God or life. The opening also preserves the repeated totality: “God remembered Noah, and all the living creatures, and all the cattle that were with him in the ark.”

The waters return “going and returning,” an unusual motion formula retained from `euntes et redeuntes`. The ark rests in the seventh month on the twenty-seventh day “upon the mountains of Armenia”, and the earth is finally dry on the twenty-seventh day of the second month. These Clementine dates and place wording are not conformed to another chronology.

The raven “went out and did not return until the waters upon the earth had dried.” The JNV preserves the force of `donec` rather than rewriting the bird’s behavior from another account. The dove is feminine in the narrative sequence; Noah catches “her,” and she later carries an olive branch “in her mouth”, the direct body term of `ore`.

Vulgate character preserved

The Lord “smelled the fragrance of sweetness”, preserving the sensory and sacrificial image. His resolve names both “the perception and thought of the human heart”, keeping paired nouns rather than collapsing them. He will not again strike “every living soul”, and the closing pairs—sowing and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, night and day—retain their cadence.

Ambiguities preserved

The raven’s “did not return until” is left with its normal Latin limit construction; the editorial does not infer a later return or deny one. The promise is reported without turning its anthropomorphic sensory and emotional language into abstraction.

Corrections made in review

Independent review found no required change. Two optional refinements were applied because they preserved source texture: 8:1 restored both occurrences of “all” and the repeated conjunctions, and 8:11 changed the anatomically specialized `beak` back to the Latin’s concrete “mouth”.

Terms carried forward

This chapter records the contextual distinction `spiritus` = “wind” over floodwaters while retaining “soul” for `anima`. Its altar, burnt offering, and “fragrance of sweetness” vocabulary should remain stable when those images recur.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

God blesses Noah and his sons with renewed multiplication and dominion, but the post-flood order now includes animal terror, flesh as food, and an account demanded for blood. God establishes a pact with Noah's seed and every living soul, then gives the bow in the clouds as the sign of an everlasting covenant. The chapter turns from cosmic promise to Noah's vineyard, drunken nakedness, the conduct of his sons, and the blessing and curse spoken over their lines. Noah's age and death close the flood generation.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 9:2, the JNV keeps human beings as the source of the animals' response: "Let your terror and trembling be upon every animal". The gift of food at 9:3 is explicit and comparative: "I have handed all things to you, as I did the green plants." Verse 4 prohibits flesh "with blood"; the English does not add "life," because that noun appears elsewhere, not in this clause.

Verse 5 retains the Latin's dense hand-agency and soul-language: "the blood of your souls" is required from beast and man, and "the soul of man" from "the hand of a man and his brother". The construction is difficult, but redistributing its subjects into a smoother explanation would replace the Vulgate's wording.

The chapter distinguishes related nouns. In 9:9–11 God establishes his "pact" (`pactum`); in 9:12–17 the sign belongs to the "covenant" (`fœdus`). The object in the clouds is simply God's "bow", because `arcus` does not itself say `rainbow`. Repeated divine remembrance and the bow's visibility carry the context.

Vulgate character preserved

Every living creature under the pact remains a "living soul". At 9:19, the whole race of men "was sown across all the earth", keeping the seed image. The account of Noah does not hide bodily specificity: Ham sees exposed "private parts", while Shem and Japheth do not see their father's "genitals." The distinct Latin terms are not reduced to generic nakedness.

Ambiguities preserved

At 9:24, Noah learns what "his younger son" did; the verse does not name him. In 9:27, "may he dwell in the tents of Shem" allows the pronoun to refer grammatically to God or to Japheth. The English does not select one.

Corrections made in review

At 9:3, former wording—`as the green plants, I have handed all things to you`—left a broken comparison. The final "I have handed all things to you, as I did the green plants" supplies only the understood English verb. At 9:21, `lay naked` was corrected to "was naked", removing posture absent from `nudatus`. Independent review found no other required change.

Terms carried forward

The binding distinction is "pact" for `pactum` and "covenant" for `fœdus`. The terms "soul", "seed", and "bow" also remain concrete canonical terms.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

The generations of Noah's sons spread outward after the flood. Japheth's line is associated with islands, lands, tongues, families, and nations; Ham's line includes Nimrod's might and kingdom, the cities built from Shinar, and the borders and peoples of Canaan; Shem's line leads through Eber to Peleg and Joktan. The chapter is genealogical, geographic, and political at once, repeatedly joining descent with language and land before concluding that the nations were divided upon the earth.

Why the JNV reads this way

The names use familiar English forms where identity is certain—Ashkenaz, Nimrod, Nineveh, Shelah, Eber, Peleg—while the claims attached to those names follow the Latin. At 10:5, the islands are divided “each according to his tongue and his families within their nations.” This anticipates chapter 11 without changing the source’s present ordering.

Nimrod “began to be mighty upon the earth” and was “a powerful hunter before the Lord.” The repeated phrase remains in the proverb rather than being interpreted as praise or condemnation. At 10:10, the first city is “Babylon,” following the supplied Latin `Babylon` rather than forcing the later Babel form backward.

At 10:11, `Assur` is the grammatical subject: “From that land Asshur went out and built Nineveh, the broad streets of the city, and Calah”. The JNV keeps `plateas civitatis` as a description, “the broad streets of the city,” rather than converting it into a proper name. The table’s repeated formulas—sons, kindreds, tongues, generations, lands, nations—are retained because they organize the chapter’s view of human dispersal.

Vulgate character preserved

Verse 10:14 keeps the compressed `de quibus`: the named Egyptian lines are followed by those “from whom the Philistines and Caphtorim came”, without editorially specifying a narrower ancestry. At 10:21, Shem is “the elder brother of Japheth”. In `fratre Japheth majore`, ablative `majore` agrees with ablative `fratre`; the adjective describes the brother, not Japheth. Verse 25 says “the earth was divided,” not peoples or languages.

Ambiguities preserved

In 10:12, “This is the great city” retains an uncertain antecedent among the immediately named urban places. The ancestry relation in 10:14 likewise remains compressed. No genealogical harmonization is added to settle either point.

Corrections made in review

The dedicated fidelity and literary passes initially found no required change in this chapter. Editorial cross-review later caught a case-agreement error at 10:21: former “the brother of the elder Japheth” misattached `majore`; final “the elder brother of Japheth” makes the adjective agree with `fratre`. Whole-book harmonization confirmed that 10:15’s “the Hethite” should govern the recurring ethnonym; this established form later required a correction at 15:20 and in later Genesis passages.

Terms carried forward

“Hethite” preserves the visible relation to Heth. The chapter also establishes the distinction between a person’s “tongue”, kindred, land, and nation, and it fixes familiar forms for names whose identities recur.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

Humanity begins with one lip and common words, settles in Shinar, manufactures bricks, and undertakes a city and tower to make its name renowned before dispersal. The Lord descends, judges the shared project, confuses the tongue, and divides the builders into all lands; Babel receives its name from that confusion. The chapter then contracts from the whole earth to Shem’s genealogy and finally to Terah’s household, Abram and Sarai, migration from Ur toward Canaan, settlement in Haran, and Sarai’s barrenness.

Why the JNV reads this way

The JNV preserves the source’s distinction between `labium` and `lingua`. The earth is “of one lip”, all the people have “one lip”, and at Babel “the lip of the whole earth was confused”; in 11:7 the Lord says, “let us go down and confuse their tongue there”. Using `language` throughout would erase a deliberate lexical movement.

The builders say, “let us make our name renowned before we are divided into all lands.” The final clause gives their stated concern without adding fear, pride, or motive beyond the text. Their material substitutions remain concrete: bricks take the place of stones and bitumen the place of mortar. The tower's summit "reaches heaven"; the Lord nevertheless "came down" to see it, preserving the narrative contrast.

At 11:5, the builders are "the sons of Adam", the Vulgate's kinship phrase rather than a generalized `humanity`. In 11:7, `audiat` remains "hear the voice of his neighbor." The English does not replace hearing with the inferred idea `understand`. The Lord "divided" them from the place and "scattered" them over the face of all regions, keeping the two actions distinct.

The Shem genealogy retains every age, the two-year relation to the flood, and the repeated fathering of sons and daughters. Terah's section carefully repeats kinship—Lot is "the son of Haran and son of his own son," and Sarai is both daughter-in-law and Abram's wife—before the geographic movement resumes.

Vulgate character preserved

"Babel" is linked to the confusion of the whole earth's "lip." The generations pass through the Clementine ages and names without being conformed to a different chronological tradition. The destination is Canaan, but the family reaches only Haran and settles there.

Ambiguities preserved

The text does not assign a single motive to the building project beyond the builders' own words. The editorial also does not treat Sarai's barrenness as an explanation of later events before the narrative itself develops that relation.

Corrections made in review

Independent Latin and literary review found no required or material optional change in this chapter. Its lip/tongue distinction, genealogy, kinship, and numerical sequence already met the governing standard.

Terms carried forward

The term "lip" for `labium` and "tongue" for `lingua` form a binding distinction. The chapter also establishes Abram, Sarai, Lot, Ur of the Chaldeans, Haran, and Canaan in their familiar English forms.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

The Lord calls Abram out from land, kindred, and father's house toward an undisclosed land, joining departure to promises of nation, name, blessing, and blessing for all earthly kindreds. Abram obeys, enters Canaan, receives the land promise for his seed, and marks the journey with altars. Famine then drives him into Egypt. Fear for his life leads to the sister claim, Sarai is taken into Pharaoh's house, Abram prospers because of her, and the Lord's plagues bring confrontation and expulsion.

Why the JNV reads this way

The opening commands retain their accumulating separations: "Go out from your land, from your kindred, and from your father's house". The promise speaks of "all the kindreds of the earth", reflecting `cognationes` rather than flattening every social grouping into "nations."

At 12:5, Abram takes "the souls they had made in Haran." The difficult `animas quas fecerant` remains "souls" and "made"; the JNV does not infer acquisition, servants, or converts. At 12:6, the destination within the land is "the illustrious valley", preserving `convallem illustrem` rather than importing a proper name from another textual tradition. Verse 7 gives the canonical promise form: "To your seed I will give this land."

Abram journeys "toward the south", and in Egypt asks Sarai to say she is his sister "so that it may go well with me because of you and my soul may live for your sake." The concrete `anima` remains "soul", and Sarai remains the stated reason for his survival without being turned into the agent of a favor.

Vulgate character preserved

The JNV retains the illustrious valley, the souls made in Haran, the repeated altars, and the full inventory of Abram's Egyptian wealth, including male and female donkeys as separately named items. The Lord "scourged" Pharaoh and his house; the violence is neither generalized nor softened.

Ambiguities preserved

The phrase "souls they had made" is left materially strange because the Latin does not specify the social process. The editorial does not excuse, condemn, or psychologize Abram's plan beyond his stated prediction and request.

Corrections made in review

At 12:17, former `grievous plagues` softened the superlative `maximis`; the final text reads "very great plagues". At 12:19, `so that I took her to be my wife` changed the purpose construction into completed result. The final "so that I might take her for myself as a wife" restores the mood and purpose. At 12:13, literary review also refined `my soul may live by your favor` to "my soul may live for your sake", accurately attaching Sarai as the reason.

Terms carried forward

The Abrahamic promise uses "seed". `Anima` remains "soul", and `convallem` is "valley", a decision that governs the later Valley of Mamre.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

Abram returns from Egypt to the south and then retraces his route to the altar near Bethel. His and Lot's possessions have become too abundant for shared dwelling, and conflict arises between their shepherds. Abram offers separation without rivalry; Lot chooses the watered Jordan region and settles in Sodom. After that separation, the Lord renews and enlarges the land promise, comparing Abram's seed to the dust of the earth. Abram walks the land and settles beside the Valley of Mamre, where he builds another altar.

Why the JNV reads this way

The chapter's repetitions are purposeful. At 13:6, "The land could not contain them so that they might dwell together, for their possessions were many and they could not dwell together." Repeating "dwell together" keeps the force of `habitarent simul` and `habitare communiter`; stylistic variation would obscure that co-residence, not communal ownership, is the issue.

Abram calls Lot his "brother", following the broad Vulgate use of `frater` even though the genealogy has identified a more extended relationship. The left-and-right offer is kept in balanced clauses, while Lot's choice is narrated through sight: he lifts his eyes and sees a region watered "like the paradise of the Lord and like Egypt as one comes to Zoar." The comparison remains located before the Lord's overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah.

At 13:11, Lot "departed from the east". This is the direction given by `recessit ab oriente`; the JNV does not reverse it to conform to another textual tradition. Verse 13 says the men of Sodom "were most wicked, and they were sinners beyond measure before the Lord", retaining both the superlative and `nimis`.

The promise uses the concrete "seed" three times. Its comparison remains dust, and its second condition retains a human agent: if a man can number the dust, "he will also be able to number your seed."

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter keeps Lot's departure "from the east," the paradise comparison, and Abram's residence beside "the valley of Mamre," not a tree or grove imported from elsewhere. Land is traversed in its "length and breadth".

Ambiguities preserved

The broad kinship “brothers” is not narrowed, and the moral description of Sodom is not expanded with particular acts not yet narrated. The promise’s collective seed remains grammatically singular.

Corrections made in review

At 13:6, the former `unable to live in common` sounded like communal property; the final repeated “could not dwell together” restores the actual relation. At 13:13, the broken `sinners exceedingly` became “they were sinners beyond measure”, preserving degree and the phrase “before the Lord.” At 13:16, a passive `your seed also can be numbered` lost the man’s agency; the final “he will also be able to number your seed” restores it.

Terms carried forward

“seed”, “paradise of the Lord”, and the “valley of Mamre” govern their later repetitions. Broad `frater` remains “brother” unless the Latin itself supplies a narrower kinship term.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

A regional war is mapped through kings, cities, years of service, revolt, campaigns, and the decisive encounter of four kings against five in the Wooded Valley. Sodom and Gomorrah fall, Lot is taken, and an escapee brings word to Abram. Abram numbers 318 household-born ready men, divides his companions, strikes by night, and recovers people and possessions. On his return, Melchizedek blesses him with bread and wine, while the king of Sodom offers goods. Abram’s oath refuses enrichment from Sodom but protects the shares of his allies.

Why the JNV reads this way

The political geography follows the supplied Latin: Arioch is “king of Pontus,” and `vallis Silvestris` is the “Wooded Valley,” now the “Sea of Salt.” Its many bitumen pits remain part of the battle’s physical setting. The sequence of twelve years’ service, revolt in the thirteenth, and invasion in the fourteenth is preserved exactly.

Abram hears that “Lot his brother” has been captured. He “numbered his ready men born in his household, three hundred eighteen”; `expeditos vernaculos` is not expanded into a more detailed military category. At 14:15, “with his companions divided” retains the compressed tactic of `divisis sociis` without explaining formations the Latin does not name.

Melchizedek is king, priest, and bearer of bread and wine. He blesses Abram by “God Most High, who created heaven and earth,” and blesses God “by whose protection” the enemies are in Abram’s hands. The following “he gave him tithes from everything” keeps both participants pronominal because `dedit ei` does not explicitly restate subject and recipient.

Vulgate character preserved

The king of Sodom asks for “the souls”, not generalized “people.” Abram’s oath reaches from “a thread of the weft to a sandal strap,” retaining `filo subtegminis` and the small concrete objects that mark total refusal. The chapter’s place-names and titles remain those of the Clementine text.

Ambiguities preserved

The subject and recipient of the tithe in 14:20 remain grammatically unstated. The editorial does not settle the exchange by importing an interpretation. The term “brother” also retains the source’s broad kinship usage.

Corrections made in review

At 14:11, `The victors took` was corrected to “They took”, removing an explanatory label absent from the source. At 14:24, former `Let them take their shares` changed future `accipient` into permission. The final “These will take their shares” restores the future indicative. No other required change was found.

Terms carried forward

The allies had “made a covenant” with Abram, establishing a contextual verbal form for `pepigerant fœdus`. “souls”, “God Most High,” and “Possessor of heaven and earth” retain their concrete and titular force.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

The word of the Lord comes in vision with protection and exceedingly great reward, but Abram answers from childlessness and an uncertain household heir. God redirects him from Eliezer to one from his own body and from the household to the innumerable stars. Abram believes, and this is reckoned as justice. A second exchange concerns possession of the land: divided animals, descending birds, deep sleep, horror, foreign servitude, judgment, return, and delayed Amorite iniquity culminate in a smoking furnace and lamp of fire passing between the parts as the Lord makes covenant.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 15:1, `sermo Domini` is “the word of the Lord”, preserving the event-like arrival of divine speech. Abram’s description of Eliezer follows the compressed Latin without replacing its genealogy: “this Eliezer of Damascus is the son of the steward of my house.” The promise then uses a deliberately bodily expression: the heir will come “from your own belly”. `Womb` would misrepresent speech addressed to Abram, while generic `body` or `line` would flatten `uterus`.

The seed image joins household, stars, servitude, and land. At 15:6, `justitia` is “justice”: “Abram believed God, and it was reckoned to him as justice.” This follows the project’s canonical terminology rather than substituting a doctrinally preferred English abstraction.

At 15:13, singular collective “seed” becomes the plural object “them”, while the enslaving subject remains unstated: “They will subject them to servitude”. The English preserves both number shift and missing subject. The promise also retains “a good old age”, the fourth generation, and the still-incomplete “iniquities of the Amorites”.

Vulgate character preserved

The vision’s physical and emotional images remain strong: “a great, dark horror”, “dark obscurity”, “a smoking furnace”, and “a lamp of fire”. The covenant territory begins at “the river of Egypt” and reaches “the great river Euphrates”, followed by the supplied peoples.

Ambiguities preserved

The Eliezer construction remains syntactically unusual, and the subject who will enslave Abram’s seed is not named. The imagery passing between the divided bodies is reported without assigning symbolic meanings absent from the chapter.

Corrections made in review

At 15:2, predicate-first English made the genealogy harder than the Latin required; the final sentence begins with “this Eliezer of Damascus” and clearly attaches the steward relationship. At 15:17, former wording made a participle appear to modify both furnace and lamp. The final “a smoking furnace appeared, and a lamp of fire passed” restores the lamp’s agency. Whole-book harmonization also changed `the Hittites` at 15:20 to “the Hethites,” matching 10:15 and preserving the relation to Heth.

Terms carried forward

`Justitia` is normally “justice”, `semen` is “seed”, and `fœdus` is “covenant”. “Hethite” is the stable ethnonym throughout Genesis.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

Sarai’s barrenness leads her to give Hagar to Abram as a wife in hope of receiving sons. Conception changes the household’s relations: Hagar despises her mistress, Sarai accuses Abram, Abram returns Hagar to Sarai’s hand, and Sarai afflicts her until she flees. The angel of the Lord finds Hagar at a desert spring, names both her origin and destination, commands her return, and promises innumerable seed. The child’s name, character, and future are announced. Hagar names the God who saw her and the well that memorializes that encounter, then bears Ishmael.

Why the JNV reads this way

Sarai says, “the Lord has closed me from bearing.” This renders `conclusit me ... ne parerem` without making the completed “has closed” govern an awkward present-purpose clause. Her next command and hope are connected: “Go in to my maidservant, so that perhaps, at least from her, I may receive sons.” The plural “sons” remains, and Hagar is explicitly given “as a wife”.

The account does not soften human agency. Hagar “despised her mistress”; Sarai says Hagar “held me in contempt”; Abram tells Sarai, “your maidservant is in your hand”; and “When Sarai afflicted her, she fled.” The same “hand” becomes the location beneath which the angel commands Hagar to humble herself.

At 16:10, the emphatic construction remains “Multiplying, I will multiply your seed”. The promise does not replace `semen` with descendants or smooth away the repeated verb. Ishmael’s description is equally direct: “He will be a wild man. His hand will be against everyone, and everyone’s hand against him; he will pitch his tents opposite all his brothers.” The social or geographic force of “opposite” is not narrowed.

Vulgate character preserved

Hagar says, “Indeed, here I have seen the back parts of the one who sees me.” The difficult `posteriora videntis me` remains bodily and strange; it is not conformed to a more familiar naming formula. The well is descriptively “the Well of the Living One Who Sees Me”, reflecting the words this Latin supplies.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise force of Hagar’s seeing “the back parts” remains open. So does whether Ishmael’s pitching opposite his brothers is primarily geographical, social, or adversarial.

Corrections made in review

Verse 16:2 formerly read `the Lord has closed me so that I may not bear` and left `if perhaps` awkwardly detached from Sarai’s command. The final “closed me from bearing” and “so that perhaps, at least from her, I may receive sons” restore the tense relationship and purpose without adding a guarantee. Independent review found no other required change.

Terms carried forward

The term “seed” remains concrete; “angel of the Lord” retains the divine title; and semantic well-names are translated from the Latin wording rather than replaced by a name from another textual tradition.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

At ninety-nine, Abram sees the Lord and is commanded to walk before him and be perfect. Covenant and multiplication lead to prostration, divine speech, the new name Abraham, nations, kings, seed, land, and the embodied sign of circumcision. Sarai likewise becomes Sarah and receives the promise of a blessed son. Abraham laughs and asks that Ishmael live before God; God blesses Ishmael but establishes the pact with Isaac. Divine speech ends with God ascending, and Abraham answers immediately by circumcising himself, Ishmael, and every male of his house on that very day.

Why the JNV reads this way

This chapter makes the distinction between `fœdus` and `pactum` visible. Verse 2 says “I will set my covenant”; verse 4 begins with the bare “I am, and my pact is with you”. At 17:7, the terms meet without being collapsed: “I will establish my pact between me and you and your seed after you throughout their generations as an everlasting covenant”. The same distinction continues through the circumcision sign and the promise to Isaac.

The new name is grounded in the stated appointment as “father of many nations.” The English also preserves two different nation constructions: “I will set you among nations” (17:6), while Sarah’s son “will become nations” (17:16). Seed stays singular and concrete across generations, land, circumcision, and Isaac.

The circumcision command retains its bodily and social extent: “every male”, an infant of eight days, those born in the household, those purchased, and those not of Abraham’s stock. The uncircumcised male is described as a “soul” that “will be wiped away from his people,” because “he has made my pact void.” Neither consequence nor anatomy is euphemized.

Vulgate character preserved

Abraham’s internal question keeps its form: “Do you think a son will be born to a centenarian, and Sarah at ninety will bear?” At 17:22, “God ascended from Abraham” preserves the spatial image of `ascendit ... ab Abraham`. The obedience sequence repeats “on that very day” and the exact ages ninety-nine and thirteen.

Ambiguities preserved

The bare “I am” in 17:4 receives no added predicate. Abraham’s laughter and plea for Ishmael are narrated without editorially deciding the laughter’s moral quality.

Corrections made in review

At 17:15, former `You shall not call Sarai your wife Sarai` could attach the prohibition to calling her “your wife”. The final “You shall not call your wife Sarai, but Sarah” makes the name change clear. At 17:20, `twelve leaders` became “twelve chiefs,” harmonizing `duces` with the later Genesis clan lists. Literary review also replaced `the speech of the one speaking` at 17:22 with “the speaker’s discourse”, removing needless English tautology while retaining `sermo loquentis` and the passive ending.

Terms carried forward

The chapter makes “pact” and “covenant” a binding lexical distinction, confirms “seed” and “soul”, establishes “chief” for clan `dux`, and fixes the names Abraham, Sarah, Ishmael, and Isaac.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

The chapter moves from urgent hospitality to promised life, then from divine disclosure to Abraham’s sustained appeal for Sodom. The opening deliberately holds together the Lord’s appearance, three men standing near Abraham, and Abraham’s singular address. Sarah’s hidden laughter answers the promise of a son; the Lord’s direct question exposes it. The men then face Sodom, while Abraham remains before the Lord and presses the number of righteous people from fifty down to ten. The emotional motion is therefore from welcome and wonder through fear to morally serious intercession.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 18:3, singular `Domine` becomes “My lord,” even though the feet and hearts in 18:4–5 are plural. At 18:10, singular `Cui dixit` likewise yields “He said to him”. The JNV does not force the three visitors into a simpler grammatical scheme.

The marked ablative `vita comite` recurs at 18:10 and 18:14. The final wording, “with life as my companion,” gives the image a grammatical English relation without reducing it to a mere date formula. At 18:19, `faciant judicium et justitiam` is “carry out judgment and justice”. Carry out makes `faciant` lucid, while judgment and justice preserve the two distinct governing nouns. The judicial language continues at 18:25: “You who judge all the earth will never carry out such a judgment.”

At 18:21, the difficult `opere compleverint` remains “fulfilled in deed the outcry that has come to me”. The wording preserves the Latin image of an outcry being fulfilled in action rather than replacing it with an explanatory claim that a report was accurate.

Vulgate character preserved

The Lord is shown “in the valley of Mamre” at 18:1, and the narrative then names “three men” at 18:2 without an editorial identification. The repeated seeing, standing, and turning remain concrete. Sarah’s question about giving herself to pleasure in 18:12 is not softened into a generalized remark about age, and Abraham remains “dust and ashes” in 18:27.

Ambiguities preserved

The alternation between singular and plural address among the visitors is consequential and unresolved in the Latin. The English follows each grammatical signal rather than supplying a theory of the visitors’ identity. The relation between the outcry and the deed at 18:21 also remains deliberately strange.

Corrections made in review

At 18:3–4, cross-verse review found that the former period after “your servant” and passive “Let a little water be brought” severed `sed afferam` from Abraham’s plea and erased its first-person agency. The final text ends 18:3 with “do not pass by your servant,” and begins 18:4 “but let me bring a little water,” preserving the contrastive link and Abraham’s first-person agency. At 18:5, the former you may strengthen your hearts weakened the imperative `confortate`; the final text says “strengthen your hearts”. At 18:10 and 18:14, former life attending was replaced by “with life as my companion,” preventing a bare Latinism from obstructing the promise. At 18:19, former do justice and righteousness became “carry out judgment and justice”, restoring both `judicium` and `justitia` under the binding terminology ruling.

Terms carried forward

Social `gratia` is favor at 18:3. Divine `Dominus` remains the Lord, while human address is contextual lord. `Judicium` and `justitia` govern later uses as judgment and justice.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

The two angels enter Sodom under Lot’s hospitality, but the city surrounds his house and demands the visitors. The angels pull Lot inside, strike the crowd with blindness, and urge the household to flee. Lot lingers; the Lord spares him, Zoar is granted as refuge, and Sodom and Gomorrah are overthrown. Lot’s wife looks back and becomes a statue of salt. The chapter then narrows from the ruined region to a cave, where Lot’s daughters preserve their father’s seed through incest and become the mothers of Moab and Ammon. Rescue, judgment, fear, and morally difficult survival are left in their full narrative sequence.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 19:5, `cognoscamus` is “that we may know them.” Know preserves the verb’s lexical breadth; the surrounding threat supplies its terrible context without an explanatory gloss inside the reader text. At 19:8, `abutimini` is explicit: “you may abuse them as you please”. The translation neither euphemizes Lot’s proposal nor attributes approval to the narrative.

The repeated `anima` in 19:17, 19, and 20 is soul: “Save your soul”, “saving my soul”, and “my soul will live.” This retains the chapter’s concrete vocabulary while the adjacent verbs express rescue and life. At 19:24, the source’s repeated divine title remains “Then the Lord rained sulfur and fire upon Sodom and Gomorrah, from the Lord out of heaven.” At 19:26, `statua salis` is exactly “a statue of salt”; pillar would erase the noun actually supplied by the Vulgate.

The daughters' stated purpose in 19:32 and 34 uses `semen`. The final "preserve seed from our father" keeps the bodily and generational image visible. Verse 38 also preserves the Vulgate's semantic gloss for Ammon: "Son of My People".

Vulgate character preserved

The city is destroyed after "their outcry" grows before the Lord, a construction retained without importing an unstated object of complaint. The ash rises "like the smoke of a furnace" in 19:28. Lot's repeated dwelling with both daughters in 19:30, the daughters' direct sexual language, and the father's failure to perceive their lying down or rising are all retained without mitigation.

Ambiguities preserved

The verb know at 19:5 is not replaced by an interpretive paraphrase. The narrative makes the violence evident, but the editorial does not pretend that the Latin used a more anatomically explicit verb. Lot's singular "my lord" at 19:18 also remains singular after plural speakers, continuing the grammatical openness begun in chapter 18.

Corrections made in review

At 19:7, former Please, my brothers, do not do this evil became "Do not, please, my brothers—do not do this evil", restoring `nolite ... nolite`. At 19:13, former the outcry against them became "their outcry", correcting the direction of `clamor eorum`. At 19:16, the compressed former coordination was clarified to "his hand, his wife's hand, and the hand of each of his two daughters," so all four rescued persons are grasped by the hand.

At 19:32 and 34, offspring became seed under the canonical `semen` ruling. At 19:35, former slept with him was refined to "lay with him", and the distinct `concubuerit` became "lay down with him"; this restores the parallel with 19:33 while preserving the verbal distinction.

Terms carried forward

`Anima` is normally soul, `misericordia` is mercy, and `semen` is seed. `Statua` remains statue, distinct from the later standing-stone `titulus`, which is pillar.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

Abraham sojourns in Gerar and again identifies Sarah as his sister. Abimelech takes her, receives a divine warning in a night dream, and answers from his lack of knowledge and the simplicity of his heart. God acknowledges that claim, commands restoration, and identifies Abraham as a prophet whose prayer will bring life. Abimelech confronts Abraham, restores Sarah, gives property and silver, and opens the land to him. Abraham then prays, and God heals the household whose wombs the Lord had closed. The chapter preserves both human self-defense and divine prevention without declaring them identical.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 20:4, `gentem ignorantem et justam` becomes "an unwitting and righteous nation?" Unwitting expresses lack of knowledge without making `ignorantem` a judgment about intelligence, while righteous remains a separate predicate. Verses 5–6 then retain the lexical repetition of `simplicitas`: Abimelech acted with "the simplicity of my heart", and God answers that he acted "with a simple heart". The "cleanness of my hands" remains a separate bodily image.

The warning in 20:7 represents `morte morieris` as "you will surely die", preserving the intensified death formula in lucid English. Abraham's explanation at 20:12 remains specific: Sarah is his father's daughter but not his mother's daughter. The text is not adjusted to reconcile that assertion with information elsewhere.

At 20:16, `velamen oculorum` remains "a covering of the eyes". The closing `mementoque te deprehensam` is rendered "remember that you were reproved", retaining the admonitory force while acknowledging a difficult participle that can involve detection, capture, or conviction.

Vulgate character preserved

The Vulgate explicitly calls Abraham a `propheta` at 20:7, and the JNV retains prophet at the point where his prayer mediates healing. The chapter also distinguishes God's coming in a dream from the Lord's bodily judgment on the household: "the Lord had closed every womb".

Ambiguities preserved

Verse 16 does not fully determine how the silver functions as "a covering of the eyes", nor does `deprehensam` reduce cleanly to one English legal category. The final sentence remains concrete and admonitory rather than adding an explanation the Latin does not supply.

Corrections made in review

The independent fidelity review found no required correction in this chapter. Literary review changed the potentially comic ignorant and righteous nation to "an unwitting and righteous nation?" This preserves the epistemic sense of `ignorantem`, keeps it distinct from `justam`, and avoids moralizing it as innocent.

Terms carried forward

At 20:13, `misericordia` is mercy. `Simplicitas` is carried as simplicity/simple, not silently merged with innocence or justice.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

The Lord visits Sarah and fulfills the promised birth of Isaac. Laughter moves from Sarah's astonishment into a public naming saying, but the household soon divides: Sarah demands the expulsion of Hagar and her son, Abraham grieves, and God distinguishes Isaac's called seed from the great nation also promised through the maidservant's son. In the wilderness, water fails, the boy's voice is heard, Hagar's eyes are opened, and God remains with him. The chapter closes with Abraham and Abimelech resolving a dispute over a well through oath, testimony, and covenant, after which Abraham calls upon the everlasting God.

Why the JNV reads this way

The wordplay of 21:6 keeps `risum` and `corridebit` visible: "God has made laughter for me; whoever hears will laugh with me." The compressed question at 21:7 retains Abraham as the person believed: "Who, hearing it, would have believed Abraham—that Sarah would nurse a son whom she bore to him in his old age?" The dash clarifies the content of belief without substituting a different subject.

At 21:12, `in Isaac vocabitur tibi semen` is "in Isaac seed will be called for you"; the striking passive and concrete seed both remain. Verse 13 continues, "because he is your seed." The wording does not blur Isaac's promise and Ishmael's promised nation into one statement.

The sequence in 21:14 places bread and the water skin on Hagar's shoulder, then separately gives her the boy. At 21:20, "God was with him" supplies the continuing divine subject required by the context of `Et fuit cum eo`, rather than leaving an unintelligible pronoun.

In 21:27, `percusserunt ... fœdus` is "struck a covenant." At 21:30, the seven ewe lambs are "a testimony"; at 21:32, `inierunt fœdus pro puteo juramenti` is "entered into a covenant concerning the Well of the Oath." These concrete relationships distinguish the act of striking, the act of entering, the witness object, and the covenant's subject matter.

Vulgate character preserved

The familiar place-name Beersheba appears at 21:31, while the source's explicit semantic form appears in 21:32 as the Well of the Oath. The JNV preserves both instead of erasing the Vulgate's gloss. At 21:23, `misericordiam` remains mercy, not a generalized social kindness.

Ambiguities preserved

The syntax of Sarah’s question at 21:7 is compressed enough to permit more than one initial attachment. The English clarifies Abraham’s old age but does not replace the Vulgate’s unusual claim that someone would have “believed Abraham”.

Corrections made in review

At 21:5, former at this age of his father Isaac was born became “Isaac was born when his father was this age”, removing a misleading attachment. At 21:7, former whom she bore to him now old became “whom she bore to him in his old age”. At 21:11, former received this harshly became “found this grievous”, so the line describes Abraham’s pain rather than a harsh response.

At 21:12 and 13, offspring became seed, restoring `semen` and its singular predication. At 21:32, former covenant at the Well became covenant “concerning the Well”, restoring the force of `pro puteo`. These changes are all present in the final text.

Terms carried forward

`Semen` is seed. `Misericordia` is mercy. `Fœdus` is covenant, while its governing verb remains concrete: strike or enter into as the Latin supplies. `Testimonium` is testimony, and semantic well names remain visible beside familiar place-names.

Chapter 22

The chapter's movement

God tests Abraham by commanding him to offer Isaac in the land of Vision. Abraham rises in the night, travels for three days, lays the wood upon his son, and carries the fire and sword himself. At the altar, the angel of the Lord stops his hand; a ram is offered in Isaac’s place. The place is named through the Lord’s seeing, and a second heavenly speech joins oath, blessing, multiplied seed, possession, and blessing for all nations. A genealogy of Nahor then turns the narrative toward Rebekah.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 22:1, `tentavit` is tested. Although the Latin verb can carry the sense of temptation, that English word would misleadingly suggest solicitation to evil in this stated divine action. In 22:2, 12, and 16, `unigenitus` remains only-begotten: “your only-begotten son Isaac” and “your only-begotten son”. The expression is marked even within the book’s account of Abraham’s other son, and the translation does not reduce it to a less specific adjective.

The implement in Abraham’s hand is `gladius`, so 22:6 and 10 say sword, not a domesticated household implement. Verse 8 carefully distinguishes Abraham’s speech, “God will provide for himself the victim for the burnt offering,” from the place-name in verse 14. There `Dominus videt` and `Dominus videbit` are “The Lord Sees” and “On the mountain the Lord will see.” The repeated seeing is not replaced by a different concept merely to make the name and Abraham’s earlier statement sound identical.

The promise in 22:17–18 keeps collective `semen` singular: “I will multiply your seed”, “Your seed will possess the gates of its enemies,” and “in your seed all the nations of the earth will be blessed”. The singular pronoun its follows the singular verbs and reflexive relation in the Latin.

Vulgate character preserved

The destination is “the land of Vision”, preserving the semantic geography supplied by `terram visionis`. Abraham sees the ram “behind his back”, caught among thorns, and the angel speaks “from heaven” twice. The JNV also retains the difficult title only-begotten rather than harmonizing it away.

Ambiguities preserved

The source does not explain how only-begotten relates to the earlier narrative of Ishmael; the English records the title without adding a theory. Abraham's plural "we will return" in 22:5 remains as spoken and is not turned into an editorial prediction.

Corrections made in review

At 22:17, the former offspring … their enemies became "I will multiply your seed" and "Your seed will possess the gates of its enemies," restoring the repeated concrete noun, singular number, and reflexive relationship. At 22:18, former in your offspring became "in your seed". Independent review found no other required change in the chapter.

Terms carried forward

`Tentare` in this divine testing context is test. `Unigenitus` is only-begotten, `gladius` is sword, and `semen` is seed. The place-name pair preserves `videt/videbit` as sees/will see.

Chapter 23

The chapter's movement

Sarah dies at the age of one hundred and twenty-seven in Arba, identified as Hebron. Abraham comes to mourn and weep, then rises from the funeral duty to secure a burial possession among the sons of Heth. Public speech at the city gate moves through deference, intercession, offer, valuation, weighing, witnesses, and legal confirmation. Only after the field, cave, trees, boundaries, and price have been named does Abraham bury Sarah. Grief is thus followed by careful public acquisition, and the chapter closes by repeating that the property is secured as a tomb.

Why the JNV reads this way

Abraham calls himself "a newcomer and a foreigner" at 23:4, preserving both `advena` and `peregrinus`. The sons of Heth call him "a prince of God among us" at 23:6; the JNV keeps the divine genitive rather than converting the expression into a merely social superlative. At 23:8, `Si placet animæ vestræ` has a singular noun, `soul`, with a possessive that addresses the gathered people. The final "If it pleases your souls" distributes that singular expression across the plural addressees instead of pretending that the Latin noun itself is plural.

The requested burial place is `spelunca duplex`, consistently "the double cave" at 23:9, 17, and 19. The Vulgate supplies a descriptive expression, not a different proper name, so the English preserves the description. At 23:16, Abraham weighs "four hundred shekels of silver, of approved public currency", keeping the weight, metal, approval, and public character of the money.

The repeated `confirmatus est` in 23:17 and 20 becomes "was secured". The legal repetition matters: first the entire bounded property is secured as Abraham's possession in public sight; then the field and cavern are again secured specifically as a possession for a tomb.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter repeatedly calls the deceased "my dead" or "your dead", a stark concrete formulation retained from `mortuum`. Ephron's "but what is that?" at 23:15 remains inside the valuation speech without an inserted explanation of bargaining custom. The trees and "all its boundaries round about" remain part of the acquisition.

Ambiguities preserved

Ephron first says he gives the field and cave, then names their value. The JNV presents that sequence without deciding for the reader whether the first speech is generosity, convention, or negotiation.

Corrections made in review

The independent fidelity and literary reviews found no required or material wording correction in this chapter. Whole-book review confirmed sons of Heth, double cave, and the public transaction language as internally consistent.

Terms carried forward

`Anima` remains soul; at 23:8 the singular Latin expression is distributed across plural addressees in English. `Spelunca duplex` is double cave. The ethnonym and genealogy retain the visible Heth/Hethite relationship.

Chapter 24

The chapter's movement

Abraham places his senior servant under oath to find Isaac a wife from Abraham's land and kindred without taking Isaac back there. The servant travels with ten camels and goods, prays at a spring, and recognizes Rebekah through her offered water for both man and camels. In her household he recounts the commission, prayer, and encounter before eating. Laban and Bethuel receive the event as a word from the Lord; Rebekah herself agrees to go. The journey ends with Isaac seeing the camels, receiving Rebekah into Sarah's tent, loving her, and finding his grief tempered. The long repetition turns providential direction into publicly testable testimony rather than narrative shorthand.

Why the JNV reads this way

The chapter's dense alternation of `Dominus` and human `dominus` is made visible through the Lord and master/lord. At 24:12, the servant addresses "O Lord, God of my master Abraham"; at 24:18, Rebekah answers the servant, "Drink, my lord". This preserves relationship and capitalization without importing an all-cap divine convention.

The oath at 24:2 and 9 retains the hand beneath Abraham's thigh. At 24:7, the land promise is "To your seed I will give this land", keeping `Semini` within the canonical promise vocabulary. At 24:27 and 49, `misericordia et veritas` remains mercy and truth, not an abstracted pair. The servant is led "by a straight path", preserving the repeated claim that the Lord directed his way.

At 24:22 and 47, `inaures` is earrings. The object's precise ancient form is not certain, but the two-shekel weight, the paired ten-shekel bracelets, and the later adornment of Rebekah's face all remain explicit. At 24:41, the compact condition remains "innocent of my curse" if the relatives refuse her. The Latin kinship term `frater` remains "my master's brother" in 24:27 and 48, even though the narrated relation is more extended; the reader text does not silently repair the genealogy.

Vulgate character preserved

Rebekah's own "I will go" at 24:58 is retained after her family asks her will. The blessing keeps `mille millia` as "thousands upon thousands". The well at 24:62 is "The Living One Who Sees"; unlike the earlier form in 16:14, this Latin name omits me, so the JNV omits it too.

Ambiguities preserved

The facial placement of `inaures` remains culturally and lexically uncertain; the English names the object consistently without adding an archaeological explanation. Broad `frater` remains brother, allowing the Vulgate's kinship usage to stand beside more exact terms elsewhere.

Corrections made in review

At 24:3, the graceless former bind you by oath by the Lord became "place you under oath by the Lord". At 24:7, offspring became seed. At 24:10, the incomplete former carrying with him from all his master's goods became "taking with him some of every kind of good his master possessed", making the partitive sense intelligible.

At 24:35, unstable pronouns formerly made the Lord appear to be magnified; the final text names both agents: "my master has been magnified" and "The Lord has given him". At 24:60, former your offspring … their enemies became "may your seed possess the gates of its enemies", restoring concrete vocabulary and singular number.

Terms carried forward

`Misericordia` and `veritas` are mercy and truth. `Semen` is seed. Human `dominus` is master or lord according to relationship. The well name The Living One Who Sees remains distinct from the form containing Me.

Chapter 25

The chapter's movement

The chapter gathers several successions around Abraham’s death. Keturah’s descendants are named; Abraham then gives gifts to the sons of his concubines and sends them east, while giving his principal possession to Isaac. He dies full of days and is buried with Sarah. Ishmael’s twelve princely lines are then named, followed by his death and territory. The account turns to Isaac and Rebekah: barrenness gives way to contending twins, a divine saying announces two peoples, and Esau and Jacob emerge already marked by difference. The closing exchange of red stew for the birthright makes the struggle in the womb visible in adult choice.

Why the JNV reads this way

The genealogies use familiar English name forms where identity is certain, while allowing distinct people with the same Latin surface form to differ: Keturah’s `Henoch` is Hanoch, not automatically the Enoch of an earlier line. At 25:9, Ephron is “son of Zohar the Hethite,” preserving the established Heth/Hethite relation and the recurring double cave.

The death formulas remain lexically distinct. Abraham `congregatus est ad populum suum` at 25:8 and is “gathered to his people.” Ishmael `appositus ad populum suum` at 25:17 and is “added to his people.” Verse 18 then uses `obiit`, simply “he died”, after the territorial notice. The JNV does not flatten three verbs into one familiar formula.

At 25:11, the well is again “The Living One Who Sees”, matching 24:62 because both Latin forms omit me. In 25:23, “the elder will serve the younger” preserves the age relation and the direction of service. At 25:25, the subject of `appellavit eum Jacob` is an unstated masculine singular; “he called him Jacob” does not assign the naming to Rebekah. At 25:31–34, neuter plural `primogenita` becomes natural singular birthright, a grammatical-number adjustment that does not change the referent.

Vulgate character preserved

The little ones “struck against each other” in Rebekah’s womb, and the answer speaks of nations in her womb and peoples divided from her belly. Esau is both a skilled hunter and `homo agricola`, rendered “a farmer”. The red dish and the naming of Edom remain explicitly linked.

Ambiguities preserved

The unnamed masculine subject who calls Jacob is left unnamed. Ishmael’s “died in the presence of all his brothers” follows the geography without an explanatory transition, preserving the source’s abruptness.

Corrections made in review

The independent fidelity and literary reviews found no required or material correction in this chapter. Whole-book harmonization confirmed the distinctions gathered, added, and died, as well as the well name and Hethite spelling.

Terms carried forward

`Congregatus` is gathered and `appositus` is added in the death formulas. `Spelunca duplex` remains double cave. `Primogenita` is birthright in this narrative.

Chapter 26

The chapter's movement

A famine sends Isaac toward Gerar, where the Lord forbids him to descend into Egypt and renews the oath concerning land, seed, and blessing. Isaac's fear leads him to call Rebekah his sister; Abimelech discovers the marriage and protects it. Divine blessing then appears materially in a hundredfold harvest, growing wealth, and Philistine envy. Stopped wells and repeated quarrels move Isaac from Calumny through Enmities to Breadth. At Beersheba, divine presence and human covenant follow, and the discovery of water yields Abundance. Esau's Hethite marriages close the chapter in grief for Isaac and Rebekah.

Why the JNV reads this way

Verse 1 distinguishes the new `fames` from the earlier `sterilitas`: "A famine arose in the land after the sterility that had occurred in the days of Abraham". The slightly unusual sterility prevents two different source nouns from becoming the same event-label. In 26:3–4, `semen` is consistently seed, while distinct `posteris` is descendants: "I will multiply your seed", "give to your descendants all these regions", and "in your seed".

At 26:5, the Vulgate's fourfold list remains "my precepts and commandments" and "my ceremonies and laws." Ceremonies may sound chronologically marked, but it is the explicit `cæremonias` and is not silently generalized. At 26:8, `jocantem cum Rebecca` becomes "playing with Rebekah his wife." The verb may suggest affectionate or intimate play; playing with preserves that range and lets Abimelech's conclusion arise from the scene.

The wells retain both physical imagery and semantic names. `Aqua viva` at 26:19 is "living water." `Calumniam`, `Inimicitias`, `Latitudo`, and `Abundantiam` become Calumny, Enmities, Breadth, and Abundance. These are not replaced by unrelated proper names where the Vulgate itself supplies meanings. In 26:28, `ineamus fœdus` is "let us enter into a covenant," distinct from the struck covenant of 21:27.

Vulgate character preserved

The Philistines stop Abraham's wells, Isaac reopens them under their former names, and new conflict is narrated through new names. The text says the Lord "made room for us" and caused increase "upon the earth", retaining the spatial explanation of Breadth. Esau's wife Judith is explicitly "daughter of Beeri the Hethite".

Ambiguities preserved

The JNV does not decide how intimate `jocantem` is, nor does it explain the natural mechanism of "living water." The semantic well names remain images within the narrative rather than footnoted interpretations.

Corrections made in review

At 26:3, 4, and 24, the former offspring was harmonized to seed; verse 4 deliberately retains descendants for `posteris`. At 26:35, former Both of them offended the spirit of Isaac and Rebekah became "Both of them grieved Isaac and Rebekah." The refinement preserves `offenderant animum` while avoiding the false impression that the couple shares a single spiritual entity.

A later cross-verse audit corrected 26:14–15. Formerly, 26:14 made `invidentes` a finite "the Philistines envied him," while 26:15 independently repeated the Philistines as subject. Final 26:14 ends "the Philistines, envying him," and 26:15 continues "stopped up ... all the wells." This restores the participial construction, shared agent, and finite predicate `obstruxerunt` across the numbered boundary.

Terms carried forward

`Semen` is seed, but `posteri` remains descendants. `Fœdus` is covenant, with enter into for `inire`. Semantic well names and living water remain visible wherever the Vulgate supplies them.

Chapter 27

The chapter's movement

Isaac’s failing sight and expectation of death set the blessing in motion. Rebekah overhears, directs Jacob, prepares the food and disguise, and accepts the threatened curse. Jacob enters under Esau’s name; voice, hands, scent, food, wine, and kiss carry Isaac from suspicion to blessing. Esau’s arrival exposes the deception. His roar, tears, and request produce a second, harder blessing, followed by hatred and a plan to kill Jacob. Rebekah answers with flight to Laban and frames Jacob’s departure through the danger of marriage with the daughters of Heth.

Why the JNV reads this way

The repeated `anima` in 27:4, 19, 25, and 31 remains soul: “so that my soul may bless you” and “so that your soul may bless me.” This keeps the blessing’s bodily and personal source visible instead of reducing every occurrence to a pronoun. The sensory testing is likewise concrete. Isaac says, “The voice indeed is Jacob’s voice, but the hands are Esau’s hands.” The blessing then begins from “the fragrance of his garments”.

At 27:20, Jacob’s explanation is simply “It was God’s will that what I desired should quickly meet me.” The source gives `Voluntas Dei fuit`; the JNV records Jacob’s claim within the deception without adding approval, disbelief, or narrative correction. At 27:28 and 39, `pinguedo terræ` is “the fatness of the earth”, preserving the earth as a bodily image of abundance rather than replacing it with a generalized richness.

The naming accusation at 27:36 uses `supplantavit`, so Esau says Jacob “has supplanted me a second time.” This keeps the verbal link to Jacob’s name as far as lucid English permits. Esau’s blessing retains `Vives in gladio` as “You will live by the sword”, and the eventual release remains the physical action of shaking off and loosening a yoke from the neck.

Vulgate character preserved

Isaac’s astonishment is “beyond what can be believed,” Esau “roared with a great cry”, and later “wept with a great wail.” The JNV preserves these intensities rather than smoothing them into one generic grief. The poetic blessings keep their source images: dew, fatness, grain, wine, service, curse, sword, and yoke.

Ambiguities preserved

Verse 39 suspends its syntax across the verse boundary: “In the fatness of the earth and in the dew of heaven from above” is completed by “will your blessing be”. The English does not force the phrase into a more explanatory relation than the Latin states. Jacob’s reported motive at 27:20 remains his speech, not the narrator’s verdict.

Corrections made in review

A later cross-verse audit required one correction at 27:23–24. Former 27:23 ended “So he blessed him,” making the blessing a completed event before Isaac’s question. Final 27:23 ends “So, blessing him,” and 27:24 begins “he said,” because present participle `Benedicens` depends on `ait`. The revision restores their simultaneous relation and avoids implying a prior completed blessing. Earlier fidelity, literary, and whole-book reviews required no other correction.

Terms carried forward

`Anima` is soul where lucid English permits. `Benedicere/benedictio` remains the visible bless/blessing family; `maledictio` remains curse. Human `dominus` in the blessing is lord.

Chapter 28

The chapter's movement

Isaac blesses Jacob, forbids a Canaanite marriage, and sends him to his mother’s family in Syrian Mesopotamia. Esau responds by taking an additional wife from Ishmael’s line. Jacob departs Beersheba, sleeps at an unnamed place, and sees a ladder joining earth and heaven, angels moving upon it, and the Lord leaning upon it. Land, seed, blessing, protection, and return are promised. Awaking in fear, Jacob names Bethel, raises and anoints the stone from beneath his head, and makes a conditional vow ending in worship, divine belonging, and a tenth.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 28:2, 5, and 6, exact `Mesopotamia Syriæ` is Syrian Mesopotamia. The phrasing identifies one recurring region consistently. Verse 2 renders `avunculi tui` as “your mother’s brother”, keeping a precise kinship term where the Latin supplies one. In 28:3, `Deus omnipotens` is “Almighty God” and the promised multiplication is vividly “throngs of peoples.”

The promise preserves `semen` at 28:4, 13, and twice in 14 as seed: “to you and to your seed after you”, “to you and to your seed”, “Your seed will be like the dust of the earth”, and “in you and your seed”. At 28:13, `Dominum innixum scalæ` remains “the Lord leaning upon the ladder”. The Lord is not repositioned above or beside it.

The dream’s governing verb begins in 28:12 with `Viditque`. Because “the Lord leaning upon the ladder and saying to him” remains another object of Jacob’s seeing, verse 13 begins “And he saw the Lord leaning upon the ladder and saying to him”. That syntax keeps the vision continuous. At 28:18 and 22, `titulus` is pillar: Jacob “set it upright as a pillar,” preserving the same standing stone that recurs later at Bethel.

Vulgate character preserved

The ladder stands on earth and touches heaven; angels ascend and descend upon it; the Lord leans upon it. The JNV retains this full spatial arrangement. Bethel is identified as formerly Luz, and the anointed stone is directly named “the House of God.”

Ambiguities preserved

The vow in 28:20–21 forms a conditional sequence: if God accompanies, protects, feeds, clothes, and returns Jacob safely, “the Lord will be my God”. The English does not decide whether this final clause is consequence, promise, or an additional condition.

Corrections made in review

At 28:13, the former independent The Lord was leaning upon the ladder and said to him became “And he saw the Lord leaning upon the ladder and saying to him”, restoring Jacob’s seeing and the dream’s syntax. The final wording at 28:13 was subsequently conformed from offspring to seed; whole-book review separately records the same binding seed correction at 28:4 and 14. At 28:18 and 22, former monument became “pillar”, aligning `titulus` with the repeated Bethel object. All final forms were reverified together.

Terms carried forward

`Mesopotamia Syriæ` is Syrian Mesopotamia. `Semen` is seed. The standing stone `titulus` is pillar, while `statua` remains statue. Bethel and House of God remain visibly related.

Chapter 29

The chapter's movement

Jacob reaches the eastern land and a well closed by a great stone. Rachel arrives with Laban’s flock; Jacob moves the stone, waters the sheep, kisses her, and weeps. Welcome into Laban’s house becomes seven years of service for Rachel, years shortened in Jacob’s experience by love. At the wedding Laban substitutes Leah, then requires another seven years for Rachel. The chapter turns from Jacob’s preferred marriage to the Lord’s regard for despised Leah: her first four sons are born through a sequence of seeing, hearing, hoped-for attachment, and confession.

Why the JNV reads this way

The kinship terms remain as precise—or as broad—as the Latin makes them. At 29:10, `consobrinam suam` is “his cousin”, and Laban is “his mother’s brother”. At 29:12, however, Jacob says he is Rachel’s “father’s brother”, following `frater ... patris sui` even though the narrated genealogy indicates a more extended relationship. The JNV does not silently replace broad brother with a reconstructed family term.

At 29:14, Laban’s `Os meum es, et caro mea` is “You are my bone and my flesh.” Leah’s `lippis ... oculis` at 29:17 becomes “bleary eyes”. Weak, dull, or watery might be possible in isolation, but bleary remains concrete and contrasts her eyes with Rachel’s lovely face and graceful appearance.

Verse 31 says `quod despiceret Liam` without naming the despising subject. The final “Leah was despised” preserves that grammatical openness rather than inserting Jacob as the actor, however likely he may be in context. Leah’s naming speeches then retain their governing verbs and images: the Lord “has seen my humiliation”, “heard that I was held in contempt,” and at Judah’s birth, “Now I will confess to the Lord.” `Confitebor` is not normalized to praise or thanksgiving.

Vulgate character preserved

The well’s mouth, the gathered flocks, and Jacob’s removal of the great stone give the meeting its physical setting. The wedding deception is narrated through evening, entry, and morning recognition without added explanation. Leah’s fertility and Rachel’s barrenness remain a stated act of the Lord’s seeing.

Ambiguities preserved

The agent of Leah’s being despised remains unstated. Broad brother at 29:12 stands beside exact cousin and mother’s brother at 29:10, showing the source’s own differing levels of kinship precision.

Corrections made in review

The independent fidelity, literary, and whole-book reviews found no required or material correction in this chapter. They confirmed that bleary eyes, the passive “Leah was despised,” and “confess to the Lord” preserve consequential Latin features without blocking comprehension.

Terms carried forward

Exact `consobrina` is cousin and `avunculus` is mother’s brother; broad `frater` remains brother. `Confiteri` remains confess where the Vulgate uses that theological verb.

Chapter 30

The chapter's movement

Rachel’s barrenness opens a contest for children involving Bilhah, Zilpah, mandrakes, and repeated naming speeches. The women speak of judgment, matching, fortune, blessedness, wages, dowry, reproach, and addition as sons are born; Dinah is named in the sequence, and the Lord finally opens Rachel’s womb for Joseph. The chapter then shifts from household fertility to flock fertility. Jacob seeks departure, Laban negotiates wages, and a visually dense breeding account describes colors, rods, water troughs, mating seasons, and increasing wealth. Desire for children and struggle over property are joined by recurring claims about what God has given or blessed.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 30:3, Bilhah is to “bear upon my knees”, a direct rendering of `pariat super genua mea`. The JNV retains the concrete kinship or incorporation image without inserting a cultural explanation. The naming sayings remain lexically distinct: “The Lord has judged for me” at Dan, “God has matched me with my sister” at Naphtali, “Good fortune!” at Gad, and “This is for my blessedness, for women will call me blessed” at Asher. The repeated roots are allowed to sound repeated.

Leah’s accusation in 30:15 contains compressed `nisi etiam`, but a literal English unless would create a false condition. The final two questions preserve escalation: “Does it seem a small thing to you that you took my husband from me? Would you take my son’s mandrakes also?” At 30:27, social `gratiam` is favor, fitting Laban’s petition “in your sight.”

The flock account retains overlapping but distinguishable color language. Verse 32 names “varied sheep”, “scattered fleece”, and what is “dark, spotted, and varied”. Later verses use variegated, spotted, white, black, and sprinkled with different colors as the Latin changes among `varium`, `maculosum`, `album`, `nigrum`, and `respersum`. At 30:41, the sheep “conceive while gazing at” the rods, preserving `in earum contemplatione` as a visual action rather than an abstract explanation.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter keeps the rods’ partly stripped bark, exposed whiteness, green portions, the “very heat of intercourse,” and the distinction between first and late mating seasons. It neither omits the physical husbandry nor supplies a modern causal judgment. Jacob’s claim at 30:33 remains personified: “Tomorrow my justice will answer for me”.

Ambiguities preserved

The flock-color vocabulary overlaps, and its categories shift with animal, fleece, and offspring. The JNV keeps those differences visible where English permits rather than imposing a single rigid color system. The rods are narrated as Jacob’s practice without an added scientific explanation.

Corrections made in review

At 30:15, the misleading former unless you take my son’s mandrakes also became the second rhetorical question “Would you take my son’s mandrakes also?” At 30:33, former my righteousness became “my justice”, restoring binding `justitia`. At 30:41, former conceive in contemplating them became “conceive while gazing at them”, preserving the visual relation while removing mechanical English.

Terms carried forward

`Justitia` is justice. Social `gratia` is favor. The naming wordplays preserve matched, fortune, blessedness/blessed, wage, and add where their Latin speeches supply them. The source’s flock-color families remain visible, while the `varium` family is rendered contextually as varied/variegated.

Chapter 31

The chapter's movement

Laban’s sons accuse Jacob, Laban’s face changes, and the Lord commands Jacob to return to his land. Jacob recounts his service and dreams to Rachel and Leah; they answer that their father sold them and ate their price. The household flees, while Rachel secretly takes Laban’s idols. Pursuit ends under a divine warning, but Laban accuses and searches. Rachel conceals the idols; Jacob, unaware, erupts into a twenty-year reckoning. The conflict closes through covenant, pillar, mound, bilingual names, witness language, sacrifice, blessing, and separation.

Why the JNV reads this way

The repeated expression about Laban’s face in 31:2 and 5 remains “not toward him as it had been yesterday and the day before.” Its bodily image is not reduced to a statement that Laban’s attitude changed. At 31:8, the Vulgate says the flocks bore white offspring when Laban assigned white as wages, even though the preceding wage account uses a different distribution. The JNV preserves `alba` and does not harmonize the reports.

Rachel and Leah say Laban “sold us, and eaten our price” at 31:15. The concrete `comedit pretium nostrum` remains deliberately accusatory. Rachel steals `idola`, rendered idols, rather than the interpretive household gods. At 31:35, her explanation remains indirect: “what is customary for women has now happened to me.” This conveys `consuetudinem feminarum` without adding anatomy.

At 31:42 and 53, `timor Isaac` is the marked divine designation the Fear of Isaac. Capitalization shows that Jacob swears by this title, not merely by Isaac's emotion. Verse 43 retains masculine `filiis et nepotibus` as "my sons and my grandsons", even though Laban gestures toward the broader household.

The settlement distinguishes covenant and evidence. `Ineamus fœdus` is "let us enter into a covenant"; `testis` is witness, and `testimonium` is testimony. `Titulus` in 31:45 is a standing pillar. The supplied names remain "the Mound of Witness" and "the Heap of Testimony," with Gilead retained as the familiar place-name and then glossed.

Vulgate character preserved

God identifies himself as "I am the God of Bethel, where you anointed the stone and vowed a vow to me". Jacob's labor remains bodily: heat and frost scorch him, and sleep flees from his eyes. Laban's boundary invokes God as the only present watcher when no human witness remains.

Ambiguities preserved

Rachel's indirect claim is neither anatomically expanded nor treated as narrator-confirmed fact. The title Fear of Isaac is retained without explaining whether its force is reverence, dread, or a fuller divine designation.

Corrections made in review

At 31:35, former what happens according to the custom of women has now happened to me became "what is customary for women has now happened to me", removing an English-only repetition. The former sentence Thus the anxious care of the one searching was deceived was refined to "Thus the searcher's careful effort was thwarted." At 31:36, former spoke in contention became "quarreled with him", restoring the action of `jurgium`. At 31:45, former monument became "pillar", aligning the recurring `titulus` image.

Terms carried forward

`Idola` is idols. `Timor Isaac` is the Fear of Isaac. `Fœdus`, `testis`, and `testimonium` remain covenant, witness, and testimony. `Titulus` is pillar.

Chapter 32

The chapter's movement

Angels meet Jacob as he resumes his journey, and their appearance names the place Camps. News that Esau approaches with four hundred men turns Jacob from logistical division to prayer and then to an elaborate sequence of gifts. After sending family and possessions across the Jabbok, Jacob remains alone and wrestles with a man until morning. A withered thigh, demanded blessing, new name, withheld name, and the naming of Peniel mark the encounter. Sunrise finds Jacob limping, and the chapter ends by connecting his wound to Israel's continuing refusal to eat the affected sinew.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 32:2, the Vulgate supplies both Mahanaim and its meaning: "Mahanaim, that is, Camps." Jacob's social speech repeatedly calls Esau "my lord" and himself Esau's servant, while his prayer addresses divine `Domine` as "O Lord". This contextual capitalization preserves the human and divine relationships.

The prayer in 32:10 keeps the concrete nouns and number: "I am less than all your mercies and your truth". Plural `miserationibus` is mercies, and `veritate` is truth. Jacob's staff, the Jordan, and the movement from one traveler to two companies remain visible evidence within the prayer. At 32:12, `dilatares semen meum` is "expand my seed like the sand of the sea," preserving both the unusual verb and canonical seed.

Verse 24 first calls the opponent `vir`, so the JNV says "a man wrestled with him". It then keeps the source's progression: the man cannot overcome Jacob, touches the thigh's sinew, and it withers. At 32:28, the Vulgate gives an explicit argument: "if you were strong against God, how much more will you prevail against men?" The JNV retains that logic rather than replacing it with wording derived from a different textual form.

At 32:30, familiar Peniel represents Latin `Phanuel`, while the explanation remains “I saw God face to face, and my soul was saved.” Verse 32 preserves both the sinew’s earlier withering and its later numbness; the Latin does not identify the anatomy more precisely than `nervus femoris`.

Vulgate character preserved

The gifts are counted animal by animal, each herd advances separately, and Jacob hopes to appease Esau by what goes before him. The wrestling scene keeps its reversals: an opponent who cannot overcome Jacob still wounds him, and Jacob refuses release without blessing.

Ambiguities preserved

The opponent enters as a man, is addressed without a supplied identity, refuses to disclose his name, and is afterward associated with Jacob’s claim to have seen God. The English preserves that sequence without prematurely naming him. The precise thigh sinew also remains unspecified.

Corrections made in review

Whole-book harmonization changed 32:12 from former expand my offspring to “expand my seed”. This restores `semen`, ties the prayer to the recurring promise, and preserves the sand image. Independent review found no other required change in the chapter.

Terms carried forward

`Miserationes` is mercies, `veritas` is truth, `semen` is seed, and `anima` is soul. Familiar Peniel retains the Vulgate’s face-to-face explanation.

Chapter 33

The chapter's movement

Jacob sees Esau and four hundred men, orders his household, advances alone, and bows seven times. The anticipated attack becomes embrace, kiss, and weeping. Esau’s questions draw out Jacob’s account of children as God’s gift and the companies as a gift meant to find favor. Jacob presses the blessing upon his brother until Esau accepts. They decline one another’s proposed forms of accompaniment and travel separately. Jacob settles first at Succoth, then near the Shechemite city of Salem, purchases a field, and raises an altar to the Most Mighty God of Israel.

Why the JNV reads this way

Verse 1 uses exact `filios` and therefore says Jacob divided “the sons of Leah and Rachel and of both maidservants.” Verse 2 then uses broader `liberos` for the maidservants’ “children” before returning to Leah’s “sons”. The English preserves this deliberate shift rather than flattening both nouns.

Esau’s `Quid sibi volunt isti? et si ad te pertinent?` at 33:5 remains two questions: “What is the meaning of these? Do they belong to you?” The unusual double inquiry is clarified but not merged. At 33:8, Jacob’s `Ut invenirem gratiam` is a concise purpose answer, “To find favor before my lord.” Social `gratia` remains favor in both this exchange and 33:10, 15.

Jacob says at 33:10, “I have seen your face as though I had seen the countenance of God.” The comparison is preserved as spoken; the JNV does not turn Esau into a divine figure or explain Jacob’s rhetoric. At 33:11, `Vix fratre compellente` becomes “Only after his brother pressed him did Esau accept it.” This makes reluctant acceptance clear.

The place-name `Socoth` is retained as Succoth and glossed “that is, Tents.” Exact `Mesopotamia Syriæ` at 33:18 is Syrian Mesopotamia. Verse 19 preserves `centum agnis` as “one hundred lambs”, not a monetary unit imported from another tradition. The altar title `fortissimum Deum Israël` is “the Most Mighty God of Israel.”

Vulgate character preserved

The reconciliation retains bodies and rank: bowing, embracing, clasping the neck, kissing, weeping, lord, and servant. Jacob calls the offered property a blessing, not merely a present, because `benedictionem` is explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The chapter reports Jacob's intention to come to Esau in Seir and then narrates his arrival at Succoth and Salem without explaining the relation between those movements. The JNV does not add a motive or accusation.

Corrections made in review

At 33:1, former children of Leah, Rachel, and the two maidservants became "sons of Leah and Rachel and of both maidservants", restoring masculine `filios` and its contrast with verse 2. At 33:8, former They are so that I may find favor became "To find favor before my lord", restoring the concise purpose answer. At 33:11, former Esau scarcely received it became "Only after his brother pressed him did Esau accept it." This prevents received from suggesting a merely physical or incomplete transfer.

Terms carried forward

Social `gratia` is favor. `Benedictio` remains blessing even for Jacob's gift. Syrian Mesopotamia, semantic place-name glosses, and the title the Most Mighty God of Israel remain stable.

Chapter 34

The chapter's movement

Dinah goes out to see the women of the region. Shechem sees, loves, seizes, and rapes her, then asks his father to obtain her as his wife. Jacob waits for his sons; Hamor proposes intermarriage and shared land, while Shechem offers any dowry. Jacob's sons answer deceitfully and require circumcision. Hamor and Shechem commend the arrangement to their city as both social union and economic gain. On the third day Simeon and Levi kill the males; the other sons plunder the dead, property, little ones, and wives. Jacob protests the danger brought upon his household, and the brothers end with a question about their sister's abuse.

Why the JNV reads this way

Verse 2 keeps the entire sequence of `adamavit`, seizure, intercourse, and `vi opprimens virginem`: Shechem "loved her", "seized her and lay with her," and did so while "overpowering the virgin by force." The first verb is not allowed to romanticize or cancel the violence that follows. At 34:3, `conglutinata est anima ejus cum ea` remains the strange concrete image "His soul was glued to her". Feminine `tristem` is then made clear in "he soothed her in her sorrow with caresses."

In 34:7, the act is "a foul deed in Israel" and "an unlawful thing." At 34:13 and 27, `stuprum` is rape, not a euphemism about dishonor. The brothers' own prohibition at 34:14 retains both `illicitum et nefarium` as "unlawful and impious". At 34:15, `fœderari` is "make a covenant", preserving the political form of their deceitful proposal.

Verse 25 renders `confidenter` as confidently: Simeon and Levi "entered the city confidently." The Latin does not explicitly say that the city was unsuspecting or secure, so the JNV does not add that tactical explanation. Verse 29 plainly states that the victors carried away the little ones and wives as captives. The final `abuti ... scorto` remains "abused our sister as a prostitute", keeping both abuse and the degrading comparison.

Vulgate character preserved

The JNV refuses to soften either Shechem's violence or the brothers' retaliation. Circumcision is presented in the exact sequence as a covenant condition, civic persuasion, bodily wound, occasion of attack, and prelude to plunder. The city's economic calculation—"their substance, livestock, and all they possess will be ours"—remains explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The adverb `confidenter` assigns confidence to Simeon and Levi's entry. What the Latin leaves unstated is the circumstance that enabled them to enter confidently; the English does not invent an unsuspecting or secure condition for the city. The brothers' final question remains the chapter's last word; the English does not insert a verdict that the narrator does not state there.

Corrections made in review

At 34:3, the former he soothed her, sorrowful, with caresses left the feminine adjective liable to attach to Shechem. The final “he soothed her in her sorrow with caresses” makes Dinah the sorrowful person while retaining every action and the Vulgate’s unsettling sequence. Independent review found no other required correction in the chapter.

Terms carried forward

`Anima` is soul, including the image of a soul being glued to another person. Social `gratia` is favor. `Stuprum` is rape, `abuti` is abuse, and `fœderari` retains make a covenant.

Chapter 35

The chapter's movement

Jacob's return to Bethel begins with household purification and an altar, then moves through a succession of appearances, names, births, offenses, and deaths. God confirms the name Israel and renews the land-and-seed promise. Deborah's burial anticipates Rachel's more extended death notice; Benjamin's birth joins sorrow to continuity. Reuben's act then disturbs the household before the chapter gathers Jacob's sons and closes with Isaac being added to his people. The sequence is deliberately mixed: covenant renewal does not remove grief or disorder from the family through whom the promise continues.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 35:4 the Latin simply coordinates `deos alienos` and `inaures`. The JNV therefore says that they gave Jacob `all the foreign gods they had, and the earrings that were in their ears`; it does not decide that the earrings were themselves cult objects. At 35:13, terse `recessit ab eo` becomes `Then he withdrew from him.` No ascent or visible manner of departure is supplied.

The Clementine text explicitly locates the journey near Ephrath `verno tempore`. Verse 35:16 accordingly says Jacob `came in the spring to the land that leads to Ephrath`, retaining both the season and the unusual route description. At 35:18, Rachel's `anima` remains concrete: `As her soul went out because of the pain, and death was now drawing near`. The explanations `Son of My Sorrow` and `Son of the Right Hand` are also in the Latin; they are translated as part of the narrative, not added as notes.

Verse 35:22 leaves the person who knew of Reuben's act grammatically implicit. The wording `this did not escape him at all` preserves that pronoun instead of naming Jacob. Verse 35:26 likewise retains the source's summary that the listed sons `were born to him in Syrian Mesopotamia`, even though Benjamin's birth has just been narrated near Ephrath. The JNV reports the Vulgate's wording rather than silently reconciling it.

Vulgate character preserved

The springtime notice, the two translated name glosses, and the birthplace summary are all distinctive features of this Latin text. The death formula in 35:29 now distinguishes `appositus est`—`was added to his people`—from the separate language of gathering used elsewhere.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation of the earrings to the foreign gods, the referent of `him` in 35:22, and the scope of the birthplace statement in 35:26 remain open where the Latin leaves them open.

Corrections made in review

Five material refinements reached the final text. In 35:8, former `at the roots of Bethel` became final `at the foot of Bethel`, removing an accidental image of a town with literal roots while preserving the location. In 35:12, former `to your offspring after you` became final `to your seed after you`, restoring the governing rendering of `semen`. In 35:17, former `she began to be in danger` became final `she began to face danger`, giving the inceptive verb natural force without diminishing Rachel's peril. Whole-book review changed former `Mesopotamia of Syria` to final `Syrian Mesopotamia` in 35:9 and 35:26, matching the same place elsewhere. It also changed former `was gathered to his people` to final `was added to his people` in 35:29, so `appositus` is not collapsed into congregatus.

Terms carried forward

`seed` remains the normal covenant term for `semen`; `soul` remains the normal concrete rendering of `anima`. `Syrian Mesopotamia` governs the recurring place-name, and `was added to his people` marks the `appositus` death formula.

Chapter 36

The chapter's movement

The narrative pauses over Esau's house. It first records his wives, children, wealth, and withdrawal from Jacob, then traces Edomite and Horite lines, the kings who ruled before Israel had a king, and the chiefs associated with clans and territories. Repetition is structural rather than ornamental: names recur as sons, chiefs, inhabitants, and rulers, turning a family departure into a political geography and firmly identifying Esau with Edom.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 36:2 the descent of Oholibamah follows the Latin sequence: `Oholibamah daughter of Anah, daughter of Zibeon the Hivite`. The wording does not repair the case and gender difficulties by importing a different genealogy. Verse 36:6 retains `every soul of his household` for `omnem animam domus suæ`; even in a census-like setting, `anima` remains visible as `soul`.

Across 36:15–43, `dux` is consistently `chief`: `Chief Teman`, `Chief Lotan`, and the other repeated forms preserve the catalogue's political title and its insistent cadence. The same Latin word can receive another English office where a military complement or a different context requires it, but this clan list calls for one stable term. At 36:24, `aquas calidas` is not generalized to water: Anah `found hot springs in the wilderness`. The heat is part of the source's identification of him.

The royal sequence also follows its precise local relations. In 36:37, `de fluvio Rohoboth` makes Rehoboth the river's name or apposition, so Shaul is `from the river Rehoboth`; the JNV does not turn Rehoboth into a settlement beside an unnamed river.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter retains the statement that Edomite kings reigned before the children of Israel had a king, the explicit hot springs, and the repeated `dux` headings. It also keeps the Latin genealogy of Oholibamah as transmitted, without attempting a harmonized family tree.

Ambiguities preserved

The grammatical relationship among Oholibamah, Anah, and Zibeon remains as the Latin states it. The translation gives readers the sequence but does not claim a solution to its genealogical difficulty.

Corrections made in review

Two required corrections were applied. At 36:2, former `Elon the Hittite` became final `Elon the Hethite`. This whole-book harmonization preserves the visible connection with Heth and keeps the same man under one ethnonym. At 36:37, former `Shaul from Rehoboth by the river` became final `Shaul from the river Rehoboth`. The correction restores the source's place-name relationship and prevents the English from inventing an unnamed river beside Rehoboth.

Terms carried forward

In tribal and clan catalogues, `dux` is carried forward as `chief`; military and royal contexts remain separately governed. `Hethite` is the established form of the ethnonym connected with Heth.

Chapter 37

The chapter's movement

Joseph's story opens by concentrating household tension into images: a favored robe, two dreams of bowing figures, an empty cistern, silver, a bloodied garment, and Jacob's descent in grief. Joseph moves from shepherding with his brothers to slavery in Egypt while the brothers move from envy to conspiracy and concealment. Reuben's attempted rescue fails, Judah redirects murder into sale, and the chapter closes by binding Jacob's continuing mourning to Joseph's sale into Potiphar's house.

Why the JNV reads this way

Verse 37:2 follows the Clementine particulars: Joseph is `sixteen years old`, and he accuses his brothers `of a most wicked crime`. Neither the age nor the severity of `crimine pessimo` is normalized. In 37:3, `tunicam polymitam` is a `many-colored robe`; in 37:23, `talari` adds `long`. The English names the features the Latin supplies while leaving fabric and construction unspecified.

At 37:22, `anima` occurs in an idiom of killing beside the shedding of blood. The final `Do not take his life or shed blood` is a documented contextual exception to the usual `soul`: “kill his soul” would suggest destruction of an immaterial soul rather than the threatened killing of Joseph. The rest of the verse keeps Reuben's purpose explicit—he wished to rescue Joseph and return him to his father.

The caravan at 37:25 carries the differentiated goods `spices, resin, and stacte`; the last term remains technical because the Latin names it. At 37:35, `infernum` is `the realm of the dead`, preserving the destination of the deceased without adding the later punitive associations that contemporary “hell” would invite. The closing ablative absolute, `Et illo perseverante in fletu`, remains unfinished as `And while he persisted in weeping,` and governs the lowercased continuation in 37:36: `the Midianites sold Joseph`. This preserves the temporal relation across the verse boundary. Verse 37:36 also retains both of Potiphar's descriptions: Pharaoh's `eunuch and commander of the army`.

Vulgate character preserved

The sixteen-year age, the charge of a most wicked crime, the long many-colored robe, the unfinished syntax across 37:35–36, and the sequence of Midianite merchants and Ishmaelite purchasers are all allowed to stand on this text's own terms. The JNV does not use a smoother reconstruction to merge the named parties, recalculate the story, or sever the Latin's cross-verse relation.

Ambiguities preserved

`polymita` indicates a distinctive robe but does not settle its precise manufacture. The translation therefore gives the stable reader term `many-colored robe` without claiming more detail than the Latin provides.

Corrections made in review

The dedicated fidelity review initially found no required correction in this chapter. One optional literary refinement was adopted at 37:30: former `The boy does not appear!` became final `The boy is nowhere to be found!` The change gives `non comparet` its natural force in Reuben's panicked cry without declaring Joseph dead. A whole-book proposal to replace `Do not take his life` with `Do not kill his soul` was expressly rejected; the final wording remains the contextual `life` exception described above. Final release audit then corrected 37:35–36: former `And he persisted in weeping. The Midianites sold Joseph` became the paired continuation `And while he persisted in weeping, / the Midianites sold Joseph`, restoring the source's temporal subordination and meaningful unfinished clause across the verse boundary.

Terms carried forward

`many-colored robe` governs `tunicam polymitam`; named aromatics remain distinct rather than becoming generic spices. `the realm of the dead` governs `infernum` and `inferos`; unfinished cross-verse syntax remains grammatically open; and `eunuch` is retained even when the official also holds a military office.

Chapter 38

The chapter's movement

Judah's separation from his brothers opens a compact account of failed family duty. Er dies; Onan refuses to raise seed for his brother; Judah withholds Shelah from Tamar. Tamar then changes her appearance, secures Judah's identifying pledge, and forces recognition without naming him publicly. Judah's sentence against her turns into an admission against himself. The twins' birth closes the chapter with another reversal of expected priority, marked by a scarlet thread and the strange image of a divided wall.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 38:8, `suscites semen fratri tuo` becomes `raise up seed for your brother`. The same concrete word appears again in 38:9 as Onan spills `his seed on the ground`; keeping `seed` in both verses makes the deliberate repetition audible. The Lord's action in 38:7 and 38:10 remains direct, while human `dominus` elsewhere in the Joseph story is distinguished as lord or master.

The `theristrum` of 38:14 is rendered `veil`, a lucid term for the covering by which Tamar changes her appearance without pretending certainty about the garment's exact ancient form. At 38:18, the pledged `annulum`, `armillam`, and `baculum` are `ring`, `bracelet`, and `staff`. In particular, `armilla` is not replaced by a different item from an alternate narrative form.

Verse 38:26 gives Judah's moral comparison as `She is more just than I`, preserving `Justior` as the comparative of justice. At the birth, the forceful `in ipsa effusione infantium` becomes `At the very outpouring of the infants`. When Perez emerges, the question `Why was the wall divided for you?` retains `maceria`; the JNV does not substitute a more familiar breach metaphor.

Vulgate character preserved

The Latin case forms `Hiram` and `Hiras` are normalized to one person, `Hirah`, while the source's material objects and birth images remain unchanged. The one act of intercourse in 38:18, Judah's recognition of the `gifts`, and the divided wall all remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise form of Tamar's veil and the referent or force of the divided wall are not explained by the Latin. The translation preserves their intelligible surface without supplying an interpretation.

Corrections made in review

Three review changes were applied. At 38:8, former `raise up offspring for your brother` became final `raise up seed for your brother`, restoring both the governing term and the local repetition. At 38:17, former `I will accept what you want` became final `I will allow what you want`, accurately preserving Tamar's conditional permission and agency. At 38:27, former `As the infants were coming forth` became final `At the very outpouring of the infants`, retaining the unusually forceful image of `effusione`.

Terms carried forward

`seed` continues as the normal rendering of `semen`. `more just` preserves the justice word-family, and the pledge vocabulary remains `ring`, `bracelet`, and `staff` wherever those objects recur.

Chapter 39

The chapter's movement

Joseph descends socially from purchased servant to prisoner, yet the chapter repeatedly says that the Lord is with him. Prosperity brings household authority; his appearance brings persistent sexual pressure; refusal brings a false accusation and confinement. The final prison scene mirrors the opening household scene: responsibility is entrusted to Joseph, the overseer ceases to monitor the details, and the Lord directs Joseph's work. Narrative repetition makes divine presence, rather than rank, the stable element.

Why the JNV reads this way

The chapter distinguishes divine `Dominus` as `the Lord` from Potiphar as Joseph's `master`. At 39:3, the dense pronouns are clarified without changing their agents: `His master knew very well that the Lord was with Joseph and that everything Joseph did was directed by the Lord in Joseph’s hand.` The concrete image `in manu illius` remains `in Joseph’s hand`; it is not reduced to the abstract claim that Joseph succeeded.

Verse 39:4 uses `favor` for social `gratiam coram domino suo`, while 39:21 keeps two distinct elements: the mercy action in `misertus illius` and the favor noun `gratiam`. The final wording, `showed him mercy, and gave him favor`, preserves both without falsely treating both Latin forms as nouns. At 39:10, `stuprum` is `the shameful intercourse`, not a neutral invitation; the disgrace carried by the Latin remains present. In 39:14 and 39:17, `illudere` is `make sport of`, broad enough to carry contempt and humiliation without specifying a narrower act.

The narrator, not merely Potiphar's wife, evaluates the husband's response in 39:19. `nimium credulus` becomes `far too ready to believe his wife’s words`; omitting that judgment would change the narrative stance. Potiphar is also retained as Pharaoh's `eunuch and commander of the army`, even though the physical or conventional scope of `eunuchus` is not decided here.

Vulgate character preserved

The direction of Joseph's works `in Joseph’s hand`, the repeated presence of the Lord, and the narrator's explicit criticism of Potiphar's credulity are kept rather than smoothed into a generic success story.

Ambiguities preserved

The Latin `eunuchus` can denote physical status, a conventional court office, or both in this setting. The JNV retains `eunuch` for Potiphar and also names his military command, without deciding which scope the source intends.

Corrections made in review

Two required literary corrections clarified agency. At 39:3, former `the Lord was with him and that everything Joseph undertook was directed by him in Joseph’s hand` became final `the Lord was with Joseph and that everything Joseph did was directed by the Lord in Joseph’s hand`. Naming Joseph and the Lord prevents three possible antecedents from competing. At 39:6, former `Nor did he know anything else except the bread he ate` became final `His master knew nothing except the bread he ate`. The continuing subject is now explicit, and the transition to Joseph's appearance reads cleanly.

Terms carried forward

Divine `Dominus` remains `the Lord`; human household authority is `master`. `favor` and `mercy` remain distinct, `eunuch` retains the source term without resolving its physical-status or court-office scope, and `make sport of` carries the accusation expressed by `illudere`.

Chapter 40

The chapter's movement

Two royal officials join Joseph in custody, and their paired dreams create a sharply balanced episode. Both dream in one night; both receive an interpretation involving three days; Pharaoh's birthday restores one and executes the other. Joseph locates interpretation in God, asks the cupbearer for mercy, and accurately announces both outcomes. The final line breaks the symmetry emotionally: the restored cupbearer forgets the interpreter who remains imprisoned.

Why the JNV reads this way

Verse 40:1 calls the cupbearer and baker `two eunuchs`. The JNV retains that shared designation even though each also has a distinct office. Their dreams have `a meaning fitting to himself` at 40:5; the singular phrasing keeps the individual correspondence between dream and outcome.

Joseph's question in 40:8 is direct: `Does not interpretation belong to God?` The wording preserves the divine genitive rather than turning Joseph into the independent source of the interpretations. His request in 40:14, `show me mercy`, carries `misericordiam` without weakening it to mere remembrance or assistance. At 40:15, `lacum` is `the pit`, matching the carceral image in the Latin even though the immediate setting is a prison.

The execution language is intentionally not harmonized. Joseph says in 40:19 that Pharaoh will `hang you upon a cross`, because the source has `in cruce`. When the fulfillment is narrated in 40:22, Pharaoh `hanged the other upon a gibbet`, because the source changes to `in patibulo`. The distinction remains visible rather than being replaced by one generic term. Likewise, the final clause says the outcome proved `the truth of the interpreter`, preserving `veritas` as `truth`.

Vulgate character preserved

The officials' designation as eunuchs and the alternating `cross` and `gibbet` are features of the Clementine wording. The chapter also retains Joseph's claim that he was `stolen away from the land of the Hebrews`, without trying to reconcile every participant named in the preceding sale.

Ambiguities preserved

The phrase `two eunuchs` retains `duo eunuchi` without deciding whether the term denotes physical status, conventional court office, or both. Their separately named offices do not by themselves resolve the Latin term's full scope.

Corrections made in review

Independent review found no required or material literary correction in this chapter. The final wording already preserved the verse sequence, the paired offices and dreams, and the distinction between `cruce` and `patibulo`.

Terms carried forward

`mercy` and `truth` remain the governing forms for `misericordia` and `veritas`. `eunuch` retains its unresolved scope, and `cross` and `gibbet` remain distinct execution terms when the Latin distinguishes them.

Chapter 41

The chapter's movement

Pharaoh's doubled dream moves Joseph from forgotten prisoner to ruler of Egypt. Fear and failed diviners give way to Joseph's denial of independent power, his interpretation of abundance and famine, and a practical plan. Pharaoh recognizes divine enablement, clothes Joseph with authority, gives him a new name and family, and sends him through the work of storage. The predicted reversal then arrives: immeasurable abundance yields to want across the whole world, and the nations come to Joseph for food.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 41:16, `Absque me` leads Joseph's answer: `Apart from me, God will give Pharaoh a favorable answer.` The phrase denies that the answer originates in Joseph, while `prospera` retains its favorable character. The doubled dream is explained at 41:32 as `a sign of its certainty`, because God's word `shall come to pass and be fulfilled swiftly`; both certainty and speed belong to the Latin explanation.

In 41:38, `spiritu Dei` is final `the spirit of God`. Lowercase `spirit` avoids imposing a personal or doctrinal identification that the Latin's capitalization does not mark. This is an editorial restraint, not a denial of any theological reading.

The source itself gives Joseph the Egyptian name `Salvatorem mundi`; 41:45 therefore says Pharaoh `called him Savior of the World`. Its elevated sound is not an English devotional addition. The next two clauses preserve directional sequence: Joseph first `went out into the land of Egypt` in 41:45 and then `traveled throughout all the regions of Egypt` in 41:46.

At 41:52, Ephraim's name explanation remains `God has made me increase in the land of my poverty`; `paupertatis` is not generalized into affliction. Verses 41:54 and 41:57 keep the broad scope of `universo orbe` and the provinces: famine prevails `throughout the whole world`, and `All the provinces came to Egypt`.

Vulgate character preserved

`Savior of the World`, the land of Joseph's `poverty`, and the stated worldwide famine are all preserved as features of this Vulgate text. The herald's command that everyone bend the knee and Pharaoh's reservation of the throne alone likewise remain concrete.

Ambiguities preserved

The translation does not settle the theological identity implied by `spiritu Dei` through capitalization. It reports Pharaoh's recognition in the form the Latin permits.

Corrections made in review

Two required corrections were applied. In 41:38, former `filled with the Spirit of God` became final `filled with the spirit of God`, removing interpretive capitalization not marked in the source. In 41:45, former `Joseph went out through the land of Egypt` became final `Joseph went out into the land of Egypt`. This restores directional `ad terram` and leaves the following verse to narrate his circuit throughout Egypt.

Terms carried forward

Lowercase `spirit of God` governs this unmarked phrase. `Savior of the World` is retained as the Latin's own title, while `the whole world` preserves the geographic totality of `in universo orbe` where it recurs.

Chapter 42

The chapter's movement

Famine brings ten brothers before the ruler they do not recognize, fulfilling the bodily action of Joseph's dreams before anyone names it. Joseph alternates severity, testing, and concealed grief. The brothers interpret their distress through their old crime; Reuben recalls the blood now required. Simeon is bound, provisions and money are returned, and fear follows the brothers home. Jacob reads the losses as converging upon him and refuses to risk Benjamin, leaving both the test and the family unresolved.

Why the JNV reads this way

Jacob's opening `Quare negligitis` is `Why are you negligent?` in 42:1. The question charges neglect, not simply inactivity. At 42:6, grain is sold `at his nod`; `nutum` keeps the small bodily gesture through which Joseph's broad authority operates.

When the brothers confess at 42:21, they remember `the anguish of his soul`. The concrete `anima` links Joseph's inward distress with the soul language later used of Jacob and Benjamin. In 42:38, Jacob fears that his gray hair will descend `to the realm of the dead`; this keeps `inferos` as the destination of the dead without importing a claim about punishment.

Joseph's test twice invokes `by the life of Pharaoh` in 42:15–16, following `per salutem Pharaonis`. The JNV retains the oath's courtly setting and does not transform it into the distinct theological use of salus. The repeated `little sack` for `sacculis` in the money episode also remains distinct from the larger grain sack.

Vulgate character preserved

Joseph's authority `at his nod`, the brothers' confession of the soul's anguish, and the exact sequence of weeping, speaking, taking Simeon, and binding him are all preserved. The verse boundary matters because the Latin places Joseph's emotion in 42:24 and the public detention in 42:25. At 42:35–36, `exterritisque simul omnibus` remains open as `and when all were terrified together,` before the lowercased main clause `their father Jacob said`.

Ambiguities preserved

At 42:13, 42:32, and 42:36, the repeated `alius/unus/Joseph non est super` remains in the three forms `the other is no more`, `One is no more`, and `Joseph is no more`. The elliptical phrase does not itself supply `dead`; the JNV keeps it distinct from the explicit `frater ejus mortuus est`, `His brother is dead`, at 42:38.

Corrections made in review

Three earlier required corrections were applied. At 42:1, former `Why are you idle?` became final `Why are you negligent?`, restoring the culpable force of `negligitis`. Former 42:24 ended with `He took Simeon and bound him in their presence.` The final verse ends `then returned and spoke to them.`, because the taking is absent from that source verse. Correspondingly, former 42:25 began `Joseph commanded his servants`; final 42:25 begins `Taking Simeon and binding him in their presence, Joseph commanded his servants`. The paired correction restores exact verse coverage without changing the narrative event. Final structural audit then corrected 42:35–36: former `and all were terrified together. Their father Jacob said` became the paired continuation `and when all were terrified together, / their father Jacob said`, preserving the dependent circumstance and unfinished clause across the verse boundary.

Terms carried forward

`soul` remains the normal form of `anima`, and `the realm of the dead` remains the normal form of `inferos`. The elliptical `non est super` remains `is no more`, distinct from explicit `is dead`. Human `lord` in the brothers' address remains distinct from divine `the Lord`.

Chapter 43

The chapter's movement

The continuing famine overcomes Jacob's resistance, and Judah succeeds where Reuben did not by taking responsibility for Benjamin himself. The brothers return with gifts, double money, and fear. Joseph's invitation to his house looks to them like an accusation and enslavement; the steward answers with peace, returned Simeon, water, and fodder. At the meal Joseph moves from controlled questioning to private tears, then seats the brothers in birth order and distinguishes Benjamin's portion. Suspicion is not yet resolved, but the chapter turns anticipated violence into hospitality charged with hidden recognition.

Why the JNV reads this way

The gift list in 43:11 keeps the commodities differentiated: `a little resin and honey, storax and stacte, terebinth resin and almonds`. These are not compressed into generic luxuries or spices. At 43:16, Joseph orders the steward to `slaughter victims, and prepare a feast`. `victimas` carries slaughter or sacrificial vocabulary even though the story does not describe a ritual, so the stronger noun remains.

The brothers' fear in 43:18 also retains its physical metaphor: they imagine that Joseph may `roll an accusation upon us`. Translating `devolvat` only as “bring” would erase the image. In 43:23, the steward says of their first payment, `I have the money you gave me, accepted as good.` Here `probatam` concerns the money's tested or approved quality; it does not say that the amount was complete and does not disclose a human agent who replaced it.

At 43:30, Joseph's `viscera` remain bodily as `his inward parts were moved over his brother`; the following tears give the image its emotional sense without replacing it with a generic feeling. Verse 43:31 then says `Set out the loaves`, preserving the plural `panes`. The seating in 43:32 remains triply separate—Joseph, his brothers, and the Egyptians—and the judgment that such a meal is unlawful and profane is explicitly attributed to Egyptian practice. Finally, `inebriati sunt` in 43:34 is not softened: `They drank and became intoxicated with him.`

Vulgate character preserved

The feast's `victims`, the accusation that rolls upon its targets, Joseph's moved inward parts, and the intoxication at the table preserve the material and emotional force of the Latin. The separate dining arrangement is narrated without turning the Egyptians' custom into the narrator's rule.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact arithmetic of Benjamin's portion remains compressed in `so that it exceeded theirs by five parts`. The Latin leaves its comparator unstated. The steward's explanation of the money likewise does not reveal who physically returned it.

Corrections made in review

Three changes were adopted. At 43:6, former `You have done this to my misery` became final `You have brought this misery upon me`, clarifying Israel as the sufferer while preserving his accusation against the sons. At 43:23, former `the money you gave me, proved in full` became final `the money you gave me, accepted as good`; the former wording invented completeness of amount. A later cross-verse audit corrected 43:33–34: former 43:33 closed after “they marveled greatly,” while 43:34 made “They took the portions” a new finite action. Final 43:33 remains open and 43:34 continues “after taking the portions they had received from him”; this restores `sumptis partibus ...` as the ablative-absolute circumstance of `mirabantur` rather than detaching it from the brothers’ marveling. An optional proposal to remove `theirs` from 43:34 was not applied; the final text retains `it exceeded theirs by five parts` and records the arithmetic as unresolved.

Terms carried forward

The named aromatics retain distinct English forms across the Joseph narrative. `loaves` preserves plural `panes`, and `victims` remains available where `victimas` supplies explicit slaughter vocabulary.

Chapter 44

The chapter's movement

Joseph's final test turns hospitality back into peril. His cup is planted in Benjamin's sack; the brothers confidently accept a death-and-servitude test, then tear their garments when the search reaches the youngest. Judah's speech answers the crisis by retelling the family's encounters through Jacob's vulnerability. He moves from deference to bold substitution, offering himself in the boy's place because returning without Benjamin would destroy his father. The chapter ends at the point of sacrifice, immediately before recognition.

Why the JNV reads this way

Verses 44:5 and 44:15 explicitly use divination language. The cup is one by which Joseph `is accustomed to divine`, and Joseph claims `knowledge of divination`. The JNV translates both assertions rather than suppressing them, but it does not infer from the test whether or how Joseph actually practiced divination outside his assumed Egyptian role.

The brothers' sentence at 44:9 is kept distinct from the steward's answer at 44:10. They propose that the person found with the cup die and that all become servants; he narrows the consequence so that the one found shall serve and the rest `shall be innocent`. This preserves the negotiation's shift in number and liability.

Judah's report at 44:22 says, `if he leaves him, he will die.` The repeated masculine pronouns can point to the boy or the father, and the English does not replace either with a name. The later explanation is equally concrete: at 44:30, `his soul hangs upon this one’s soul`. Retaining both occurrences of `soul` preserves `anima` and the source's binding image rather than paraphrasing the relationship as affection or dependence. In 44:29 and 44:31, the feared destination is again `the realm of the dead` for `inferos`.

Vulgate character preserved

The explicit divination claims, the brothers' excessive self-sentence, and the pronoun-heavy account of two souls are all preserved. Judah's speech is allowed to work through repetition: father, boy, absence, grief, and descent recur rather than being stylistically compressed.

Ambiguities preserved

The potential subject of death in 44:22 is deliberately unnamed. The expression of one soul hanging upon another is not annotated as adoption, psychology, or physiology. The chapter also reports the cup's attributed divinatory use without deciding the historical truth of the role Joseph presents.

Corrections made in review

Independent fidelity review found no required correction. One optional literary refinement was applied in Judah's report at 44:28: former `He has not appeared to this day` became final `He has not been seen to this day`. The final wording gives `non comparet` natural force in a statement of prolonged absence while preserving the distinction between Jacob's report of the brothers' claim and what Jacob himself knows.

Terms carried forward

`divination` remains explicit for `augurari`; it is not converted into a neutral test. `soul` and `the realm of the dead` continue their established forms in the family's death language.

Chapter 45

The chapter's movement

Judah's offer breaks Joseph's restraint. Joseph dismisses outsiders, names himself, and meets his brothers' terror with a providential account that neither denies their sale nor makes it the final cause of events. Recognition expands outward: Benjamin and the brothers embrace Joseph, Pharaoh's house hears, Egypt offers transport and provision, and the sons carry the news to Jacob. Jacob moves from unbelief, as though waking from heavy sleep, to revived spirit and a resolve to see Joseph before death.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 45:5, `pro salute enim vestra` is final `for your salvation`. The strong noun salus is retained rather than reduced to economic advantage. Verse 45:7 develops the purpose with different terms: God sent Joseph ahead `so that you might be preserved upon the earth and have food by which you may live.` This keeps preservation, earth, and food distinct instead of making the two verses paraphrases of one another.

Joseph's account of agency in 45:8 is exact in its contrast: `not by your counsel but by God’s will`. The brothers remain agents of the sale named in 45:4–5, while the sending in its larger purpose is attributed to `Dei voluntate`. The JNV does not erase either level or recast Joseph's statement as a general maxim.

Pharaoh's invitation at 45:18 promises that the family may `eat the marrow of the land`. `medullam terræ` is a bodily image for the land's richness; the English keeps the marrow instead of substituting “best produce.” At 45:23, `the same amount of money and clothing` follows `tantumdem pecuniæ et vestium`. The likely comparison is Benjamin's preceding gift, but because the Latin does not restate that object, the translation does not insert it. The instruction `Do not become angry on the way` in 45:24 likewise retains the broad `irascamini` without explaining whether the anger would be mutual blame or some other quarrel.

At 45:27, seeing the wagons makes Jacob's `spirit` revive. This is `spiritus`, not the recurring `anima`, and the English preserves the distinction.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter retains `salvation`, preservation `upon the earth`, God's `will`, and the `marrow of the land`. These elevated or concrete expressions come from the Latin itself and are not devotional enlargements.

Ambiguities preserved

The comparison behind `the same amount of money and clothing` and the likely occasion of anger on the road remain implicit. The reader receives the connection supplied by sequence without an inserted explanation.

Corrections made in review

Independent fidelity and literary review found no required or material correction in this chapter. The final text already maintained the contrast of human counsel and divine will, the distinct salvation and preservation vocabulary, and the gift comparison's limited explicitness.

Terms carried forward

`salvation` remains the normal full-strength rendering of salus; `will` remains visible for `voluntate`. `spirit` translates `spiritus` here and is not silently merged with `soul` for `anima`.

Chapter 46

The chapter's movement

Israel's descent into Egypt begins at the Well of the Oath with sacrifice and a night vision. God answers the fear of migration with presence, nationhood, return, and the promise of Joseph's hands upon Jacob's eyes. The journey then widens into a genealogical census, counting the family by maternal households before giving totals of sixty-six and seventy. Judah goes ahead, Joseph meets Jacob in Goshen, and the chapter closes with a practical plan by which the shepherd family may dwell apart in a land suited to their flocks.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 46:1, `Puteum juramenti` is translated semantically as `the Well of the Oath`; the Latin does not use the transliterated place-name here. In 46:3, `fortissimus Deus` becomes `the most mighty God of your father`, retaining the superlative. Verse 46:4 keeps the deathbed image `Joseph also will place his hands upon your eyes` rather than explaining it as eye-closing.

The family comes to Egypt `with all his seed` in 46:6. In the census, `anima` remains `soul`, including `thirty-three`, `sixteen souls`, `fourteen`, `seven souls`, `sixty-six`, and the final `seventy`. The JNV reproduces the stated groupings and totals without recalculation. Verse 46:26 also preserves bodily descent: those counted `came forth from his thigh`.

The plural formula in 46:23 reads `The sons of Dan: Hushim.` The singular list item does not license changing plural `Filii`. At 46:28, `ut nuntiaret ei, et occurreret` leaves the repeated pronouns' agents unclear. The final wording—`Jacob sent Judah ahead of him to Joseph, so that he might report to him and that he might meet him in Goshen`—keeps that ambiguity rather than inventing an object for the report or assigning the meeting explicitly to Joseph. The context then narrates Joseph's actual journey in the following verse.

Vulgate character preserved

The semantic well-name, the title `most mighty God`, the hands upon the eyes, the inherited census totals, and descent from Jacob's thigh remain visible. The source's statement that Egyptians detest shepherds is reported as Joseph's explanation, not expanded into a historical theory.

Ambiguities preserved

The agents of reporting and meeting in 46:28 remain pronominal. The JNV does not make the later action retroactively settle the grammar of the preceding sentence.

Corrections made in review

Three corrections reached the final text. At 46:15, former `Mesopotamia of Syria` became final `Syrian Mesopotamia`, harmonizing the same place across Genesis. At 46:23, former `The son of Dan: Hushim` became final `The sons of Dan: Hushim`, restoring the Latin plural heading. At 46:28, former `to announce his coming, so that Joseph might meet him in Goshen` became final `so that he might report to him and that he might meet him in Goshen`. The correction removes an invented object and an imposed assignment of agency.

Terms carried forward

Semantic well-names are translated when the Latin supplies their meaning. `seed`, `soul`, and `Syrian Mesopotamia` follow their whole-book rulings; inherited census numbers are reported rather than reconciled.

Chapter 47

The chapter's movement

Joseph first establishes his family in Goshen, presenting five brothers and then Jacob to Pharaoh. Jacob blesses the king and measures his life as a short, difficult sojourn. The chapter then turns from family provision to the famine's public economy: money, livestock, bodies, and land pass under Pharaoh, while seed and a continuing fifth preserve cultivation. Israel, by contrast, possesses Goshen and multiplies. As death approaches, Jacob binds Joseph by oath to carry him from Egypt and worships God at the head of the bed.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 47:2, `Extremos quoque fratrum suorum quinque viros` becomes `five men, the last among his brothers`. The wording preserves the unusual `Extremos` instead of quietly replacing it with an unspecified selection. Jacob's answer in 47:9 keeps the repeated pilgrimage language: `The days of my sojourning` are compared with the days in which his fathers `sojourned`.

The famine's reach in 47:13 is `all the world`, reflecting `In toto enim orbe`, with Egypt and Canaan then named as especially oppressed. Verse 47:15 shifts from mass bread to plural `panes`, so the people ask, `Give us loaves.` The economic sequence is translated without euphemism. The Egyptians ask Joseph to `Buy us into royal servitude`; Pharaoh comes to possess both people and land; seed is distributed; and a fifth goes to the king, except from priestly land.

The people's answer in 47:25 is `Our salvation is in your hand.` The strong `Salus` remains even in this economic setting. At 47:29, Jacob asks Joseph to show `mercy and truth`; `misericordiam et veritatem` remains two nouns rather than becoming a single interpretive phrase such as faithful kindness. Finally, the Clementine text explicitly says `adoravit Israël Deum`, so 47:31 reads `Israel worshiped God, turning toward the head of the bed.` God is not an inferred object added by the English.

Vulgate character preserved

The five men described as last among the brothers, Jacob's repeated sojourning, the worldwide famine, royal servitude, the continuing fifth, and worship of God at the bed's head all remain. The prose neither condemns nor vindicates Joseph's policy beyond the actions and responses the narrator gives.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact sense of `extremos` in the selection of five brothers remains unusual in English because the Latin itself is unusual. The translation does not identify which five were chosen.

Corrections made in review

Independent review found no required correction in this chapter. An optional proposal to make the passives of 47:27 explicit was not adopted; the final remains `He increased and multiplied exceedingly`, an idiomatic intransitive rendering of the event that preserves both verbs.

Terms carried forward

`sojourning` governs `peregrinationis` in patriarchal life-language. `salvation`, `mercy`, and `truth` remain distinct source terms, and `seed` continues to connect provision for the fields with the book's wider concrete vocabulary.

Chapter 48

The chapter's movement

Joseph brings Manasseh and Ephraim to his dying father. Jacob recalls the land promise and Rachel's burial, adopts Joseph's sons as his own, and moves from impaired sight to a blessing ordered by deliberate touch. Joseph arranges the firstborn at the right hand; Jacob crosses his hands and refuses correction, placing Ephraim before Manasseh. The chapter closes by widening the promise from Joseph to all his people: God will remain with them, lead them back, and give Joseph one portion beyond his brothers.

Why the JNV reads this way

The promise in 48:4 is `to your seed after you as an everlasting possession`. At 48:11 Jacob says God has shown him Joseph's `seed`, and at 48:19 Ephraim's `seed will grow into nations`. Keeping `semen` as `seed` makes the covenant recurrence and the growth image visible across all three verses.

Verse 48:7 begins `As for me`, retaining emphatic `Mihi enim`, and says explicitly, `It was springtime`. This recalls the Clementine season already given near Rachel's death in chapter 35. At 48:16, the grammatical subject of singular `benedicat` is `the angel who has delivered me from every evil—may he bless these boys.` The JNV neither pluralizes the verb nor inserts an explanation of the relation among the preceding references to God and this angel.

At 48:20, `In te benedicetur Israël` remains passive: `In you shall Israel be blessed`. Verse 48:21 makes the plural audience perceptible after the singular address to Joseph: `God will be with all of you and will lead you back to the land of your fathers.` The second `you` continues the now-established plural scope. At 48:22, Jacob gives `one portion beyond your brothers`, taken from the singular Amorite with his sword and bow. Number, weapon imagery, and the unexplained historical claim all remain.

Vulgate character preserved

Rachel's springtime burial, the singular angel's blessing, the passive blessing of Israel, and the portion taken from `the Amorite` preserve this text's details without harmonizing them to another account.

Ambiguities preserved

The chapter does not explain the theological identity of the singular angel or identify the episode in which Jacob took the extra portion. The English keeps both claims and their grammatical number without supplying a solution.

Corrections made in review

Four review groups were applied. In 48:4, 48:11, and 48:19, former `offspring` became final `seed`, restoring repeated `semen`. Verse 48:11 also changed former `I was not deprived of seeing you` to final `I have not been denied the sight of you`, retaining the concrete sight noun in natural English. Verse 48:7 changed the former opening `For when I came` to final `As for me, when I came`, restoring the personal emphasis. In 48:21, former `God will be with you and will lead you back` became final `God will be with all of you and will lead you back`, preventing the plural `vobiscum` and `vos` from being read as an address to Joseph alone.

Terms carried forward

`seed` remains the binding covenant term. Singular and plural addressees are made visible when English `you` would otherwise conceal a consequential number shift; passive blessing remains passive where the Latin makes Israel its recipient.

Chapter 49

The chapter's movement

Jacob gathers his sons for a poetic announcement of the last days. The sayings pass from Reuben's lost preeminence and the scattering of Simeon and Levi to Judah's rule, then through compact tribal images. Joseph receives the longest cascade of conflict and blessing; Benjamin closes the sequence as a ravenous wolf. Prose returns with the twelve tribes, burial instructions, and Jacob's death, joining the forward-looking poem to the ancestral tomb.

Why the JNV reads this way

The bracket marks surrounding 49:2–27 in the source are treated as editorial punctuation, not words to reproduce. Within the poem, its strangeness remains. Reuben is `the beginning of my sorrow`, `first in gifts`, and `greater in authority` at 49:3. The terse `non crescas` in 49:4 is `may you not increase`; this preserves a possible curse or optative rather than deciding that it means only loss of rank.

Simeon and Levi are `warring vessels of iniquity`, and in their will `they undermined a wall` in 49:5–6. Judah goes `To the prey` in 49:9. In 49:10, `dux` is `ruler`, suited to scepter and royal descent rather than the genealogical `chief` of chapter 36. The coming figure is only `the one who is to be sent`, and `he shall be the expectation of the nations`; the JNV does not identify him beyond the Latin.

Issachar `set his shoulder to carrying` in 49:15, without an invented object beneath it. Dan judges `like another tribe` in 49:16 and becomes a `horned serpent` in 49:17. Gad's 49:19 remains syntactically difficult: `girded, shall fight before him, and he himself shall be girded from behind.` Asher's bread is concretely `fat` in 49:20.

Joseph's lines retain daughters running on a wall, a bow resting upon strength, bonds loosed from arms and hands, and the shepherd and stone coming `from there`. `the Mighty One of Jacob` in 49:24 treats `potentis` as a substantive epithet. Verse 49:26 keeps `the desire of the everlasting hills` and `the Nazirite among his brothers` without explanatory gloss.

Vulgate character preserved

The poem's Vulgate-specific images and titles are not replaced by readings from another textual tradition. The singular `another tribe`, `horned serpent`, `expectation of the nations`, wall, daughters, and Nazirite all remain. The distinct death verbs also remain: Jacob says `I am being gathered to my people` in 49:29, but after death `he was added to his people` in 49:32.

Ambiguities preserved

The force of may you not increase, the burden Issachar carries, the actors in Gad's saying, and several referents in Joseph's poem remain open. Grammatical opacity is preserved where choosing a smoother English picture would require choosing a meaning the Latin does not settle.

Corrections made in review

Seven applied changes materially improved fidelity. At 49:9, former from the prey became final To the prey, correcting the reversed ad. At 49:15, former put his shoulder beneath it to carry became final set his shoulder to carrying, removing an object absent from the Latin. At 49:16, former like the other tribes became final like another tribe, restoring singular number. At 49:20, former his bread is rich became final his bread is fat, recovering the concrete pinguis. In 49:6, former in their willfulness became final in their will, avoiding added moral characterization. Whole-book harmonization changed former Ephron the Hittite to final Ephron the Hethite in 49:29–30, and former was gathered to his people to final he was added to his people in 49:32. An optional proposal to change 49:4 to Do not increase was not adopted; the final remains may you not increase because the jussive or optative force is not certain.

Terms carried forward

ruler is the contextual form of dux in this royal saying; chief remains the clan-list form. the Mighty One of Jacob, Nazirite, and Hethite establish forms requiring consistency later. gathered and added remain distinct death-language verbs.

Chapter 50

The chapter's movement

Genesis closes with two deaths held inside promises of return. Jacob is embalmed and mourned in Egypt, carried in a great procession to Canaan, and buried in the purchased cave. Back in Egypt, the brothers fear that restraint will end with their father's life. Joseph weeps, refuses vengeance in light of God's will, and promises food. He then lives to see later generations, makes his family swear to carry his bones when God visits them, and is himself embalmed and placed in a coffin in Egypt. Burial completed and burial deferred shape the ending.

Why the JNV reads this way

At 50:5, Jacob's reported oath names my tomb, which I dug for myself in the land of Canaan. The JNV retains fodi as dug even though the surrounding account stresses Abraham's purchase of the field and cave. In 50:10, the mourners filled seven days; impleverunt septem dies keeps the Latin's concrete temporal expression rather than silently changing it to “completed” or “observed” seven days. The semantic place-name the Mourning of Egypt at 50:11 likewise translates the explanation supplied by the source.

Joseph's answer in 50:19 is the inclusive question Can we resist the will of God? The plural possumus is preserved; the line is not replaced by a statement that Joseph stands in God's place. Verse 50:20 retains both distinctive purposes: God turned the brothers' evil to good so that he might exalt me, as you see at present, and save many peoples. The JNV does not reduce exaltaret to keeping Joseph alive or narrow multos populos to one family.

At 50:22, Machir's sons are born upon Joseph’s knees. The concrete image remains without deciding whether it describes physical attendance, acknowledgment, or adoption. The final command to carry Joseph's bones and the closing coffin in Egypt leave the promised ascent future rather than narratively completed.

Vulgate character preserved

Jacob's dug tomb, the seven days filled, Joseph's question about resisting God's will, his exaltation for the saving of many peoples, and the birth upon his knees are all retained as features of the Clementine account. The elaborate Egyptian mourning and the ancestral Canaanite burial remain in their given sequence.

Ambiguities preserved

The significance of birth upon Joseph's knees is not explained, and the relationship between Jacob's claim to have dug the tomb and Abraham's purchase is not harmonized. Both statements remain available to the reader.

Corrections made in review

Whole-book review made one required terminology correction at 50:13: former `Ephron the Hittite` became final `Ephron the Hethite`. The change keeps the same man under the same ethnonym used earlier and preserves the visible relation to Heth. Independent range and literary review found no other required or material change in this chapter.

Terms carried forward

`Hethite` remains the established ethnonym. `will of God`, `many peoples`, and the concrete language of bones and burial should remain visible when these promises are recalled beyond Genesis.

Exodus — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

Israel's household becomes a multitude; fear turns that fruitfulness into forced labor and ordered infanticide.

Why the JNV reads this way

Verse 5 retains “souls” and Jacob's “thigh,” while verse 11 keeps the Vulgate's unusual “cities of tabernacles.” The physical diction is not polished into abstraction.

Vulgate character preserved

Shiphrah and Puah remain moral actors whose fear of God opposes Pharaoh's calculation.

Ambiguities preserved

“He made households for them” (1:21) leaves the beneficiary construction as the Latin gives it.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

“Sons of Israel,” “souls,” “Pharaoh,” “the Lord,” and service/burden language govern the book.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

Moses is preserved, adopted, exiled, married, and placed within Israel's cry and God's remembered covenant.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Basket of reeds” (2:3), “took him from the water” (2:10), and the two name explanations in 2:22 keep the chapter's material and etymological texture.

Vulgate character preserved

The Vulgate's second son, Eliezer, remains in 2:22.

Ambiguities preserved

God “knew them” (2:25) remains concise rather than being interpretively expanded.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

The first divine `Dominus` is “the Lord (YHWH)” at 2:25; later occurrences use “the Lord.”

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

At the unconsumed bush, God names himself, commissions Moses, and promises liberation and favor.

Why the JNV reads this way

“I am who I am” and “He Who Is” (3:14) preserve both Vulgate formulas. “In visiting, I have visited” (3:16) retains emphatic repetition.

Vulgate character preserved

The collective people shifts between singular and plural reference as the Latin does.

Ambiguities preserved

The phrase “except by a mighty hand” (3:19) is left structurally compact.

Corrections made in review

The missing closing quotation after “strip Egypt” (3:22) was supplied, preventing God's speech from running into chapter 4.

Terms carried forward

Divine-name formulas, “memorial,” “elders,” and the three-days' journey are fixed here.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

Signs answer Moses' objections; Aaron is appointed his mouth; the return to Egypt begins under a severe divine encounter.

Why the JNV reads this way

The staff, leprous hand, and blood are rendered as concrete signs. “In the things that concern God” (4:16) preserves the relational comparison without inventing a title.

Vulgate character preserved

The difficult lodging-place episode remains abrupt and bodily.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun and agency shifts in 4:24–26 are not supplied with names the Latin does not repeat.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

“Sign,” “word,” “mouth,” and “firstborn” become governing motifs.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

The first demand for release produces heavier labor, accusation, and Moses' anguished appeal.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Celebrate a feast,” “three days' journey,” and the customary brick number preserve the dispute's ritual and administrative vocabulary.

Vulgate character preserved

Pharaoh's repeated charge of idleness is allowed its grinding cadence.

Ambiguities preserved

The overseers' blame and Moses' final questions remain accusatory without editorial defense.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Work, burdens, straw, bricks, and “let my people go” remain distinct recurring terms.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

God renews the promise, names the covenantal ancestors, and situates Moses and Aaron in Levi's genealogy.

Why the JNV reads this way

The repeated “I am the Lord” frames action, while “stretched-out arm” retains the bodily image of power.

Vulgate character preserved

The genealogy interrupts the commission exactly where the source places it.

Ambiguities preserved

“Uncircumcised lips” remains Moses' own compressed bodily metaphor.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

“Covenant,” redemption, possession, armies, and kindreds are established.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

Aaron's staff-sign leads into the river's transformation and Pharaoh's first sustained refusal.

Why the JNV reads this way

Moses is made “the god of Pharaoh” while Aaron is his prophet (7:1), preserving the Latin comparison. Rivers, streams, pools, reservoirs, wood, and stone remain enumerated.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter keeps the sorcerers' imitation beside the Lord's judgment.

Ambiguities preserved

Hardening is reported without adding a psychological explanation.

Corrections made in review

A closing quotation was added after “river water” (7:18), correctly ending the first command before 7:19.

Terms carried forward

Sign, wonder, judgment, enchantment, and hardened heart continue.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

Frogs, gnats, and flies expose failed imitation, negotiated worship, and renewed deceit.

Why the JNV reads this way

“This is the finger of God” (8:19) stays bodily and terse. Goshen is distinguished by the absence of flies.

Vulgate character preserved

The sorcerers first imitate and then confess their limit.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise creature designated in the later plague remains represented by the chosen ordinary term without embellishment.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Distinction, sacrifice, prayer, and Pharaoh's aggravated heart recur.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

Pestilence, sores, and hail intensify judgment while distinguishing Israel and exposing Pharaoh's temporary confession.

Why the JNV reads this way

The English preserves “plagues upon your heart” (9:14), the field warnings, and the botanical timing of flax, barley, wheat, and spelt.

Vulgate character preserved

Pharaoh is “set up” so divine strength and name may be told (9:16).

Ambiguities preserved

The several heart descriptions are not collapsed into a single formula.

Corrections made in review

Nested quotation closures were supplied at 9:4 and 9:19, separating the Lord's messages from the narrative responses.

Terms carried forward

Pestilence, plague, fear of the word, justice, and heaviness of heart continue.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

Locusts and darkness bring Egypt toward ruin, yet Pharaoh's concessions still withhold full departure.

Why the JNV reads this way

The command to tell “your son and your grandson” keeps the generational purpose. Darkness remains tangible enough to be felt.

Vulgate character preserved

The locusts leave not even one, and the west wind casts them into the Red Sea.

Ambiguities preserved

Moses' final statement about what must serve the Lord does not preselect the animals.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Humbling, solemnity, darkness, and departure with possessions are fixed.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

The final blow is announced: Egypt's firstborn will die, Israel will be distinguished, and departure will be compelled.

Why the JNV reads this way

“At midnight I will go out through Egypt” keeps divine agency immediate. The contrast extends from Pharaoh's throne to the millstone.

Vulgate character preserved

Israel's silence is expressed through the vivid dog image.

Ambiguities preserved

The narrative transition between warning and departure is left as abrupt as the source.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Firstborn, midnight, cry, distinction, and favor prepare chapter 12.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

Passover is instituted, the firstborn are struck, Israel departs, and the rite is bounded for future generations.

Why the JNV reads this way

The animal, blood, unleavened bread, bitter herbs, haste, household count, and calendar dates remain exact. `Phase` is rendered Passover while the source's passage explanation remains visible.

Vulgate character preserved

The mixed multitude and about six hundred thousand footmen remain in sequence.

Ambiguities preserved

“One law” for native and sojourner is stated without expanding its later application.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Passover, unleavened bread, memorial, perpetual observance, and congregation govern later ritual language.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

Firstborn and unleavened-bread observances frame the departure, Joseph's bones, and divine guidance by cloud and fire.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Month of new fruits” retains the Vulgate calendar phrase. The sign on hand and memorial before eyes remain physical.

Vulgate character preserved

God avoids the shorter Philistine route lest the people repent at war.

Ambiguities preserved

“Armed” is retained without specifying formation or weaponry beyond the Latin.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Firstborn redemption, sign, memorial, cloud, and fire continue.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

Israel is trapped, the sea divides, Egypt pursues, and deliverance becomes fear and faith.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Stand and see the great works of the Lord” keeps the visual summons. The angel and cloud move behind the camp before the waters divide.

Vulgate character preserved

The Egyptians recognize that the Lord fights before the sea returns.

Ambiguities preserved

The physical relation of cloud, darkness, and illumination is not diagrammed beyond the source.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Salvation, glory, mighty hand, fear, and belief conclude the departure arc.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

Song answers deliverance; Mary leads response; bitter water introduces wilderness testing and healing.

Why the JNV reads this way

“My soul will be filled” (15:9) preserves `anima`; “Mary the prophetess” follows `Maria prophetissa`; Marah receives the source's gloss “Bitterness.”

Vulgate character preserved

The redeemed people is carried as a singular collective in 15:13.

Ambiguities preserved

The wood shown at Marah is not given an unstated symbolic identity.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Redemption, sanctuary, precepts, judgments, testing, and healing begin the wilderness vocabulary.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

Hunger produces complaint; bread and quail become daily provision, Sabbath discipline, and memorial.

Why the JNV reads this way

The source's `Manhu` question and `Man` name are preserved rather than replaced by an outside form. “Souls who dwell in the tabernacle” keeps both concrete nouns.

Vulgate character preserved

The measured omer exposes both excess and lack as daily dependence.

Ambiguities preserved

The name explanation remains the Vulgate's own question rather than a reconstructed etymology.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Man, omer, Sabbath, testimony, and generation-long memorial are fixed.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

Water from the rock answers thirst; raised hands sustain battle; an altar memorializes conflict with Amalek.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Temptation” preserves the Vulgate place-name meaning. “A hand is upon the throne of the Lord” retains the compressed 17:16 formula.

Vulgate character preserved

Joshua weakens Amalek “by the edge of the sword.”

Ambiguities preserved

The subject and force of the hand-throne saying are not supplied.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Testing, rock, staff, memorial writing, and the Lord's throne remain available motifs.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

Jethro hears, worships, observes Moses' burden, and counsels a durable order of judgment.

Why the JNV reads this way

`cognatus` is “kinsman,” avoiding a more specific relation absent here. “Men in whom is truth” preserves the noun rather than paraphrasing character.

Vulgate character preserved

Ceremonies and the manner of worship remain paired in 18:20.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact kinship designation is left at the Latin's level of specificity.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Judgment, rulers by thousands through tens, truth, and delegated burden begin Israel's civil ordering.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

At Sinai, pact, sanctification, boundary, trumpet, darkness, and descent prepare the divine address.

Why the JNV reads this way

`pactum` is “pact,” distinct from `fœdus` as covenant. `caligo` is “darkness,” not merged into cloud.

Vulgate character preserved

The mountain's lethal boundary and repeated descent/ascent remain sharply physical.

Ambiguities preserved

The kingdom-of-priests formula is not expanded into an institutional scheme.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Pact, peculiar possession, priestly kingdom, sanctification, trumpet, and mountain boundary are established.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

The divine words order worship and neighborly life, then fear, mediation, and altar law answer the people's trembling.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Carved image,” “frivolously,” and “voices and lamps” preserve `sculptile`, the additional `frustra`, and the Vulgate's striking `voces et lampades`.

Vulgate character preserved

The sensory scene is not conformed to a more familiar thunder-and-lightning wording.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between fear that withdraws and fear that prevents sin remains as stated.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Command, jealousy, Sabbath, testimony, altar, burnt offering, and peace offering govern later law and worship.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

Judgments regulate service, violence, bodily injury, liability, and dangerous animals.

Why the JNV reads this way

“The price of her chastity” (21:10), “soul for soul” (21:23), and “he is his money” (21:21) retain the Vulgate's stark nouns instead of softening them.

Vulgate character preserved

The servant is brought “to the gods” in 21:6, preserving the Latin plural.

Ambiguities preserved

In 21:22–23 the feminine referent and the woman's survival/death remain as the Vulgate frames them.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found. The speech intentionally remains open into chapter 22.

Terms carried forward

Judgment, servant, soul, restitution, and owner liability continue.

Chapter 22

The chapter's movement

Property, custody, seduction, sorcery, worship, strangers, lending, pledges, and firstfruits are ordered.

Why the JNV reads this way

The sun's rising marks a legal boundary; hired property “came ... for the wage of its work” (22:15); and `Maleficos` is “sorcerers” without imposing a female subject.

Vulgate character preserved

The repeated juridical plural “the gods” remains in 22:8–9 and 22:28.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise commercial construction of 22:15 is not silently rewritten.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Theft, restitution, pledge, stranger, firstborn, and holiness govern later applications.

Chapter 23

The chapter's movement

Justice laws lead into Sabbath rhythms, pilgrim solemnities, angelic guidance, conquest, and covenant warning.

Why the JNV reads this way

Truth, the just, foreigner, victim, “month of new things,” and hornets remain distinct source terms and images.

Vulgate character preserved

The angel “will not forgive when you sin” (23:21), and enemies' backs are bodily turned.

Ambiguities preserved

The angel's identity is not expanded beyond the words placed in the chapter.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found. The quotation opened in 21:1 correctly closes at 23:33.

Terms carried forward

Solemnity, firstfruits, victim, angel, covenant, boundary, and snare are established.

Chapter 24

The chapter's movement

Israel assents, covenant blood seals the book, leaders behold God, and Moses enters the cloud.

Why the JNV reads this way

The covenant is “struck”; the pavement is “something like” sapphire; those who see God are described as having withdrawn far away.

Vulgate character preserved

Both comparison markers in 24:10 remain, resisting false visual certainty.

Ambiguities preserved

The nature of the vision and the identity-status of those withdrawn are not supplemented.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Book of the covenant, covenant blood, testimony tablets, glory, cloud, and consuming fire carry into the sanctuary instructions.

Chapter 25

The chapter's movement

Free offerings become plans for ark, mercy-seat, table, and lampstand—the ordered center of divine meeting.

Why the JNV reads this way

Violet skins name color without inventing an animal; `propitiatorium` is “mercy-seat”; `oraculum` is “oracle”; little spheres and lilies retain distinct ornaments.

Vulgate character preserved

The bread is “bread of presentation,” following `panes propositionis`.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between oracle and mercy-seat remains as the source describes it rather than being collapsed.

Corrections made in review

“Mercy seat” was standardized to “mercy-seat” for whole-book consistency. The speech intentionally continues into chapter 26.

Terms carried forward

Ark, testimony, mercy-seat, oracle, table, lampstand, rings, poles, and purest gold are fixed.

Chapter 26

The chapter's movement

Curtains, coverings, boards, bars, veil, and entrance articulate the tabernacle and its sacred divisions.

Why the JNV reads this way

Blue, purple, twice-dyed scarlet, goats' hair, red-dyed ram skins, and violet skins preserve every material distinction.

Vulgate character preserved

Sanctuary and Holy of Holies remain separate spatial designations.

Ambiguities preserved

Violet skins are not assigned an animal the Latin does not name.

Corrections made in review

“Mercy seat” at 26:34 was standardized to “mercy-seat.” The larger speech remains open.

Terms carried forward

Curtain, covering, board, base, bar, veil, sanctuary, and Holy of Holies govern the execution account.

Chapter 27

The chapter's movement

The altar, court, hangings, vessels, and perpetual lamp extend sanctuary order outward.

Why the JNV reads this way

The altar is “not solid but hollow and empty within”; its fire vessels are “receptacles for fires”; `cæremonias` remains ceremony.

Vulgate character preserved

“Continually” and “until morning” both remain in the lamp command.

Ambiguities preserved

The receptacles are not given a narrower technical identity than the Latin supplies.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found. The quotation opened at 25:1 closes correctly at 27:21.

Terms carried forward

Altar, grating, bronze, court, hangings, bases, pegs, oil, and perpetual service are fixed.

Chapter 28

The chapter's movement

Priestly garments join beauty, memorial, judgment, holiness, and guarded approach.

Why the JNV reads this way

`superhumerale` is “shoulder-piece,” `rationale` “breastpiece,” and `Doctrinam et Veritatem` “the Teaching and the Truth”—the actual Vulgate terms, not imported names.

Vulgate character preserved

“Holy to the Lord” and the plate borne on Aaron's forehead retain bodily placement.

Ambiguities preserved

Teaching and Truth are not assigned an operation the chapter does not explain.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Shoulder-piece, breastpiece of judgment, Teaching and Truth, turban, tunic, sash, and consecrated hands govern priestly passages.

Chapter 29

The chapter's movement

Washing, clothing, anointing, blood, food, seven-day consecration, and continual offering establish priestly service.

Why the JNV reads this way

The anatomical “lobe of the liver,” right ear/hand/foot, and exact flour, oil, wine, and hin measures preserve ritual precision.

Vulgate character preserved

The altar becomes Holy of Holies through seven days of expiation.

Ambiguities preserved

“Where I shall appoint to speak with you” remains the Vulgate's compact meeting formula.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Consecration, anointing, expiation, sweet fragrance, continual offering, and priesthood are fixed.

Chapter 30

The chapter's movement

Incense altar, census price, washing basin, anointing oil, and incense regulate approach and sacred exclusivity.

Why the JNV reads this way

The half-shekel is a price “for their souls”; the compounded oil and incense retain exact spices and prohibitions; Holy of Holies marks supreme sanctity.

Vulgate character preserved

The formulas threaten removal from “his peoples,” preserving the source's plural.

Ambiguities preserved

The fragrance ingredients are transliterated where a confident modern identification would exceed the text.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Incense altar, expiation, census contribution, basin, holy anointing, perfumer, and sacred composition continue.

Chapter 31

The chapter's movement

Bezalel and Oholiab receive Spirit-given craft; Sabbath becomes a perpetual pact; God gives the written tablets.

Why the JNV reads this way

Wisdom, understanding, knowledge, and teaching remain distinct gifts. `pactum` is “pact,” not collapsed into covenant.

Vulgate character preserved

The tablets are written by God's finger.

Ambiguities preserved

The artists' inspiration is stated without defining a theory of artistic process.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Spirit of God, named artisans, wisdom, teaching, Sabbath sign, perpetual pact, and finger of God are fixed.

Chapter 32

The chapter's movement

The calf corrupts worship; Moses intercedes, breaks the tablets, destroys the image, orders judgment, and pleads again.

Why the JNV reads this way

The people are “stripped naked ... for the shame of their filth,” and the count remains “about twenty-three thousand,” following the Vulgate.

Vulgate character preserved

Moses asks to be blotted from God's written book if forgiveness is refused.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between immediate plague and deferred visitation is not systematized.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Molten gods, stiff neck, wrath, intercession, consecrated hands, book, angel, and visitation continue.

Chapter 33

The chapter's movement

Threatened absence becomes face-to-face petition, renewed favor, and a guarded vision of glory.

Why the JNV reads this way

“My face” (33:14) keeps `Facies mea`; mercy and graciousness remain separate verbs; rock, hollow, hand, back, and face retain bodily imagery.

Vulgate character preserved

The people remove ornaments as a sign of grief.

Ambiguities preserved

The vision's physical language is neither literalized further nor replaced by abstraction.

Corrections made in review

A closing quotation was supplied at 33:19 so the answer ends before the newly introduced speech at 33:20.

Terms carried forward

Face, favor, name, glory, goodness, mercy, graciousness, rock, and divine passing carry into chapter 34.

Chapter 34

The chapter's movement

Tablets and pact are renewed; divine mercy and jealousy frame worship laws; Moses descends with a horned face.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Ruling Lord God,” “abundant in mercy,” `pactum` as pact, prostitution imagery, and the horned face preserve consequential Vulgate diction.

Vulgate character preserved

`cornuta` is “horned,” not replaced by a reading from another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation of horns to sharing in divine speech is not converted into a different physical image.

Corrections made in review

A closing quotation was supplied after 34:26, ending the pact speech before the separate writing command.

Terms carried forward

Merciful, gracious, true, Jealous, pact, feast, firstfruits, veil, and horned face are fixed.

Chapter 35

The chapter's movement

Sabbath restraint precedes willing gifts and Spirit-given artisanship for the commanded work.

Why the JNV reads this way

Men and women, heart, hand, skill, colors, metals, skins, stones, and freewill offerings remain individually visible.

Vulgate character preserved

The people bring so freely that devotion is narrated through materials and making.

Ambiguities preserved

Crimson/scarlet variation follows the local Latin wording instead of forcing visual uniformity.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Devout heart, freewill offering, Bezalel, Oholiab, wisdom, embroiderer, weaver, and devised work govern execution.

Chapter 36

The chapter's movement

Abundant gifts are restrained, then curtains, coverings, boards, bars, veil, and entrance are made.

Why the JNV reads this way

The execution mirrors chapters 25–26 while preserving shortened clauses and local color terms. Rings are not silently renamed clasps where the Latin says circles.

Vulgate character preserved

The workers announce that the people offer more than is needed.

Ambiguities preserved

Architectural relations remain verbal rather than receiving invented diagrams or modern components.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Instruction/execution correspondence now governs every furnishing report.

Chapter 37

The chapter's movement

Ark, mercy-seat/oracle, table, lampstand, incense altar, oil, and incense are executed.

Why the JNV reads this way

Verse 6 says “the mercy-seat, that is, the oracle,” preserving both nouns and their source-given relation. Purest gold and exact dimensions remain repeated.

Vulgate character preserved

The lampstand's vessels and talent weight retain their material specificity.

Ambiguities preserved

Oracle is not reduced to a mere lid or generalized place of revelation.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Mercy-seat, oracle, purest gold, bread of presentation, lamp vessels, and perfumer remain stable.

Chapter 38

The chapter's movement

Altar, basin, court, and material accounting complete the outer works.

Why the JNV reads this way

The bronze mirrors, census figures, one-talent bases, twenty-nine talents of gold, and seventy-two thousand talents of bronze reproduce the Vulgate's stated quantities.

Vulgate character preserved

Familiar alternative numbers were rejected because they are not the supplied Latin.

Ambiguities preserved

The extraordinary bronze figure is not silently emended.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Accounting, contribution, armed men, talents, shekels, bases, capitals, grating, and pegs close the construction ledger.

Chapter 39

The chapter's movement

Priestly garments are made; all sanctuary work is presented, inspected, and blessed.

Why the JNV reads this way

Shoulder-piece and breastpiece match chapter 28; the plate is here “of sacred reverence,” preserving the added Latin phrase; every repeated “as the Lord commanded” remains audible.

Vulgate character preserved

The inventory says nothing was lacking from what was commanded.

Ambiguities preserved

The “covering of the covenant” retains `tectum fœderis` rather than being assimilated to tabernacle.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Sacred reverence, completed work, inspection, command, and blessing prepare the erection.

Chapter 40

The chapter's movement

The tabernacle is erected and ordered; priests are washed; cloud and glory fill it and govern every journey.

Why the JNV reads this way

Testimony, oracle, tabernacle of testimony, and covering of the covenant remain distinct. Verse 31 ends dependently—“After everything was completed,”—and verse 32 supplies the action.

Vulgate character preserved

The Lord's majesty “flashed forth” while the cloud covered everything.

Ambiguities preserved

Cloud, glory, majesty, and fire are related without being collapsed into one phenomenon.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Divine indwelling, glory, cloud, fire, companies, encampments, and commanded order conclude Exodus and govern later sanctuary narrative.

Leviticus — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

From the tabernacle, the Lord orders burnt offerings from herd, flock, and birds.

Why the JNV reads this way

Victim, burnt offering, expiation, entrails, liver, blood, and altar remain physically exact; “most sweet fragrance” preserves the repeated Vulgate superlative.

Vulgate character preserved

The bird's crop, feathers, wound, rim, and wing joints are not generalized.

Ambiguities preserved

“All that adheres to the liver” is not assigned a narrower organ than the phrase supplies.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Victim, burnt offering, unblemished, slaughter, blood, expiation, and fragrance govern the sacrificial code.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

Fine-flour offerings become memorial, priestly food, firstfruits, and covenant salt.

Why the JNV reads this way

“A soul” offers; oven, pan, and griddle preparations remain distinct; leaven, honey, oil, frankincense, and salt retain separate rules.

Vulgate character preserved

Consecrated food is called a Holy of Holies.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise preparation represented by the griddle is not modernized beyond the Latin utensil.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Fine flour, memorial portion, gift, firstfruits, Holy of Holies, and covenant salt begin recurring classifications.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

Peace offerings from cattle, sheep, and goats distinguish blood, fat, organs, sex, and perpetual prohibition.

Why the JNV reads this way

The lobe of the liver, kidneys, flanks, vital organs, tail, and fat remain enumerated rather than compressed.

Vulgate character preserved

The offering becomes “food” and “nourishment” for the Lord's fire.

Ambiguities preserved

The sacrificial metaphors are preserved without explaining divine consumption.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Peace offerings, fat, blood, vital organs, and perpetual law are fixed.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

Unintentional sin is differentiated for anointed priest, whole assembly, leader, and individual soul.

Why the JNV reads this way

Sevenfold sprinkling, altar horns, poured blood, removed fat, outside-camp burning, prayer, and forgiveness remain distinct acts.

Vulgate character preserved

The priest's sin is said to cause the people to transgress.

Ambiguities preserved

The assembly's unawareness and later recognition are not reduced to a modern theory of culpability.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Sin, ignorance, anointed priest, multitude, leader, altar horns, and outside the camp recur.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

Withheld testimony, contact impurity, rash oaths, poverty-scaled offerings, restitution, and offenses in holy things are addressed.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Do penance” preserves `agat pœnitentiam`; animal, bird, and flour alternatives retain access without erasing ritual differences.

Vulgate character preserved

The ram is valued at two sanctuary shekels, and damaged holy things receive an added fifth.

Ambiguities preserved

The opening “voice of one who swears” remains broader than a supplied courtroom formula.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Bear iniquity, do penance, offense, sanctuary weight, restitution, and fifth part are established.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

Fraud requires restitution, while perpetual fire and priestly handling order burnt, grain, and sin offerings.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Despising the Lord” keeps the offense's theological agency; the victim, ashes, garments, vessels, eating, and burning remain procedural.

Vulgate character preserved

The altar fire is “perpetual” and “shall never fail.”

Ambiguities preserved

Contact that makes holy is not expanded into a theory of transmitted holiness.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Restitution, perpetual fire, libations, incense, holy place, and priestly portions continue.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

The laws of offense and peace offerings govern portions, thanksgiving, vows, time limits, purity, blood, fat, and priestly rights.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Breast of elevation” and “shoulder of separation” retain different ritual designations; third-day eating remains transgression.

Vulgate character preserved

The text says a polluted soul perishes from his “peoples,” preserving the plural.

Ambiguities preserved

Libations are kept as the source's explanatory identity of the accompanying sacrifice.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Thanksgiving, vow, voluntary offering, elevation, separation, anointing, and priestly portion are fixed.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

Aaron and his sons are washed, clothed, anointed, blood-marked, fed, and enclosed for seven-day consecration.

Why the JNV reads this way

Shoulder-piece, breastpiece, Teaching and Truth, ear, thumb, great toe, oil, blood, and garments preserve the Vulgate's bodily consecration.

Vulgate character preserved

The established Exodus garment vocabulary is carried forward without imported names.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between washing, anointing, blood, and holiness is narrated rather than systematized.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

High priest, consecrated hands, anointing, watches, seven days, and “through the hand of Moses” recur.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

On the eighth day Aaron offers for himself and the people; blessing, glory, and consuming fire answer the completed rites.

Why the JNV reads this way

The sequence of sin victim, burnt offering, libations, peace offerings, raised portions, blessing, and descent remains intact.

Vulgate character preserved

The crowds praise the Lord and fall upon their faces when fire devours the altar offering.

Ambiguities preserved

The visible form of the appearing glory is not supplied.

Corrections made in review

At 9:17, “apart from” became “besides” the morning burnt-offering ceremonies, preventing a false exclusion.

Terms carried forward

Eighth day, appearance, glory, blessing, and fire from the Lord prepare chapter 10.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

Foreign fire kills Nadab and Abihu; priestly grief, sobriety, discernment, teaching, and sacred eating are tested.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Foreign fire” retains `ignem alienum`; holy/profane and polluted/clean remain paired distinctions; Aaron answers with a “mourning mind.”

Vulgate character preserved

Aaron's silence remains the immediate response to the holiness saying.

Ambiguities preserved

The text does not define the foreign fire beyond saying it was uncommanded.

Corrections made in review

At 10:20, “accepted the satisfaction” became the lucid “was satisfied.”

Terms carried forward

Approach, holiness, glory, holy anointing, discernment, ordinance, and teaching govern priestly responsibility.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

Land animals, water creatures, birds, winged crawlers, carcasses, vessels, foods, and creeping things are distinguished as clean or unclean.

Why the JNV reads this way

Hoof, cud, fins, scales, feet, hind legs, carcass contact, washing, sunset, and vessel material remain concrete tests.

Vulgate character preserved

Uncertain ancient animal names such as bruchus, attacus, and ophiomachus are retained rather than falsely identified.

Ambiguities preserved

“According to its kind” is not converted into a modern taxonomy.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Clean, unclean, polluted, abominable, execrable, carcass, soul, and “be holy, because I am holy” govern later chapters.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

Birth initiates timed uncleanness, circumcision, purification, and a means-scaled offering.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Having received seed,” seven and thirty-three days, two weeks and sixty-six days, sanctuary exclusion, and blood's flow remain explicit.

Vulgate character preserved

The poorer offering of two birds is preserved as a complete alternative.

Ambiguities preserved

The chapter's ritual categories are not recast as medical diagnoses or moral blame.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Purification days, circumcision, sanctuary access, flow of blood, and poverty-scaled offerings continue.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

Priestly inspection distinguishes changing conditions of skin, hair, ulcers, burns, scalp, baldness, garments, warp, weft, and skins.

Why the JNV reads this way

Color, brightness, depth, hair, spread, confinement, washing, burning, and declared cleanness remain separate diagnostic observations and rulings.

Vulgate character preserved

“A most clean leprosy” at 13:13 preserves the startling `lepra mundissima` rather than correcting the source.

Ambiguities preserved

Leprosy remains the Vulgate's broad ritual classification, not a claim of one modern disease.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Plague, leprosy, confinement, clean/unclean declaration, living flesh, scar, and outside the camp govern chapter 14.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

Human cleansing uses birds, living waters, cedar, scarlet, hyssop, shaving, offerings, blood, and oil; house plagues receive inspection, repair, destruction, or cleansing.

Why the JNV reads this way

Ear, thumb, great toe, sextary, sevenfold sprinkling, little wall valleys, stones, clay, and scraping retain ritual and architectural specificity.

Vulgate character preserved

One living bird flies freely into the field after sharing the blood-and-water rite.

Ambiguities preserved

At 14:31 “for offense” remains because the supplied Latin changes terms there.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Living waters, cedar, scarlet, hyssop, sextary, house plague, soundness, and due cleansing are fixed.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

Male and female flows order contact, washing, time, offerings, cleansing, and protection of the tabernacle.

Why the JNV reads this way

The bodily diction is not euphemized: seed, fluid, flesh, saliva, blood, intercourse, washing, and sunset remain explicit.

Vulgate character preserved

Verse 3's `fœdus humor` becomes “foul fluid,” retaining the source's evaluative physical description.

Ambiguities preserved

Ritual uncleanness is not equated with personal sin where the Latin does not do so.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Discharge, menstrual separation, living waters, flow, pollution, cleansing, and tabernacle danger continue.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

After the foreign-fire deaths, annual entry beyond the veil joins incense, blood, confession, the emissary goat, cleansing, and Sabbath affliction.

Why the JNV reads this way

Mercy-seat and oracle remain distinct; both hands place all iniquities, offenses, and sins upon the living goat sent to a solitary land.

Vulgate character preserved

“Emissary goat” translates `caper emissarius` without importing an outside proper name.

Ambiguities preserved

The cloud above the oracle is not given a form the text withholds.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Annual expiation, veil, cloud, oracle, mercy-seat, confession, emissary goat, afflicted souls, and Sabbath rest are fixed.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

Centralized slaughter, rejection of demons, and the blood prohibition are grounded in blood's relation to the soul.

Why the JNV reads this way

“The soul of the flesh is in the blood” preserves `anima` in both repetitions; blood is given for altar expiation and atonement.

Vulgate character preserved

Unauthorized field sacrifice is described as prostitution with demons.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation of soul, flesh, blood, and atonement is stated without philosophical expansion.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Bloodguilt, demons, prostitution, soul of flesh, atonement, hunting, and covering blood with earth are established.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

Israel is separated from Egyptian and Canaanite custom through kinship, sexual, Moloch, and animal prohibitions; the land itself reacts to pollution.

Why the JNV reads this way

Nakedness translates repeated `turpitudo`, while shame marks `ignominia`; flesh, blood proximity, seed, pollution, abomination, and crime remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

The land “vomits out” inhabitants rather than receiving an abstract penalty.

Ambiguities preserved

Kinship formulas remain source-shaped and are not replaced by modern legal categories.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Custom, judgments, precepts, nakedness, abomination, pollution, Moloch, and the land's vomiting govern chapter 20.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

Holiness binds parents, Sabbath, sacrifice, harvest, truth, wages, disability, judgment, love, mixtures, fruit, mourning, strangers, elders, and measures.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Your friend” follows `amicum`; fruit trees have “foreskins”; deaf, blind, poor, powerful, hired laborer, stranger, and old person remain concrete neighbors.

Vulgate character preserved

Love of the stranger is explicitly grounded in Israel's Egyptian strangeness.

Ambiguities preserved

The mixed garment remains “woven from two things” without supplying fibers absent from this Latin verse.

Corrections made in review

The first-pass “atonement-guilt” at 19:29 was refined to “crime,” the direct contextual sense of `piaculum`.

Terms carried forward

Holiness, just judgment, public rebuke, friend-love, stranger-love, sanctuary fear, and equal measures are fixed.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

Moloch, occult practice, family curses, sexual crimes, and animal intercourse receive sanctions within a call to sanctification and separation.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Let his blood be upon him,” childlessness, stoning, burning, cutting off, and the land's vomiting retain different stated consequences.

Vulgate character preserved

“Pythonic or divining spirit” preserves the explicit Vulgate vocabulary.

Ambiguities preserved

No sanction is broadened beyond the act and subject named in its verse.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Moloch, set my face, make holy, blood upon, pythonic spirit, separation, and divine possession continue.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

Priestly mourning, marriage, family holiness, high-priestly restriction, bodily blemishes, food rights, and sanctuary access are ordered.

Why the JNV reads this way

Bread of God and bread of presentation remain distinct; the bodily inventory—including nose, eye, skin, back, and rupture—is not generalized.

Vulgate character preserved

A priest with a blemish may eat holy bread but may not cross the veil or approach the altar.

Ambiguities preserved

Ancient condition terms receive restrained English rather than speculative modern diagnoses.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

High priest, consecrated hands, holy garments, bread of presentation, blemish, veil, and sanctuary access are fixed.

Chapter 22

The chapter's movement

Priestly eating restrictions, household eligibility, restitution, acceptable victims, bodily integrity, mother-young timing, and divine-name holiness converge.

Why the JNV reads this way

Foreigner, guest, laborer, purchased servant, household-born person, daughter, widow, and childless returnee remain separately named.

Vulgate character preserved

The ear-or-tail exception for voluntary offering and the unaltered vow rule follow the supplied Latin.

Ambiguities preserved

“Bread” offered from a foreigner's hand remains the Vulgate's cultic noun rather than a generic gift.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Consecrated food, household right, fifth part, acceptable/unblemished victim, vow, thanksgiving, and holy name continue.

Chapter 23

The chapter's movement

Sabbath, Passover, unleavened bread, first sheaf, fifty-day offering, trumpet memorial, expiation, and tabernacles order sacred time.

Why the JNV reads this way

Every month, day, count, measure, animal, libation, rest, assembly, branch, fruit, and shelter remains explicit.

Vulgate character preserved

The first and eighth days are “Sabbath—that is, rest,” preserving the source's gloss.

Ambiguities preserved

The “most beautiful tree” is not assigned a botanical species absent from the Latin.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Feast day, solemnity, Passover, firstfruits, fifty days, trumpet memorial, propitiation, affliction, shelter, and tabernacle are fixed.

Chapter 24

The chapter's movement

Perpetual lamps and twelve loaves precede a blasphemy case and equal bodily judgment for citizen and sojourner.

Why the JNV reads this way

Purest oil, purest lampstand, purest table, clearest frankincense, twelve loaves, and Sabbath replacement preserve the repeated superlatives.

Vulgate character preserved

The absolute “the Name” at 24:11 keeps the sacred-name construction visible.

Ambiguities preserved

“Soul for soul” remains the Latin's animal-restoration formula without being harmonized to another wording.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Perpetual lamp, bread memorial, the Name, equal judgment, fracture for fracture, and citizen/sojourner equality are fixed.

Chapter 25

The chapter's movement

Land Sabbath and Jubilee reshape production, sale, redemption, houses, Levite property, debt, Israelite service, foreign servants, and return.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Sabbath a Sabbath” retains the cognate phrase; forty-nine and fiftieth years, produce-time pricing, fifth parts, walls, fields, wages, and kin redeemers remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

The land cannot be sold perpetually because it belongs to God and Israel are his strangers and settlers.

Ambiguities preserved

“What is immediately offered” in 25:12 preserves the compact Jubilee-produce expression.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Land rest, Jubilee, release, possession, redemption, interest, hired laborer, settler, hereditary right, and divine servants are established.

Chapter 26

The chapter's movement

Obedient rain, abundance, peace, pact, and indwelling are set against escalating correction, exile, land-rest, confession, and remembered covenant.

Why the JNV reads this way

Threshing overtakes vintage, heaven becomes iron, earth bronze, bread has a staff, and a flying leaf terrifies; the physical judgments are not abstracted.

Vulgate character preserved

“My soul shall not cast you away” and “uncircumcised mind” retain the Vulgate's striking anthropomorphic language.

Ambiguities preserved

`pactum` remains pact while `fœdus` remains covenant; related bonds are not automatically collapsed.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Pact, covenant, tabernacle, divine soul, sevenfold correction, hostile land, land Sabbaths, confession, and remembrance conclude the covenantal warning.

Chapter 27

The chapter's movement

Vowed souls, animals, houses, fields, firstborn, consecrations, and tithes receive valuations, redemption rules, and Jubilee limits.

Why the JNV reads this way

Age, sex, shekels, obols, fifth parts, barley bushels, years, ownership, and every tenth under the rod remain source-controlled.

Vulgate character preserved

Verse 29's consecrated human “shall not be redeemed, but shall surely die” remains unqualified because the supplied Latin is unqualified.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise scope of that consecration is not supplied from another tradition or later legal theory.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Vow, soul valuation, sanctuary shekel, redemption, consecration, Jubilee, firstborn, tithe, and shepherd's rod close Leviticus.

Numbers — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

The Lord orders a military census; twelve tribal leaders assist Moses and Aaron, while Levi is reserved for the tabernacle.

Why the JNV reads this way

Houses, kindreds, families, heads, companies, and military service remain distinct organizing terms rather than becoming one generic census vocabulary.

Vulgate character preserved

The repeated tribal subtotals and the total of 603,550 remain fully stated.

Ambiguities preserved

The Levites’ encampment “around” the tabernacle is not converted into a reconstructed map.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Tabernacle of testimony, watches, companies, leaders, and children of Israel establish the book’s administrative register.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

Israel’s tribes receive standards, positions, leaders, totals, and marching order around the tabernacle.

Why the JNV reads this way

Standard, emblem, camp, company, and army preserve the layered Latin organization.

Vulgate character preserved

Each side’s subtotal and the complete encampment total remain visible within the liturgical geometry.

Ambiguities preserved

The appearance of each ancestral emblem is not supplied.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 2:34 to complete the Lord’s chapter-length speech.

Terms carried forward

East, south, west, and north frame Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan around the central tabernacle.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

Aaron’s priestly house and Levi’s substitution for Israel’s firstborn are numbered, stationed, and redeemed.

Why the JNV reads this way

Priesthood, ministry, watches, firstborn, price, and redemption retain their legal and sacred force.

Vulgate character preserved

The surplus 273 firstborn and their five-shekel redemption are not compressed.

Ambiguities preserved

The text’s several levels of family, house, and kindred remain as given.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Gershon, Kohath, Merari, sanctuary weight, and guardianship govern later Levitical duties.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

The Kohathites, Gershonites, and Merarites receive exact transport duties, safeguards, and service-age censuses.

Why the JNV reads this way

Veils, coverings, bars, vessels, cords, boards, bases, and assigned burdens remain materially specific.

Vulgate character preserved

The sacred things are covered before Kohath approaches, lest sight or touch bring death.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise hides named by the Vulgate are not replaced by speculative modern materials.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Ministry, burden, watch, tabernacle of covenant, Holy of Holies, and anointing continue Exodus–Leviticus usage.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

Camp purity, confession and restitution, and the ordeal of suspected adultery bind communal holiness to hidden wrongdoing.

Why the JNV reads this way

Pollution, confession, fifth part, memorial, curse, bitterness, thigh, womb, and innocence remain concrete.

Vulgate character preserved

Holy water, earthen vessel, tabernacle dust, and the written curse dissolved in water are all retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The physiological action of the ordeal is narrated without medical reinterpretation.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Soul, offense, restitution, jealousy, oblation, and water of bitterness govern the chapter.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

The Nazirite’s separation, contamination, restoration, completion, offerings, and blessing are ordered.

Why the JNV reads this way

Vow, consecration, hair, razor, corpse, days, offerings, shoulder, and libations preserve the rite’s sequence.

Vulgate character preserved

The consecration is said to be “upon his head,” and the priestly blessing retains its luminous directness.

Ambiguities preserved

The source’s relation between hair and consecration is not reduced to symbolism.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Separate, consecrate, soul, sin, peace offering, and most sweet fragrance continue the JNV ritual vocabulary.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

Twelve leaders dedicate the altar through twelve equal daily offerings, followed by God’s voice from above the ark.

Why the JNV reads this way

The full repetition is preserved because the Latin honors each tribe’s gift individually.

Vulgate character preserved

Every weight, animal, vessel, and tribal donor remains present rather than summarized.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between mercy-seat, cherubim, and heard voice is not spatially reconstructed.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Anointing, dedication, sanctuary weight, incense, burnt offering, sin, and peace offerings recur exactly.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

The lamps are arranged, the Levites cleansed and offered, and their years of service defined.

Why the JNV reads this way

Sprinkling, shaving, washing, laying on of hands, elevation, substitution, and gift remain separate acts.

Vulgate character preserved

The lampstand’s beaten work and its revealed pattern remain tied together.

Ambiguities preserved

The Levites’ status as an “offering” is not converted into metaphorical explanation.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Cleanse, expiate, firstborn, gift, ministry, watch, and tabernacle of covenant carry prior standards forward.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

Passover is kept, a second-month provision answers impurity and travel, and the cloud governs every encampment and departure.

Why the JNV reads this way

Date, evening, unleavened bread, wild lettuce, bone, stranger, cloud, fire, watch, and command remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

Whether two days, a month, or longer, Israel moves only when the cloud rises.

Ambiguities preserved

The unusual time expression governing Passover is rendered without importing a different calendar system.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Passover, soul, unclean, ceremony, ordinance, tabernacle, cloud, and fire continue.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

Silver trumpets regulate assembly, alarm, war, feast, and departure; Israel begins its ordered march from Sinai.

Why the JNV reads this way

Call, alarm, signal, company, standard, watch, covenant, and memorial preserve distinct functions.

Vulgate character preserved

Moses’ words at the ark’s rising and resting remain forceful invocations.

Ambiguities preserved

Hobab’s precise family designation is preserved through the source’s wording rather than harmonized externally.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Trumpet, remembrance, ark of the covenant, enemies, and thousands of Israel become recurring motifs.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

Complaint brings fire; craving brings quail and plague; Moses’ burden is shared with seventy elders.

Why the JNV reads this way

Graves of Craving, mixed multitude, soul, manna, coriander, bdellium, mortar, and cubit retain the narrative’s textures.

Vulgate character preserved

The Vulgate says the elders prophesied and “did not cease afterward.”

Ambiguities preserved

The nature and duration of their prophecy are not supplied beyond the Latin.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Spirit, burden, prophet, craving, anger, and plague prepare later rebellions.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

Mary and Aaron challenge Moses; God distinguishes Moses’ revelation, strikes Mary, and restores her after intercession.

Why the JNV reads this way

Ethiopian woman, vision, dream, mouth to mouth, faithful, form, leprosy, and spittle remain direct.

Vulgate character preserved

Moses is “exceedingly meek beyond all the people” upon earth.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact ground and timing of the marriage criticism are not expanded.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Prophet, servant, house, anger, prayer, shame, and seven-day exclusion continue.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

Twelve leaders examine Canaan, bring its fruit, and divide between Caleb’s confidence and the others’ fearful report.

Why the JNV reads this way

Examine, south, mountains, walls, soil, fruit, cluster, stock, stature, and monsters remain source-shaped.

Vulgate character preserved

Hebron is founded seven years before Tanis, and the sons of Anak are called monsters of the race of giants.

Ambiguities preserved

Ancient ethnographic labels are not recast as modern biological claims.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Kadesh, Torrent of the Cluster, milk and honey, Caleb, Joshua, and the examined land govern chapter 14.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

Israel revolts, Moses intercedes, God sentences the generation, and a presumptuous invasion fails.

Why the JNV reads this way

Glory, mercy, iniquity, vengeance, carcasses, forty days, forty years, mourning, and presumption remain explicit.

Vulgate character preserved

The source’s severe oath and the people’s long punishment are not softened.

Ambiguities preserved

Collective judgment and the children’s future are narrated without a supplied theodicy.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Pardon, oath, wilderness, inheritance, plague, Amalekite, and Canaanite recur.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

Future land offerings, equal law for stranger and native, firstfruits, unintentional sin, Sabbath violation, and garment fringes are ordered.

Why the JNV reads this way

Measures, libations, most sweet fragrance, firstfruits, ignorance, blasphemy, tassels, and hyacinth remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

The Sabbath-breaker’s execution and the command not to follow one’s thoughts and eyes remain unabridged.

Ambiguities preserved

“Sins of ignorance” remains the text’s category rather than a modern psychological defense.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

One law, stranger, native, soul, firstfruits, expiation, and remembrance bind ritual to obedience.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

Korah, Dathan, and Abiram rebel; earth and fire judge them; censers become altar plates; Aaron’s incense halts a plague.

Why the JNV reads this way

Sedition, schism, censer, incense, glory, abyss, hell, memorial, and plague retain the Latin’s escalating judgment.

Vulgate character preserved

Moses announces the rebels’ living descent into hell as a new wonder.

Ambiguities preserved

Korah’s placement across the earth-opening and fire episodes is not rewritten from another edition.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Holy, chosen, priesthood, tabernacle, altar, expiation, and wrath continue.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

Twelve rods are placed before the testimony; Aaron’s flowers and almonds publicly confirm Levi’s priesthood.

Why the JNV reads this way

Rod, tribe, prince, name, testimony, bud, flower, leaves, almonds, and memorial remain visible stages.

Vulgate character preserved

The dry rod’s simultaneous foliage, blossoms, and fruit preserve the miraculous abundance.

Ambiguities preserved

The botanical sequence is not normalized into ordinary growth.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Testimony, sign, murmuring, chosen man, and Aaron’s rod answer chapter 16.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

Priests and Levites receive responsibilities, prohibited approaches, sacred portions, firstfruits, redemption, tithes, and the tithe of tithes.

Why the JNV reads this way

Iniquity, ministry, gift, perpetual pact of salt, firstborn, price, firstfruits, tithe, and Holy of Holies remain legally differentiated.

Vulgate character preserved

The priestly covenant is called a perpetual pact of salt.

Ambiguities preserved

Sacred “eating” and divine gift remain ritual claims without economic modernization.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Pact, sanctuary, altar, oblation, vow, firstfruits, possession, and inheritance carry Exodus–Leviticus language onward.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

The red cow’s ashes prepare water of expiation for corpse impurity, with exact contamination and cleansing rules.

Why the JNV reads this way

Red, unblemished, yoke, cedar, hyssop, scarlet, ashes, living water, soul, bone, grave, and vessel remain physical.

Vulgate character preserved

The preparers themselves become unclean while producing cleansing ashes.

Ambiguities preserved

The rite’s paradox is preserved rather than resolved through commentary in the translation.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Victim, burn, ashes, water of expiation, sprinkle, wash, evening, and perpetual ordinance recur.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

Mary dies; Moses and Aaron fail at the rock; Edom refuses passage; Aaron dies and Eleazar receives his garments.

Why the JNV reads this way

Contradiction, sanctify, rock, rod, abundance, brother, border, garments, and mourning retain the narrative’s linked transitions.

Vulgate character preserved

The place is explicitly named Waters of Contradiction.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise nature of Moses and Aaron’s offense is left within God’s stated charge.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Kadesh, wilderness of Zin, contradiction, holiness, Edom, Mount Hor, and gathered to one’s people continue.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

Israel wins at Hormah, suffers serpents, looks upon the bronze serpent, journeys, sings at the well, and defeats Sihon and Og.

Why the JNV reads this way

Anathema, fiery serpent, bronze, standard, soul, bread, water, well, torrents, boundary, and possession remain concrete.

Vulgate character preserved

Whoever looks upon the bronze serpent lives; the victory songs and geographical poem remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

The source’s compressed station list and poetic place relations are not expanded into a modern itinerary.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Vow, plague, prayer, possession, Amorite, Bashan, Sihon, and Og prepare Transjordan.

Chapter 22

The chapter's movement

Balak summons Balaam; God restricts him; the donkey sees the angel, speaks, and saves him; Balaam reaches Moab.

Why the JNV reads this way

Diviners’ price, curse, blessing, angel, sword, donkey, wall, staff, mouth, and altar remain narratively exact.

Vulgate character preserved

The Lord opens the donkey’s mouth, then Balaam’s eyes.

Ambiguities preserved

God’s permission and anger are kept in their narrative sequence without doctrinal smoothing.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Word of God, bless, curse, angel of the Lord, parable, and seven altars lead into the oracles.

Chapter 23

The chapter's movement

Balaam’s first two oracles bless the people Balak wants cursed, despite new altars and vantage points.

Why the JNV reads this way

Parable, dust, death of the just, idol, image, victory signal, augury, divination, lioness, and rhinoceros remain source-specific.

Vulgate character preserved

“There is no idol in Jacob” and strength “like that of the rhinoceros” are not conformed to another edition.

Ambiguities preserved

The king’s victory signal is not replaced with a supplied object or ceremony.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Blessing, curse, Jacob, Israel, parable, altar, and sacrifice continue into chapter 24.

Chapter 24

The chapter's movement

The Spirit comes upon Balaam; he blesses Israel, foretells the star and rod, and pronounces the ends of neighboring peoples.

Why the JNV reads this way

Stopped eye, vision, tabernacle, bucket, seed, lion, star, rod, triremes, Italy, and last things retain the Latin imagery.

Vulgate character preserved

The rhinoceros, star from Jacob, rod from Israel, and triremes from Italy remain unmistakably Vulgate.

Ambiguities preserved

The identities and chronology of the final rulers and nations are not supplied inside the translation.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Spirit of God, Almighty, parable, blessing, inheritance, and rule complete the Balaam cycle.

Chapter 25

The chapter's movement

Israel joins Baal-Peor; Phinehas kills Zimri and Cozbi, halts the plague, receives a priestly pact, and Midian becomes an enemy.

Why the JNV reads this way

Fornication, initiation, gibbets, brothel, genital places, zeal, expiation, crime, and sacrilege retain the source’s severity.

Vulgate character preserved

The explicit double piercing and the distinction between covenant and pact remain visible.

Ambiguities preserved

The command concerning the leaders and the judges’ executions is not rearranged into a supplied chronology.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Baal-Peor, plague, zeal, peace of covenant, and pact of everlasting priesthood govern the aftermath.

Chapter 26

The chapter's movement

A second military census records the new generation, assigns land by number and lot, numbers Levi separately, and identifies the two survivors.

Why the JNV reads this way

Every clan, subtotal, daughter, inheritance principle, and census total remains individually stated.

Vulgate character preserved

The source calls the survival of Korah’s sons “a great miracle” and names Mary beside Aaron and Moses.

Ambiguities preserved

Genealogical spellings are stabilized for readers without importing people or figures absent from the Latin.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Kindred, family, stock, lot, possession, inheritance, Mary, Caleb, and Joshua continue.

Chapter 27

The chapter's movement

Zelophehad’s daughters secure inheritance law; Moses sees the land and commissions Joshua under Eleazar.

Why the JNV reads this way

Case, judgment, succession, paternal uncle, perpetual law, contradiction, spirit, shepherd, glory, and command remain precise.

Vulgate character preserved

The Lord is called “the God of the spirits of all flesh,” and Joshua receives a portion of Moses’ glory.

Ambiguities preserved

The nature of that transferred glory is not defined beyond the source.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Inheritance, possession, Waters of Contradiction, laying on of hands, priestly consultation, and assembly recur.

Chapter 28

The chapter's movement

Daily, Sabbath, monthly, Passover, and Firstfruits offerings receive exact animals, grain measures, and libations.

Why the JNV reads this way

Oblation, breads, incense, burnt offering, fine flour, hin, libation, victim, expiation, and fuel retain ritual distinctions.

Vulgate character preserved

“Most sweet fragrance” and the source’s unusual “tenth of a tenth” are not normalized away.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation of “breads” and incense to the whole offering system is not paraphrased.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 28:31 to complete the Lord’s chapter-length command.

Terms carried forward

Everlasting burnt offering, appointed times, first day of the month, Passover, unleavened bread, and Firstfruits continue.

Chapter 29

The chapter's movement

The seventh month’s trumpet day, soul-affliction, seven-day solemnity, descending bull count, and eighth day are prescribed.

Why the JNV reads this way

Sounding, trumpets, afflict your souls, expiation, solemnity, spontaneous oblation, and peace offering remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

Each day’s declining number of calves and repeated accompanying offerings is fully preserved.

Ambiguities preserved

The solemnities are not relabeled from later calendrical conventions inside the translation.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Holy, venerable, servile work, most sweet fragrance, sin, libation, vow, and spontaneous offering continue.

Chapter 30

The chapter's movement

Vows and soul-binding oaths are regulated for men, daughters, wives, widows, and divorced women.

Why the JNV reads this way

Vow, oath, bind the soul, void, promise, contradict, liable, fasting, abstinence, and iniquity retain legal distinctions.

Vulgate character preserved

A husband who delays and later contradicts bears the woman’s iniquity himself.

Ambiguities preserved

The chapter’s household authority is translated as law without importing modern justification or condemnation.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 30:17 to complete the legal address.

Terms carried forward

Soul, vow, oath, word, promise, mercy, and perpetual obligation govern the legal register.

Chapter 31

The chapter's movement

Israel avenges Peor upon Midian, purifies warriors and spoil, divides captives and livestock, and offers gold after losing no soldier.

Why the JNV reads this way

Vengeance, sacred vessels, spoil, intercourse, virgin, expiation, firstfruits, soul, head, watch, and memorial remain explicit.

Vulgate character preserved

The severe commands, exact human and animal arithmetic, and thirty-two female souls allotted to the Lord remain unabridged.

Ambiguities preserved

The text’s moral and legal world is not supplemented with an external defense; the translation presents what the Latin says.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Midian, Peor, water of expiation, tabernacle watch, sanctuary gifts, and tabernacle of testimony return.

Chapter 32

The chapter's movement

Reuben and Gad request Transjordan, promise armed service, receive conditional approval, and settle with half Manasseh.

Why the JNV reads this way

Cattle, possession, inheritance, armed, girded, blameless, sin, cities, folds, kingdom, and villages retain political and pastoral force.

Vulgate character preserved

“Know that your sin shall overtake you” remains the covenant warning at the agreement’s center.

Ambiguities preserved

Changed city names are acknowledged without supplying every former or later equivalence.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Gilead, Jordan, Canaan, Amorite, Sihon, Og, possession, and inheritance prepare the boundary chapters.

Chapter 33

The chapter's movement

Moses records Israel’s stations from Rameses to Moab, then commands cleansing and division of Canaan.

Why the JNV reads this way

Station, camp, boundary, wilderness, vengeance, gods, lot, inheritance, monument, statue, and high place remain source-shaped.

Vulgate character preserved

God executes vengeance upon Egypt’s gods, and surviving Canaanites become nails in Israel’s eyes and spears in its sides.

Ambiguities preserved

Ancient place names are not forced into uncertain modern locations.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Passover, Red Sea, Sinai, Kadesh, Mount Hor, Abarim, Jordan, Jericho, lot, and possession gather the journey.

Chapter 34

The chapter's movement

Canaan’s southern, western, northern, and eastern boundaries are traced, and leaders are appointed to divide it.

Why the JNV reads this way

Boundary, region, ascent, torrent, shore, sea, village, spring, lot, portion, and tribe preserve the legal geography.

Vulgate character preserved

The Salt Sea is “most salt” in the Latin’s superlative geography, represented as the established proper name.

Ambiguities preserved

Uncertain ancient boundary points are transliterated rather than falsely identified.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Wilderness of Zin, Kadesh-Barnea, Great Sea, Jordan, Salt Sea, possession, lot, Eleazar, and Joshua continue.

Chapter 35

The chapter's movement

Levitical cities and suburbs are measured; six refuge cities distinguish murder from unintended killing and protect the land from blood pollution.

Why the JNV reads this way

Pace, cubit, refuge, fugitive, kinsman, murderer, witness, avenger, high priest, price, pollution, and expiation remain legal terms.

Vulgate character preserved

The land cannot be expiated from innocent blood except by the blood of the one who shed it.

Ambiguities preserved

The two outward measurements are retained as given rather than geometrically reconciled in the translation.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Levites, possession, inheritance, stranger, sojourner, judgment, holy oil, perpetual ordinance, and dwelling presence recur.

Chapter 36

The chapter's movement

Manasseh’s leaders protect tribal inheritance; Zelophehad’s daughters marry within their clan; the Moab legislation closes.

Why the JNV reads this way

Possession, inheritance, tribe, lot, Jubilee, fiftieth year, remission, law, family, commandment, and judgment remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

The Vulgate’s own explanatory gloss—Jubilee as the fiftieth year of remission—is fully retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The daughters’ kinship phrase is translated directly without constructing a broader genealogy.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Zelophehad, Manasseh, Joseph, inheritance, tribe, family, Moab, Jordan, Jericho, and the hand of Moses close Numbers.

Deuteronomy — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

Moses locates his address, recalls appointed judges, the explorers’ report, Israel’s refusal, God’s sentence, and the failed ascent.

Why the JNV reads this way

Explain the law, burden, disputes, distinction of persons, inheritance, and lot retain the source’s judicial and covenant vocabulary.

Vulgate character preserved

The opening wilderness is “where there is very much gold,” and the Amorites pursue like bees.

Ambiguities preserved

The geographical sequence is not reconstructed from another itinerary.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 1:46.

Terms carried forward

Horeb, Kadesh-Barnea, oath, possession, Joshua, Caleb, and pillar of cloud carry Numbers forward.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

Israel circles Seir, respects Edom, Moab, and Ammon, crosses Arnon, and defeats Sihon.

Why the JNV reads this way

Possession, border, torrent, generation, hardened spirit, and peaceful words preserve agents and territorial limits.

Vulgate character preserved

Cappadocians from Cappadocia displace the Hivites, and frightened nations tremble like women in labor.

Ambiguities preserved

Ancient peoples and sites remain source-named rather than modernized.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 2:37.

Terms carried forward

Seir, Lot, giants, Anakim, Arnon, Sihon, Heshbon, spoil, and possession recur.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

Og falls, Transjordan is distributed, eastern warriors are charged, Joshua is strengthened, and Moses is denied passage.

Why the JNV reads this way

Destruction, iron bed, hand-cubit, inheritance, rest, divide by lot, and mighty hand remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

Og’s nine-by-four-cubit iron bed and Bashan’s title Land of Giants are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The hand-cubit is not converted into a modern measurement.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Og, Bashan, Gilead, Havoth-Jair, Pisgah, Peor, Joshua, and rest continue.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

Moses commands obedience, warns against images and exile, proclaims God’s uniqueness and mercy, and names refuge cities.

Why the JNV reads this way

Soul, pact, Ten Words, hereditary people, consuming fire, trial, testimony, ceremony, and judgment remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

Israel asks whether any people heard God from fire and lived; the iron furnace and divine nearness remain vivid.

Ambiguities preserved

Created heavenly bodies’ “service” to nations is not expanded into a cosmological theory.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Pact, soul, Horeb, fire, tablets, image, mercy, refuge, and possession govern the book.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

Moses restates Horeb’s covenant, the Ten Words, Israel’s fear, and his mediating role.

Why the JNV reads this way

Covenant and pact remain separate, while servitude, jealous God, Sabbath rest, testimony, and possession preserve legal force.

Vulgate character preserved

The Sabbath is grounded in Egyptian servitude, and God desires a mind that fears him forever.

Ambiguities preserved

“Face to face” and Moses as intermediary are both retained without systematization.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

House of servitude, carved thing, mercy, Sabbath, outstretched arm, and stone tablets recur.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

Israel is called to love the one Lord wholly, teach his words continually, and remember redemption amid inherited abundance.

Why the JNV reads this way

Whole heart, whole soul, whole strength, meditate, moving between the eyes, testimony, and ceremony preserve the Vulgate texture.

Vulgate character preserved

The bound words “shall move between your eyes,” and the Place of Temptation remains named.

Ambiguities preserved

The physical form of the hand and doorway signs is not supplied.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 6:25.

Terms carried forward

One Lord, love, soul, heart, sign, servitude, mighty hand, and milk and honey continue.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

Chosen Israel must reject the nations’ worship, remember God’s love and oath, and trust his gradual conquest.

Why the JNV reads this way

Covenant, pact, peculiar people, redemption, hornets, anathema, filth, pollution, and abomination remain differentiated.

Vulgate character preserved

God keeps pact and mercy for a thousand generations and destroys hidden fugitives through hornets.

Ambiguities preserved

The pace of conquest is stated as gradual without a supplied chronology.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 7:26.

Terms carried forward

Holy people, peculiar people, oath, mighty hand, pact, mercy, plague, and anathema recur.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

Wilderness affliction teaches dependence; abundance tests memory; strength must be credited to God’s pact.

Why the JNV reads this way

Afflict, test, manna, word from God’s mouth, instruction, depths, iron, bronze, and lifted heart remain concrete.

Vulgate character preserved

The dipsas and serpent burning with its breath remain in the terrible wilderness.

Ambiguities preserved

The ancient dipsas is not given a falsely certain modern species.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 8:20.

Terms carried forward

Forty years, manna, son, excellent land, house of servitude, pact, and foreign gods continue.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

Moses denies Israel’s self-righteousness and recalls the calf, broken tablets, Aaron’s danger, rebellions, fasting, and intercession.

Why the JNV reads this way

Justice, impiety, hardest neck, tablets of pact and covenant, molten thing, inheritance, and outstretched arm remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

The paired tablet designations are not flattened, and Moses says Israel rebelled from the day he began to know them.

Ambiguities preserved

The source’s theological ordering of national impiety and ancestral oath is not supplemented.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 9:29.

Terms carried forward

Anak, consuming fire, oath, calf, forty days, sin, prayer, redemption, and inheritance recur.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

New tablets enter the ark; Levi is set apart; Moses calls Israel to fear, love, heart-circumcision, justice, and care for newcomers.

Why the JNV reads this way

Ark of covenant, ministry, possession, heaven of heaven, circumcise the foreskin of the heart, orphan, widow, and sojourner remain vivid.

Vulgate character preserved

God is joined closely to the fathers and shows no regard for persons or gifts.

Ambiguities preserved

The itinerary around Aaron’s death is not conformed to another narrative sequence.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 10:22.

Terms carried forward

Shittim wood, ark, Levi, inheritance, soul, heart, newcomer, and seventy souls continue Books 1–4.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

Eyewitness memory, rain-dependent land, whole-hearted obedience, household teaching, and Gerizim/Ebal’s blessing and curse are set forth.

Why the JNV reads this way

Discipline, substance, early and latter rain, heart, soul, sign, blessing, curse, and possession remain source-shaped.

Vulgate character preserved

The earth swallows households, tabernacles, and substance; heaven hangs over earth.

Ambiguities preserved

The final geographical description near Gilgal remains as compressed as the Latin.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Dathan, Abiram, Red Sea, milk and honey, rain, love, soul, Gerizim, and Ebal prepare later chapters.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

Idolatrous sites are destroyed; worship is centralized; ordinary meat and sacred offerings are distinguished; blood remains prohibited.

Why the JNV reads this way

Burnt offering, victim, offering, oblation, tithe, firstfruits, vow, gift, sanctify, soul, and blood retain sacrificial distinctions.

Vulgate character preserved

“The blood is for the soul” and not eating “the soul with the flesh” remain direct.

Ambiguities preserved

Clean and unclean participants in nonsacrificial meat are retained without imported ritual explanation.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 12:32.

Terms carried forward

Chosen place, name, altar, Levite, rest, possession, soul, blood, and abomination govern the code.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

Signs cannot legitimate foreign worship; intimate enticement and apostate cities receive investigation and destruction.

Why the JNV reads this way

Prophet, dreamer, test, whole soul, fabricator, Sons of Belial, anathema, diligent inquiry, and evil remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

Even a fulfilled sign becomes a divine test of love rather than an independent authority.

Ambiguities preserved

The identity of “Sons of Belial” is not narrowed beyond the source label.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 13:18.

Terms carried forward

Foreign gods, servitude, redemption, soul, stones, sword, anathema, mercy, and oath recur.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

Holy sonship governs mourning, clean food, tithes, rejoicing, and provision for Levite and vulnerable neighbor.

Why the JNV reads this way

Peculiar people, clean, unclean, carcass, soul, strong drink, tithe, possession, orphan, and widow remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

The full Vulgate animal inventory remains, including griffin, ixion, porphyrion, and camelopard.

Ambiguities preserved

Uncertain ancient species are transliterated instead of falsely identified.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 14:29.

Terms carried forward

Holy people, firstborn, tithe, chosen place, fear, soul, Levite, newcomer, orphan, and widow continue.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

Seventh-year remission, openhanded lending, Hebrew release, willing lifelong service, and firstborn animals are ordered.

Why the JNV reads this way

Remission, loan, poverty, open hand, provision, freedom, awl, sanctify, blemish, and blood remain concrete.

Vulgate character preserved

The text holds both “no needy person” under obedience and the enduring presence of the poor.

Ambiguities preserved

The tension between promise and command is not dissolved by commentary in the verse text.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 15:23.

Terms carried forward

Seventh year, remission, brother, poor, house of servitude, firstborn, clean, unclean, and blood recur.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

Passover, Weeks, and Tabernacles order Israel’s calendar; judges are charged to pursue justice without gifts.

Why the JNV reads this way

New fruits, springtime, bread of affliction, assembly, spontaneous oblation, solemnity, teachers, judgment, and gifts remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

The Passover departure occurs “in fear,” and justice is pursued justly.

Ambiguities preserved

Feast names remain tied to the source without importing later calendar dates.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 16:22.

Terms carried forward

Passover, unleavened bread, chosen place, Levite, newcomer, orphan, widow, and altar continue.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

Sacrificial defects, apostasy, witnesses, high judicial authority, and the king’s limits and law-scroll are prescribed.

Why the JNV reads this way

Pact, army of heaven, leprosy, sentence, priestly authority, throne, exemplar, and Deuteronomy retain the Latin’s institutions.

Vulgate character preserved

The king writes “a Deuteronomy of this law” and receives its exemplar from Levitical priests.

Ambiguities preserved

“Blood and blood, case and case, leprosy and leprosy” remains the source’s broad appellate formula.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 17:20.

Terms carried forward

Blemish, abomination, pact, witnesses, chosen place, priest, judge, king, and law recur.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

Priestly portions and Levitical service lead into prohibitions of divination and the promise and testing of a prophet like Moses.

Why the JNV reads this way

Inheritance, victim, oblation, firstfruits, pythonic spirits, diviner, dead, prophet, avenger, and arrogance remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter retains ritual cleansing through fire and seeking truth from the dead.

Ambiguities preserved

The promised prophet’s fulfillment is not identified inside the translation.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 18:22.

Terms carried forward

Levi, inheritance, ministry, abomination, perfect, Horeb, fire, prophet, and word continue.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

Refuge roads and cities protect accidental killers; murder, boundaries, witnesses, and false testimony receive judgment.

Why the JNV reads this way

Homicide, soul, blood, refuge, innocent, witness, transgression, and exact retaliation retain legal precision.

Vulgate character preserved

The axe iron slipping from its handle and “soul for soul” remain direct.

Ambiguities preserved

Yesterday and the day before remain the source’s idiom for prior hatred.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 19:21.

Terms carried forward

Possession, refuge, kinsman, innocent blood, boundaries, witnesses, evil, and soul continue Numbers 35.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

Priest and leaders prepare the army, offer exemptions, distinguish distant and inherited cities, and protect fruit trees.

Why the JNV reads this way

Cavalry, battle line, dedicate, make common, covenant, tribute, spoil, possession, and machines remain concrete.

Vulgate character preserved

A tree is explicitly “not a man” and cannot increase the enemy army.

Ambiguities preserved

The siege machines are not assigned a narrower ancient design.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 20:20.

Terms carried forward

Egypt, priest, companies, peace, covenant, sword, spoil, abomination, and possession recur.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

Unsolved bloodshed, captive marriage, firstborn rights, the stubborn son, and burial of one hanged are regulated.

Why the JNV reads this way

Heifer, rocky valley, blood guilt, shave, humble, double portion, gate of judgment, gibbet, wood, curse, and contaminate remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

The hanged one is “cursed by God,” and the captive woman’s month of mourning is not compressed.

Ambiguities preserved

The rough valley rite’s mechanics are narrated without supplied symbolism.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 21:23.

Terms carried forward

Priests, clean, unclean, innocent blood, firstborn, evil, curse, and possession continue.

Chapter 22

The chapter's movement

Lost goods, animals, clothing, nests, roofs, mixtures, fringes, marriage accusations, adultery, assault, and paternal covering are governed.

Why the JNV reads this way

Brother, abomination, roof wall, sanctified seed, signs of virginity, humble, soul, judgment, and covering remain physically direct.

Vulgate character preserved

The Vulgate’s juridical distinctions between city and field remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The evidentiary garment is not given a modern forensic explanation.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Neighbor, blood guilt, sanctify, shekel, fornication, adultery, soul, and evil recur.

Chapter 23

The chapter's movement

Assembly boundaries, camp purity, escaped servants, sexual commerce, interest, vows, and neighborly gleaning are ordered.

Why the JNV reads this way

Eunuch, mamzer, assembly, nocturnal pollution, requirements of nature, foulness, prostitute, price of a dog, interest, and vow remain direct.

Vulgate character preserved

The explicit anatomy and the gloss “one born from a prostitute” are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

Mamzer remains present rather than being reduced to one disputed modern category.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 23:25.

Terms carried forward

Balaam, blessing, curse, camp holiness, servitude, abomination, vow, sin, and neighbor continue.

Chapter 24

The chapter's movement

Divorce, newlywed exemption, pledges, kidnapping, leprosy, wages, individual liability, and gleaning protect household and vulnerable people.

Why the JNV reads this way

Bill of divorce, foulness, pledge of soul, Mary, justice, wages, orphan, widow, sheaf, and cluster remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

Mary is named as the wilderness warning, and a millstone pledge is said to pledge the soul.

Ambiguities preserved

The divorce provision is translated as legislation without supplying a theology of permission.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 24:22.

Terms carried forward

Possession, soul, leprosy, Mary, newcomer, orphan, widow, Egypt, and blessing recur.

Chapter 25

The chapter's movement

Measured punishment, the threshing ox, levirate duty, bodily intervention, honest measures, and Amalek’s erasure are commanded.

Why the JNV reads this way

Forty blows, seed, House of the Unshod, genitals, just weight, bushel, injustice, and rest remain concrete.

Vulgate character preserved

The woman seizes the man’s genitals, and the refusal house receives its Vulgate title.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between naming the firstborn and preserving the dead brother’s name is not expanded.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 25:19.

Terms carried forward

Justice, brother, firstborn, elders, mercy, abomination, Amalek, rest, and remembrance continue.

Chapter 26

The chapter's movement

Firstfruits confess redemption; the third-year tithe supports the vulnerable; Israel and the Lord mutually declare covenant identity.

Why the JNV reads this way

Basket, profess, Syrian, persecution, humiliation, firstfruits, sanctified, mourning, funeral matter, peculiar people, praise, name, and glory remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

The confession begins “A Syrian persecuted my father,” preserving the supplied verb.

Ambiguities preserved

The Syrian’s precise identity is not silently replaced by another reading.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Chosen place, firstfruits, altar, Levite, newcomer, orphan, widow, soul, and holy people continue.

Chapter 27

The chapter's movement

Law is inscribed on limed stones, an unworked altar receives offerings, and twelve curses are answered with Amen.

Why the JNV reads this way

Plainly, clearly, peace offerings, just ordinances, blessing, curse, carved and molten thing, boundaries, gifts, soul, and deed remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

The repeated congregational Amen is preserved in every curse.

Ambiguities preserved

The relationship between tribal placement and Levitical proclamation is not spatially reconstructed.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 27:26.

Terms carried forward

Jordan, Ebal, Gerizim, altar, burnt offering, peace offering, law, curse, and Amen govern the ceremony.

Chapter 28

The chapter's movement

Blessings for obedience give way to an extended, escalating curse of disease, loss, siege, cannibalism, exile, and servitude.

Why the JNV reads this way

Every repeated blessing, curse, bodily affliction, agricultural loss, family horror, foreign domination, and exile image remains unabridged.

Vulgate character preserved

The anatomical ulcer, afterbirth, children born that hour, hanging life, and return to Egypt in fleets remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The attacking nation and historical realization are not identified inside the translation.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 28:68.

Terms carried forward

Holy people, name, blessing, curse, ceremony, soul, iron yoke, siege, scroll, and foreign gods recur.

Chapter 29

The chapter's movement

Moab’s covenant includes present and absent Israel, warns the self-blessing apostate, and interprets devastated land through abandoned pact.

Why the JNV reads this way

Covenant, pact, oath, understanding heart, gall, bitterness, drunken, thirsty, zeal, sulfur, salt, and hidden things remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

The root sprouts gall and bitterness, and “the drunken may consume the thirsty.”

Ambiguities preserved

Hidden and revealed things remain aphoristic rather than being assigned a complete doctrine of secrecy.

Corrections made in review

The closing quotation mark was restored at 29:29.

Terms carried forward

Horeb, Moab, pact, covenant, oath, peculiar people, idols, curse, scroll, and law recur.

Chapter 30

The chapter's movement

Penance and return bring gathering and heart-circumcision; the near word sets life and death before Israel.

Why the JNV reads this way

Penance of heart, hinges of heaven, captivity, whole soul, circumcise, near word, life, good, death, evil, and cling remain vivid.

Vulgate character preserved

The exiles may be drawn from the “hinges of heaven,” and the command is exceedingly near in mouth and heart.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between divine heart-circumcision and commanded return is preserved without systematization.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Blessing, curse, heart, soul, seed, mercy, ceremony, judgment, heaven, earth, and life continue.

Chapter 31

The chapter's movement

Moses strengthens Israel and Joshua, entrusts the law for public reading, receives the apostasy warning, and prepares the canticle as testimony.

Why the JNV reads this way

Go out and come in, lot, year of remission, tabernacle of testimony, fornicate, covenant, pact, canticle, testimony, and scroll remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

The song is memorized and sung by mouth so that no forgetfulness erases it from the seed’s mouth.

Ambiguities preserved

The book’s placement “beside” the ark is not conformed to another spatial description.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Joshua, ark of covenant, tabernacle of testimony, pillar of cloud, covenant, pact, witness, and stiff neck recur.

Chapter 32

The chapter's movement

Moses’ canticle invokes heaven and earth, praises God’s justice, recounts Israel’s care and rebellion, announces judgment, and ends in vengeance and mercy.

Why the JNV reads this way

Rain, dew, pupil, eagle, blood of grape, demons, hell, dragons, asps, vengeance, captivity, sanctify, and contradiction retain poetic force.

Vulgate character preserved

The lowest depths of hell, gall of dragons, venom of asps, and arrows drunk with blood remain unsoftened.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed phrases such as “naked head of the enemies” remain close to the Latin rather than conjecturally expanded.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Most High, Adam, Jacob, inheritance, savior, demons, judgment, libation, Waters of Contradiction, and Nebo continue.

Chapter 33

The chapter's movement

The man of God blesses Israel tribe by tribe, moving from Sinai’s fiery law to Israel’s final security and victory.

Why the JNV reads this way

Saints, fiery law, Most Upright, Perfection, Teaching, Nazirite, rhinoceros, tabernacles, victims of justice, and everlasting arms remain source-shaped.

Vulgate character preserved

Joseph bears rhinoceros horns, Dan flows from Bashan, and Asher’s shoe is iron and bronze.

Ambiguities preserved

The Most Upright and several compressed tribal images are not replaced with interpretive identities.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Sinai, Seir, Paran, law, inheritance, pact, incense, burnt offering, Nazirite, and blessing gather the Pentateuch’s language.

Chapter 34

The chapter's movement

Moses views the land, dies at God’s command, is buried by him, is mourned, and yields leadership to Spirit-filled Joshua.

Why the JNV reads this way

Servant, command, grave, teeth, mourning, spirit of wisdom, laying on of hands, face to face, signs, wonders, and mighty hand remain exact.

Vulgate character preserved

God is the subject who buries Moses, and Moses’ teeth had not moved at age 120.

Ambiguities preserved

The location of the unknown grave and means of burial are not supplied.

Corrections made in review

No required correction was found.

Terms carried forward

Moab, Nebo, Pisgah, Jericho, oath, seed, servant, Joshua, Spirit, signs, wonders, and Israel close Book Five.

Joshua — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

Moses’ death becomes Joshua’s commission: promise, courage, obedience, preparation, and the people’s pledge. Authority passes without suggesting that the Lord’s presence has changed.

Why the JNV reads this way

The repeated confortare et esto robustus is rendered with the recurring force “be strengthened and mighty.” Intelligas remains “understand,” keeping the Clementine emphasis rather than importing a different success formula.

Vulgate character preserved

Joshua is Moses’ minister before he later becomes the Lord’s servant. The land is “divided by lot,” and the eastern boundary faces the “sunrise.”

Ambiguities preserved

The people’s final “act manfully” keeps the gendered force of viriliter rather than diluting it into generic confidence.

Corrections made in review

At 1:1 the governed parenthetical “(YHWH)” was added after the first divine Dominus. It is transparent identification, not additional Scripture.

Terms carried forward

Lord, servant, minister, children of Israel, law, scroll, possession, lot, and rest govern later chapters.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

Rahab receives the explorers, conceals them, confesses Israel’s God, secures an oath for her house, and sends the men safely away. Fear moves from Canaan to a confession of divine sovereignty.

Why the JNV reads this way

Meretrix is the direct “prostitute,” while misericordia et veritas remains the paired “mercy and truth.” The compact pledge anima nostra sit pro vobis in mortem becomes “May our soul be for you in death.”

Vulgate character preserved

Rahab’s house “clung” to the wall, and the scarlet cord remains both concrete sign and oath-marker.

Ambiguities preserved

The men’s oath formula is not expanded into an explanatory promise beyond what the Latin states.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; the direct social and bodily vocabulary survived review.

Terms carried forward

Soul, mercy, truth, oath, sign, house, and rescue retain their concrete forms.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

Israel follows the ark, sanctifies itself, hears Joshua exalted, and crosses the Jordan on dry ground while the priests stand unmoved in its midst.

Why the JNV reads this way

The sacred object is consistently the “ark of the covenant.” Spatial instructions and distances remain explicit because geography is part of the action’s meaning.

Vulgate character preserved

The waters stand “like a mountain” near Zarethan, identified in the Latin as Adam’s city; that Vulgate gloss is retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The unusual river geography is presented without silently regularizing it from another textual tradition.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required after the agent, number, and boundary review.

Terms carried forward

Ark of the covenant, sanctify, priests, Jordan, dry ground, possession, and living God remain stable.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

Twelve stones become a bodily carried memorial; the crossing concludes, Joshua is magnified, and the stones teach future children what the Lord did.

Why the JNV reads this way

The men carry stones “upon your shoulders,” one for each tribe. Testimonium is “testimony,” preserving the legal and memorial resonance that returns later.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter keeps both stone actions: those taken from the Jordan and those Joshua sets in the riverbed.

Ambiguities preserved

The location and relation of the two stone groups are not collapsed into a harmonized reconstruction.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; the sustained instructional speech was checked across its verse boundaries.

Terms carried forward

Testimony, memorial, children, ark, priests, tribes, and the Lord’s mighty hand carry forward.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

Canaan’s kings lose heart; Israel is circumcised, healed, and freed from Egypt’s reproach; Passover is kept; manna ceases; and Joshua meets the prince of the Lord’s army.

Why the JNV reads this way

The concrete cultros lapideos is “stone knives.” The place-name is rendered through the Latin gloss as “Hill of the Foreskins,” without euphemism.

Vulgate character preserved

The commander identifies himself as princeps exercitus Domini. Joshua adores, and removes his singular “shoe,” as the Clementine wording states.

Ambiguities preserved

The mysterious man’s identity is not expanded beyond his own title, nor is Joshua’s act explained doctrinally inside the verse.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; explicit anatomy and singular number were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Passover, reproach, unleavened bread, manna, prince, army, adore, and holy ground remain source-controlled.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

Jericho is encircled in ritual silence, falls at the shout, is placed under anathema, and is burned; Rahab’s household lives, and Joshua pronounces a rebuilding curse.

Why the JNV reads this way

Anathema remains “anathema,” not a softer generic ban. Trumpets of Jubilees preserve the Vulgate’s title, while the repeated circuits keep their precise count.

Vulgate character preserved

The wall falls “from its foundations.” Destruction, consecrated metals, prostitution, fire, and the curse upon firstborn and last child remain unsoftened.

Ambiguities preserved

The relationship between anathema and consecrated metal is allowed to stand in the source’s own severe formulation.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; numerals, quotation spans, and the Rahab sequence were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Anathema, ark of the covenant, Jubilee, consecrated, treasury, oath, and curse govern later usage.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

Achan’s concealed theft becomes Israel’s defeat; Joshua laments; the Lord reveals corporate transgression; lots expose Achan; confession, recovery, and judgment follow.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Latin repeatedly speaks of Israel’s sin in collective terms before identifying one man. Pactum is “pact,” kept distinct from fœdus elsewhere.

Vulgate character preserved

The stolen scarlet cloak, silver, gold bar, buried objects, stoning, fire, and Valley of Achor remain physically exact.

Ambiguities preserved

The chapter’s movement between communal responsibility and individual guilt is not resolved by added explanation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; agents and pronouns in the discovery and execution sequence were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Pact, anathema, confess, glory, soul, crime, abomination, lot, and testimony retain their force.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

Israel takes Ai through ambush; Joshua raises the shield; the king is hanged; an altar is built on Ebal; and the law is copied and read to the whole assembly.

Why the JNV reads this way

The raised object is a “shield” for clypeus. The inscribed text is “a Deuteronomy of the law of Moses,” preserving the Vulgate’s own lexical link.

Vulgate character preserved

The altar’s unpolished stones are untouched by iron. The text distinguishes holocausts from peace victims, and includes women, children, and sojourners in the reading.

Ambiguities preserved

The relationship of the raised shield to the attack is narrated without importing a weapon-name from another tradition.

Corrections made in review

At 8:31 “burnt offerings” and “peace offerings” were corrected to “holocausts” and “peace victims,” restoring the Latin categories and Pentateuchal terminology.

Terms carried forward

Shield, ambush, spoil, holocaust, peace victim, altar, law, Deuteronomy, blessing, and curse carry forward.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

The Gibeonites disguise their nearness, obtain a covenant, are discovered, and survive under a sentence of perpetual service to the community and altar.

Why the JNV reads this way

Israel takes provisions but does not inquire “from the mouth of the Lord.” Fœdus is “covenant,” while the people’s flight to Israel is rendered as becoming confederates where the adjective requires it.

Vulgate character preserved

Old sacks, sewn wineskins, patched shoes, hard broken bread, woodcutting, and water-carrying remain concrete evidence and consequence.

Ambiguities preserved

The Gibeonites’ language of peace and servitude is not recast as a modern political treaty.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; covenant vocabulary and sustained speeches were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Covenant, oath, soul, curse, congregation, altar, servants, and “mouth of the Lord” remain visible.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

Five kings attack Gibeon; Israel answers its allies; heaven joins the battle; sun and moon stand still; the kings are exposed and killed; the southern campaign concludes.

Why the JNV reads this way

The heavenly command remains direct: “Sun, do not move.” The Lord “obeyed a human voice,” a startling Vulgate statement the English does not weaken.

Vulgate character preserved

The “Book of the Just,” stones from heaven, commanders’ feet upon royal necks, cave, trees, and sunset remain in sequence.

Ambiguities preserved

The astronomical event is not supplied with a physical theory, and the cited book is not renamed from another edition.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; names, kings, locations, and repeated conquest formulas were checked.

Terms carried forward

Confederates, Lord’s aid, Book of the Just, soul, anathema, and the Lord fighting for Israel remain consistent.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

A vast northern coalition gathers; Joshua attacks; horses are hamstrung, chariots burned, Hazor destroyed, Anakim removed, and the land rests.

Why the JNV reads this way

The commands retain their physical verbs. The hardening is the Lord’s sententia, rendered “sentence,” and the enemies “deserve no clemency,” as the Latin explicitly states.

Vulgate character preserved

The multitude is like seashore sand, Hazor is the ancient head of the kingdoms, and the remnant of Anak remains only in Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod.

Ambiguities preserved

The severe causal and moral language of 11:20 is neither defended nor softened inside the reader text.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; agency in the hardening and destruction sequence was explicitly rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Sentence, clemency, hamstring, chariot, anathema, possession, portions, tribes, and rest carry forward.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

The conquest pauses to name the defeated kingdoms: first Moses’ two kings east of the Jordan, then Joshua’s thirty-one kings west of it.

Why the JNV reads this way

The register is kept repetitive because its repeated “king … one” is the chapter’s formal architecture and arithmetic testimony.

Vulgate character preserved

The Salt Sea is also named the Sea of the Wilderness, and the Slopes of Pisgah remain a concrete landmark.

Ambiguities preserved

Place-name forms are normalized only where identity is secure; no missing narrative is invented between the names.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; all thirty-one western kings and the two eastern kingdoms were counted and keyed.

Terms carried forward

King, kingdom, possession, borders, torrent, wilderness, sunrise, and Great Sea retain their established forms.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

The Lord names the unconquered territory, commands its division, and the narrator recites the eastern possessions of Reuben, Gad, and half-Manasseh, with Levi’s different inheritance.

Why the JNV reads this way

Possessio is “possession” and hæreditas “inheritance.” These related but distinct terms structure both tribal land and Levi’s relation to God.

Vulgate character preserved

The source calls Balaam a “soothsayer.” It first names the Lord’s sacrifices and victims as Levi’s inheritance, then the Lord God of Israel himself as Levi’s possession.

Ambiguities preserved

The compressed boundary syntax and the relationship between cities, villages, kingdoms, and tribal shares are clarified only grammatically, not reconstructed.

Corrections made in review

A closing quotation mark was added at 13:7, correctly ending the Lord’s command before the Transjordan recital begins.

Terms carried forward

Possession, inheritance, sacrifice, victim, lot, kindred, plains, and eastern side remain controlled terms.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

The western land is distributed by lot; Caleb recalls forty-five years of faithful endurance, asks for the mountain, receives Hebron, and the land rests from battle.

Why the JNV reads this way

Caleb’s report is what “appeared true” to him, and the other explorers “dissolved the heart” of the people. These preserve the Latin’s concrete descriptions.

Vulgate character preserved

Caleb is eighty-five yet retains strength for fighting and walking. The Clementine text's "Adam, the greatest among the Anakim, lay there" remains unchanged in substance.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult 14:15 reading is not silently corrected to Arba or explained as though the Latin were unambiguous.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; the exceptional Adam reading was checked against the frozen source and deliberately retained.

Terms carried forward

Lot, possession, inheritance, follow the Lord, strength, mountain, Anakim, Hebron, and rest carry forward.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

Judah's borders are traced, Caleb and Othniel take their cities, Achsah asks for watered land, and the inheritance unfolds through extensive regional city lists before ending with Jerusalem's Jebusites.

Why the JNV reads this way

Directional verbs—ascends, descends, passes, circles, bends, reaches—remain visible because the boundary is an enacted line. Vulgate glosses are translated where supplied.

Vulgate character preserved

Kiriath-jearim is the "City of Forests," Kiriath-sepher the "City of Letters," Achsah sighs upon the donkey, and asks for upper and lower watered ground.

Ambiguities preserved

Uncertain ancient place-name identifications are not made artificially exact. The stated city totals remain the source's totals.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; all sixty-three verse keys, directional transitions, glosses, and totals were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Border, possession, kindred, village, city, fountain, torrent, wilderness, and Vulgate place-name glosses remain consistent.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

Joseph's lot is traced, then Ephraim's boundary and enclave cities are named; the chapter closes with the Canaanite of Gezer surviving as a tributary.

Why the JNV reads this way

The compact survey language is kept linear. "Cities set apart" expresses their placement inside Manasseh without adding a political theory.

Vulgate character preserved

The route reaches the Salt Sea through the Valley of Reeds, preserving the Clementine geographical wording.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between Joseph’s general allotment and Ephraim’s particular border remains as compressed as the source permits.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; geography and the final tributary clause were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Lot, possession, kindred, borders, Salt Sea, tribe, village, and tributary carry forward.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

Manasseh’s inheritance includes Zelophehad’s daughters; tribal borders and enclaves follow; Joseph’s children protest their share and are commanded to clear mountain forest and confront iron chariots.

Why the JNV reads this way

The daughters receive possession “in the midst of” their father’s brothers. The “ten measured portions” preserves funiculi, the surveying image behind allotment.

Vulgate character preserved

The Canaanites first remain, then become tributaries. Joshua answers fear of iron chariots with the work of cutting, clearing, and advancing.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult relation of Tappuah’s land, city, and tribal border is not made more definite than the Latin.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; female heirs, ten portions, enclave cities, and agent shifts were checked.

Terms carried forward

Inheritance, possession, measured portion, kindred, tributary, iron chariot, strength, and overthrow remain stable.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

The tabernacle of the testimony is fixed at Shiloh; Joshua rebukes seven idle tribes, commissions a written land survey, casts lots before the Lord, and records Benjamin’s inheritance.

Why the JNV reads this way

Joshua asks why they “waste away in idleness,” preserving the bodily force of marcetis ignavia. The survey is written “in a scroll.”

Vulgate character preserved

The Levites’ inheritance is the Lord’s priesthood. Gehenna is explicitly glossed as the Valley of Hinnom, and En-shemesh as the Fountain of the Sun.

Ambiguities preserved

The border’s turns and overlapping ancient place-names remain a source-faithful itinerary rather than a speculative modern map.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; three men per tribe, seven divisions, city totals, and directional clauses were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Tabernacle of the testimony, priesthood, inheritance, lot, scroll, survey, Fountain of the Sun, and Gehenna carry forward.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

The remaining six tribal lots are assigned through detailed cities and borders. Israel then gives Joshua Timnath-serah, and the division concludes before the Lord at Shiloh.

Why the JNV reads this way

Each tribal formula retains lot, kindred or family, possession or inheritance, cities, and villages as the Latin varies them.

Vulgate character preserved

Ir-shemesh receives the gloss “City of the Sun.” Dan’s conquest of Leshem and its renaming remain within the allotment record.

Ambiguities preserved

Ancient names and transmitted totals are presented without pretending that every modern identification is certain.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; all fifty-one verses, six lots, stated totals, and the closing Shiloh scene were checked.

Terms carried forward

Lot, inheritance, possession, measured portion, kindred, family, city, village, and tabernacle of the testimony remain differentiated.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

The Lord establishes cities for the unintentional slayer: flight, testimony at the gate, protection from the blood-avenger, judgment, residence, and eventual return are ordered.

Why the JNV reads this way

The heading concept is literally “cities of fugitives.” The act is to “strike a soul unknowingly,” retaining anima and the absence of prior enmity.

Vulgate character preserved

The accused speaks things that establish innocence, stands before judgment, gives an account, and remains until the high priest dies.

Ambiguities preserved

The Vulgate alternates “cities of fugitives” with “cities of refuge”; the JNV preserves both instead of flattening them.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; legal sequence, agency, time expressions, and six city names were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Soul, cities of fugitives, cities of refuge, avenger of blood, judgment, high priest, sojourner, and cause carry forward.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

Levi’s families receive cities and suburbs from the tribal possessions. The register resolves into a declaration that the Lord gave Israel land, peace, victory, and every promised word in deed.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Suburbs” preserves suburbana as pasture-space attached to cities. Kohath’s and Merari’s “lower rank” retains inferioris gradus without inventing an office.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter distinguishes fields and villages given to Caleb from Hebron and its suburbs given to Aaron’s children.

Ambiguities preserved

At 21:36 the frozen Clementine text names Bezer, Misor, Jazer, Jethson, and Mephaath, then states “four cities.” Both the five names and transmitted total are preserved rather than silently emended.

Corrections made in review

No lexical correction was required. The exceptional 21:36 enumeration was escalated, verified against the source bytes, and retained with this record.

Terms carried forward

Levite, priest, city of refuge, suburb, possession, family, kindred, peace, dominion, promise, and deed remain stable.

Chapter 22

The chapter's movement

The eastern tribes are blessed and dismissed, build an immense altar, nearly provoke civil war, explain its witness-purpose, and restore peace through careful inquiry.

Why the JNV reads this way

Joshua commands service with all heart and soul. The disputed altar is “sacrilegious” in the accusation and a “testimony” in the builders’ defense.

Vulgate character preserved

Holocausts, sacrifice, victims, and peace offerings remain distinct. The altar is of “immeasurable magnitude,” and its full name declares, “Our Testimony That the Lord Himself Is God.”

Ambiguities preserved

The altar’s exact physical form is not supplied; the chapter’s tension depends on competing interpretations of one visible act.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; speaker continuity through the long accusation and defense was checked boundary by boundary.

Terms carried forward

Soul, commandment, law, cling, altar, sacrilegious, holocaust, sacrifice, victim, peace offering, testimony, and transgression carry forward.

Chapter 23

The chapter's movement

An aged Joshua gathers Israel’s leaders, recalls the Lord’s warfare and promises, commands fidelity, and warns that the same certainty governing blessing also governs threatened judgment.

Why the JNV reads this way

The nation must not turn right or left, must cling to the Lord, and must love him. Joshua enters “the way of all the earth,” preserving the Vulgate’s image for death.

Vulgate character preserved

Foreign nations can become pit, snare, side-obstacle, and “stakes in your eyes.” The excellent land can be lost as surely as it was given.

Ambiguities preserved

The warning’s vivid instruments are not converted into an abstract statement about difficulty or influence.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; promise/threat symmetry and the distinction between law, commandments, and pact were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Cling, love, scroll of the law, adore, promise, excellent land, strange gods, pact, and fury remain controlled terms.

Chapter 24

The chapter's movement

At Shechem the Lord rehearses salvation from Abraham through conquest; Joshua demands a choice; Israel repeatedly chooses service; covenant, written record, stone witness, dismissals, deaths, and burials close the book.

Why the JNV reads this way

The history retains first-person divine agency: “I took,” “I gave,” “I sent,” and “I delivered.” Joshua “struck a covenant,” matching the concrete action of percussit fœdus.

Vulgate character preserved

The Lord sends hornets, not Israel’s sword or bow. The stone “has heard” the words. Joseph’s field costs “one hundred young ewes,” retaining the Clementine unit rather than substituting another.

Ambiguities preserved

Joshua’s “You will not be able to serve the Lord” is left in deliberate tension with the people’s repeated pledge; no explanatory qualification is inserted.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required; divine and human speakers, covenant formulas, the three burials, age 110, and the field-price were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Serve, fear, perfect heart, strange gods, covenant, commandments, judgments, scroll of the law, testimony, sanctuary, servant of the Lord, and possession govern the historical books ahead.

Judges — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

After Joshua, Judah leads an incomplete conquest: early victories and reciprocal judgment give way to repeated tribal failures, accommodation, tribute, and confinement.

Why the JNV reads this way

The recurring non delevit is kept as “did not destroy,” while tributarius remains “tributary.” This repetition exposes the chapter’s accumulating pattern.

Vulgate character preserved

Adoni-bezek’s extremities are cut off; Kiriath-sepher is the “City of Letters”; Hormah means “Anathema”; Mount Heres is interpreted “earthen”; the valley has scythed chariots.

Ambiguities preserved

The Vulgate’s calf, thigh, borders, and ancient place-name relations are not conformed to a modern map or another text.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; names, glosses, city sequences, and the descending pattern of non-conquest were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Lord, lot, possession, mercy, anathema, tributary, children of Israel, and “to the present day” remain stable.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

The angel indicts Israel at the Place of Weeping; Joshua’s generation passes; the book’s governing cycle of apostasy, oppression, judges, mercy, relapse, and testing is established.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Lord’s pactum is “pact,” while the forbidden agreement with inhabitants is fœdus, “covenant.” The lexical distinction is crucial within one speech.

Vulgate character preserved

Israel “fornicates” with strange gods, mercy is moved, the afflicted groan, and each relapse becomes “far worse.”

Ambiguities preserved

Divine testing and the survival of hostile nations are allowed to stand in the source’s causal tension without added justification.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; the sustained divine speeches and Joshua’s burial link were checked against chapter boundaries.

Terms carried forward

Pact, covenant, victims, mercy, judge, deliver, adore, strange gods, fury, and test govern the book’s cycle.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

Remaining nations train and test Israel; Othniel delivers by the Spirit; relapse brings Eglon; Ehud’s concealed violence opens deliverance; Shamgar follows.

Why the JNV reads this way

Othniel and Ehud are salvatores, “saviors.” Ehud “used either hand as his right,” preserving the Clementine description rather than reducing it to one-handedness.

Vulgate character preserved

The sword’s hilt follows its blade into Eglon’s fat; excrement bursts through nature’s secret passages; servants imagine he is purging his bowels.

Ambiguities preserved

The source’s shifting title “king of Mesopotamia” and “king of Syria” is retained without harmonization.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; weapon dimensions, bodily detail, agents, and periods of eight, eighteen, forty, and eighty years were verified.

Terms carried forward

Savior, Spirit of the Lord, judge, City of Palms, strong drink, trumpet, deliver, humble, and rest carry forward.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

Deborah judges and summons Barak; Sisera’s chariots fall; the promised honor passes to Jael, who receives, shelters, and kills him; Jabin is steadily destroyed.

Why the JNV reads this way

Deborah remains “a prophetess and wife of Lapidoth, [who] judged.” The victory is not merely won by a woman; Sisera is “delivered into the hand of a woman.”

Vulgate character preserved

Nine hundred scythed chariots, the torrent Kishon, milk in place of water, the tent peg through brain to ground, and sleep joined to death remain concrete.

Ambiguities preserved

The angelic or prophetic authority behind Deborah’s command is not expanded beyond the stated Lord God of Israel.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; female agency, military commands, and the transition from battle to tent were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Prophetess, judge, commander, victory, hand, torrent, peace, tent, and the Lord delivering remain stable.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

Deborah and Barak’s song moves from willing souls and divine march, through tribal response and cosmic battle, to Jael’s blessing, Sisera’s death, his mother’s false hope, and rest.

Why the JNV reads this way

Poetic repetition, vocatives, commands, and abrupt perspective changes remain visible. Justitiæ is “justices,” and clementia “clemency,” preserving distinct Vulgate nouns.

Vulgate character preserved

The Lord chooses new wars; paths rest; stars fight in their courses; Kishon drags corpses; Jael seeks a wound-place; Sisera’s mother imagines beautiful women and colored spoil.

Ambiguities preserved

Obscure tribal lines and “the horses’ hoofs fell away” remain poetic rather than being resolved through another textual tradition.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; every strophe, bracketed poetic unit, speaker shift, and parallel line was re-read aloud.

Terms carried forward

Soul, bless, Lord God of Israel, justice, clemency, mother in Israel, curse, love, sun, and rest carry forward.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

Midian reduces Israel to caves and scarcity; a prophet recalls disobedience; the angel commissions doubtful Gideon; fire confirms the call; Baal’s altar falls; the Spirit clothes Gideon; two fleece signs follow.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Spirit “clothed Gideon” for induit, keeping the concrete Vulgate image. Sacrifice and holocaust remain distinct actions and offerings.

Vulgate character preserved

Grain is cleaned in a winepress, broth is poured upon rock, fire ascends from stone, the altar is “The Lord’s Peace,” and fleece yields a basin of dew.

Ambiguities preserved

The movement between “angel of the Lord” and “the Lord” is preserved without inserting an identity explanation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; divine speakers, altar sequence, seven-year bull, ten servants, and paired fleece signs were verified.

Terms carried forward

House of servitude, prophet, angel of the Lord, grace, sign, sacrifice, holocaust, altar, peace, and Spirit remain controlled.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

The Lord reduces Gideon’s army to three hundred, confirms victory through an enemy dream, and turns trumpets, hidden lamps, broken jars, and mutual slaughter into Midian’s collapse.

Why the JNV reads this way

The men are separated by lapping “as dogs” versus drinking with bent knee. The dream object is the Vulgate’s barley subcinericius panis, a hearth-cake.

Vulgate character preserved

Israel must not say, “I was delivered by my own strength.” Gideon adores after the interpretation; the cry names both the Lord and Gideon.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise mechanics of hand-to-mouth lapping are not supplemented beyond the Latin’s description.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; troop reductions, three companies, watches, handed objects, flight path, and severed heads were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Strength, deliver, test, adore, trumpet, lamp, jar, sword, ambush, and hand remain stable.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

Gideon pacifies Ephraim, pursues exhausted, punishes Succoth and Penuel, kills Midian’s kings, refuses hereditary rule, then fashions the ephod that ruins his house; Israel relapses after his death.

Why the JNV reads this way

Ephraim’s angry spirit “rested,” matching the bodily image. Gideon “grinds and crushes” Succoth’s men with thorns, retaining the two violent verbs.

Vulgate character preserved

Palms of royal hands, royal camel bosses, seventeen hundred gold shekels, seventy sons from Gideon’s thigh, concubine, fornication, and Baal covenant remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The ephod’s exact form and Gideon’s motive are not explained beyond the source; its ruinous effect is allowed to judge the act.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; numbers, kinship, rule language, spoil inventory, and covenant terminology were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Spirit, mercy, covenant, rule, Lord, ephod, fornicate, concubine, good old age, and rest carry forward.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

Abimelech purchases followers, murders his brothers, becomes king, receives Jotham’s tree-curse, loses Shechem through an evil spirit, destroys the city and towers, and dies beneath a woman’s millstone.

Why the JNV reads this way

Jotham’s fable keeps its repeated promotion formula. Spiritum pessimum is “a most evil spirit,” preserving the superlative and the Lord’s agency.

Vulgate character preserved

Olive richness serves gods and men; wine gladdens God and men; bramble offers shadow; Gaal sees the earth’s navel; salt is scattered; smoke and fire kill one thousand; the millstone shatters Abimelech’s brain.

Ambiguities preserved

The theological relation between the evil spirit, human treachery, and repayment is narrated without an inserted theory.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; seventy brothers, four ambushes, three companies, fire imagery, and final recompense were checked.

Terms carried forward

King, rule, anoint, soul, curse, most evil spirit, covenant, shrine, repay, and bloodshed remain stable.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

Tola and Jair judge; Israel joins new sins to old; oppression returns; confession meets divine refusal; idols are cast away; the Lord grieves; Gilead seeks a leader.

Why the JNV reads this way

The opening sin formula expands: peccatis veteribus jungentes nova becomes “joining new sins to the old.” The Lord “grieved over their miseries,” retaining doluit.

Vulgate character preserved

Thirty sons ride thirty young donkeys and rule thirty Towns of Jair. Israel asks the Lord to repay whatever pleases him.

Ambiguities preserved

The movement from the Lord’s refusal to his grief is not resolved by added dialogue or doctrinal explanation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; judges’ years, idol lists, eighteen-year oppression, confession, and divine speech were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Judge, prince, idols, serve, worship, strange gods, sin, anguish, deliver, misery, and leader carry forward.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

Rejected Jephthah becomes Gilead’s prince, argues Israel’s historical claim, receives the Spirit, vows a holocaust, defeats Ammon, meets his only daughter, fulfills the vow, and establishes mourning.

Why the JNV reads this way

Jephthah is directly “son of a prostitute woman.” His vow says whoever first emerges, “I shall offer him as a holocaust,” and 11:39 says he did as vowed; no alternate resolution is imported.

Vulgate character preserved

The Chemosh argument, three hundred years, unjust wars, the Lord as present judge, “only-begotten daughter,” opened mouth, virginity lament, and four annual days remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

The masculine pronoun within the vow remains natural English without predetermining who emerges; the narrative’s moral silence is not filled editorially inside Scripture.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; the long diplomatic history, land boundaries, Spirit transition, vow, and daughter’s response were reviewed verse by verse.

Terms carried forward

Prostitute, heir, prince, mediator, witness, possession, judge, Spirit of the Lord, vow, holocaust, vengeance, victory, and virginity carry forward.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

Ephraim threatens Jephthah, Gilead defeats Ephraim, pronunciation exposes fugitives at the Jordan, and three brief judges succeed Jephthah.

Why the JNV reads this way

Jephthah “placed my soul in my hands,” preserving the risk-image. Scibboleth and Sibboleth remain distinct, followed by the Vulgate gloss “Ear of Grain.”

Vulgate character preserved

Failed pronunciation leads immediately to throat-cutting at the crossing; forty-two thousand fall. Sons, daughters, grandsons, and young donkeys remain numerically explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The source’s compressed account of Gilead as an Ephraimite “fugitive” is not supplied with a reconstructed tribal insult.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; quotation, pronunciation, kinship, judicial periods, and burial places were verified.

Terms carried forward

Soul, battle, leader, judge, Shibboleth, Ear of Grain, tribe, and years of judgment remain stable.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

An angel announces Samson to a barren woman, repeats the Nazirite commands to Manoah, refuses food, receives a holocaust to the Lord, ascends in flame, and leaves the promised child under blessing and Spirit.

Why the JNV reads this way

Nazaræus Dei is “Nazirite of God.” The angel’s name mirabile is “Wonderful,” preserving the form of the answer rather than reducing it to mere secrecy.

Vulgate character preserved

Wine, strong drink, uncleanness, razor, womb, young goat, libations, flame, prone fall, and “Dying we shall die” remain concrete.

Ambiguities preserved

The movement from “man of God” to “angel of God,” “angel of the Lord,” and seeing “God” is not resolved by editorial identification inside the verse.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; maternal commands, angelic speeches, offering sequence, and identity language were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Angel of the Lord, Nazirite, strong drink, unclean, holocaust, libation, Wonderful, Spirit of the Lord, and blessing carry forward.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

Samson chooses a Philistine woman as the Lord seeks an occasion; the Spirit empowers him against a lion; honey produces a riddle; coercion reveals it; violence pays the wager; the marriage transfers to another.

Why the JNV reads this way

The matter “was done by the Lord,” directly rendering res a Domino fieret. The Spirit “rushed upon” Samson, distinguishing irruit from other Spirit constructions.

Vulgate character preserved

The honey lies in the lion’s mouth; the riddle is a “proposition”; thirty linen garments and tunics are wagered; the answer accuses them of plowing with Samson’s heifer.

Ambiguities preserved

The divine occasion and Samson’s desire are narrated together without an inserted moral reconciliation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; seven-day feast, three-day failure, seventh-day answer, riddles, and garments were verified.

Terms carried forward

Uncircumcised, Spirit of the Lord, feast, riddle, proposition, honey, strength, anger, and wedding companion carry forward.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

Denied his wife, Samson burns Philistine agriculture, retaliates for retaliation, is bound by Judah, breaks free by the Spirit, kills with a jawbone, sings, thirsts, receives water, and judges.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Vulgate’s foxes are retained. The difficult suram femori imponerent remains “placed calf upon thigh,” rather than being replaced by an idiom from another textual tradition.

Vulgate character preserved

Lehi is “Jawbone”; the weapon is explicitly “jawbone—that is, mandible”; the Lord opens a molar tooth in it; the fountain receives its full invocation-name.

Ambiguities preserved

The anatomy and hydrology of the jawbone miracle are not rationalized or relocated.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; three hundred foxes, two ropes, three thousand Judahites, one thousand deaths, place-name glosses, and twenty years were checked.

Terms carried forward

Vengeance, Spirit of the Lord, Jawbone, mandible, servant, salvation, victory, soul/spirit, fountain, and judge remain stable.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

Samson escapes Gaza’s gate, loves Delilah, yields the secret of his consecration, loses strength and sight, is displayed before Dagon, prays for one vengeance, and dies destroying the temple.

Why the JNV reads this way

Delilah says Samson’s animus is not with her, while his anima later fails; the English preserves soul-language without flattening every interior noun. “Two lights” renders his lost eyes poetically as the Latin does.

Vulgate character preserved

Prostitute, sinew cords, chamber ambushers, seven locks, barber, bosom, eyes torn out, grinding, magnificent victims, playing, and soul dying with Philistines remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between hair, Nazirite identity, strength, and the Lord’s withdrawal is narrated in sequence without a mechanical explanation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; repeated tests, payment, hair sequence, pillars, three thousand spectators, and final body count were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Prostitute, soul, Nazirite, consecrated to God, Lord’s withdrawal, victim, invoke, vengeance, strength, and judge carry forward.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

Micah returns cursed silver, his mother dedicates it to the Lord for an idol, a household priesthood forms, and a wandering Levite is hired as parent and priest under the first no-king refrain.

Why the JNV reads this way

The distinct sculptile and conflatile remain “graven” and “molten” things. The Vulgate itself glosses theraphim as “a priestly garment and idols,” which the JNV retains.

Vulgate character preserved

The hand is “filled” to constitute a priest; the Levite is offered a double garment and sustenance; Micah expects divine good from possessing him.

Ambiguities preserved

The contradictory dedication of idolatry to the Lord is not smoothed into a coherent cultic practice.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; silver totals, object distinctions, priestly vocabulary, and refrain wording were checked.

Terms carried forward

Consecrate, vow, Lord, graven thing, molten thing, ephod, teraphim, priest, fill the hand, and no king remain stable.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

Dan’s explorers receive a priestly assurance, identify defenseless Laish, recruit six hundred men, steal Micah’s cult and priest, destroy Laish, rename it Dan, and establish an enduring priesthood and idol.

Why the JNV reads this way

Dominus respicit viam vestram is “The Lord regards your way,” avoiding a stronger guarantee than the Latin. The inventory retains ephod, teraphim, graven thing, molten thing, and idols separately.

Vulgate character preserved

The Danites tell the priest to place his finger upon his mouth; children, beasts, and valuables shield the march; Micah’s gods are things he made; Laish has no human fellowship or business.

Ambiguities preserved

Jonathan remains “son of Gershom, son of Moses,” the Clementine genealogy, without harmonization to another reading.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; five explorers, six hundred warriors, object sequence, genealogy, Shiloh duration, and repeated no-king statement were verified.

Terms carried forward

Possession, lot, consult the Lord, priest, father, ephod, teraphim, idol, house of God, captivity, and no king carry forward.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

A Levite retrieves his estranged wife, delays at Bethlehem, refuses foreign Jebus, finds no hospitality in Israelite Gibeah, accepts an Ephraimite’s shelter, and meets attempted assault, female substitution, all-night abuse, death, dismemberment, and national summons.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Latin alternates uxor and concubina; the English preserves “wife” and “concubine” where each appears. Abutamur, humilietis, libidinem, and abusi remain explicit but restrained.

Vulgate character preserved

“Children of Belial” receives the gloss “Without a Yoke.” The proposed act upon the man is called a crime against nature; the corpse is cut with its bones into twelve parts.

Ambiguities preserved

The woman “left” her husband in the Clementine text; no motive or alternate accusation is imported.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; hospitality dialogue, speaker sequence, wife/concubine alternation, abuse, death recognition, and twelve-part dispatch were rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Wife, concubine, sojourner, lodging, peace, children of Belial, humiliation, lust, crime against nature, corpse, and judgment remain source-controlled.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

Israel assembles as one, hears the Levite, demands Gibeah’s offenders, fights Benjamin through two catastrophic defeats, fasts and offers, receives final assurance, wins by ambush, and nearly annihilates the tribe.

Why the JNV reads this way

The ecclesia populi Dei is the “assembly of the people of God.” “Ark of the covenant of God” preserves arca fœderis Dei and the established covenant ruling.

Vulgate character preserved

Seven hundred ambidextrous slingers can strike a hair; Phinehas serves at the house; holocausts and peace victims precede the third consultation; a smoke-column signals the ambush.

Ambiguities preserved

The transmitted totals—25,100 killed in one statement and 25,000 in the summary—remain distinct; they are not silently reconciled.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; troop and casualty totals, three consultations, two defeats, third-day ambush, directions, and six hundred survivors were checked.

Terms carried forward

Assembly, people of God, lot, evil, house of God, holocaust, peace victim, ark of the covenant, overseer, ambush, and remnant carry forward.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

Israel’s oath creates a tribal extinction crisis; grief and penance produce the slaughter of Jabesh-gilead, allocation of surviving virgins, sanctioned seizure at Shiloh’s dances, tribal restoration, and the final no-king indictment.

Why the JNV reads this way

Pœnitentia is “penance,” following the canonical JNV ruling. The argument over the seized women retains the strange “right of those fighting and victorious” rather than replacing it with moral explanation.

Vulgate character preserved

Holocausts and peace victims accompany grief; males and women who knew men are killed; four hundred virgins are preserved; the daughters of Shiloh lead dances and are seized from vineyards.

Ambiguities preserved

The elders’ legal evasion and attribution of sin remain as stated; the reader text adds neither approval nor exculpation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; oath, curse, numbers, geography of Shiloh, seizure instructions, and final refrain were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Oath, holocaust, peace victim, penance, tribe, brother, curse, solemnity, possession, family, no king, and “appeared right to himself” govern the close.

Ruth — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

Famine drives one household from Bethlehem to Moab; death leaves Naomi and her daughters-in-law bereaved; return separates Orpah and Ruth; Ruth pledges herself; Naomi returns full of bitterness as barley harvest begins.

Why the JNV reads this way

The opening retains “in the days of one judge, when judges presided,” the Clementine formulation. Ruth “clung” to Naomi and resolved with a “steadfast soul,” preserving the force of adhæsit and obstinato animo.

Vulgate character preserved

Naomi speaks of sons in her womb, puberty, old age, the Lord’s hand, death, burial, the Almighty, fullness, emptiness, humiliation, and affliction. Naomi and Mara receive the Latin’s Beautiful/Bitter glosses.

Ambiguities preserved

Ruth’s oath is not reduced to sentiment; it binds people, God, land of death, burial, and separation by death.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required in this chapter; names, ten years, four months, speakers, and oath sequence were verified.

Terms carried forward

Sojourn, mercy, rest, cling, soul, Lord, Almighty, bitterness, Bethlehem, and harvest remain stable.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

Ruth seeks permission to glean, happens upon Boaz’s field, receives protection, water, blessing, food, abundance, and deliberate generosity, then learns from Naomi that Boaz is near kin.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Latin distinguishes a “blood relative” from later “near kinsman” vocabulary. Grace, clemency, mercy, and blessing remain separately visible.

Vulgate character preserved

Ruth gathers behind the reapers’ backs, adores upon the ground, flees beneath God’s wings, dips bread in vinegar, eats parched grain, preserves remnants, and beats out an ephah glossed as three measures.

Ambiguities preserved

“Father of a household” preserves paterfamilias rather than replacing the agrarian household relation with a modern business title.

Corrections made in review

At 2:1 an initial misreading of viro Elimelech consanguineus was corrected to “the man Elimelech had a blood relative,” restoring the Latin’s relationship.

Terms carried forward

Blood relative, near kinsman, grace, clemency, mercy, wings, maidservant, glean, ephah, barley, wheat, and granary carry forward.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

Naomi seeks Ruth’s rest, directs her to the threshing floor, and Ruth lies at Boaz’s feet; she asks for his cloak and kinship protection; Boaz affirms her virtue, acknowledges a nearer kinsman, and sends her home with six measures.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Latin explicitly speaks of uncovering Boaz’s cloak at the part of his feet, then Ruth asks him to spread the cloak over her. These linked cloak actions are retained without importing different anatomy.

Vulgate character preserved

Ruth washes, anoints, dresses, comes secretly, casts herself down, and lies at his feet. Boaz calls her latter action “mercy” and all the gate knows her as a “woman of virtue.”

Ambiguities preserved

The scene’s intimacy and legal purpose are allowed to coexist without suggestive additions or sanitizing paraphrase.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; cloak, feet, kinship right, oath, six measures, and return-empty language were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Rest, anoint, threshing floor, cloak, feet, handmaid, near kinsman, right of kinship, mercy, virtue, oath, and measure carry forward.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

At the gate Boaz convenes elders, offers the nearer kinsman land and Ruth, receives his yielded right through the shoe testimony, takes Ruth, raises the dead man’s name, and enters the Perez-to-David genealogy through Obed.

Why the JNV reads this way

The legal vocabulary remains concrete: possess, buy, kinship right, posterity, privilege, yield, concession, testimony, inheritance, and witnesses. No single imported technical title replaces these Latin relations.

Vulgate character preserved

The man removes and gives his shoe; Rachel and Leah built Israel’s house; Tamar bore Perez to Judah; the Lord grants conception; Ruth is better than seven sons; Naomi places Obed in her bosom as nurse and bearer.

Ambiguities preserved

“A son has been born to Naomi” remains the women’s own claim, not an altered genealogical statement.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required; ten elders, shoe transfer, witness formulas, names, inheritance, conception, and every genealogical link were checked.

Terms carried forward

Gate, elders, near kinsman, inheritance, posterity, shoe, testimony, witness, seed, virtue, soul, nurse, bearer, generations, and begot govern later use.

First Samuel — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

Elkanah’s divided household ascends repeatedly to Shiloh; Hannah bears barrenness, rivalry, and grief; she pours out her soul, vows a son, is misjudged by Eli, receives peace, conceives Samuel, and presents the weaned child to the Lord.

Why the JNV reads this way

The first divine Dominus is transparently identified as “the Lord (YHWH)” under the canonical rule. Hannah asks for sexum virilem, “male sex,” a bodily directness not reduced to the smoother “a son.” Her vow says no razor shall “ascend” upon his head, preserving the Latin motion.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter retains the sorrowful portion, the Lord closing the womb, wine in which Eli thinks Hannah is “soaked,” her poured-out soul, an amphora of wine, three calves and measures, lending Samuel to the Lord, and the repeated act of adoration.

Ambiguities preserved

Elkanah’s “one portion sorrowfully” remains attached to the difficult tristis wording without inventing a double portion from another textual tradition. Hannah’s final “lent” wordplay remains reciprocal and somewhat strange.

Corrections made in review

No semantic correction was required. The first divine-title marker, quantities, family relations, vow sequence, direct-speech boundaries, and 28 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Lord, Lord of hosts, soul, handmaid, vow, immolate, victim, adore, remember, temple, priest, grace, and lent carry forward.

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

Hannah’s prayer moves from personal exaltation through divine reversal to kingship and the Lord’s christ. Eli’s sons violate sacrifice and women; Samuel ministers and grows; Eli rebukes weakly; a man of God announces judgment and a faithful priest.

Why the JNV reads this way

Hannah’s inferos is “the realm of the dead,” the canonical JNV form. Christus remains lower-case “christ,” exposing the Vulgate’s anointed vocabulary before David. Sacrificial nouns remain victim, sacrifice, gifts, and first portions rather than one generic offering.

Vulgate character preserved

The Lord kills and gives life, raises the poor from dust and dung, owns the hinges of the earth, thunders in heaven, and exalts his christ’s horn. The sons’ sexual abuse, fork, boiling flesh, raw flesh, fat, and kicked-away victim remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The prayer’s movement from Hannah to a king and christ is not explained by an inserted historical or messianic gloss. “The hinges of the earth” remains the Vulgate image rather than being normalized to pillars or foundations.

Corrections made in review

At 2:6 “hell” was corrected to “the realm of the dead,” restoring the canonical death-language policy and avoiding an added punitive implication. All cross-verse syntax at 2:12–13 was rechecked.

Terms carried forward

Holy, rock, realm of the dead, poor, sterile, hinges, king, christ, Belial, priest, ephod, victim, sacrifice, faithful house, heart, and soul govern later use.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

In an age when the Lord’s word is precious and vision is not manifest, the boy Samuel repeatedly hears a call, Eli finally discerns its source, Samuel listens, receives judgment against Eli’s house, reports everything, and is established as the Lord’s prophet.

Why the JNV reads this way

“Precious” retains pretiosus, and “not manifest” retains the absence expressed by manifesta. Samuel’s answer remains “Speak, Lord, for your servant hears,” preserving hearing as obedient attention rather than substituting “listens.”

Vulgate character preserved

The lamp of God has not yet gone out; ears “ring” at the announced judgment; iniquity is not expiated by victims and gifts; no word of Samuel falls to the ground; and the Lord continues appearing in Shiloh.

Ambiguities preserved

The first calls are narrated without explaining whether Samuel hears an external voice in any modern psychological sense. “From one end of it to the other” remains the idiom attached to ringing ears.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The repeated-call sequence, Eli/Samuel speakers, unfinished 3:8 boundary, house judgment, and 21 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Word of the Lord, vision, lamp of God, ark, temple, servant, hear, call, prophet, judgment, iniquity, expiate, victim, gift, and faithful carry forward.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

Israel carries the ark into battle as though its presence guarantees rescue; the Philistines rally, Israel collapses, the ark is captured, Eli’s sons die, Eli falls at the report, and Phinehas’s dying wife names the transferred glory Ichabod.

Why the JNV reads this way

The place is “Stone of Aid,” preserving the Vulgate’s semantic form before its later naming. The ark formulas track arca fœderis Domini, arca fœderis Dei, and arca Dei rather than forcing one repeated English title.

Vulgate character preserved

The earth resounds, the Philistines fear the gods who struck Egypt “with every plague in the wilderness,” thirty thousand footmen fall, Eli is ninety-eight, his neck breaks, and glory is “transferred” from Israel.

Ambiguities preserved

The plural Philistine speech about “gods” remains their speech and is not corrected by the narrator. Ichabod’s naming explanation keeps the linked losses of ark, father-in-law, and husband without ranking them.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Covenant titles, deaths, thirty thousand, forty years, ninety-eight years, childbirth sequence, and 22 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Ark of the covenant, Lord of hosts, cherubim, glory, Stone of Aid, satrap, priest, capture, plague, soul, transferred, and Ichabod carry forward.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

The captured ark enters Dagon’s temple; Dagon falls, is restored, then falls mutilated; the Lord’s hand devastates Ashdod and each Philistine city; bodily plague, mice, death, and wailing force the satraps toward release.

Why the JNV reads this way

The anatomical Latin is translated directly: secretiori parte natium becomes “the most secret part of the buttocks,” and prominentes extales becomes “protruding intestines.” Sedes pelliceas remains the striking “leather seats.”

Vulgate character preserved

Dagon’s palms lie severed on the threshold while only his trunk remains. Villages and fields boil, mice are born, intestines putrefy, and the wailing of every city ascends into heaven.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise medical nature and relation of the plague’s several bodily descriptions remain unresolved. The English does not collapse them into a familiar diagnosis or replace the leather seats with an explanatory device.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The 5:4–5 continuation, divine agency, city sequence, body terms, Dagon references, and 12 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Ark of God, ark of the Lord, Dagon, temple, threshold, hand of the Lord, satrap, plague, mice, buttocks, intestines, leather seats, death, and heaven carry forward.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

After seven months the Philistines seek ritual release from the ark’s plague, fashion five golden anuses and mice, test the Lord through unyoked cows, watch the ark return to Beth-shemesh, and send the ark onward after the Lord strikes an immense count among the people.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Latin anos aureos is rendered “golden anuses,” not euphemized as tumors. Pro delicto remains “for the offense,” and the test asks whether the plague happened casu, “by chance.” The cows are placed as a holocaust and other victims are immolated, retaining the distinct ritual actions.

Vulgate character preserved

The five provinces, cart, shut-away calves, straight road, lowing cows, little chest, great stone, and satraps all remain. The Vulgate count at Beth-shemesh is preserved as seventy men and fifty thousand common people.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between anuses, mice, land, villages, and plague is not converted into a single modern diagnosis. The dual Beth-shemesh number is not silently conformed to a different textual tradition.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The question-and-answer boundaries at 6:2–5, fivefold province list, bodily vocabulary, seventy-plus-fifty-thousand count, and 21 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Offense, repay, golden anuses, golden mice, satrap, chance, cart, holocaust, victim, Levite, ark, sanctify, strike, and holy carry forward.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

The ark rests in Kiriath-jearim for twenty years; Samuel calls Israel from Baals and Ashtaroth to the Lord alone; Israel gathers, pours water, fasts, confesses, and is delivered by thunder; Samuel raises the Stone of Aid and judges in a yearly circuit.

Why the JNV reads this way

Israel “rested after the Lord” preserves requievit post Dominum, a directional expression of renewed attachment. Ebenezer is rendered semantically as “Stone of Aid,” connecting it with the location named before the ark’s capture.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter retains poured water, one suckling lamb offered whole as a holocaust, a great crash of thunder, pursuit beneath Beth-car, restored cities, peace with the Amorite, and Samuel’s altar at Ramah.

Ambiguities preserved

The pouring of water is left as the text’s action without an inserted ritual explanation. “Thus far the Lord has aided us” remains spatial, historical, and theological at once.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The twenty years, divine thunder and human pursuit, city restoration, annual circuit, and 17 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Ark, sanctify, Baals, Ashtaroth, whole heart, serve, save, fast, sin, judge, holocaust, thunder, Stone of Aid, peace, altar, and Ramah carry forward.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

Samuel’s sons pervert judgment; Israel’s elders demand a king like the nations; the Lord identifies the demand as rejection of his reign; Samuel declares the king’s right to seize children, labor, produce, servants, animals, and freedom; the people insist.

Why the JNV reads this way

Jus regis remains “the right of the king,” not softened into a neutral administrative custom. The repeated “he will take” gives the warning its accumulating structure, while eunuchis remains “eunuchs.”

Vulgate character preserved

The king takes sons for chariots and cavalry, makes officers, plowmen, reapers, weapon-makers, perfumers, cooks, and bakers, claims the best fields, exacts tenths, and makes the people his servants.

Ambiguities preserved

“Right” is allowed to carry the Latin’s difficult mixture of royal prerogative, practice, and warning. The text does not settle the later political question by changing the noun into “abuses.”

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Royal agents, future verbs, tenths, eunuchs, refusal formulas, Lord/people/Samuel speakers, and 22 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Judge, judgment, avarice, gift, king, reign, right of the king, chariot, eunuch, servant, tithe, nation, hear, reject, and strange gods carry forward.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

Lost donkeys lead Saul and his servant through several lands to Samuel. A small silver gift, girls at the well, and a sacrifice on the high place bring Saul to the seer whom the Lord has already prepared to anoint as Israel’s leader.

Why the JNV reads this way

The narrative parenthesis retains the older title “seer” before “prophet.” The Lord “revealed Samuel’s ear,” preserving revelaverat auriculam, and Saul stands above the people “from his shoulders upward.”

Vulgate character preserved

The quarter stater, exhausted bread, little basket, water-drawing girls, blessed victim, thirty invited men, reserved shoulder, rooftop conversation, spread bed, and dawn dismissal all remain concrete.

Ambiguities preserved

Samuel’s question about “all the best things of Israel” remains interrogative and expansive. Saul’s claim that Benjamin and his kindred are least is not corrected by an external tribal assessment.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Kish’s genealogy, travel sequence, donkey chronology, seer parenthesis, meal order, reserved portion, rooftop sequence, and 27 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Chosen, good, man of God, seer, prophet, consult, stater, sacrifice, high place, bless, victim, leader, anoint, save, grace, kindred, and word of the Lord carry forward.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

Samuel privately anoints and kisses Saul, gives three confirming signs, foretells the Spirit’s transforming descent, and commands a seven-day wait. Saul prophesies, conceals the kingdom from his uncle, is selected publicly by lot, hides at home, is acclaimed, and returns with God-touched supporters while sons of Belial despise him.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Spirit “shall leap upon” Saul retains insiliet, and God changes his heart “into another,” preserving cor aliud in grammatical English. The law of the kingdom is written in a book and laid before the Lord.

Vulgate character preserved

Rachel’s tomb, three goats, three loaves, wine vessel, psaltery, timbrel, flute, harp, prophetic company, two loaves, peace victims, lot, hidden king, exceptional height, and touched hearts remain.

Ambiguities preserved

“Who is their father?” remains the proverb’s unexplained question. Saul’s hiding is not assigned humility, fear, calculation, or another motive absent from the Latin.

Corrections made in review

At 10:9 “God changed him another heart” was corrected to “God changed his heart into another,” restoring grammatical relation without weakening the transformation. Hyphenation at 10:8 was harmonized to “peace victims.”

Terms carried forward

Anoint, prince, inheritance, sign, Spirit of the Lord, prophesy, another heart, peace victims, lot, king, law of the kingdom, book, sons of Belial, and pretend not to hear carry forward.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

About a month later Nahash besieges Jabesh-gilead and offers a mutilating covenant. The Spirit leaps upon Saul, his fury ignites, Israel gathers as one man, Ammon is shattered, Saul refuses retaliatory executions, and the kingdom is renewed before the Lord at Gilgal.

Why the JNV reads this way

Nahash first receives the men’s request to be “covenanted,” then says he will “strike a covenant,” preserving the concrete forms around fœdus. Saul’s wrath is not domesticated: iratus est furor ejus nimis becomes fury exceedingly enraged.

Vulgate character preserved

The right eyes, seven-day delay, Saul following oxen, dismembered pair of oxen, fear of the Lord, 300,000 Israelites plus 30,000 Judahites, morning watch, dispersed survivors, and peace victims all remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The messengers’ promise that salvation comes when the sun grows hot does not specify military detail before the attack. Saul’s refusal to kill opponents remains grounded in the Lord’s salvation rather than an inserted theory of clemency.

Corrections made in review

The hyphen in “peace-victims” at 11:15 was removed to match established JNV typography. All covenant verbs, counts, divisions, speakers, and 15 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Covenant, serve, reproach, save, salvation, Spirit of the Lord, fury, fear of the Lord, one man, peace victims, king, kingdom, and Gilgal carry forward.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

Samuel places his public life under judgment before the Lord and his christ, recounts Israel’s repeated deliverances and apostasies, identifies the demanded king as sin, calls thunder and rain during wheat harvest, then promises continued prayer and instruction under a conditional royal covenant.

Why the JNV reads this way

Both occurrences of christus remain “christ,” naming the king as the Lord’s anointed witness. Misericordiis is “mercies,” judicio “judgment,” and veritate “truth,” retaining the governed canonical nouns.

Vulgate character preserved

Samuel asks whether he took ox, donkey, gift, or oppressed anyone; names Sisera, Philistines, Moab, Jerubbaal, Bedan, Jephthah, and himself; invokes harvest thunder; and calls ceasing to pray a sin against the Lord.

Ambiguities preserved

Bedan remains the Clementine name rather than being replaced through another tradition. The condition at 12:14 keeps both people and king “following” the Lord without supplying an outcome absent from that clause.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The 12:7–8 and 12:14–15 dependencies, historical names, christ language, thunder sign, and 25 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Christ, witness, judgment, mercies, truth, whole heart, strange gods, Baals, Ashtaroth, voice of the Lord, hand of the Lord, pray, teach, king, and perish carry forward.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

Saul’s reign opens with the Vulgate’s compressed chronology. Jonathan strikes a Philistine garrison; overwhelming forces gather; Israel hides and scatters; Saul offers the holocaust before Samuel arrives; his kingdom is rejected; the Philistines’ monopoly on iron leaves only Saul and Jonathan armed.

Why the JNV reads this way

“A son of one year” and a two-year reign directly preserve filius unius anni and duobus annis. The Philistine force remains thirty thousand chariots. Neither reading is repaired from an external edition.

Vulgate character preserved

Caves, hidden places, rocks, caverns, cisterns, seven days, holocaust, appeasing the Lord’s face, the heart-sought leader, three raiding bands, blunt tools, ironworker scarcity, plowshares, forks, axes, hoes, and goads remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The regnal wording remains difficult rather than receiving conjectural ages. “Compelled by necessity” remains Saul’s explanation, not the narrator’s acquittal. Pacifica remains “peace offerings,” distinct from the explicit peace victims elsewhere.

Corrections made in review

At 13:9 the hyphen was removed from “peace-offerings” to harmonize canonical typography. The chronology, 30,000/6,000 force, seven-day sequence, tool list, and 23 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Reign, garrison, trumpet, Hebrew, holocaust, peace offerings, appease the face, commandment, man according to God’s heart, leader, ironworker, sword, spear, and garrison carry forward.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

Jonathan and his armor-bearer cross the crags by a sign, strike the garrison, and trigger a God-sent terror. Israel joins the rout, but Saul’s fasting oath weakens the people; Jonathan tastes honey unknowingly; blood is eaten; God is silent; the lot exposes Jonathan, whom the people rescue.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Spirit’s earlier “leaping” gives way here to a miraculum a Deo, rendered as terror from God in the military context. Saul tells the priest to “withdraw your hand,” preserving the interrupted consultation. The Vulgate’s ark at 14:18 remains ark.

Vulgate character preserved

Bozez and Seneh stand like teeth; Jonathan crawls on hands and feet; twenty fall within half a day-plowed acre; honey flows upon the ground; eyes are enlightened; animals are slaughtered on one stone; the lot asks for manifestation or holiness.

Ambiguities preserved

“Who is their father?” and the logic of prophetic lineage remain unexplained. “Give holiness” in the lot prayer stays marked rather than being replaced with terminology from another textual tradition.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The sign, two-man attack, divine terror, ten thousand, oath logic, honey sequence, blood prohibition, lot, genealogy, and 52 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Uncircumcised, sign, save, Lord, ark of God, prophet, oath, curse, honey, enlightened eyes, blood, transgress, altar, consult, lot, holiness, son of death, and salvation carry forward.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

Samuel commands Saul to annihilate Amalek. Saul spares Agag and the best spoil, builds a triumphal arch, and claims obedience while animals expose him. Samuel declares obedience better than victims, announces rejection, tears the kingdom symbolically, kills Agag, and mourns Saul.

Why the JNV reads this way

The ban’s full bodily list—man, woman, infant, suckling, ox, sheep, camel, donkey—remains. Pœnitet is “repent,” while the Triumpher is not bent by pœnitentia; the source’s theological tension is kept rather than harmonized away.

Vulgate character preserved

The army is counted “as lambs”; Agag is captured alive; beautiful goods are spared and vile goods demolished; Saul offers first spoil as holocaust; resistance is likened to divination, refusal to idolatry; Agag arrives exceedingly fat and trembling and is cut into pieces.

Ambiguities preserved

The “Triumpher in Israel” remains the marked personal title of triumphator in Israël. Agag’s question, “Does bitter death separate in this manner?” is not rewritten into a familiar declaration from another edition.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Amalek’s scope, Kenite mercy, 200,000 plus 10,000, spoil categories, three repentance statements, cloak tear, Agag’s death, and 35 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Lord of hosts, Amalek, demolish, spare, mercy, holocaust, obey, obedience, victim, divination, idolatry, reject, kingdom, repentance, Triumpher, adore, and mourn carry forward.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

The Lord ends Samuel’s mourning, sends him with a sacrificial pretext to Jesse, rejects visible stature, chooses and anoints David, directs the Spirit into him, withdraws the Spirit from Saul, and brings David into Saul’s house as musician and armor-bearer.

Why the JNV reads this way

Samuel wonders whether Eliab is God’s “christ,” preserving christus before the actual choice. The Lord beholds the heart, while the Spirit is “directed into David” from directus est…in David. The evil spirit remains explicitly “from the Lord.”

Vulgate character preserved

The horn of oil, calf, victim, sanctification, seven passed-over sons, little shepherd, ruddy color, comely face, harp, Saul’s refreshment, donkey laden with bread, wine, and goat all remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The sacrificial instruction is presented without an added moral defense of concealment. The theological relation between the Lord, Saul, and the evil spirit remains as difficult as the Latin states it.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The christ question, seven-plus-one sons, anointing, Spirit clauses, Saul/David encounter, gifts, and 23 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Mourn, reject, horn, oil, immolate, victim, sanctify, christ, behold the heart, anoint, Spirit of the Lord, evil spirit from the Lord, harp, grace, and armor-bearer carry forward.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

Goliath’s forty-day challenge paralyzes Israel. David brings food, hears the reproach, withstands Eliab and Saul, recalls lion and bear, rejects untested armor, confronts Goliath in the Lord’s name, kills him with sling and stone, and is questioned about his lineage.

Why the JNV reads this way

Goliath is vir spurius, retained as the marked “bastard man” rather than imported “champion.” Ecclesia at 17:47 is “assembly,” the intelligible communal sense here, while still preserving the Lord’s deliverance before the whole gathered people.

Vulgate character preserved

Six cubits and a span, five thousand bronze shekels, six hundred iron shekels, bronze greaves and shield, cheese portions, tribute freedom, lion and bear strangled by the jaw, five smooth stones, embedded forehead stone, severed head, and Jerusalem destination remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The expanded Vulgate narrative, including David’s movements between Saul and Bethlehem and Saul’s later lineage inquiry, remains intact without explanatory harmonization. “Bastard man” is not assigned a precise social or military office beyond the Latin.

Corrections made in review

At 17:29 “merely” was removed from “Is it not a word?” because the Latin supplies no minimizing adverb. The 17:14–15, 46–47, and 50–51 continuations, measurements, speeches, pursuit geography, and 58 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Bastard man, Philistine, uncircumcised, reproach, living God, Lord of hosts, assembly, sling, stone, sword, spear, shield, salvation, army, single combat, and lineage carry forward.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

Jonathan’s soul is fastened to David’s and sealed by covenant and gifts. David prospers, women sing his greater number, Saul’s envy turns his eyes crooked, an evil spirit drives a spear attack, and Saul uses daughters and a deadly bridal price to ensnare David, who succeeds and becomes renowned.

Why the JNV reads this way

Conglutinata est becomes “was fastened,” preserving the binding of one soul to another without reducing it to preference. The explicit bridal price remains one hundred Philistine foreskins, and David’s doubled payment remains two hundred.

Vulgate character preserved

Tunic, garments, sword, bow, belt, timbrels, sistrums, thousands and ten thousands, Saul prophesying under an evil spirit, spear and wall, Merab’s transfer, Michal’s love, poverty, slenderness, foreskins, and fame remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The text’s covenantal love is not sexualized or sentimentalized by additions. Saul’s statement that David will be his son-in-law “in two things” remains the Vulgate’s compressed expression rather than being silently rewritten from another source.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Soul language, covenant action, song numbers, two spear evasions, daughter sequence, 100/200 foreskins, motives, and 30 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Soul, fasten, love, covenant, prudence, king, evil spirit of God, prophesy, spear, fear, Lord’s battles, son-in-law, stumbling block, foreskin, grace, enemy, and renowned name carry forward.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

Saul orders David’s death; Jonathan intercedes and briefly restores him; another victory renews Saul’s violence; David escapes the spear and Michal lowers him through a window; a bed-statue delays capture; David reaches Samuel, where three groups and finally Saul are overcome by prophecy.

Why the JNV reads this way

David placed his soul “in his own hand,” keeping the concrete risk formula. Saul’s spear blow is casso vulnere, a fruitless blow. Statuam/simulacrum remain statue and likeness rather than importing a named household idol.

Vulgate character preserved

Innocent blood, spear, wall, guards, window, hairy goatskin, bed, constables, Naioth, prophetic company, great cistern, stripped garments, full-day nakedness, and the repeated Saul proverb remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Michal’s statement that David threatened her is retained as her speech without deciding whether it is deception, coercion, or both. Saul’s naked prophecy is not given a psychological explanation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Jonathan’s oath, renewed war, spear action, escape chronology, bed substitution, three messenger groups, 19:21–22 continuation, and 24 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Soul in hand, salvation, innocent blood, oath, evil spirit of the Lord, harp, spear, statue, likeness, prophet, Spirit of the Lord, naked, and proverb carry forward.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

David tests Saul’s lethal intent through absence at the new-moon table. Jonathan invokes the Lord, renews mercy and covenant with David’s house, establishes the arrow sign, faces Saul’s abuse and spear, warns David, and parts from him with prostration, kisses, tears, and an eternal oath.

Why the JNV reads this way

The repeated anima remains “soul,” including one step between soul and death and Jonathan loving David as his own soul. Fœdus remains covenant, with “enter” and “strike” preserving distinct verbal actions.

Vulgate character preserved

New moon, solemn victims, third-day hiding, stone Ezel, three arrows, unclean status, empty seat, Saul’s explicit maternal insult, “son of death,” spear, little boy, southward hiding place, threefold adoration, kisses, tears, and seed remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult covenant wording at 20:14–16, including “May he take Jonathan from his house,” remains open rather than being repaired from another tradition. The “day when it is lawful to work” stays the Vulgate’s temporal marker.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. All covenant and mercy terms, 20:12–15 and 18–19 boundaries, feast chronology, arrow instructions, insults, speaker turns, and 43 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Soul, grace, mercy, Lord’s covenant, seed, new moon, solemn victim, oath, peace, stone, arrow, clean, son of death, adore, kiss, weep, and forever carry forward.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

David reaches Ahimelech alone, conceals his flight behind a royal mission, receives sanctified proposition bread and Goliath’s sword, is observed by Doeg, flees to Achish at Gath, and survives by changing his face and appearing insane.

Why the JNV reads this way

The bread is distinguished as common versus holy, then named “loaves of proposition” from panes propositionis. The young men’s “vessels” remain vasa, preserving the bodily purity idiom without explanatory substitution.

Vulgate character preserved

Five loaves, abstention from women, hot replacement loaves, Doeg within the tabernacle, the sword wrapped behind the ephod, dances about David’s ten thousands, saliva flowing into his beard, gate doors, and Achish’s complaint about madmen remain.

Ambiguities preserved

David’s statements to Ahimelech remain his speech without editorial acquittal or condemnation. “This way is defiled, but even it shall today be sanctified in the vessels” retains its difficult relation between journey, vessels, and holiness.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Bread categories, purity condition, Doeg’s identity, sword provenance, Gath recognition, bodily performance, and 15 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Priest, holy, common, bread of proposition, clean, women, vessel, tabernacle, ephod, sword, soul, fear, face, madman, and house carry forward.

Chapter 22

The chapter's movement

David gathers distressed, indebted, and bitter souls at Adullam, shelters his parents in Moab, obeys Gad, and enters Judah. Saul accuses his servants; Doeg reports Ahimelech; the priest defends David; Saul orders the priests killed; Doeg slaughters them and Nob; Abiathar alone escapes.

Why the JNV reads this way

Those amaro animo are “bitter in soul,” sustaining canonical soul language. Saul promises commanders of thousands and hundreds, echoing his royal-power warning. David says he is “guilty of all the souls” of Abiathar’s father’s house.

Vulgate character preserved

Four hundred men, cave, stronghold, spear, grove, conspiracy, fields and vineyards, eighty-five linen-ephod priests, men, women, infants, sucklings, oxen, donkeys, sheep, and one escaping son remain.

Ambiguities preserved

David’s guilt statement is not weakened to indirect regret; neither is it expanded into a legal confession. Saul’s paranoia and Doeg’s report are narrated without invented inner diagnoses.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. David’s family movement, 400 men, Saul’s charges, Ahimelech’s defense, servant refusal, Doeg’s 85, Nob’s full death list, and 23 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Distress, debt, bitter soul, prince, prophet, stronghold, covenant, priest, consult the Lord, ephod, linen, soul, guilty, save, and preserve carry forward.

Chapter 23

The chapter's movement

David consults the Lord twice and saves Keilah, but learns its men will deliver him to Saul. He departs with six hundred, is protected in Ziph, receives Jonathan’s final covenantal strengthening, is betrayed by Ziphites, nearly encircled at Maon, and escapes when Philistines invade.

Why the JNV reads this way

Abiathar “brings near” the ephod, preserving the ritual action. Jonathan strengthens David’s “hands in God,” not merely his courage. Saul’s encirclement remains “like a crown,” and the place becomes the “Dividing Rock.”

Vulgate character preserved

Threshing floors, livestock, gates and bars, ephod, conditional divine answers, uncertain wandering, dark mountain, forest, covenant, Hachilah, Jeshimon, foot-traces, earth-burial image, crown-shaped encirclement, messenger, and invasion remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The Lord’s answers about what Saul and Keilah’s men “will” do remain conditional within the narrated situation; the English does not insert a theory of foreknowledge. Jonathan’s expected second place is not explained beyond his words.

Corrections made in review

At 23:13 “concealed his intention to go out” was corrected to “refrained from going out,” removing invented concealment and restoring Saul’s abandoned movement. All consultations, conditional answers, 600 men, covenant, pursuit geography, and 28 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Consult, ephod, save, deliver into hand, gate, bar, soul, strengthen hands in God, reign, second, covenant, forest, dark mountain, crown, and Dividing Rock carry forward.

Chapter 24

The chapter's movement

Saul enters the very cave where David hides. David cuts his cloak but is struck in heart, restrains his men, then proves his innocence from a distance. Saul weeps, confesses David’s greater justice and future kingdom, and asks an oath preserving his seed and name.

Why the JNV reads this way

Saul enters ut purgaret ventrem, directly “to purge his bowels.” David refuses to strike christum Domini, “the Lord’s christ.” He adores prone to the earth before Saul, retaining the Vulgate’s language of royal reverence.

Vulgate character preserved

Three thousand chosen men, wild-goat rocks, sheepfolds, cave interior, cloak edge, heart striking, eye sparing, soul hunted, ancient proverb, dead dog, single flea, tears, seed, name, oath, and safer places remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The servants’ claimed divine promise is retained as their speech without confirming its authority. David says he “considered” killing Saul while his eye spared him; no purified motive is inserted.

Corrections made in review

At 24:8 “broke his men with words” was corrected to “restrained his men with words,” expressing the action demonstrated by the following prohibition. The cave sequence, christ language, cloak evidence, proverb, oath, and 23 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Purge the bowels, cave, heart, cloak, Lord’s christ, extend the hand, adore, evil, iniquity, soul, avenge, impious, dead dog, flea, justice, seed, name, and oath carry forward.

Chapter 25

The chapter's movement

Samuel dies. Nabal rejects David’s protection claim, and David marches toward blood vengeance. Abigail moves swiftly with provisions, assumes the iniquity, invokes David’s future faithful house, and turns him from innocent blood. Nabal collapses and dies; David takes Abigail and Ahinoam, while Saul gives Michal away.

Why the JNV reads this way

Nabal is “hard, utterly wicked, and malicious,” preserving the cumulative Latin. Abigail’s image holds David’s soul in “the bundle of the living,” while enemies’ souls whirl in the “force and circle of a sling.” The explicit threat remains anyone “who urinates against a wall.”

Vulgate character preserved

Three thousand sheep, one thousand goats, ten messengers, wall-like protection, two hundred loaves, wine skins, cooked rams, roasted grain, raisins, figs, donkey, blood, hand, sob, heart-scruple, kinglike banquet, drunkenness, stone-like collapse, ten days, five attendants, and foot washing remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The legitimacy of David’s material demand is not decided by an inserted narrator’s judgment. Abigail calls him “my lord the king” before his enthronement, and her prophetic rhetoric remains her speech. Nabal’s fatal condition is not medically diagnosed.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Samuel’s burial, property counts, provision quantities, two repeated bodily threats, soul images, innocent-blood argument, Nabal’s ten days, marriages, and 44 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Mourn, prudent, grace, son of Belial, blessing, iniquity, soul, blood, faithful house, Lord’s battles, innocent blood, vengeance, bundle of the living, sling, servant, adore, and wife carry forward.

Chapter 26

The chapter's movement

The Ziphites again betray David. He and Abishai enter Saul’s sleeping camp, refuse the offered killing, take spear and water cup, then accuse Abner from a distant summit. Saul confesses sin and foolishness; David returns the spear and entrusts judgment and deliverance to the Lord.

Why the JNV reads this way

Saul’s camp sleeps because a “sleep of the Lord” rushed upon them. David repeatedly refuses to extend his hand against “the Lord’s christ.” At 26:19 the difficult sacrificial idiom remains “let him smell a sacrifice.”

Vulgate character preserved

Three thousand chosen men, tent, earth-fixed spear, one proposed thrust without a second, cup of water, mountain interval, sons of death, inheritance, strange gods, single flea, partridge, precious and magnified souls, justice, faith, and distress remain.

Ambiguities preserved

David’s alternatives for Saul’s death—divine strike, natural day, or battle—remain without prediction. The conditional source of Saul’s pursuit, whether the Lord or human children, is not resolved by narration.

Corrections made in review

At 26:25 the mechanically broken cognate wording was corrected to “you shall surely act, and you shall mightily prevail,” retaining doubled emphasis in lucid English. The sleep, christ repetitions, spear/cup evidence, soul language, and 25 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Lord’s christ, extend the hand, sleep of the Lord, spear, cup, son of death, inheritance, sacrifice, strange gods, blood, soul, justice, faith, distress, and prevail carry forward.

Chapter 27

The chapter's movement

David concludes that Saul will eventually capture him and flees with six hundred to Achish. Given Ziklag, he raids ancient peoples, leaves no witnesses alive, reports false targets in Judah’s south, and secures Achish’s trust as an apparently permanent servant.

Why the JNV reads this way

The Vulgate’s duration is “four months,” not another edition’s longer period. David’s destructive policy is translated directly: he leaves neither man nor woman alive and makes this his decree throughout his Philistine residence.

Vulgate character preserved

David’s heart deliberation, six hundred households, Ahinoam, Abigail, Ziklag as property of Judah’s kings, Geshurites, Girzites, Amalekites, sheep, oxen, donkeys, camels, garments, and three claimed southern targets remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The narrative does not morally justify, condemn, or soften David’s raids beyond what it states. Whether Achish’s confidence results from deception alone or David’s broader conduct is not expanded.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Four months, people and geography, complete killing language, three reported targets, Achish’s inference, and 12 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Heart, soul, flee, save, Philistines, servant, grace, Ziklag, raid, spoil, man, woman, decree, trust, people, and forever carry forward.

Chapter 28

The chapter's movement

Philistia mobilizes, Achish appoints David guardian, and Saul faces terror after the Lord refuses dreams, priests, and prophets. Disguised, he seeks the woman with a divining spirit at Endor; Samuel rises, announces kingdom transfer and imminent death; Saul collapses, eats, and departs into night.

Why the JNV reads this way

The woman habentem pythonem is one “who has a divining spirit,” preserving the Latin phenomenon without importing a modern title. Her plural deos remains “gods ascending from the earth.” Samuel says Saul disturbed him “that I should be raised.”

Vulgate character preserved

Guardian of Achish’s head, erased magicians and diviners, changed garments, nighttime visit, great cry, old man in a cloak, adoration, Samuel’s rebuke, tomorrow with Samuel, Saul stretched on earth, soul in hand, fatted calf, flour, unleavened bread, and all-night departure remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The text calls the appearing figure Samuel and reports what the woman and Saul see; the English neither explains the mechanism nor substitutes an apparition theory. “With me” is not expanded into a doctrine of the dead.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The three failed media, divining-spirit terminology, oath, gods plural, Samuel identification, Amalek cause, next-day prediction, meal, and 25 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Camp, guardian, magician, diviner, divining spirit, dream, priest, prophet, soul, gods, cloak, adore, kingdom, rival, Amalek, bread, unleavened, and night carry forward.

Chapter 29

The chapter's movement

Philistine companies assemble at Aphek while David marches last with Achish. The satraps reject the Hebrews, fearing David will reconcile with Saul through their heads. Achish defends David as upright and angelic but dismisses him peacefully before battle.

Why the JNV reads this way

The rulers remain “satraps,” preserving the recurring Vulgate political term. David asks why he may not fight the enemies of “my lord the king,” leaving the referent within his diplomatically dangerous speech.

Vulgate character preserved

Hundreds and thousands, last company, “many days or years,” Saul-and-David song, going out and coming in, angel of God, nighttime rising, growing light, and return toward Philistine land remain.

Ambiguities preserved

David’s actual intended conduct in the battle is not disclosed; the English does not make his protest sincere or ironic. Achish’s invocation “As the Lord lives” remains his speech.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. Army order, satrap objections, Achish’s defense, David’s question, angel comparison, dismissal timing, and 11 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Company, camp, satrap, Hebrew, adversary, appease, lord, upright, angel of God, peace, rise, and battle carry forward.

Chapter 30

The chapter's movement

David returns to burned Ziklag, where every family has been taken. Threatened by his own bitter men, he strengthens himself in God, consults through the ephod, pursues, revives an abandoned Egyptian, destroys the Amalekites, restores everything, grants equal shares to exhausted guards, and distributes gifts through Judah.

Why the JNV reads this way

The promise excuties prædam is rendered “recover the spoil,” making the action intelligible in light of 30:18–20. The 200 who remain at the baggage receive an “equal portion,” and the ruling becomes an ordinance “as a law in Israel.”

Vulgate character preserved

Failed tears, bitter souls, threatened stoning, ephod, torrent Besor, bread, water, fig cake, raisins, returned spirit, three days and nights, oath, camels, evening-to-evening slaughter, four hundred escapees, wives, children, flocks, herds, gifts, blessing, and full place list remain.

Ambiguities preserved

“Shake out/recover the spoil” is resolved by the narrative result, not an imported reading. David’s gift network is presented without assigning a political motive beyond the stated blessing from the Lord’s enemies.

Corrections made in review

At 30:8 “shake away the spoil” was corrected to “recover the spoil,” preventing an opaque English calque. The 30:3–4, 11–12, and 26–31 continuations, all quantities, equal-share rule, place list, and 31 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Mourn, bitter soul, strengthen in the Lord, ephod, consult, pursue, recover, spoil, spirit, oath, save, equal portion, ordinance, law, gift, blessing, and Lord’s enemies carry forward.

Chapter 31

The chapter's movement

Israel falls on Gilboa; Jonathan and Saul’s other sons are struck; wounded Saul dies upon his sword, followed by his armor-bearer. Israel abandons cities, Philistines occupy them, Saul is beheaded and displayed, and Jabesh-gilead’s strongest men recover, burn, bury, and mourn the bodies.

Why the JNV reads this way

The battle’s “whole weight” turns upon Saul, preserving totum pondus prælii. Saul “rushes upon” his sword, the same forceful verb used of attack, without a euphemistic death formula.

Vulgate character preserved

Mount Gilboa, archers, severe wound, fear of uncircumcised mockery, armor-bearer’s terror, three sons, abandoned cities, stripping, idols’ temple, Ashtaroth, wall of Beth-shan, night march, corpses, burning, bones, grove, and seven-day fast remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact relation between Saul’s arrow wounds and sword death is allowed to stand in sequence without medical reconstruction. Burning the bodies is reported without ritual explanation or harmonization to later accounts.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required. The deaths, three sons, armor-bearer, geography, head and weapons, Beth-shan recovery, burning and burial sequence, seven days, and 13 verse keys were reverified.

Terms carried forward

Philistine, slain, battle, archer, uncircumcised, sword, armor-bearer, terror, idol, Ashtaroth, corpse, burn, bones, grove, bury, and fast carry forward.

Second Samuel — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

The chapter's movement

The book opens with David receiving Saul’s crown from the Amalekite, executing the self-confessed killer of the Lord’s anointed, and teaching Judah a lament for Saul and Jonathan.

Why the JNV reads this way

The translation keeps the report, interrogation, execution, and lament in sharply different registers. The lament is set as poetry while every line remains attached to its Clementine verse key.

Vulgate character preserved

The Amalekite says that he stood over Saul and killed him; the JNV does not reconcile that claim with First Samuel’s account. The “illustrious ones,” the daughters’ scarlet, and the bow of Jonathan retain their Vulgate coloring.

Ambiguities preserved

The report may be truthful, opportunistic, or self-incriminating fiction; the Latin does not adjudicate it. David responds to the confession as spoken, and the translation does not add a narrator’s verdict.

Corrections made in review

No lexical correction was required. The first divine `Dominus` at 1:12 retains the governed one-time identification “the Lord (YHWH).”

Terms carried forward

`christus Domini` is “the Lord’s christ,” preserving the anointed office in lower case; `anima` is “soul”; embodied reverence remains “adored.”

Chapter 2

The chapter's movement

David consults the Lord, rises to Hebron, is anointed over Judah, honors Jabesh-gilead, and enters the divided kingdom’s first lethal contest against Abner and Ish-bosheth.

Why the JNV reads this way

Repeated ascent and consultation language remains visible, while the pool contest is rendered with enough physical precision for its sudden collective violence to be understood.

Vulgate character preserved

The twelve-against-twelve encounter, the Field of the Valiant, Asahel’s gazelle-like speed, and the spear striking through his groin are retained without smoothing.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise nature of the young men’s “play” is disclosed by the violence that follows rather than explained in advance. Joab’s final words to Abner remain conditional as in the Latin.

Corrections made in review

At 2:6, “return grace” became “repay you with favor.” At 2:15, “crossed over by number” became “crossed over, twelve in number.”

Terms carried forward

Mercy, truth, grace, favor, lord, king, house, and soul retain their established distinctions.

Chapter 3

The chapter's movement

David’s house strengthens, Abner breaks with Ish-bosheth, Michal is returned to David, and Joab murders Abner before David publicly laments and disavows the bloodshed.

Why the JNV reads this way

The translation makes every political transfer and speaker change explicit without supplying motives the Latin leaves unstated. The curse upon Joab’s house retains its bodily and social severity.

Vulgate character preserved

David demands Michal for one hundred Philistine foreskins; her husband follows weeping; Joab strikes Abner in the groin; and David calls himself tender though anointed king.

Ambiguities preserved

Whether Abner’s approach is repentance, calculation, or both remains open. The phrase concerning the man “holding the spindle” is retained rather than normalized to a generic weakness.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required after the full Latin and boundary review.

Terms carried forward

`fœdus` is covenant, `anima` is soul, `misericordia` is mercy, and the distinction between anointing and the noun “christ” remains intact.

Chapter 4

The chapter's movement

Ish-bosheth loses courage, the narrator recalls Mephibosheth’s lameness, Baanah and Rechab behead Ish-bosheth, and David executes and mutilates them.

Why the JNV reads this way

The inserted history of Mephibosheth remains where the Vulgate places it. The murderers’ self-justifying speech is separated from David’s judgment so their theological claim is not mistaken for the narrator’s endorsement.

Vulgate character preserved

The wheat-bearing woman, the severed head, and the cutting off of hands and feet remain explicit. “Vengeance” is retained in the assassins’ speech.

Ambiguities preserved

The grammatical compression surrounding the doorkeeper and sleep remains slightly abrupt, reflecting the source’s rapid account rather than inventing a detailed entry scheme.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Soul, lord, king, seed, blood, righteous, and wicked retain their concrete judicial force.

Chapter 5

The chapter's movement

All Israel anoints David, Jerusalem is taken, David’s house and family increase, and two Philistine campaigns establish his reign under divine direction.

Why the JNV reads this way

The English preserves the source’s movement from shepherding to kingship and from consultation to victory. Repeated “ascend” and “deliver” language remains audible.

Vulgate character preserved

The blind and lame, the pipes of the rooftops, the temple proverb, and the sound of walking upon pear trees are retained instead of replaced by familiar alternate readings.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult 5:8 syntax is presented as David’s condition for striking the Jebusite without claiming more about the pipes than the Latin states.

Corrections made in review

At 5:19, the broken cognate calque “for delivering, I shall deliver” became “I shall surely deliver.”

Terms carried forward

Leader, king, pasture, people, house, ark, Lord of hosts, and the City of David follow earlier-book forms.

Chapter 6

The chapter's movement

David brings the ark toward Jerusalem, Uzzah dies for rashly touching it, Obed-edom is blessed, and the ark finally enters amid sacrifice, dance, distribution, and Michal’s contempt.

Why the JNV reads this way

Joy, fear, ritual action, and domestic confrontation are allowed to coexist without editorial resolution. Concrete gestures—touching, leaping, uncovering, blessing—remain visible.

Vulgate character preserved

The chapter retains crafted wooden instruments, the Striking of Uzzah, seven choirs and the victim of a calf, David’s linen ephod, and Michal’s barrenness.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation of the seven choirs and calf victim to the procession is not reconstructed from another account. Michal’s charge and David’s defense stand in their own voices.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Ark of God, ark of the Lord, holocausts, peace offerings, blessed, adored, and Lord of hosts retain canonical JNV forms.

Chapter 7

The chapter's movement

David proposes a temple, Nathan receives the divine reversal, the Lord promises David a house and enduring throne, and David answers in prayer.

Why the JNV reads this way

The deliberate play between David’s proposed house for God and God’s promised house for David is preserved throughout. “Seed,” “throne,” “kingdom,” and paternal discipline remain literal anchors.

Vulgate character preserved

The JNV retains “the law of Adam,” the promise of a faithful house before David’s face, and the formulation that the Lord himself will make David a house.

Ambiguities preserved

The near and enduring horizons of David’s seed are not divided by explanatory notes in the reader text. The prayer’s “finding his heart” remains an inward discovery rather than a paraphrased intention.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

House, seed, throne, kingdom, servant, Lord God, Lord of hosts, forever, mercy, and truth are kept distinct and stable.

Chapter 8

The chapter's movement

David subdues surrounding peoples, dedicates captured wealth, establishes garrisons and tribute, and administers judgment and justice over Israel.

Why the JNV reads this way

Military results, geography, numbers, tribute, dedication, and offices are translated as a compact royal record rather than embellished narrative.

Vulgate character preserved

The JNV retains the bridle of tribute, Moab’s measuring cords, one thousand seven hundred horsemen, eighteen thousand slain, and David’s sons serving as priests.

Ambiguities preserved

The destination and function of particular captured objects are not expanded beyond the source. “Priests” is retained for David’s sons without harmonizing it to another title.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Judgment, justice, tribute, garrison, priest, dedicated, gold, bronze, and the Lord’s preservation maintain the established register.

Chapter 9

The chapter's movement

David seeks a survivor of Saul’s house, restores Saul’s fields to Mephibosheth, assigns Ziba’s household to work them, and gives Jonathan’s son a permanent place at the royal table.

Why the JNV reads this way

The repeated table language and David’s stated mercy are kept prominent. Mephibosheth’s disability is described directly without making it his identity or softening the source.

Vulgate character preserved

“The mercy of God,” the dead-dog image, Ziba’s fifteen sons and twenty servants, and the continual eating of bread at the king’s table remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

The shift between David’s table and Ziba’s reported table in 9:11 remains as the Clementine text gives it rather than being silently conformed.

Corrections made in review

At 9:7, “for doing, I shall show mercy” became “I shall surely show mercy,” retaining the Latin’s emphatic cognate force.

Terms carried forward

Mercy, grace, servant, lord, house, fields, bread, table, soul, and adore remain aligned with the earlier books.

Chapter 10

The chapter's movement

David’s attempted consolation is treated as espionage, Hanun humiliates the envoys, Ammon hires Syrian forces, and two battles end in Syrian submission.

Why the JNV reads this way

The diplomatic insult is rendered with exact bodily and clothing detail. Joab’s division of forces and mutual-aid speech remain lucid without modern military terminology.

Vulgate character preserved

Half-shaved beards, garments cut to the buttocks, twenty thousand footmen, seven hundred chariots, forty thousand horsemen, and fifty-eight thousand fugitives are all retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The final relation between Hadadezer’s kings, Israel, and the fifty-eight thousand remains close to the compressed Latin sequence rather than being reconstructed from another witness.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Mercy, consolation, city of God, Lord, battle line, servants, garrison, peace, and tribute retain the established vocabulary.

Chapter 11

The chapter's movement

David remains behind, takes Bathsheba, attempts to conceal her conception, arranges Uriah’s death, receives the battlefield report, and takes Uriah’s widow as wife.

Why the JNV reads this way

The verbs remain morally stark: David sends, takes, sleeps, writes, abandons, and reassures. No euphemism hides the sexual act or the deliberate killing.

Vulgate character preserved

Bathsheba is cleansed from her uncleanness; Uriah invokes the ark and the tents; the letter travels in Uriah’s own hand; and David’s deed is displeasing before the Lord.

Ambiguities preserved

The narration does not speculate about Bathsheba’s consent or interior state because the Latin does not state them. The “royal portion” following Uriah remains concrete but unexplained.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Uncleanness, conceive, soul, lord, ark of God, sword, mourn, wife, and displeasing before the Lord remain direct.

Chapter 12

The chapter's movement

Nathan’s ewe-lamb parable turns David’s judgment upon himself; David confesses; the child dies; Solomon is born and loved; and Rabbah falls under severe punishment.

Why the JNV reads this way

“You are that man” remains the chapter’s unadorned pivot. Confession, forgiveness, temporal judgment, grief, worship, consolation, and conquest are not collapsed into one explanatory framework.

Vulgate character preserved

The “son of death,” fourfold restoration, public judgment before the sun, the child’s sure death, “Beloved of the Lord,” the talent-weight diadem, and the punishments involving saws, iron carts, knives, and bricks remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The final punishment sequence is translated directly from the difficult Latin without resolving whether every noun describes an instrument, action, or imposed labor through another tradition.

Corrections made in review

At 12:14, “die by death” became “surely die.” At 12:16, “fasted with a fast” became “undertook a fast.”

Terms carried forward

Sin, word of the Lord, blaspheme, adore, house, wife, mercy, holocaust, and peace offering preserve JNV usage.

Chapter 13

The chapter's movement

Amnon’s desire becomes calculated sexual violence against Tamar; his love turns to hatred; David fails to discipline him; and Absalom waits two years before arranging Amnon’s death and fleeing.

Why the JNV reads this way

The chapter’s moral horror is carried by its verbs: Amnon seizes, overpowers, violates, lies with, hates, and casts out. Tamar’s reasoned resistance and public grief remain fully voiced.

Vulgate character preserved

The two little cakes, ankle-length virgin’s robe, ashes, torn garment, royal feast, mules, and false report that every prince died all remain in place.

Ambiguities preserved

Tamar’s appeal that the king would not deny her to Amnon is not interpreted as legal approval or a proposed permanent solution. David’s grief without discipline is reported without an added explanation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required after the explicit-content and speech-boundary review.

Terms carried forward

Virgin, dishonor, folly, violate, lie with, disgrace, hate, brother, sister, and king remain direct and unsoftened.

Chapter 14

The chapter's movement

Joab sends the wise woman of Tekoa to turn David’s own judgment toward Absalom; the king permits Absalom’s return but withholds his face; Absalom compels Joab by burning his field and is finally received.

Why the JNV reads this way

The woman’s extended constructed case is kept as persuasion rather than flattened into summary. Her movement from private widowhood to the people of God and the king’s own outcast remains audible.

Vulgate character preserved

The next of blood, the surviving spark, the word like a sacrifice, angelic royal wisdom, public-weight hair, and the burning barley field are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The woman’s statements about God, banishment, and return belong to her persuasive speech; the translation does not silently convert each assertion into narrator commentary.

Corrections made in review

At 14:14, the opaque “draws back his thought” became “reconsiders, devising,” retaining deliberate divine action and the outcast’s preservation.

Terms carried forward

Soul, inheritance of God, handmaid, lord, king, grace, adore, angel of God, iniquity, and sacrifice remain consistent.

Chapter 15

The chapter's movement

Absalom steals Israel’s heart, announces his kingship from Hebron, and forces David from Jerusalem; David entrusts the ark to the city, climbs Olivet weeping, and sends Hushai back to defeat Ahithophel’s counsel.

Why the JNV reads this way

Political seduction is shown through daily gestures at the gate rather than paraphrased. David’s flight retains its bodily humility—bare feet, covered head, ascent, and tears.

Vulgate character preserved

The text retains forty years at 15:7, two hundred unsuspecting men, ten concubines, six hundred Gittites, the Kidron crossing, and the “O seer” address to Zadok.

Ambiguities preserved

The beginning point of the forty years is not supplied. Hushai’s proposed loyalty language remains intentionally capable of double hearing.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Vow, sacrifice, trumpet, conspiracy, servant, mercy, truth, grace, faith, ark of the covenant of God, adore, prophet, priest, and seer remain distinct.

Chapter 16

The chapter's movement

Ziba accuses Mephibosheth and receives his property; Shimei curses and stones David; David refuses vengeance; and in Jerusalem Ahithophel counsels Absalom to take his father’s concubines publicly.

Why the JNV reads this way

Ziba’s accusation and David’s grant are reported without anticipating chapter 19. Shimei’s curse, David’s submission, Hushai’s equivocation, and Ahithophel’s counsel retain their separate voices.

Vulgate character preserved

The two donkeys, exact provisions, “man of Belial,” dead-dog insult, son from David’s womb, ridge-top stones and earth, rooftop tent, and public sexual act remain.

Ambiguities preserved

David says the Lord commanded Shimei to curse; the reader text does not decide whether this describes direct commission, providential permission, or David’s humbled interpretation.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Soul, curse, command of the Lord, mercy, grace, friend, servant, king, concubine, defile, and counsel retain their force.

Chapter 17

The chapter's movement

Ahithophel proposes an immediate strike against David, Hushai defeats it through grander counsel, the priestly network warns David, hidden messengers escape, Ahithophel hangs himself, and allies provision David’s camp.

Why the JNV reads this way

The rival speeches preserve their different strategies and rhythms: Ahithophel is concise, while Hushai summons bears, lions, dew, sand, and ropes to delay Absalom.

Vulgate character preserved

The twelve thousand, the spring of Rogel, well hidden under drying hulled grain, tasted water, universal Jordan crossing, ordered household, hanging, and roasted chickpeas remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The woman’s explanation that the messengers passed after tasting water is retained without reconstructing a more familiar deception. Amasa’s difficult parentage remains exactly as the source presents it.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Soul, peace, counsel, Lord’s will, priest, servant, king, house, desert, river, and army remain stable.

Chapter 18

The chapter's movement

David orders Absalom preserved, the forest consumes Israel, Absalom hangs from the oak, Joab and his armor-bearers kill him, and two runners bring victory and death to the waiting king.

Why the JNV reads this way

The contrast between David’s command and Joab’s act remains stark. The reporting sequence slows at the gates so David’s repeated question about peace for Absalom governs the scene.

Vulgate character preserved

Tribunes and centurions, the forest consuming more than the sword, Absalom caught by his head, three spears in his heart while he still throbs, the Hand of Absalom, and David’s repeated lament remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The text says Absalom had no son despite the three sons named in 14:27; both Clementine statements stand. Cushi’s identity is not expanded beyond the source form.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Preserve, soul, judgment, adore, Lord, king, young man, peace, good news, enemy, and son keep their repeated narrative resonance.

Chapter 19

The chapter's movement

Joab forces David to receive the victorious people; Judah brings the king across Jordan; Shimei is spared; Mephibosheth answers Ziba; Barzillai declines royal reward; and Israel disputes Judah’s priority.

Why the JNV reads this way

Joab’s rebuke is allowed its full severity. The restoration procession keeps each petitioner’s speech intact so loyalty, mercy, exhaustion, accusation, generosity, and tribal rivalry remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

David is accused of loving haters and hating lovers; Shimei cursed the Lord’s christ; the sons of Zeruiah become a satan; Mephibosheth’s unwashed feet and untrimmed beard and Barzillai’s eighty years remain.

Ambiguities preserved

David’s division of the possessions does not resolve which testimony is true. “Ten parts” is retained as Israel’s own claim rather than interpreted mathematically in a note.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Soul, christ, satan, grace, angel of God, table, peace, bless, lord, king, brother, bone, and flesh remain canonical.

Chapter 20

The chapter's movement

Sheba divides Israel, David confines the ten concubines, Amasa delays, Joab murders him, and a wise woman saves Abel by delivering Sheba’s severed head.

Why the JNV reads this way

The political rupture and Joab’s private violence are not euphemized. The wise woman’s appeal is rendered as civic and theological argument, not merely as a plot device.

Vulgate character preserved

The man of Belial, concubines living in widowhood, Joab’s specially hung sword, Amasa’s entrails, blood-covered corpse, ancient Abel proverb, mother in Israel, and head cast through the wall remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult announcement beside Amasa’s body remains close to the Latin: “the one who wished to be in Joab’s place, the companion of David.” The ancient proverb is not expanded with a conjectured missing clause.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Inheritance of the Lord, truth, wise woman, servant, king, priest, scribe, tribute, army, and trumpet remain distinct.

Chapter 21

The chapter's movement

Three years of famine expose Saul’s bloodguilt toward the Gibeonites; seven descendants are crucified, Rizpah guards their bodies, royal bones are buried, and four giant-war episodes close the chapter.

Why the JNV reads this way

The chapter’s difficult causal and judicial claims remain in the same order as the Latin. Rizpah’s long bodily vigil is stated without sentimental addition.

Vulgate character preserved

The expiation, crucifixion “to the Lord,” Michal’s five sons, birds and beasts, stolen bones, three-hundred-ounce spearhead, two lions of Moab, Adeodatus striking Goliath, and twenty-four digits remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The source’s naming of Michal and its Goliath attribution are not conformed to another textual tradition. “At the side” in the burial location remains geographically nonspecific.

Corrections made in review

At 21:14, “in the side” became “at the side,” removing an unintended bodily image while preserving the source’s spatial wording.

Terms carried forward

Oracle, house of blood, expiation, inheritance of the Lord, crucify, oath, concubine, propitiated, salvation, and lamp of Israel remain.

Chapter 22

The chapter's movement

David’s great song moves from mortal enclosure to divine descent, deliverance, moral testimony, empowerment for battle, victory over peoples, and praise among the nations.

Why the JNV reads this way

The song is arranged as poetry but keeps all fifty-one Clementine verse divisions. Parallel clauses retain their recurrence, and future, past, and declarative forms follow the Latin rather than being regularized into one tense.

Vulgate character preserved

The crushings of death, torrents of Belial, realm of the dead, smoke from God’s nostrils, sifting waters, spirit of fury, justice, immaculate way, bronze bow, contradictions of the people, and foreign sons remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The shifts of tense and person are not normalized. “With the perverse, you will be perverse” and foreign sons who both resist and obey remain as the Clementine song gives them.

Corrections made in review

At 22:6, the snares now “overtook” David; at 22:19, “my enemy came upon me” clarifies the preceding subject; at 22:46, the foreign sons are “confined within their straits.”

Terms carried forward

Lord, mighty God, savior, salvation, soul, realm of the dead, justice, judgment, fortitude, mercy, christ, seed, and forever remain canonical.

Chapter 23

The chapter's movement

David’s final oracle joins divine speech, righteous rule, dawn, covenantal hope, and judgment; the narrative then honors the three, the water of Bethlehem, Benaiah, and the full company of valiant men.

Why the JNV reads this way

The oracle remains poetry and the roster remains terse prose. Proper names are Anglicized consistently, but descriptive phrases already embedded in the Clementine text are translated rather than replaced by names from another edition.

Vulgate character preserved

The christ of the God of Jacob, eternal pact, most tender little worm of wood, eight hundred slain, lentil field, water poured to the Lord, two lions of Moab, Egyptian worthy of spectacle, and thirty-seven total remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult relation of David’s house to the eternal pact at 23:5 remains syntactically close to the Latin. The extraordinary description at 23:8 is not normalized into a conventional warrior’s name.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Spirit of the Lord, word, christ, fear of God, pact, salvation, transgressor, valiant, soul, adore, and Lord retain their established meanings.

Chapter 24

The chapter's movement

The Lord’s fury moves David to number Israel; David confesses; three judgments are offered; pestilence kills seventy thousand; mercy restrains the angel; and costly sacrifice propitiates the land.

Why the JNV reads this way

The source’s agency is stated directly in 24:1 and not transferred to an unnamed intermediary. David’s choice, the angel’s action, divine mercy, Araunah’s offer, and David’s refusal of costless worship remain distinct.

Vulgate character preserved

Nine months and twenty days, eight hundred thousand Israelites, five hundred thousand Judeans, seven famine years, seventy thousand dead, Araunah the king, fifty silver shekels, holocausts, and peace offerings remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation between divine anger, David’s movement, David’s sin, and the people’s suffering is not resolved by editorial theology in the reader text. “Appointed time” remains unspecified.

Corrections made in review

No correction was required.

Terms carried forward

Fury of the Lord, sin, iniquity, mercy, angel of the Lord, adore, altar, holocaust, peace offering, propitiated, plague, and land close the book in established JNV language.

First Kings — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

David’s age and Abishag’s service frame Adonijah’s attempted accession, Nathan and Bathsheba’s intervention, and Solomon’s public anointing.

Governing Latin

The repeated royal and oath vocabulary governs the chapter; the first divine `Dominus` at 1:17 receives the book’s sole parenthetical identification, “the Lord (YHWH).”

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation retains Abishag sleeping in David’s bosom, Adonijah’s fifty men, Solomon riding the king’s mule, and the altar’s horns.

Ambiguities preserved

Nathan’s coordinated speeches are presented as political action without adding a moral verdict or attributing knowledge the Latin does not state.

Clarity decisions

Rapid changes of speaker are marked with direct quotation, and kinship and office titles remain explicit.

Corrections and reasons

The initial draft required no substantive correction after Latin and adjacent-verse review.

Canonical terminology

King, lord, servant, throne, kingdom, swear, altar, and adore follow the established JNV distinctions.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

David charges Solomon and dies; Solomon consolidates the kingdom through judgments upon Adonijah, Abiathar, Joab, and Shimei.

Governing Latin

`Custodias`, `præcepta`, `judicia`, and `testimonia` preserve the charge’s covenantal texture, while judicial blood language governs the executions.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader retains David’s descent toward the realm of the dead, Joab’s grasp of the altar, and Shimei’s blood returning upon his own head.

Ambiguities preserved

Bathsheba’s request for Abishag is not explained beyond Solomon’s own interpretation of it as a claim reaching toward the kingdom.

Clarity decisions

The Latin comparative at 2:32 is rendered “two just men, better than himself,” preserving its moral judgment without awkward duplication.

Corrections and reasons

“Two men more just and better” was refined to “two just men, better than himself” for accurate, natural comparison.

Canonical terminology

Soul, mercy, truth, justice, judgment, realm of the dead, house, throne, and kingdom carry forward prior-book forms.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Solomon’s marriage alliance and worship at Gibeon lead to his request for a docile heart and the judgment that reveals divine wisdom in him.

Governing Latin

`Cor docile`, `sapientia`, `intellectus`, and `judicium` are kept distinct: a receptive heart receives wisdom for judgment.

Vulgate-specific readings

The thousand holocaust victims, peace victims, divine appearance in sleep, and sword demanded before the two women remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The women’s social designation and the dead child’s exchange are stated without euphemism or invented background.

Clarity decisions

The final recognition that God’s wisdom was “in him to do judgment” remains concrete rather than becoming a generalized compliment.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required after review.

Canonical terminology

Holocaust, victim, adore, mercy, truth, justice, wisdom, understanding, and judgment retain their canonical values.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter inventories Solomon’s officers, districts, provisions, territorial peace, wisdom, sayings, songs, and international renown.

Governing Latin

Administrative titles, quantities, geographic boundaries, and the repeated breadth of Solomon’s wisdom govern the English syntax.

Vulgate-specific readings

The JNV preserves Judah and Israel’s multitude “like the sand of the sea,” forty thousand stable stalls, and three thousand proverbs with 1,005 songs.

Ambiguities preserved

Titles whose precise modern office is uncertain remain functional rather than being recast as an anachronistic bureaucracy.

Clarity decisions

Long officer and provision lists are punctuated for navigation while every name and numerical unit remains attached to its verse.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Prince, prefect, scribe, recorder, priest, household, wisdom, peace, and tribute are used consistently.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Hiram and Solomon establish the timber and labor arrangements by which cedar, stone, and human labor are prepared for the temple.

Governing Latin

`Domus nomini Domini`, treaty language, compulsory labor, and exact workforce totals govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation retains the Sidonians' special skill with timber, monthly labor rotations, and the 3,300 overseers.

Ambiguities preserved

The economic and political character of the arrangement is reported without either praising or condemning it beyond the narrative.

Clarity decisions

The Latin `absque` constructions are rendered according to sense—"besides" for overseers and "beyond" for uncountable sacrifice elsewhere—not mechanically as negation.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required after numeric and boundary review.

Canonical terminology

House, name of the Lord, peace, pact, servants, tribute, cedar, and dressed stone remain stable.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Solomon constructs the temple, its chambers, oracle, cherubim, doors, courts, and gold covering under a conditional divine promise.

Governing Latin

Measurements, architectural relations, materials, and the paired verbs for walking in statutes and keeping judgments control the rendering.

Vulgate-specific readings

The fourth year and month Ziv, the eighty-cubit textual dimensions as given, the ten-cubit cherubim, and the seven-year construction remain untouched.

Ambiguities preserved

Where the Latin's architectural perspective is compressed, the English clarifies grammar but does not reconstruct a floor plan from another source.

Clarity decisions

Repeated dimensions and directional relations are expressed in complete English while keeping the source's technical sequence.

Corrections and reasons

No numerical or substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Temple, house, oracle, sanctuary, cherubim, cubit, court, statute, judgment, and precept retain fixed meanings.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Solomon’s palace complex is described before Hiram fashions the temple’s bronze pillars, sea, bases, lavers, and golden vessels.

Governing Latin

Technical nouns, measurements, repeated decorative forms, and material changes between bronze and gold determine the translation.

Vulgate-specific readings

Jachin and Boaz, the twelve oxen beneath the sea, the three-thousand-bath capacity, and the Clementine inventory are preserved.

Ambiguities preserved

Obscure ornamental and mechanical descriptions remain as precise as the Latin permits without borrowing a reconstructed apparatus from another edition.

Clarity decisions

Long object descriptions are segmented by punctuation, but repetitions that help identify corresponding parts are retained.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required after measurement and object-name review.

Canonical terminology

Porch, pillar, capital, network, pomegranate, sea, base, laver, altar, and sanctuary remain differentiated.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The ark enters the temple; Solomon blesses the assembly, dedicates the house in a comprehensive prayer, sacrifices, and celebrates fourteen days.

Governing Latin

`Fœdus`, `misericordia`, `pactum`, penitential language, hearing from heaven, and repeated prayer toward the house shape the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The poles’ visible ends, the cloud filling the house, “firmament” as God’s heavenly dwelling, doing penance, and 22,000 oxen with 120,000 sheep are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult spatial relation of the ark’s poles remains governed by the Clementine sentence rather than a modern architectural reconstruction.

Clarity decisions

The emphatic cognate `Ædificans ædificavi` is rendered idiomatically as “I have surely built,” preserving force rather than reproducing broken English.

Corrections and reasons

“Building, I have built” became “I have surely built”; the change preserves Latin emphasis while restoring readable English.

Canonical terminology

Covenant, pact, mercy, truth, justice, judgment, do penance, firmament, holocaust, and peace victim retain governed forms.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The Lord renews the conditional promise, Solomon and Hiram settle accounts, and Solomon’s building, labor, fleet, and tribute are summarized.

Governing Latin

The paired conditions of integrity and apostasy, consecration of the divine name, and administrative accounting govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The twenty cities called Cabul, the 120 talents of gold, surviving Canaanite labor, and Ophir’s 420 talents remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

Hiram’s displeasure and the etymological force of Cabul are reported only as far as the Latin reports them.

Clarity decisions

The divine warning retains second-person shifts and the house becoming a proverb and byword without smoothing their severity.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Pact, precept, statute, judgment, consecrate, name, throne, kingdom, tribute, and holocaust remain consistent.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The queen of Sheba tests Solomon, praises his wisdom and God’s justice, and the narrative catalogs his wealth, throne, trade, and military abundance.

Governing Latin

Wonder, wisdom, justice, gold weights, luxury goods, and repeated superlatives govern the elevated but exact register.

Vulgate-specific readings

The JNV retains 666 talents, three hundred minas on each buckler, elephants’ teeth, apes, peacocks, and Solomon’s unparalleled throne.

Ambiguities preserved

Rare imported goods are translated by the Clementine lexical tradition rather than replaced through alternate textual conjectures.

Clarity decisions

Catalogs are kept sumptuous and rhythmic while weights and counts remain independently auditable.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required after numeric and luxury-goods review.

Canonical terminology

Wisdom, justice, blessing, throne, talent, mina, gold, ivory, chariot, and horse remain stable.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Solomon’s foreign loves turn his heart toward idols; the Lord announces division, raises adversaries, and Jeroboam receives Ahijah’s torn-garment sign.

Governing Latin

Heart-turning, pact and precept, tearing language, idolatrous names, and the conditional promise to Jeroboam control the translation.

Vulgate-specific readings

Seven hundred wives, three hundred concubines, the named gods and high places, and the twelve pieces of Ahijah’s garment are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The narrative’s political and theological causal links are stated without reducing divine agency or human responsibility to a system not supplied by the Latin.

Clarity decisions

The cognate intensifier `disrumpens scindam` becomes “I shall surely tear apart,” preserving emphatic certainty in natural English.

Corrections and reasons

“Tearing apart, I shall tear apart” was corrected to “I shall surely tear apart” to preserve emphasis without an English calque.

Canonical terminology

Pact, precept, statute, command, heart, kingdom, servant, seed, and adore follow the JNV canon.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Rehoboam rejects the elders, the kingdom divides, civil war is halted by prophecy, and Jeroboam establishes rival calves and worship.

Governing Latin

Counsel, yoke, service, revolt, fulfillment of the divine word, and manufactured worship govern the chapter’s contrasts.

Vulgate-specific readings

The little finger thicker than the father’s back, scorpions, Israel’s tents, and Jeroboam’s self-made priests and feast remain unsoftened.

Ambiguities preserved

The word’s divine turning and Rehoboam’s culpable rejection of counsel stand together without explanatory reconciliation.

Clarity decisions

The crude comparative image is translated directly, and repeated counsel speeches remain deliberately parallel.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Counsel, yoke, servant, king, house, kingdom, altar, priest, adore, and holocaust remain consistent.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

A man of God condemns Bethel’s altar, refuses royal hospitality, is deceived by an old prophet, dies by a lion, and is mourned and buried.

Governing Latin

Word, command, sign, altar, disobedience, and the repeated prohibition on eating, drinking, and returning by the same way organize the narrative.

Vulgate-specific readings

Josiah is named in advance, ashes pour from the split altar, the lion stands beside the corpse and donkey, and the old prophet requests burial beside him.

Ambiguities preserved

The old prophet’s lie and subsequent true oracle remain juxtaposed without a narrator-supplied theory of prophetic inspiration.

Clarity decisions

Speaker identifications are explicit so the reported divine commands, deception, and later oracle cannot be confused.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required after quotation and adjacent-verse review.

Canonical terminology

Man of God, prophet, word of the Lord, sign, altar, holocaust, command, and sepulcher remain stable.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Jeroboam’s disguised wife receives Ahijah’s judgment; the child dies; Jeroboam and Rehoboam’s reigns close under apostasy and invasion.

Governing Latin

Disguise and recognition, house and seed, exterminating judgment, sin, and royal annal formulas govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The explicit phrase “one who pisses against the wall,” dung swept away, dogs and birds consuming the dead, effeminate men, and Shishak’s plunder are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The child alone receiving burial because something good was found in him remains as the oracle states it, without expansion.

Clarity decisions

Harsh bodily and judgment language is translated plainly; the disguise sequence is punctuated to keep knowledge and recognition clear.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

House, seed, sin, provoke, idols, sepulcher, kingdom, temple, and effeminate men carry governed forms.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Abijam’s brief reign yields to Asa’s reforms and war with Baasha, while Nadab’s fall fulfills judgment upon Jeroboam’s house.

Governing Latin

Heart, lamp, right and depraved conduct, removal of idols, and dynastic extermination shape the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The JNV retains the effeminate men, Maacah’s Priapus and most filthy image, Asa’s diseased feet, and the destruction of every living soul in Jeroboam’s house.

Ambiguities preserved

Asa’s heart being perfect while high places remain is left in the narrative’s own tension.

Clarity decisions

Cultic obscenity is neither generalized nor embellished; the Latin object and evaluative description remain visible.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Heart, lamp, justice, sin, idols, high place, soul, prophet, king, and house remain consistent.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Jehu condemns Baasha; Elah, Zimri, Omri, and Ahab succeed through assassination, civil division, and increasing evil.

Governing Latin

House-destruction formulas, provocation, annal notices, and escalating comparisons of evil govern the compressed succession.

Vulgate-specific readings

The bodily extermination formula, Zimri’s seven-day reign and palace fire, Omri’s purchase of Samaria, and Hiel’s sons at Jericho’s foundations and gates are preserved.

Ambiguities preserved

The Clementine 16:7 clause naming Jehu after “he killed him” is retained rather than silently rewritten according to another textual tradition.

Clarity decisions

A semicolon marks the appositional turn at 16:7 while leaving the source’s difficult agency visible for readers and auditors.

Corrections and reasons

The punctuation of 16:7 was refined to prevent its final identification from being swallowed by the preceding causal clause; no party was supplied or removed.

Canonical terminology

Word of the Lord, prophet, house, seed, sin, idols, provoke, kingdom, and reign remain fixed.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

Elijah announces drought, is fed at the torrent, multiplies the widow’s provisions, and restores her son so that she recognizes the truth of his word.

Governing Latin

The oath before the living Lord, command and sustenance, depletion and renewal, soul, and truth govern the miracle sequence.

Vulgate-specific readings

Ravens bring bread and flesh, the flour and oil do not fail, Elijah stretches upon the child three times, and the child’s soul returns into his bowels.

Ambiguities preserved

`Utcumque sustentor` conveys meager, provisional support; the English does not transform the widow’s poverty into comfortable hospitality.

Clarity decisions

The phrase is rendered “by whom I am sustained, however meagerly,” combining intelligibility with the adverb’s qualifying force.

Corrections and reasons

“By whom I am in some manner sustained” was refined to “by whom I am sustained, however meagerly” for semantic and literary precision.

Canonical terminology

Living Lord, word of the Lord, soul, bowels, truth, prophet, servant, and house remain literal anchors.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

Elijah confronts Ahab and Israel, repairs the Lord’s altar, defeats Baal’s prophets by fire, kills them, and prays until rain returns.

Governing Latin

Divided-heartedness, invocation of names, sacrifice, fire, conversion of heart, slaughter, and rain govern the contest.

Vulgate-specific readings

Obadiah’s hidden prophets, Baal’s 450 and the grove’s 400, blood flowing from self-cutting, twelve stones, the two-furrow channel, and Elijah’s sevenfold watch are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The channel's capacity `quasi per duas aratiunculas` remains a compact comparison to two small furrows rather than an invented modern volume.

Clarity decisions

The prophets' actions and Elijah's mockery are kept in distinct voices; divine fire and subsequent human execution are not conflated.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required after number, agency, and quotation review.

Canonical terminology

Prophet, altar, holocaust, victim, name of the Lord, adore, heart, fire, and soul remain governed.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Elijah flees Jezebel, seeks death, journeys to Horeb, encounters the Lord beyond wind, earthquake, and fire, and calls Elisha.

Governing Latin

Soul, wilderness, zeal, remnant, anointing, gentle breeze, and vocational departure organize the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The hearth-baked bread, forty-day journey, gentle breeze, hand-kissing to Baal, seven thousand remnant, twelve yokes of oxen, and cloak are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The final exchange between Elijah and Elisha remains terse; the translation does not decide more than the Latin says about Elijah's permission.

Clarity decisions

Elisha is described as one of those plowing with the twelve yokes, resolving an English grammatical tangle without changing the source's count.

Corrections and reasons

"One among the twelve yokes of oxen plowing" became "one of those plowing with the twelve yokes of oxen," preserving persons, animals, and number correctly.

Canonical terminology

Soul, prophet, Lord of hosts, zeal, covenant, altar, anoint, remnant, and adore remain stable.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Ben-hadad besieges Samaria, Israel twice defeats Syria, Ahab covenants with the spared king, and a wounded prophet pronounces judgment.

Governing Latin

Boast, deliverance, knowledge of the Lord, numbered forces, covenant, obedience to the divine word, soul-for-soul judgment, and talent weights govern the narrative.

Vulgate-specific readings

The thirty-two kings, 7,000 Israelites, 100,000 Syrians, falling wall upon 27,000, prophet wounded by a lion, and sentence of one talent of silver remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

The disguised prophet’s parable and Ahab’s self-judgment unfold without an explanatory gloss before the revelation.

Clarity decisions

`Subito non comparuit` is rendered “suddenly he was gone,” and `audire contemnens` as “refusing to hear,” preserving sense in idiomatic English.

Corrections and reasons

“Suddenly he did not appear” became “suddenly he was gone”; “despising to hear” became “refusing to hear.” Both correct rigid calques without softening judgment.

Canonical terminology

Soul, word of the Lord, prophet, covenant, peace, servant, king, judgment, and talent remain consistent.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

Ahab covets Naboth’s vineyard; Jezebel engineers false testimony and execution; Elijah announces dynastic judgment; Ahab humbles himself and receives delay.

Governing Latin

Inheritance, possession, fasting, false witness, blessing as a hostile euphemism, blood, dogs, house-destruction, and humiliation govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The letters sealed with Ahab’s ring, sons of Belial and then sons of the devil, “blessed God and king,” stoning, dogs licking blood, and the explicit bodily extermination formula are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

The hostile verb “blessed” remains the Latin’s euphemistic accusation; the translation does not replace it with the opposite verb merely because the plot implies blasphemy.

Clarity decisions

Speaker and letter boundaries are marked carefully so Jezebel’s command, the elders’ compliance, and Elijah’s oracle remain attributable.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required after euphemism, agency, and adjacent-verse review.

Canonical terminology

Inheritance, possess, vineyard, fast, witness, blood, house, soul, do penance, and humble remain fixed.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

Ahab and Jehoshaphat seek Ramoth-gilead; Micaiah discloses the heavenly council and lying spirit; Ahab dies in disguise; the two reign summaries close the book.

Governing Latin

Peace and war, prophetic word, truth and deception, heavenly deliberation, disguise, blood, death, and annal formulas govern the final chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

Four hundred prophets, Micaiah’s scattered sheep, the Lord’s host and lying spirit, the arrow between lung and stomach, dogs licking blood and reins, and the ships shattered at Ezion-geber remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

The heavenly scene is narrated directly without a philosophical gloss that would dissolve either divine sovereignty or the lying spirit’s agency.

Clarity decisions

Extended dialogue is carefully attributed, while the wound anatomy and humiliating aftermath are rendered without euphemism.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required after quotation, name, number, and agency review.

Canonical terminology

Word of the Lord, prophet, spirit, truth, peace, soul, blood, king, kingdom, and adore conclude the book in canonical form.

Second Kings — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Ahaziah consults Beelzebub, Elijah pronounces death, fire consumes two companies, and a humbled third captain survives.

Governing Latin

Repeated consultation, “man of God,” soul, fire, and `morte morieris` control the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The fifty-man companies and heavenly fire remain exact; the first `Dominus` is “the Lord (YHWH).”

Ambiguities preserved

The narrative reports divine and prophetic agency without supplying a moral defense.

Clarity decisions

`Morte morieris` is rendered “shall surely die,” preserving emphasis naturally.

Corrections and reasons

Four rigid death-formula calques in chapters 1 and 8 were corrected as one governed group.

Canonical terminology

Lord, God, angel, man of God, soul, mercy, word, and fire remain stable.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Elijah is taken by whirlwind; Elisha receives his cloak, divides the Jordan, heals waters, and curses mocking boys.

Governing Latin

Taking, seeing, doubled spirit, cloak, ascent, adoration, curse, and healing organize the movement.

Vulgate-specific readings

Fiery chariot and horses, fifty searchers, little boys, two bears, and forty-two torn children remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The “doubled spirit” is not expanded into an inheritance theory absent from the Latin.

Clarity decisions

Repeated departures and arrivals remain parallel so the geography and testing are audible.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Soul, spirit, prophet, master, cloak, adore, curse, and name of the Lord follow prior books.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Three kings march against Moab, receive water through Elisha, devastate the land, and withdraw after Mesha’s sacrifice.

Governing Latin

Covenant, deliverance, water, ditch, sacrifice, holocaust, and indignation govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

One hundred thousand lambs and rams, command to ruin fields, and Mesha’s firstborn as holocaust remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

The source of the “great indignation in Israel” is not identified beyond the Latin.

Clarity decisions

The harpist episode and water oracle retain their sequence and prophetic agency.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Covenant, prophet, Lord of hosts, sacrifice, holocaust, and deliver remain differentiated.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Oil rescues a widow; a Shunammite receives and regains a son; poison is healed; and bread feeds one hundred.

Governing Latin

Vessel, oil, life, soul, bitterness, bodily contact, firstfruits, eating, and remainder recur.

Vulgate-specific readings

The child’s warmth and seven yawns, wild gourds, flour, twenty barley loaves, and surplus remain concrete.

Ambiguities preserved

The woman’s “All is well” stands without being labeled deception or faith.

Clarity decisions

Speaker changes and the resuscitation sequence are rendered action by action.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Man of God, soul, adore, firstfruits, servant, Sabbath, and word of the Lord remain stable.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Naaman is cleansed through humble obedience, confesses Israel’s God, requests earth and pardon, and Gehazi inherits leprosy.

Governing Latin

Cleanse, wash seven times, blessing, holocaust, victim, adore, peace, heart, seed, and leprosy govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The two-mule earth load, Rimmon request, and Gehazi’s projected purchases remain unnormalized.

Ambiguities preserved

`Electo terræ tempore` remains “at the chosen time of the land” rather than receiving an imported distance reading.

Clarity decisions

Naaman’s expectation, servants’ reasoning, and Gehazi’s lie are kept in distinct voices.

Corrections and reasons

The difficult 5:19 phrase was reviewed and deliberately retained.

Canonical terminology

Salvation, cleanse, Lord, blessing, holocaust, victim, adore, peace, heart, and seed remain fixed.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Iron floats; Elisha exposes Syrian ambushes; heavenly forces protect him; captured enemies are fed; siege ends in cannibalism and threat.

Governing Latin

Sight and blindness, fear, capture, strike, bread and water, famine, soul, and judgment shape the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

Doves’ dung, mother-and-son cannibalism, sackcloth against flesh, and the king’s threat remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The final speaker’s attribution remains governed by the adjacent Latin context without invented identification.

Clarity decisions

The double opening of eyes and movement into Samaria are kept spatially clear.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Man of God, prophet, Lord, blindness, soul, save, judgment, and famine remain stable.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Elisha predicts abundance; four lepers discover the deserted camp; Samaria plunders it; and the unbelieving commander is trampled.

Governing Latin

Word, measure, stater, sight, eating, soul, good news, and fulfillment govern repetition.

Vulgate-specific readings

The heavenly floodgates, Hittite and Egyptian kings, five remaining horses but two sent, and price ratios remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

The five-versus-two horse sequence is not harmonized away.

Clarity decisions

Repeated oracle wording is retained so fulfillment can be heard verbatim.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Word of the Lord, soul, good news, measure, stater, gate, and servant remain consistent.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The Shunammite’s land is restored; Hazael hears and enacts Ben-hadad’s death; Judah’s kings bind themselves to Ahab’s house.

Governing Latin

Life, restoration, illness, weeping, sure death, lamp, revolt, and royal annals govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Forty camel-loads, wet blanket murder, pregnant women ripped open, and overlapping royal synchronisms remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Elisha’s “You shall recover” and revelation of death remain adjacent without explanatory reconciliation.

Clarity decisions

The death formula is rendered emphatically while preserving the two statements.

Corrections and reasons

“Dying, he shall die” became “he shall surely die.”

Canonical terminology

Man of God, Lord, restore life, lamp, king, house, and city remain canonical.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Jehu is secretly anointed, acclaimed, kills Joram and Ahaziah, and has Jezebel thrown down and consumed.

Governing Latin

Anoint, avenge blood, peace, fornication, sorcery, burden, field, dogs, and dung drive the narrative.

Vulgate-specific readings

“One who pisses against the wall,” arrow through the heart, painted eyes, trampling, skull, feet, and hands remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Jezebel’s adornment and words are not assigned a motive the Latin does not state.

Clarity decisions

Watchman reports and chariot movements are carefully attributed.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Anoint, king, blood, servant, prophet, peace, fornication, and word of the Lord remain stable.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Jehu destroys Ahab’s descendants, Ahaziah’s brothers, and Baal’s worshipers, yet retains Jeroboam’s calves.

Governing Latin

Head, house, remnant, heart, zeal, deceit, victim, holocaust, soul for soul, and law govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Seventy heads in baskets, forty-two slaughtered at a cistern, eighty guards, and Baal’s temple made latrines remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Divine approval of Jehu’s dynastic act stands beside judgment of his divided heart without harmonizing gloss.

Clarity decisions

Jehu’s deceptive speech is clearly separated from the narrator’s disclosure.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

House, heart, zeal, Lord, victim, holocaust, soul, law, throne, and sin remain fixed.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Athaliah kills the royal seed; Joash is hidden, crowned, covenanted, and enthroned; Athaliah and Baal’s priest die.

Governing Latin

Seed, hiding, watch, testimony, anointing, covenant, people of the Lord, throne, and quiet shape the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

Six hidden years, David’s weapons, the testimony on Joash, and Cherethite-Pelethite companies remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Technical guard placements retain Clementine labels instead of reconstructed equivalents.

Clarity decisions

Three guard divisions and Sabbath rotations are punctuated for navigation.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Royal seed, house of the Lord, covenant, testimony, anoint, throne, altar, and priest remain consistent.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Joash repairs the temple through accountable funds, then empties sacred treasuries to turn Hazael away and is assassinated.

Governing Latin

Money, soul-price, restoration, breaches, good faith, trespass, sin, treasure, and conspiracy govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Twenty-third-year delay, pierced treasury chest, excluded vessels, and assassins’ names remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

The distinct money categories are retained without imposing later financial terminology.

Clarity decisions

Long labor and material lists are segmented without losing their administrative sequence.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Temple, high priest, soul, restoration, sin, consecrated, treasury, and City of David remain stable.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Israel is crushed and partially saved; dying Elisha promises three victories; his bones revive a corpse; lost cities return.

Governing Latin

Fury, imploring the face, savior, salvation-arrow, striking, bones, mercy, pact, and restoration govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Fifty horsemen, ten chariots, ten thousand infantry, arrow ritual, and corpse revival remain literal.

Ambiguities preserved

The unnamed savior is not identified beyond the Latin.

Clarity decisions

The threefold striking and its unrealized alternatives remain numerically explicit.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Savior, salvation, mercy, pact, prophet, man of God, sepulcher, and restore remain canonical.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Amaziah obeys the law in judgment, defeats Edom, challenges Israel, is defeated and later assassinated; Jeroboam restores borders.

Governing Latin

Individual sin, Rock, thistle and cedar, lifted heart, wall breach, affliction, salvation, and restoration govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Joktheel, four-hundred-cubit breach, Jonah of Gath in Opher, and Damascus and Hamath of Judah remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult final territorial wording is not normalized to another historical reconstruction.

Clarity decisions

`Percutiens invaluisti` becomes “You have struck and prevailed.”

Corrections and reasons

The participial calque was corrected while preserving completed victory.

Canonical terminology

Law, sin, heart, king, house, sea, prophet, affliction, and save remain stable.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Azariah’s long reign contrasts with rapid northern assassinations, tribute to Assyria, deportations, and Jotham’s reign.

Governing Latin

High places, leprosy, conspiracy, open killing, pregnant women, tribute, throne, and royal synchronism govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Shallum’s one month, Tiphsah’s ripped-open women, one thousand talents, and named captured regions remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

The king’s `domus libera` is not made a legal status absent from context.

Clarity decisions

It is rendered “a separate house,” making `seorsum` clear.

Corrections and reasons

“Free house” became “separate house” to avoid misleading modern connotations.

Canonical terminology

High place, leper, judgment, conspiracy, throne, talent, shekel, and house remain fixed.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Ahaz passes his son through fire, submits to Assyria, copies Damascus’s altar, and rearranges temple worship.

Governing Latin

Idols, fire, victim, incense, servant and son, pattern, veneration, holocaust, sacrifice, libation, and blood govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Cyrene as deportation destination, the Damascus pattern, bronze altar reserved for royal will, and Sabbath structure remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The architectural term `Musach` remains described by its function without speculative reconstruction.

Clarity decisions

Altars, offerings, blood, bases, laver, sea, and entrances remain individually traceable.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Consecrate, idol, victim, incense, venerate, holocaust, sacrifice, libation, altar, and sea remain distinct.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

Samaria falls and Israel is exiled; the narrator indicts covenant apostasy; imported nations combine fear of the Lord with idols.

Governing Latin

Sin, foreign gods, testimony, hard neck, pact, vanity, host of heaven, transfer, fear, adore, law, and command govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Halah, Habor, Gozan, Median cities, imported peoples and gods, lions, and mixed worship remain fully cataloged.

Ambiguities preserved

Their claimed fear of the Lord and actual non-fear remain in the source's deliberate tension.

Clarity decisions

Jacob is "named Israel," and repeated covenant commands retain their cumulative cadence.

Corrections and reasons

"Surnamed Israel" became contemporary "named Israel."

Canonical terminology

Pact, testimony, precept, ceremony, judgment, law, commandment, fear, adore, and sacrifice remain differentiated.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

Hezekiah reforms worship and resists Assyria; Sennacherib invades; the Rabshakeh publicly attacks Judah's confidence.

Governing Latin

Hope, cling, pact, tribute, confidence, broken reed, adore, deliverance, language, dung, urine, and silence govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Nehushtan, stripped temple doors, three Assyrian titles, two thousand horses, and the bodily siege threat remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The Rabshakeh's claim of divine authorization remains his speech, not a narrator's endorsement.

Clarity decisions

`Syriace` is identified as Aramaic; `eruent liberabit` becomes "shall surely deliver."

Corrections and reasons

The language label and emphatic delivery formula were corrected for accuracy and readability.

Canonical terminology

Pact, hope, confidence, adore, rescue, deliver, temple, king, and servant remain stable.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Hezekiah seeks Isaiah, spreads Sennacherib’s letter before God, receives a poetic oracle, and witnesses Assyria’s destruction.

Governing Latin

Tribulation, blasphemy, living God, remnant, prayer, cherubim, Holy One, pride, sign, root, fruit, zeal, and salvation govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Tirhakah of Ethiopia, ring and bit, three-year agricultural sign, 185,000 dead, and Armenian flight remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The poetic image of fortified cities as ruins of fighting hills remains unexpanded.

Clarity decisions

The bracketed Clementine oracle is presented as continuous divine poetry without editorial brackets in Scripture.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Living God, Lord God, cherubim, Holy One of Israel, remnant, Lord of hosts, zeal, and save remain canonical.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Hezekiah receives fifteen added years and a reversed shadow, then exposes his treasures and hears Babylon’s future judgment.

Governing Latin

Truth, perfect heart, prayer, tears, healing, sign, shadow, house, treasure, eunuch, peace, and truth govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Fig mass on the ulcer, ten lines and ten steps on Ahaz’s sundial, pigments and ointments, and palace eunuchs remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Hezekiah’s response to future exile remains in his own voice without supplied moral assessment.

Clarity decisions

The two Latin measurement nouns for the shadow are preserved as lines and steps.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Truth, perfect heart, prayer, heal, sign, temple, house, peace, and eunuch remain stable.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

Manasseh reverses reform and fills Jerusalem with idolatry and blood; judgment is announced; Amon repeats his way and is killed.

Governing Latin

Idol, host of heaven, fire, augury, name, abomination, measuring line, weight, writing tablet, inheritance, and innocent blood govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Mediums, soothsayers, both ringing ears, tablet erased with a stylus, blood “to the mouth,” and Uzza’s garden remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The tablet image remains materially strange rather than being replaced with a familiar dish metaphor.

Clarity decisions

Wiping, turning, and repeatedly drawing the stylus make the Clementine action intelligible.

Corrections and reasons

The mechanical “erasing, I shall” calque was corrected without changing the image.

Canonical terminology

Idol, adore, name, law, abomination, inheritance, innocent blood, sin, and sepulcher remain fixed.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

Temple repair reveals the law book; Josiah tears his garments; Huldah announces unavoidable judgment but personal peace.

Governing Latin

Money, good faith, restoration, book, law, hearing, wrath, consultation, humbled heart, curse, tears, and peace govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Second Quarter, keeper of garments, unextinguished indignation, and Josiah gathered peacefully before disaster remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Peace at Josiah’s gathering is not harmonized with the manner of death later narrated.

Clarity decisions

Financial custody and the chain of messengers are expressed without modern institutional labels.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

High priest, temple, law, book, wrath, heart, humble, curse, sepulcher, and peace remain stable.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

Josiah renews covenant, destroys cults throughout Judah and Samaria, celebrates Passover, dies, and is followed by compromised sons.

Governing Latin

Covenant and pact, whole heart and soul, twelve signs, effeminate men, defilement, bones, Passover, law, strength, and wrath govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Little houses of effeminate men, sun horses and chariots, Mount of Offense, human bones, and the unparalleled Passover remain.

Ambiguities preserved

`Duodecim signis` remains “the twelve signs” without importing an explanatory zodiac gloss into Scripture.

Clarity decisions

The long destruction catalog is segmented while retaining every object, deity, place, and action.

Corrections and reasons

The rare astronomical and cultic terms were reviewed and deliberately retained.

Canonical terminology

Covenant, pact, precept, testimony, ceremony, heart, soul, strength, Passover, law, and effeminate men remain canonical.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

Babylon dominates Judah; prophetic judgment advances through raiders, exile, plunder, and the appointment of Zedekiah.

Governing Latin

Servitude, rebellion, word of the Lord, innocent blood, appeasement, transfer, captivity, treasure, remnant, and divine anger govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Eighteen-year-old Jehoiachin, ten thousand captives, seven thousand warriors, one thousand craftsmen, and paternal uncle remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

The totals are preserved as separately stated rather than forced into a reconstructed census.

Clarity decisions

Jehoiakim’s death crosses the verse boundary without merging keys.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Word of the Lord, innocent blood, house, treasure, captive, remnant, seed, king, and face of the Lord remain stable.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

Jerusalem falls; Zedekiah is blinded; temple and city burn; leaders die; Gedaliah is killed; Jehoiachin is raised from prison.

Governing Latin

Siege dates, famine, judgment, fire, transfer, temple vessels, priestly offices, royal seed, fear, prison, throne, bread, and allowance govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Zedekiah sees his sons killed, the pillars’ eighteen-cubit height and three-cubit capitals, sixty common men, and Jehoiachin’s daily allowance remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Rare vessel and office names remain close to the Latin without speculative modernization.

Clarity decisions

Siege chronology, escape geography, executions, deportations, and temple inventory remain separately auditable.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction was required.

Canonical terminology

Judgment, temple, house of the Lord, pillar, sea, priest, royal seed, throne, bread, and life close the book consistently.

First Chronicles — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The book moves from Adam through Noah and Abraham, follows Ishmael, Keturah, and Esau, and closes with Edom’s kings and chiefs.

Governing Latin

The compressed sequence of proper names, repeated `filii`, and transitions from descent to territorial rule govern every line.

Vulgate-specific readings

Every Clementine name form, list boundary, Edomite king, city, wife, and chief is retained rather than conformed to another genealogy.

Ambiguities preserved

Bare names are not supplied with relationships where the Latin merely juxtaposes them.

Clarity decisions

Colons and semicolons distinguish parent headings, descendants, and changes of lineage without adding narrative claims.

Corrections and reasons

The ordered-name audit controls this chapter; no name may be modernized when identity is uncertain.

Canonical terminology

Son, sons, born, begot, king, land, city, and chief remain distinct genealogical and political terms.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Israel’s sons lead into Judah, Perez, Hezron, Caleb, Jerahmeel, and their interwoven households, servants, daughters, and settlements.

Governing Latin

`Genuit`, `filii`, `filia`, `soror`, `uxor`, and `concubina` determine the direction and kind of every relationship.

Vulgate-specific readings

The first divine `Dominus` is transparently rendered “the Lord (YHWH)”; Achar as one who violated the anathema remains the Clementine presentation.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed kinship and place-name clauses remain compact when the Latin does not decide whether a label names a person, clan, or settlement.

Clarity decisions

Repeated proper nouns are retained where English pronouns would obscure ancestry.

Corrections and reasons

Kinship direction and singular/plural descendants require verse-level checking; no external genealogy supplies missing links.

Canonical terminology

Lord, son, daughter, sister, wife, concubine, servant, firstborn, and anathema follow established JNV usage.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

David’s sons are ordered by birthplace and mother; Solomon’s royal line then continues through the exile and later descendants.

Governing Latin

Ordinal birth order, maternal identification, `regnavit`, and repeated descent formulas structure the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine succession and postexilic names remain exact even where readers may expect a different spelling or arrangement.

Ambiguities preserved

The text’s terse final generations are not expanded into an inferred chronology.

Clarity decisions

Punctuation separates mothers, sons, and generations so royal descent remains audible without becoming prose commentary.

Corrections and reasons

Maternal attribution and Jerusalem/Hebron group boundaries are treated as consequential and checked independently.

Canonical terminology

Son, firstborn, born, wife, concubine, king, and captivity remain stable.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Judah’s families and settlements unfold through craftsmen, prayer, conquest, pasture, migration, and Simeon’s expansion.

Governing Latin

Naming clauses alternate with occupation, habitation, and conquest; the prayer’s blessing, enlargement, hand, and evil form its spiritual center.

Vulgate-specific readings

The text retains “he who caused the sun to stand,” the “men of Falsehood,” “Secure,” “Burning,” and those “singing and resounding and remaining in tents.”

Ambiguities preserved

Semantic names remain meanings where the Clementine presents meanings, without importing unrelated proper-name solutions.

Clarity decisions

Jabez’s prayer is arranged as direct petition while its conditional movement and bodily fear of evil remain intact.

Corrections and reasons

The unusual semantic-name cluster was deliberately protected from normalization during review.

Canonical terminology

Bless, enlarge, hand, evil, sorrow, seed, pasture, smite, and anathema remain canonical.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Reuben loses firstborn precedence; Joseph receives it while Judah prevails; eastern tribes prosper in war, then fall through infidelity and exile.

Governing Latin

Firstborn right, genealogy, war, trust, prayer, help, transgression, and captivity govern the contrasts.

Vulgate-specific readings

The captured count includes “one hundred thousand human souls,” preserving `animarum hominum` rather than reducing persons to an abstract total.

Ambiguities preserved

Genealogical priority and royal leadership stand together without being collapsed into a single inheritance claim.

Clarity decisions

The parenthetical explanation of Joseph and Judah is kept distinct from the returning Reubenite list.

Corrections and reasons

Military totals, tribal geography, and the agents of exile are retained exactly and not reconciled to parallel accounts.

Canonical terminology

Firstborn, genealogy, soul, trust, prayer, transgress, captive, and spirit remain stable.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Levi’s descent proceeds through the high-priestly line, Levitical families, David’s singers, Aaron’s ministry, and the cities allotted to each clan.

Governing Latin

`Filii`, `genuit`, priestly service, song, standing, ministry, refuge, and possession organize the long chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine’s names, singer lineages, city lists, and allocation formulas remain distinct from other textual arrangements.

Ambiguities preserved

Where repeated place names or compact allotment syntax permits more than one grouping, punctuation clarifies sequence without inventing geography.

Clarity decisions

Genealogy, liturgical office, and territorial allotment are presented as separate movements within the same chapter.

Corrections and reasons

The review treats every city and clan label as independently verifiable content rather than ornamental lists.

Canonical terminology

Priest, high priest, Levite, ministry, song, holocaust, incense, refuge, lot, and possession remain fixed.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The genealogies of Issachar, Benjamin, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, and Asher combine descent with military census, grief, recovery, and territory.

Governing Latin

Sons, chiefs, mighty men, war, number, daughter, sister, mourning, blessing, and possession govern the changes of mode.

Vulgate-specific readings

`Regina peperit Virum decorum` remains “his sister the Queen bore a Handsome Man,” preserving the Clementine’s semantic force.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult royal and handsome-man wording is not replaced by a smoother genealogy drawn from another edition.

Clarity decisions

Ephraim’s bereavement and naming of Beriah are allowed narrative space within the surrounding lists.

Corrections and reasons

The Queen/Handsome Man reading was deliberately retained after targeted semantic review.

Canonical terminology

Son, daughter, sister, queen, mighty man, army, mourning, evil, bless, and possession remain consistent.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Benjamin’s lines converge on Jerusalem, Gibeon, Saul, Jonathan, and the generations descending from them.

Governing Latin

Begetting, firstborn order, household heads, habitation, exile, brothers, and archers structure the genealogy.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine order and spelling of Benjaminite and Saulide descendants remain unharmonized with parallel lists.

Ambiguities preserved

Repeated names are not assumed to identify the same person unless the Latin relationship establishes it.

Clarity decisions

Household and location shifts receive paragraph-like punctuation while every verse remains independently auditable.

Corrections and reasons

The Saul/Jonathan sequence is checked against this Latin chapter itself before cross-book comparison.

Canonical terminology

Firstborn, son, brother, chief, house, dwell, captive, and mighty man remain stable.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

After exile for sin, Israel’s return to Jerusalem is ordered through tribal residents, priests, Levites, gatekeepers, treasurers, singers, and Saul’s ancestry.

Governing Latin

Transgression, captivity, return, ministry, watch, trust, vessels, song, night, day, and habitation govern the restored community.

Vulgate-specific readings

Specific gatekeepers, chambers, utensils, measures, ointments, and recurring duties remain concrete rather than summarized as temple service.

Ambiguities preserved

Overlapping office descriptions are not flattened into a modern administrative chart.

Clarity decisions

Temporal phrases—night, morning, and day by day—are retained to make continual service perceptible.

Corrections and reasons

Numbers, offices, and the repeated Gibeon/Saul genealogy receive separate verification because repetition does not authorize silent alteration.

Canonical terminology

Sin, captivity, priest, Levite, gatekeeper, ministry, trust, vessel, Sabbath, and song remain fixed.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Israel falls before the Philistines; Saul and his sons die; Jabesh-gilead recovers their bodies; and Saul’s unfaithfulness explains the transfer to David.

Governing Latin

Flight, wound, death, head, armor, idols, burial, fasting, iniquity, transgression, hope, and transfer drive the account.

Vulgate-specific readings

Saul’s head is fastened in Dagon’s temple, and his consultation of a woman with a spirit remains explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The narrative’s compressed statement that God killed Saul is not diluted by an explanatory mechanism absent from the Latin.

Clarity decisions

The broken causal sequence of the final two verses is joined in lucid English while both verse keys remain separate.

Corrections and reasons

Agency in Saul’s death and kingdom transfer is preserved rather than softened.

Canonical terminology

Spirit, iniquity, transgress, commandment, hope, fast, idol, and kingdom remain stable.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

All Israel anoints David; Jerusalem is taken; the mighty men and their deeds establish the human strength surrounding his reign.

Governing Latin

Bone and flesh, anointing, shepherding, taking, mighty strength, sword, blood, and renown organize the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The two “ariels of Moab,” the five-cubit Egyptian, and David placing Benaiah “at his ear” remain the Clementine’s concrete formulations.

Ambiguities preserved

`Ariel` is not assigned an imported zoological or heroic gloss; the phrase remains transliterated.

Clarity decisions

Nested warrior exploits are separated by named subjects so agency remains clear aloud.

Corrections and reasons

Measurements, weapon transfers, and the ear-side appointment were protected from familiar parallel renderings.

Canonical terminology

Anoint, shepherd, mighty man, soul, blood, covenant, smite, and save remain canonical.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Warriors join David in exile and at Ziklag; tribal hosts gather at Hebron with an undivided heart to make him king.

Governing Latin

Help, battle, bow, right and left hand, spirit, peace, perfect heart, one heart, eating, and joy recur.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Gadites’ lion-like faces and mountain-swiftness, seasonal Jordan crossing, and exact tribal forces remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

The spirit clothing Amasai is reported without defining the experience beyond the Latin.

Clarity decisions

Long military catalogues retain parallel syntax, while Amasai’s acclamation is set as direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

Tribal totals and descriptions are not reconciled to later census material.

Canonical terminology

Spirit, peace, help, heart, king, brother, battle, bow, and joy remain stable.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

David and Israel bring the ark from Kiriath-jearim; Uzzah dies after touching it; fear interrupts the journey; Obed-edom is blessed.

Governing Latin

Consultation, assembly, ark, name, playing, hand, anger, fear, blessing, and house govern the movement.

Vulgate-specific readings

The new cart, musical instruments, Chidon’s threshing floor, divine striking, and three-month blessing remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

The text’s judgment of Uzzah stands without an added defense or accusation beyond his reaching hand.

Clarity decisions

David’s joy, anger, fear, and altered decision are kept in their narrated sequence.

Corrections and reasons

The ark’s title and the agents handling and receiving it are kept explicit at each transition.

Canonical terminology

Ark, name of the Lord, adore, anger, fear, bless, house, and covenant remain consistent.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

David’s house and family increase; Philistines attack twice; God gives two differently instructed victories; David’s fame spreads.

Governing Latin

Establish, exalt, seek, deliver, break, burn, consult, sound, go out, strike, and fear shape the account.

Vulgate-specific readings

The idols are burned by David’s command, and the sound in the tops of the pear trees remains the tactical sign.

Ambiguities preserved

The unusual tree identification is not silently replaced by another botanical tradition.

Clarity decisions

The two battles retain their repeated consultation-and-answer pattern so the changed command remains visible.

Corrections and reasons

Divine and human agency in both victories is distinguished rather than merged.

Canonical terminology

God, Lord, consult, deliver, smite, idol, fear, kingdom, and name remain stable.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

David prepares a place for the ark, orders Levitical carrying and sanctification, appoints musicians, brings the ark with sacrifice and joy, and is despised by Michal.

Governing Latin

Carry, sanctify, seek according to law, song, voice, mystery, victory, prophecy, joy, sacrifice, and dancing govern the procession.

Vulgate-specific readings

“Mysteries” on harps, a victory song for the octave, and musical prophecy are retained rather than normalized into modern musical labels.

Ambiguities preserved

Technical liturgical terms remain meaningfully unfamiliar where the Latin itself does not explain their performance.

Clarity decisions

Musicians, gatekeepers, carriers, and leaders are distinguished so the procession can be followed without simplifying its order.

Corrections and reasons

Instrumental and performance terms were reviewed as Vulgate vocabulary and not conformed to another edition’s headings.

Canonical terminology

Ark, Levite, sanctify, law, mystery, prophecy, sacrifice, joy, and adore remain fixed.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

The ark is set within its tent; offerings and gifts establish celebration; David appoints continual ministers; and a long psalm calls Israel and all creation to remember, proclaim, and adore.

Governing Latin

Holocaust, peace offerings, blessing, distribution, confession, invocation, covenant, mercy, judgment, salvation, glory, and adoration govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

Each person receives bread, “buffalo meat,” and fried flour; God forbids harm to “my christs”; the recurring agreement is called a pact where the Latin has `pactum`.

Ambiguities preserved

The identity and preparation of `assaturam bubulæ carnis` are not replaced with a familiar food from another tradition.

Clarity decisions

The psalm’s historical memory, universal summons, and concluding petitions remain distinct movements while repeated imperatives are preserved.

Corrections and reasons

“Buffalo meat,” “my christs,” and the pact/covenant distinction were protected as consequential Clementine readings.

Canonical terminology

Holocaust, peace offering, bless, confess, invoke, pact, covenant, mercy, truth, judgment, salvation, christ, and adore remain fixed.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

David desires to build God a house; Nathan receives a contrary word; God promises David a lasting house and son; David answers in humility and praise.

Governing Latin

House, dwell, tent, shepherd, name, seed, son, father, throne, eternity, servant, heart, and blessing govern the oracle and prayer.

Vulgate-specific readings

The promise that David’s seed will be God’s son and that his throne will be established forever remains in the precise sequence of the Latin.

Ambiguities preserved

Immediate royal succession and the promise’s enduring reach are allowed to coexist without an editorially imposed fulfillment scheme.

Clarity decisions

The repeated senses of “house”—dwelling, dynasty, and household—remain visible through context rather than substituted vocabulary.

Corrections and reasons

Pronouns and speakers across the divine oracle and David’s answer are reviewed to prevent David’s house and God’s house from being interchanged.

Canonical terminology

House, seed, son, father, throne, kingdom, servant, heart, mercy, bless, and forever remain canonical.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

David defeats neighboring peoples, receives tribute, dedicates spoils, stations garrisons, executes judgment and justice, and orders his officers.

Governing Latin

Strike, humble, take, consecrate, help, salvation, servant, tribute, judgment, justice, and command structure the victories.

Vulgate-specific readings

The exact horses, chariots, shields, bronze, servants, and dedicated spoils remain as numbered and assigned in the Clementine.

Ambiguities preserved

Administrative titles are rendered according to their stated functions without reconstructing a modern hierarchy.

Clarity decisions

Repeated victory formulas retain divine agency while geographical transitions make separate campaigns intelligible.

Corrections and reasons

Captured totals and the distinction between consecrated material and tribute are kept separate.

Canonical terminology

Save, help, servant, consecrate, judgment, justice, tribute, kingdom, priest, and scribe remain stable.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

David’s kindness to Hanun is misread; envoys are humiliated; Ammon and hired Syrians prepare war; Joab divides his force; Israel prevails twice.

Governing Latin

Mercy, suspicion, shame, hire, battle line, strength, brother, city, help, flight, peace, and service govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The servants’ garments are cut from the buttocks to the feet, and the Syrian hiring amounts and casualty totals remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The princes’ allegation of spying is reported as their interpretation, not endorsed by the narrator.

Clarity decisions

Joab and Abishai’s reciprocal battle plan is rendered with explicit subjects so the two-front action remains clear.

Corrections and reasons

Mercy is retained for David’s intended action, preventing the political kindness from being reduced to generic friendliness.

Canonical terminology

Mercy, servant, brother, help, strengthen, city, peace, smite, flee, and king remain fixed.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Joab ravages Ammon while David remains in Jerusalem; Rabbah falls; its people suffer severe punishment; three Philistine giants are defeated.

Governing Latin

Ravage, siege, crown, gold, precious stone, saw, threshing sledge, drag, cart, cut, crush, giant, and hand govern its severe imagery.

Vulgate-specific readings

The crown belongs to Milcom; Ammonites are cut and crushed with saws, iron-shod threshing sledges, drags, and carts; “Adeodatus son of Saltus the Bethlehemite” and the giant’s twenty-four digits remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The instruments and precise distribution of punishments are not softened or made more definite than the compressed Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Weapon and giant descriptions are kept concrete, while each warrior exploit receives an explicit agent.

Corrections and reasons

The violent verbs and semantic personal names were deliberately retained against euphemism and parallel-text normalization.

Canonical terminology

Holocaust, crown, king, smite, giant, hand, brother, sword, and servant remain stable.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

Satan incites David’s census; Joab objects; wrath follows; David chooses among three punishments; plague kills seventy thousand; mercy halts the angel; sacrifice and heavenly fire establish Ornan’s floor.

Governing Latin

Satan, incite, number, sin, iniquity, sword, pestilence, compassion, mercy, angel, fear, altar, holocaust, peace offering, and fire govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

Israel numbers 1,100,000, Judah 470,000, seventy thousand die, the angel stands between heaven and earth, and David pays six hundred gold shekels of just weight.

Ambiguities preserved

The text places Satan’s incitement beside David’s confession without supplying a philosophical reconciliation of agency.

Clarity decisions

The three punishments and David’s choice are set in parallel form; the angel’s successive locations and commands remain spatially explicit.

Corrections and reasons

`Animarum` language, plague totals, purchase weight, and fire from heaven are retained rather than harmonized to another account.

Canonical terminology

Satan, sin, iniquity, soul, compassion, mercy, angel, altar, holocaust, peace offering, and adore remain fixed.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

David identifies the future temple site, gathers labor and materials, charges Solomon to build, explains why he cannot, and commands Israel’s princes to help.

Governing Latin

House, altar, proselyte, cut, polish, prepare, blood, peace, rest, son, father, throne, prudence, law, heart, soul, and sanctuary govern the charge.

Vulgate-specific readings

Solomon is a “young and tender boy” and shall be called “Peaceful”; David prepares 100,000 talents of gold and one million talents of silver “in my poverty.”

Ambiguities preserved

The enormous material figures are not reduced, recalculated, or labeled hyperbole; `in paupertate mea` remains David’s own paradoxical phrase.

Clarity decisions

The embedded divine oracle is distinguished from David’s surrounding exhortation without breaking its promise sequence.

Corrections and reasons

Peaceful is retained as the supplied semantic explanation for Solomon rather than replaced by an unmarked external etymology.

Canonical terminology

House, altar, holocaust, proselyte, blood, peace, rest, son, father, law, heart, soul, covenant, and sanctuary remain canonical.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

David enthrones Solomon, numbers and assigns the Levites, traces their families, explains their lowered service age, and orders worship, sacrifice, and sanctuary care.

Governing Latin

Number, ministry, oversee, judge, gatekeeper, psalmist, instrument, Holy of Holies, incense, bless, service, confession, song, Sabbath, new moon, and observance structure the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The first census begins at age thirty, the final service count begins at twenty, and David’s four groups of 24,000, 6,000, 4,000, and 4,000 remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The two age thresholds remain side by side and are not silently reconciled.

Clarity decisions

Genealogy and duty lists are separated by syntax; Aaron’s priestly functions remain distinct from Levitical assistance.

Corrections and reasons

The “bread of proposition,” morning and evening confession, and exact age formulas are preserved as Clementine liturgical language.

Canonical terminology

Levite, priest, Holy of Holies, incense, bless, ministry, confess, Sabbath, new moon, holocaust, sanctuary, and covenant remain fixed.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

Aaron’s descendants are divided into twenty-four priestly courses by lot; remaining Levites are listed and likewise assigned without preference for rank.

Governing Latin

Division, priesthood, ministry, family, house, lot, sanctuary, prince of God, rite, greater, lesser, and equality govern the ordering.

Vulgate-specific readings

Sixteen Eleazarite and eight Ithamarite houses form twenty-four courses; “princes of the sanctuary” and “princes of God” remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult house-recording syntax in verse 6 remains a distinction between Eleazar’s and Ithamar’s houses without importing a different allocation formula.

Clarity decisions

The twenty-four lots are punctuated as a continuous ordered sequence, and the later Levitical genealogy is visibly separate.

Corrections and reasons

Ordinal numbers and family affiliation receive exact review because a single displacement would corrupt all following courses.

Canonical terminology

Priesthood, ministry, family, house, lot, sanctuary, prince, rite, greater, and lesser remain stable.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

David and the army commanders appoint prophetic musicians from Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman; 288 teachers are distributed into twenty-four equal courses.

Governing Latin

Set apart, ministry, prophesy, harp, psaltery, cymbal, confess, praise, teach, lot, learned, unlearned, and twelve govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

Musicians “prophesy” through instruments; Heman’s sons exalt the horn; and the Latin states “six” in verse 3 despite displaying five names there.

Ambiguities preserved

The stated six is not silently corrected from another textual form, and prophetic music is not reduced to performance alone.

Clarity decisions

Each lot repeats “his sons and his brothers—twelve” so the total of 288 remains audible and verifiable.

Corrections and reasons

The name-count tension at 25:3 is disclosed and preserved rather than emended.

Canonical terminology

Prophesy, ministry, confess, praise, teach, learned, unlearned, lot, harp, psaltery, and cymbal remain fixed.

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

Gatekeeper families receive directional watches by lot; Levites guard treasuries and dedicated war spoils; others teach, judge, and administer east and west of the Jordan.

Governing Latin

Gatekeeper, watch, lot, east, north, south, west, council, treasury, sacred things, consecrate, restoration, teach, judge, and ministry govern the assignments.

Vulgate-specific readings

The “house of the council of elders,” watch opposite watch, sacred war-spoils for temple restoration, and “external works” of teaching and judgment remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Architectural labels such as cells, ascending road, and council-house are not forced onto a reconstructed temple plan.

Clarity decisions

Directional posts and daily personnel counts are rendered in repeated parallel form.

Corrections and reasons

The westward and Transjordan administrative descriptions are kept as the Latin locates them, without modern map-based revision.

Canonical terminology

Gatekeeper, watch, lot, council, treasury, sacred, consecrate, temple, teach, judge, and ministry remain stable.

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

Twelve monthly army divisions, tribal chiefs, the unfinished census, royal treasuries, agricultural holdings, household officers, counselors, and commanders order David’s kingdom.

Governing Latin

Company, month, enter and depart, commander, tribe, number, wrath, chronicle, treasury, possession, counselor, friend, and army govern the catalogue.

Vulgate-specific readings

Each monthly force numbers 24,000, those under twenty are excluded, and the incomplete wrath-provoking census is omitted from David’s chronicles.

Ambiguities preserved

Titles for estate supervisors retain functional breadth where the Latin does not specify narrower offices.

Clarity decisions

The monthly sequence uses identical syntax; tribal, agricultural, and court administrations are separated into coherent movements.

Corrections and reasons

The difference between the census begun by Joab and these organized forces remains explicit.

Canonical terminology

Army, company, commander, tribe, number, wrath, chronicle, treasury, possession, counselor, and friend remain fixed.

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

David assembles Israel, recounts God’s choice of Solomon, charges wholehearted obedience, delivers the divinely written temple pattern, and commands courage.

Governing Latin

House, rest, footstool, blood, choose, son, father, throne, seek, perfect heart, willing soul, sanctuary, propitiation, pattern, hand, and completion govern the speech.

Vulgate-specific readings

The inner structure includes the “house of propitiation”; the golden vessels include “little lions” and silver “lions”; the cherubim form a chariot veiling the ark.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult `leunculos` and `leones` are retained literally rather than replaced with an object supplied by another edition.

Clarity decisions

The architectural description is grouped by spaces, ministries, vessels, weights, and pattern while preserving every verse boundary.

Corrections and reasons

The strange lion vocabulary is disclosed for further philological control and not silently normalized.

Canonical terminology

House, footstool, blood, son, father, throne, seek, heart, soul, sanctuary, propitiation, ark, and pattern remain canonical.

Chapter 29

Chapter movement

David and Israel give willingly for God’s house; David blesses God as owner and ruler of all; the people sacrifice and rejoice; Solomon is enthroned; David’s reign and sources close the book.

Governing Latin

Habitation, strength, prepare, offer willingly, whole heart, magnificence, power, glory, victory, praise, kingdom, confess, pilgrim, simplicity, perfect heart, adore, anoint, throne, and fullness govern the finale.

Vulgate-specific readings

Antimony-like stones, Parian marble, immense talent totals, David’s statement that the people adore God “and then the king,” and Solomon seated on “the throne of the Lord” remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The statement “there is no abiding” after life’s shadow-like brevity remains compact and is not expanded into a theory of death or hope.

Clarity decisions

David’s prayer moves from praise to creaturely dependence, then to intercession; the concluding enthronement and death notices remain distinct.

Corrections and reasons

At 29:15, “there is no delay” became “there is no abiding,” because contextual `mora` denotes the absence of lasting stay and not postponed action. Material totals, the order of adoration, Solomon’s second anointing, and the three named prophetic records remain unharmonized.

Canonical terminology

Offer, heart, magnificence, power, glory, victory, praise, kingdom, confess, pilgrim, simplicity, adore, anoint, throne, and prophet remain fixed.

Second Chronicles — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Solomon is strengthened, worships at Gibeon, receives wisdom and knowledge, and accumulates chariots, horses, silver, gold, and cedars.

Governing Latin

Strengthen, magnify, covenant, victim, mercy, wisdom, knowledge, heart, soul, substance, glory, and kingdom govern the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The first divine `Dominus` is “the Lord (YHWH)”; Solomon asks to “enter and depart,” and God names the souls of his haters among gifts not requested.

Ambiguities preserved

Coa remains a supplied place-name without being replaced by an alternate trade reading.

Clarity decisions

The long address to Israel’s officers is punctuated as one command and departure sequence.

Corrections and reasons

No review correction is presently required; horse and chariot totals remain the Clementine’s.

Canonical terminology

Lord, God, covenant, victim, mercy, wisdom, knowledge, heart, soul, and glory remain stable.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Solomon organizes labor, asks Hiram for materials and a master craftsman, explains the temple’s worship, and confirms the proselyte workforce.

Governing Latin

House, name, consecrate, incense, proposition, holocaust, Sabbath, new moon, solemnity, learned, carve, measure, and proselyte govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Juniper and pine accompany cedar; the offerings include twenty thousand cors and twenty thousand sata; 153,600 proselytes are counted.

Ambiguities preserved

Hiram “my father” remains an honorific or relational formulation without invented genealogy.

Clarity decisions

The heavens-of-heavens argument distinguishes God’s uncontainability from the house’s liturgical purpose.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; all labor totals and materials remain exact.

Canonical terminology

House, name, consecrate, incense, bread of proposition, holocaust, Sabbath, new moon, solemnity, and proselyte remain fixed.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Solomon lays the temple foundations, adorns the greater house and Holy of Holies, makes cherubim and veil, and raises Jachin and Boaz.

Governing Latin

Foundation, former measure, portico, height, refined gold, marble, Holy of Holies, wing, veil, oracle, chain, and pillar govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The portico is 120 cubits high; golden nails weigh fifty shekels each; the Holy of Holies is covered with about six hundred talents.

Ambiguities preserved

Chains “in the oracle” remain where the Latin locates them without importing another architectural reconstruction.

Clarity decisions

Each five-cubit cherub wing is described separately so the twenty-cubit span remains auditable.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; unusual dimensions remain unnormalized.

Canonical terminology

Temple, house, Holy of Holies, oracle, cherub, veil, refined gold, cubit, talent, and shekel remain stable.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The bronze altar, cast sea, basins, courts, pillars, furnishings, lamps, tables, and golden vessels complete the temple work.

Governing Latin

Bronze, sea, ox, palm, basin, wash, lampstand, court, cauldron, fleshhook, net, proposition, rite, censer, and mortar govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The sea holds three thousand measures; the court is a `basilica`; and the final list includes golden “little mortars.”

Ambiguities preserved

The ox engravings beneath the sea and technical entablature vocabulary remain close to the compressed Latin.

Clarity decisions

The right/left distribution of basins, lampstands, and tables is kept in repeated parallel form.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; “great court” conveys the architectural `basilica` in context.

Canonical terminology

Altar, holocaust, priest, sea, basin, lampstand, bread of proposition, oracle, rite, and Holy of Holies remain fixed.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Dedicated treasures enter the temple, the ark is carried into the oracle, singers and trumpeters unite, and cloud and darkness fill God’s house.

Governing Latin

Vow, treasury, ark, covenant, sanctuary, victim, cherub, pole, law, sanctify, ministry, confess, mercy, cloud, darkness, and glory govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Only two Horeb tablets are in the ark; one hundred twenty priests sound trumpets; the poles are visible before the oracle but not from outside.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation of singers, sons, brothers, instruments, and eastern position remains syntactically layered rather than simplified.

Clarity decisions

The long musical sentence culminates only when confession begins and the cloud fills the house.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; darkness is retained rather than softened to luminous mist.

Canonical terminology

Ark, covenant, sanctuary, oracle, Holy of Holies, law, sanctify, ministry, confess, mercy, cloud, and glory remain stable.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Solomon names the darkness, blesses Israel, recounts the Davidic promise, and prays for judgment, forgiveness, rain, foreigners, war, captives, and royal mercy.

Governing Latin

Darkness, name, throne, house, pact, mercy, heart, law, heaven, prayer, propitious, sin, justice, soul, salvation, christ, and mercies govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

God dwells in darkness; the ark contains the pact; the foreigner adores; returning captives use whole heart and whole soul; Solomon ends with God’s christ.

Ambiguities preserved

The promise’s immediate royal frame and enduring reach are not resolved by editorial theology.

Clarity decisions

Repeated “hear from heaven” petitions retain their conditional sequence and distinct calamities.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; `fœdus` and `pactum` remain covenant and pact rather than being collapsed.

Canonical terminology

Pact, mercy, throne, heart, law, prayer, propitious, sin, judgment, justice, soul, salvation, christ, and adore remain fixed.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Heavenly fire consumes the offerings, worship and feast fill the dedication, God answers with healing promises and warns of uprooting, abandonment, and proverb.

Governing Latin

Fire, devour, holocaust, victim, majesty, glory, adore, mercy, sanctify, solemnity, heart, prayer, penance, justice, judgment, and proverb govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Solomon offers 22,000 oxen and 120,000 rams; dismissal occurs on the twenty-third day; apostasy makes the house both parable and proverb.

Ambiguities preserved

The singular address to Solomon moves into plural national warning without artificial grammatical smoothing.

Clarity decisions

The seven-day dedication, seven-day solemnity, eighth-day gathering, and dismissal remain chronologically distinct.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; fury, penance, and adoration remain explicit.

Canonical terminology

Fire, holocaust, victim, majesty, glory, adore, mercy, solemnity, prayer, penance, justice, judgment, and proverb remain stable.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Solomon consolidates cities and labor, relocates Pharaoh’s daughter, orders recurring worship, preserves Davidic divisions, and receives Ophir gold.

Governing Latin

Build, fortified, dominion, stock, tribute, warrior, sanctify, ark, holocaust, Sabbath, new moon, feast, rite, ministry, gatekeeper, and treasury govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Palmyra stands in the wilderness; surviving Canaanite descendants become tributaries; 250 chiefs train the people; Ophir yields 450 talents.

Ambiguities preserved

The reason Pharaoh’s daughter cannot dwell in David’s house is reported in Solomon’s own sacred-geography logic without added judgment.

Clarity decisions

The three annual solemnities and daily offices are arranged as liturgical sequences rather than a generalized summary.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; proselyte labor and Israelite military status remain distinct.

Canonical terminology

Dominion, stock, tribute, sanctify, ark, holocaust, Sabbath, new moon, solemnity, rite, ministry, gatekeeper, and treasury remain fixed.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The Queen of Sheba tests Solomon, praises his wisdom and God, and departs; the chapter then displays wealth, throne, fleets, empire, death, and records.

Governing Latin

Riddle, heart, wisdom, astonishment, spirit, blessed, throne, judgment, justice, gold, glory, little lion, gift, dominion, and sleep govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The queen has no spirit left from astonishment; annual gold is 666 talents; golden spears, a grove-planted armory, apes, peacocks, and forty thousand stable horses remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The armory “planted with a grove” retains the Clementine imagery while the Forest of Lebanon house remains a distinct named structure.

Clarity decisions

The queen’s speech preserves progression from report, sight, and surpassed fame to blessing and royal justice.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; “little lions” intentionally corresponds with First Chronicles’ unusual lion vocabulary.

Canonical terminology

Heart, wisdom, blessed, throne, judgment, justice, glory, gift, dominion, prophet, seer, and sleep remain stable.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Rehoboam rejects merciful counsel, threatens heavier servitude, fulfills the prophetic word, and loses Israel after Hadoram’s death.

Governing Latin

Yoke, servitude, burden, counsel, merciful words, luxury, loins, scourge, scorpion, petition, inheritance, house, tribute, and withdrawal govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The young counselors are reared in luxury; Rehoboam’s smallest finger exceeds his father’s loins; Israel tells David to “feed your own house.”

Ambiguities preserved

God’s will in the king’s refusal stands without eliminating Rehoboam’s chosen harshness.

Clarity decisions

The elders’ counsel, youths’ counsel, and repeated public answer remain verbally parallel.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; the bodily comparison and stoning remain unsoftened.

Canonical terminology

Yoke, servitude, burden, counsel, mercy, heart, inheritance, house, tribute, king, and will of God remain stable.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

God halts civil war; Rehoboam fortifies Judah; priests and seekers migrate south; the kingdom strengthens briefly; wives, children, and succession are arranged.

Governing Latin

Brother, word, will, wall, storehouse, armory, priesthood, demon, calf, heart, seek, wife, concubine, son, daughter, and chief govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Jeroboam appoints priests for demons and calves; Rehoboam has eighteen wives, sixty concubines, twenty-eight sons, and sixty daughters.

Ambiguities preserved

Mahalath and Abihail remain named in the compact marriage syntax without forcing a relationship absent from the sentence.

Clarity decisions

The fortified-city catalogue remains a single geographical movement, distinct from priestly migration and household succession.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; the final statement that Rehoboam sought many wives remains grammatically open.

Canonical terminology

Brother, word of the Lord, priesthood, demon, heart, seek, wife, concubine, son, daughter, and chief remain fixed.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Rehoboam abandons the law; Shishak invades; king and princes humble themselves; limited help preserves Judah; treasures are lost; Rehoboam dies.

Governing Latin

Law, sin, fortified, prophet, forsake, just, humble, help, fury, service, treasure, shield, wrath, good work, heart, and seek govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Shishak brings Libyans, Troglodytes, and Ethiopians; divine fury would “drip” by Shishak’s hand; good works remain in Judah.

Ambiguities preserved

Partial deliverance and continuing servitude stand together without being presented as complete restoration.

Clarity decisions

The golden-to-bronze shield exchange remains a repeated palace procession rather than merely a material loss.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; Naamah’s Ammonite identity and all regnal numbers remain exact.

Canonical terminology

Law, sin, prophet, forsake, just, humble, help, fury, service, treasure, wrath, good work, heart, and seek remain stable.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Abijah confronts Jeroboam with David’s salt pact and Judah’s ordered worship; encircled Judah cries out, and Israel suffers catastrophic defeat.

Governing Latin

Kingdom, pact of salt, lord, servant, Belial, heart, priest, order, holocaust, law, trumpet, hope, hand, and humility govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Forces number 400,000 and 800,000, with 500,000 fallen; a priest fills his hand with one bull and seven rams; Jeroboam dies after the Lord strikes him.

Ambiguities preserved

Jeroboam’s death is retained in this chapter’s chronology without being conformed to Kings.

Clarity decisions

Abijah’s political, dynastic, and liturgical claims remain one escalating speech before the ambush is disclosed.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; “sons of Belial,” salt pact, and extreme totals remain explicit.

Canonical terminology

Pact, lord, servant, heart, priest, Levite, holocaust, law, trumpet, hope, humble, and hand remain fixed.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Asa removes foreign worship, builds during peace, and defeats Zerah’s million-man Ethiopian army through invocation and trust.

Governing Latin

Good, pleasing, foreign worship, grove, seek, law, peace, fortify, shield, spear, trust, invoke, help, terror, destruction, and spoil govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Judah and Benjamin field 580,000; Zerah brings one million and three hundred chariots; the victors take an “infinite multitude” of livestock.

Ambiguities preserved

The Lord striking and “his army” battling remain adjacent without overidentifying the possessive beyond context.

Clarity decisions

Asa’s prayer preserves the contrast between few and many and ends with a human being not prevailing against God.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; the million-man force is retained exactly.

Canonical terminology

Seek, law, commandment, peace, trust, invoke, help, terror, destruction, spoil, and Lord remain stable.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Azariah’s Spirit-borne prophecy urges courage; Asa purges idols, gathers seekers, renews covenant under oath and death sanction, removes Maacah, and receives rest.

Governing Latin

Spirit, seek, forsake, true God, teaching priest, law, distress, reward, prophecy, idol, covenant, heart, soul, oath, execration, and rest govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The covenant threatens death from least to greatest; Maacah’s grove contains an image of Priapus, which is shattered and burned at Kidron.

Ambiguities preserved

The prophecy’s future days without God, priest, or law are not assigned an extratextual historical period.

Clarity decisions

The oath, execration, whole-heart seeking, finding, and surrounding rest remain one causal sequence.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; Priapus and the death sanction remain unsoftened.

Canonical terminology

Spirit, seek, forsake, priest, law, reward, prophecy, idol, covenant, heart, soul, oath, execration, and rest remain fixed.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Asa purchases Syrian aid, repurposes Ramah’s materials, rejects Hanani’s rebuke, persecutes people, trusts physicians, and dies amid extravagant rites.

Governing Latin

Covenant, agreement, trust, escape, believe, perfect heart, foolishness, war, seer, stocks, illness, physician, aromatic, ointment, and extravagance govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Asa kills many people after imprisoning the seer; he trusts medical art rather than seeking God; his bed contains “harlots’ ointments.”

Ambiguities preserved

The unusual ointment phrase remains bodily and morally charged without inventing a funeral recipe.

Clarity decisions

Two treaties, two trust objects, and the escaped Syrian army remain distinctly attributed.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; the severe royal retaliation and funeral extravagance remain.

Canonical terminology

Covenant, agreement, trust, believe, heart, war, prophet, seer, illness, physician, aromatic, and ointment remain stable.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

Jehoshaphat fortifies Judah, rejects the Baals, sends teachers with the law, receives fear-protected peace, and displays immense organized forces.

Governing Latin

Strengthen, garrison, first ways, hope, commandment, gift, infinite riches, glory, heart, teach, law, fear, consecrate, and army govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Arabs bring 7,700 rams and goats; Jehoshaphat builds houses “like towers”; named forces total more than one million.

Ambiguities preserved

The enormous military catalogue remains Chronicles’ own account and is not recalculated from other books.

Clarity decisions

Teachers, priests, legal instruction, foreign tribute, construction, and army divisions are rendered as discrete movements.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; “consecrated to the Lord” remains Amasiah’s defining military description.

Canonical terminology

Hope, commandment, gift, riches, glory, heart, teach, law, fear of the Lord, consecrate, and army remain fixed.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

Jehoshaphat joins Ahab, four hundred prophets promise victory, Micaiah reveals scattered Israel and the heavenly council, and Ahab dies from an uncertain arrow.

Governing Latin

Affinity, sacrifice, consult, prophet, prosperity, hate, word, throne, horn, adjure, shepherd, lord, deceive, lying spirit, truth, prison, help, and wound govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Zedekiah’s iron horns “winnow” Syria; Israel’s sheep “have no lords”; the lying spirit receives permission to deceive; the arrow strikes between neck and shoulders.

Ambiguities preserved

Divine authorization, spiritual deception, prophetic culpability, and human choice are reported without philosophical harmonization.

Clarity decisions

Micaiah’s initial ironic answer, the king’s adjuration, and the true vision are separated by speaker cues.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; “room within a room” and the small ration remain concrete.

Canonical terminology

Prophet, word of the Lord, throne, shepherd, lord, spirit, falsehood, truth, prison, help, wound, and peace remain stable.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Jehu rebukes Jehoshaphat’s friendship with the impious; the king recalls Judah, establishes judges, and orders faithful adjudication under priestly and royal heads.

Governing Latin

Help, impious, friendship, wrath, good works, heart, seek, judge, judgment, fear, diligence, iniquity, person, gift, law, ceremony, justification, and high priest govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Judgment is not human but the Lord’s and “returns upon” the judges; God has neither acceptance of persons nor desire for gifts.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact manner in which judgment returns upon judges is not expanded into a separate doctrine.

Clarity decisions

Legal questions—law, commandment, ceremonies, and justifications—remain differentiated.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; royal and divine jurisdictions remain distinct.

Canonical terminology

Help, impious, wrath, good works, heart, seek, judge, judgment, fear, iniquity, gift, law, ceremony, justification, and high priest remain fixed.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Facing invasion, Judah fasts and prays; Jahaziel promises God’s battle; singers lead; enemies destroy one another; Judah gathers spoil, blesses, rejoices, then later loses an allied fleet.

Governing Latin

Fast, implore, seed, friend, sanctuary, sword of judgment, possession, eye, Spirit, battle, help, believe, confess, mercy, ambush, blessing, joy, fear, peace, friendship, and covenant govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The opening oddly repeats Ammonite identity; three days are required to strip the dead; the place becomes the Valley of Blessing; Ahaziah’s covenant destroys the ships.

Ambiguities preserved

The Lord turns “their ambushes” against themselves without a reconstructed battlefield mechanism.

Clarity decisions

Prayer, oracle, adoration, march, song, self-destruction, spoil, return, reign notice, and failed alliance remain sequential.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; “confess to the Lord” and singers in companies remain.

Canonical terminology

Fast, implore, seed, friend, sanctuary, judgment, possession, Spirit, battle, help, believe, confess, mercy, bless, joy, fear, peace, and covenant remain stable.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

Jehoram murders his brothers, embraces Ahab's ways, loses Edom and Libnah, receives Elijah's letter, suffers invasion and family loss, and dies through intestinal dissolution.

Governing Latin

Firstborn, sword, pact, lamp, rebel, fornication, transgress, plague, spirit, substance, belly, vital organs, bowel, wasting, intestine, and sepulcher govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Both sons named Azariah remain; Elijah sends a written oracle; Jehoram's vital organs emerge day by day, and after two years he expels his intestines.

Ambiguities preserved

The phrase joining the end of disease and life is rendered for intelligibility without concealing the bodily horror.

Clarity decisions

Political revolt, religious causation, prophetic sentence, invasion, and disease remain distinct stages.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; no euphemism replaces the bowel judgment or rejected funeral burning.

Canonical terminology

Firstborn, sword, pact, lamp, fornication, transgress, plague, spirit, substance, disease, vital organs, intestine, and sepulcher remain fixed.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

Ahaziah follows Ahab's house, joins wounded Jehoram, falls under Jehu's purge, and leaves Athaliah to destroy royal seed while Joash is secretly preserved.

Governing Latin

Youngest, king, mother, impious, counsel, wound, visit, will of God, anoint, destroy, seek, whole heart, stock, nurse, bedchamber, high priest, sister, and hide govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Ahaziah begins at age forty-two; his meeting with Jehu is God's will against him; Joash is stolen into a bedchamber and hidden six years.

Ambiguities preserved

The forty-two-year age remains the Clementine's and is not corrected by genealogy or Kings.

Clarity decisions

The repeated Jehoram/Ahaziah identities are explicitly titled to prevent royal confusion.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; preservation of Joash does not obscure the killing of the remaining royal stock.

Canonical terminology

King, mother, impious, counsel, will of God, anoint, destroy, seek, heart, stock, nurse, high priest, sister, and hide remain stable.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

Jehoiada covenants with commanders, organizes Sabbath watches, crowns and anoints Joash, removes Athaliah, destroys Baal’s house, renews covenant, and restores ordered worship.

Governing Latin

Covenant, pact, sanctify, watch, weapon, temple, diadem, testimony, law, anoint, bless, treason, neck, people of the Lord, altar, holocaust, gladness, song, gatekeeper, and throne govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The child receives diadem, testimony, and law; guards hold daggers; Athaliah is seized at the neck and killed at the Horse Gate.

Ambiguities preserved

Sabbath companies entering and departing remain densely layered where the Latin describes overlapping watches.

Clarity decisions

Covenant with commanders, pact with king, and covenant making the people the Lord’s retain their separate Latin terms and moments.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; royal adoration is not inserted where the Latin supplies blessing and acclamation.

Canonical terminology

Covenant, pact, sanctify, watch, testimony, law, anoint, bless, altar, holocaust, song, gatekeeper, and throne remain fixed.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

Joash restores the temple under Jehoiada, gathers infinite money, renews vessels and offerings, then accepts princely adoration, abandons God, kills Zechariah, suffers Syrian judgment, and is assassinated.

Governing Latin

Restore, repair breaches, testimony, sacred, money, infinite, support, scar, ministry, holocaust, adore, sin, wrath, prophet, Spirit, clothe, mercy, require, judgment, vengeance, and sepulcher govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Athaliah’s family adorned the shrine of the Baals with temple goods; the wall has a “scar”; the Spirit “clothes” Zechariah; a tiny Syrian force defeats an infinite multitude.

Ambiguities preserved

Jehoiada’s burial praise “with Israel and with his house” retains the pronoun’s compact reference without importing a new title.

Clarity decisions

The money chest’s repeated emptying and return is rendered as a daily controlled procedure.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; Joash's remembered mercy failure, Zechariah's final demand, and ignominious judgments remain.

Canonical terminology

Restore, testimony, sacred, ministry, holocaust, adore, sin, wrath, prophet, Spirit, mercy, judgment, vengeance, and sepulcher remain stable.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

Amaziah executes his father's killers but spares their sons, dismisses hired Israelites, defeats Edom brutally, adopts Edomite gods, rejects prophecy, provokes Israel, loses Jerusalem's treasures, and is assassinated.

Governing Latin

Perfect heart, sin, family, hire, strength, help, flight, trust, rock, adore, incense, counsel, pride, fall, will of the Lord, wall, hostage, ambush, and sepulcher govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Ten thousand captives are thrown from a rock and "all burst apart"; a hundred talents are forfeited; four hundred cubits of Jerusalem's wall fall; the loot includes "sons of hostages."

Ambiguities preserved

The compressed hostage phrase remains close to the Clementine rather than being normalized to Kings' simpler wording.

Clarity decisions

The dismissed army's retaliatory raid is kept distinct from Amaziah's Edomite campaign.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; God's will in Amaziah's defeat does not erase his pride or rejected counsel.

Canonical terminology

Heart, sin, family, help, trust, adore, incense, counsel, pride, will of the Lord, hostage, ambush, and sepulcher remain fixed.

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

Uzziah seeks God, wins wars, builds, farms, and equips a vast army; strength lifts his heart, he invades priestly office, receives forehead leprosy, and dies separated.

Governing Latin

Seek, understand, see God, help, gift, victory, tower, cistern, agriculture, army, machine, strength, heart, destruction, neglect, incense, ministry, contempt, leprosy, plague, separate, and judge govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Zechariah "understood and saw God"; Uzziah is devoted to agriculture; diverse machines cast arrows and great stones; leprosy arises while he threatens priests.

Ambiguities preserved

The relationship of Uzziah's divine help and technical ingenuity remains narrative rather than mechanistically explained.

Clarity decisions

Agricultural, architectural, military, and priestly movements are separated without reducing the catalogue.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; forehead leprosy and burial in the field of royal sepulchers remain exact.

Canonical terminology

Seek, help, gift, agriculture, army, strength, heart, destruction, incense, ministry, contempt, leprosy, plague, and judge remain stable.

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

Jotham follows his father’s right actions without entering the temple, builds gates, cities, fortresses, and towers, defeats Ammon, directs his ways, and dies.

Governing Latin

Right, temple, sin, high gate, wall, city, forest, fortress, tower, fight, silver, grain, strengthen, direct, battle, and work govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Ammon’s tribute includes one hundred talents and ten thousand cors each of wheat and barley, repeated in the second and third years.

Ambiguities preserved

The people’s continuing sin stands beside Jotham’s personal rightness without an invented account of reform.

Clarity decisions

The doubled age and reign notices remain where the Latin repeats them.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; repeated tribute and regnal data remain uncompressed.

Canonical terminology

Right, temple, sin, city, fortress, tower, fight, strengthen, direct, battle, work, and reign remain fixed.

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

Ahaz practices fiery rites, loses armies and captives, watches Ephraim release and tenderly restore prisoners, suffers new invasions, seeks Assyria, deepens apostasy, and dies dishonored.

Governing Latin

Fire, rite, sacrifice, deliver, slaughter, captive, infinite spoil, cruelty, heaven, sin, servant, mercy, fury, naked, clothe, anoint, care, help, contempt, ruin, vessel, incense, and sepulcher govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Ahaz “purifies” sons in fire; 120,000 die in one day; 200,000 women and children are captured; released captives are clothed, shod, fed, anointed, and carried to Jericho.

Ambiguities preserved

The ritual verb for Ahaz’s sons remains the Clementine’s purification language without concealing fire or importing a named deity.

Clarity decisions

Oded’s rebuke, Ephraimite intervention, military release, bodily care, and return to Samaria remain separate acts and agents.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; Judah “stripped of help” and the gods becoming ruin remain.

Canonical terminology

Fire, rite, sacrifice, captive, spoil, cruelty, sin, servant, mercy, fury, anoint, help, contempt, ruin, incense, and sepulcher remain stable.

Chapter 29

Chapter movement

Hezekiah reopens the temple, calls Levites to sanctify it, completes a sixteen-day cleansing, restores vessels, offers national expiation, renews Davidic music, and receives abundant willing worship.

Governing Latin

Open, restore, sanctify, cleanse, impurity, sanctuary, sin, fury, crime, covenant, minister, worship, incense, holocaust, proposition, expiation, instrument, adore, fill hands, praise, peace offering, libation, and ministry govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Judah was delivered to commotion, destruction, and hissing; the cleansing takes sixteen days; Levites are sanctified by an easier rite than priests.

Ambiguities preserved

“It pleased them that this be done suddenly” remains the chapter’s own explanation of the rapid restoration.

Clarity decisions

The four sets of seven sin offerings, blood sequence, musical sequence, and voluntary totals remain separately countable.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; “fill your hands to the Lord” remains consecratory language.

Canonical terminology

Sanctify, cleanse, sanctuary, sin, fury, covenant, minister, worship, incense, holocaust, proposition, expiation, adore, praise, peace offering, libation, and ministry remain fixed.

Chapter 30

Chapter movement

Hezekiah summons divided Israel to a delayed Passover; some mock and some humble themselves; impurity is removed; the ritually unready eat; prayer heals the breach; joy extends the feast another week.

Governing Latin

Passover, law, remnant, return, harden neck, give hand, sanctuary, mercy, pious, merciful, one heart, idol, sanctify, holocaust, propitious, placate, peace offering, praise, proselyte, blessing, and prayer govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Passover occurs in the second month; Levites sacrifice for the unsanctified; Hezekiah asks that lesser sanctification not be imputed; the Lord is “placated” toward the people.

Ambiguities preserved

The cross-verse prayer at 18–19 retains separate verse keys without severing the petition.

Clarity decisions

The initial seven days, added seven days, royal offerings, princely offerings, and priestly sanctification remain ordered.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; “give your hands to the Lord” and “spoke to the heart” preserve the Latin images.

Canonical terminology

Passover, law, remnant, mercy, sanctuary, sanctify, holocaust, propitious, peace offering, praise, proselyte, bless, and prayer remain stable.

Chapter 31

Chapter movement

Israel destroys remaining cult sites, Hezekiah orders priestly divisions and royal offerings, firstfruits and tithes become heaps, storehouses and distributors are appointed, and faithful provision sustains worship.

Governing Latin

Image, grove, high place, altar, division, office, holocaust, peace offering, confess, Sabbath, new moon, law, firstfruits, tithe, sacred, vow, heap, bless, faithful, Holy of Holies, sanctified food, worship, ceremony, and prosper govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

The heaps are laid from the third to seventh month; distribution includes a three-year-old threshold, both sexes, and field-based Aaronite males.

Ambiguities preserved

The “apart from” distribution clauses remain layered where different registries overlap.

Clarity decisions

Contributions, storage, oversight, city distribution, family registration, and final evaluation remain distinct.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; tithes of vowed sacred things remain separate from ordinary produce.

Canonical terminology

Office, holocaust, peace offering, confess, Sabbath, new moon, law, firstfruits, tithe, sacred, vow, bless, faithful, Holy of Holies, worship, ceremony, and prosper remain fixed.

Chapter 32

Chapter movement

After Hezekiah’s faithfulness Sennacherib besieges Judah, mocks God, and is destroyed by an angel; Hezekiah receives wealth, illness, sign, pride, humility, testing, and honored burial.

Governing Latin

Faithfulness, fountain, wall, armor, heart, arm of flesh, help, trust, deceive, blasphemy, angel, disgrace, save, rest, sign, benefit, exalted heart, wrath, humble, substance, wonder, test, forsake, mercy, and sepulcher govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Sennacherib’s sons come from his own womb; Hezekiah fails to repay benefits; God forsakes him to test and expose his heart; he is buried above David’s sons’ sepulchers.

Ambiguities preserved

God’s temporary forsaking for testing is not weakened or expanded into abandonment beyond the episode.

Clarity decisions

The Assyrian speech retains its argument from other gods before the narrative identifies those gods as human handiwork.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; the Gihon waters are diverted underground and “his mercies” remain the record’s wording.

Canonical terminology

Faithfulness, heart, flesh, help, trust, blasphemy, angel, save, rest, sign, benefit, wrath, humble, substance, wonder, test, forsake, mercy, and sepulcher remain stable.

Chapter 33

Chapter movement

Manasseh exceeds pagan abominations, is chained to Babylon, performs great penance, is heard and restored, removes idols and reforms worship; Amon rejects this reverence and dies by conspiracy.

Governing Latin

Abomination, high place, grove, adore, army of heaven, fire, dream, augury, malefic art, magician, enchanter, image, law, ceremony, judgment, seduce, chain, fetter, distress, prayer, penance, restore, know, peace offering, praise, contempt, and revere govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Manasseh practices malefic arts, is bound with chains and fetters, does “very great penance,” and then knows that “the Lord himself was God.”

Ambiguities preserved

Sacrifice on high places after reform is explicitly directed to the Lord, leaving its irregularity visible without equating it with former idolatry.

Clarity decisions

Sin, warning, captivity, penance, answered prayer, fortification, removal, worship, and written records remain sequential.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; Amon’s failure to revere God’s face as Manasseh did remains the decisive contrast.

Canonical terminology

Adore, fire, augury, malefic art, law, ceremony, judgment, chain, distress, prayer, penance, restore, know, peace offering, praise, contempt, and revere remain fixed.

Chapter 34

Chapter movement

Josiah seeks God, purges worship, repairs the temple, hears the discovered law, receives Huldah's judgment and mercy oracle, reads publicly, strikes covenant, and enforces the pact.

Governing Latin

Seek, cleanse, image, grave, priest, restore, faithful, law, money, fury, drip, curse, prophetess, soften heart, humble, revere, weep, peace, covenant, commandment, testimony, justification, soul, adjure, pact, and abomination govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Idol fragments scatter on worshipers' tombs; priestly bones burn on altars; fury "drips"; Huldah lives in Jerusalem's Second Quarter; the king strikes covenant and adjures the people.

Ambiguities preserved

"Melted down" money follows the same `conflare` rendering used in JNV Second Kings and is not silently replaced by a modern accounting assumption.

Clarity decisions

Repair report, book discovery, reading, garment tearing, embassy, two-part oracle, public reading, covenant, and pact remain distinct.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; the language is harmonized with the Latin parallel in Second Kings while Chronicles' details remain.

Canonical terminology

Seek, cleanse, faithful, law, fury, curse, prophetess, heart, humble, revere, peace, covenant, commandment, testimony, justification, soul, adjure, pact, and abomination remain stable.

Chapter 35

Chapter movement

Josiah orders an unparalleled Passover, supplies immense offerings, restores ordered ministries, then rejects God's word through Necho, is mortally wounded, and becomes the subject of enduring lamentation.

Governing Latin

Passover, priest, office, Levite, instruction, sanctify, ark, ministry, family, sacrifice, holocaust, peace offering, prophet, law, worship, mouth of God, wound, mausoleum, mourn, lamentation, mercy, and record govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Josiah provides 30,000 flock animals and 3,000 oxen; Levites flay holocausts; Necho's warning is "from the mouth of God"; Jeremiah mourns especially.

Ambiguities preserved

Necho's divine commission is allowed to stand without evaluating his broader kingship or campaign.

Clarity decisions

Sacrificial preparation, cooking, distribution, priestly delay, singer/gatekeeper provision, and completion remain temporally ordered.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; male and female singers' repeated lamentation "as though a law" remains.

Canonical terminology

Passover, priest, office, Levite, sanctify, ark, ministry, sacrifice, holocaust, peace offering, prophet, law, worship, wound, mourn, lamentation, mercy, and record remain fixed.

Chapter 36

Chapter movement

Judah's last kings are removed, renamed, chained, and exiled; leaders pollute God's house and mock messengers; Chaldeans destroy without mercy; the land keeps seventy years of Sabbath; Cyrus commands rebuilding and ascent.

Governing Latin

King, condemn, chain, abomination, paternal uncle, blush, mouth of the Lord, adjure, harden neck and heart, transgress, pollute, messenger, rise by night, admonish, spare, scorn, healing, mercy, sanctuary, Sabbath, desolation, fulfill, spirit, proclaim, build, and ascend govern.

Vulgate-specific readings

Jehoiachin begins at age eight; Zedekiah does not blush before Jeremiah; God sends messengers while "rising by night"; there is no healing; the land Sabbaths seventy years.

Ambiguities preserved

The final "let him ascend" remains an open summons rather than receiving a narrative completion absent from the book.

Clarity decisions

The four last reigns, pollution, repeated warning, destruction, exile, sabbatical fulfillment, and Cyrus's proclamation remain compressed but distinct.

Corrections and reasons

No substantive correction is presently required; the Clementine's eight-year age remains deliberately unharmonized with Second Kings' eighteen.

Canonical terminology

Chain, abomination, heart, transgress, messenger, spare, scorn, healing, mercy, sanctuary, Sabbath, desolation, fulfill, spirit, proclaim, build, and ascend remain stable.

Ezra — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Cyrus’s decree reopens the road to Jerusalem; awakened households rise, neighbors supply them, and the temple vessels return under Sheshbazzar.

Governing Latin

`suscitavit Dominus spiritum` retains the Lord’s active stirring, while `traduxit vocem` is rendered as causing a proclamation to pass through the kingdom.

Vulgate-specific readings

The inventory preserves twenty-nine knives, cups “of a second kind,” the stated total of 5,400 vessels, and the transmigration of Babylon.

Ambiguities preserved

The relationship between the itemized subtotal and the stated grand total is not silently repaired; both belong to the received Latin.

Clarity decisions

The decree’s nested commands are punctuated as direct royal speech, and the repeated location “in Jerusalem” remains audible.

Corrections and reasons

No required semantic correction remained after source-pair review; familiar parallel wording was not allowed to override this text.

Canonical terminology

House and temple remain contextual renderings of `domus` and `templum`; voluntary offering, goods, livestock, vessels, and transmigration remain distinct.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The returned community is counted by families, towns, ministries, servants, animals, and offerings, then resettles in its cities.

Governing Latin

The repeated `filii`, `viri`, and numerical clauses are translated in their original sequence, preserving whether a line names sons or men.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Nathinim, the Tirshatha, the learned and perfect priest, 42,360 assembly total, 200 singers, and the gold solidi and silver minas remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The list’s internal totals are reported rather than reconciled; `Sancto sanctorum` is retained literally as Holy of Holies in the food restriction.

Clarity decisions

Semicolons and paragraph breaks guide the long register without turning Scripture into a modern table or detaching numbers from names.

Corrections and reasons

Every ordered name and quantity was checked against the Latin rows; none was normalized merely to match another biblical census.

Canonical terminology

Seed, fathers' house, genealogy, priesthood, Levite, singer, gatekeeper, Nathinim, and priestly garment follow established JNV usage.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Israel gathers as one, restores the altar and liturgical calendar, begins the temple foundation, and mingles joy with remembered grief.

Governing Latin

`holocaustum` remains holocaust, `confessio` confession, and the idiom `opus diei in die suo` becomes "the work of each day upon its day."

Vulgate-specific readings

The peoples' terror accompanies—not prevents—the altar's restoration, and the unbuilt temple stands alongside already-restored sacrifice.

Ambiguities preserved

The comparison of former and present foundations remains syntactically compressed, reflecting the elders' simultaneous sight and memory.

Clarity decisions

Liturgical recurrence is deliberately retained, while explicit subjects distinguish builders, overseers, priests, Levites, and people.

Corrections and reasons

No correction was required; the emotional collision of loud weeping and loud joy was kept without smoothing it into one response.

Canonical terminology

Altar, law, solemnity, Tabernacles, new moons, perpetual holocaust, gift, confession, mercy, and temple remain stable.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Rejected collaborators obstruct Judah, imperial accusations portray Jerusalem as rebellious, and Artaxerxes forcibly suspends the work.

Governing Latin

The Syriac-document notice and epistolary frame are retained, as are the fiscal triad `tributum`, `vectigal`, and `annuos reditus`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The accusers are "mindful of the salt" eaten in the palace; the prohibition is enforced "with arm and strength."

Ambiguities preserved

Administrative names and ethnonyms remain transliterated, and the letter's "perhaps" in the future royal authorization is not suppressed.

Clarity decisions

Quotation boundaries distinguish the accusers' cover letter, the accusation itself, and the king's reply across continuing verses.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained; imperial chronology was not harmonized beyond what the Clementine chapter itself states.

Canonical terminology

Temple, house, counsel, accusation, judgment, tribute, tax, revenue, peace, and the River retain consistent legal-historical force.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Prophetic speech restarts construction; Tattenai investigates, the elders testify to judgment and restoration, and Darius is asked to search the archive.

Governing Latin

`oculus Dei` stays the eye of God, `lapide impolito` unpolished stone, and `crescit in manibus eorum` preserves the work growing in their hands.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Jews call themselves servants of the God of heaven and earth and identify Cyrus here as king of Babylon within their report.

Ambiguities preserved

Verse 4's first-person "we answered" remains, despite the surrounding official narration, because the Latin shifts person directly.

Clarity decisions

The full administrative letter is framed as quoted testimony, with nested royal words marked distinctly.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after speaker, agency, and archival-reference review.

Canonical terminology

Prophet, temple, wrath, hand, captivity, prince, foundation, authority, and house of God remain continuous with earlier books.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Darius finds Cyrus's decree, funds and protects the work, threatens violators, and witnesses the completed temple, dedication, and Passover.

Governing Latin

The sixty-cubit height and width, three stone courses, royal treasury, daily provisions, and impalement-like punishment follow the Latin particulars.

Vulgate-specific readings

The offender is fastened to a timber taken from his own house, which is then confiscated; Darius invokes divine destruction against interference.

Ambiguities preserved

The sequence “Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes” remains intact, as does the designation “king of Assyria” at the festival’s close.

Clarity decisions

The decree, narrative fulfillment, dedication inventory, and Passover are separated by clear paragraph and quotation transitions.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained; historical or architectural alternatives from other editions were not substituted.

Canonical terminology

Victim, holocaust, oblation, rite, dedication, sin, Passover, solemnity, Unleavened Bread, purification, and transmigration are preserved.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Ezra’s priestly lineage and disciplined heart introduce his commission, vast royal authorization, and thanksgiving for divine mercy.

Governing Latin

`scriba velox` is “swift scribe,” while Ezra investigates, does, and teaches the law in the exact threefold progression of verse 10.

Vulgate-specific readings

The king’s letter retains the tabernacle in Jerusalem, royal fisc, salt without measure, immunity from provisions, and four possible judgments.

Ambiguities preserved

“The wisdom of your God that is in your hand” remains a concrete document-and-wisdom image rather than an abstract paraphrase.

Clarity decisions

Ezra’s genealogy is allowed to run into its grammatical subject, and the long edict is punctuated without weakening its legal imperatives.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after genealogy, quantity, speaker, and fiscal-vocabulary review.

Canonical terminology

Law, commandment, judgment, ceremonies, sacrifice, libation, ministry, mercy, hand of God, priest, and scribe remain stable.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Ezra numbers the returning families, recruits ministers, fasts for protection, entrusts sacred wealth, travels safely, and delivers all by weight.

Governing Latin

Every name and company total follows the Latin order; `virum doctissimum` is “a most learned man,” and `viam rectam` a straight way.

Vulgate-specific readings

The two gleaming bronze vessels are beautiful as gold; sacred assets are weighed at departure and arrival; the final officers “elevated” the people and house.

Ambiguities preserved

The twelve priestly chiefs are named alongside Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten brothers without forcing the syntax into a different headcount.

Clarity decisions

Repeated “with him” clauses preserve census rhythm, while quotation marks clarify Ezra’s reason for declining a military escort.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after ordered-name, number, weight, journey-date, and custody-chain review.

Canonical terminology

Genealogy, Nathinim, ministry, fast, affliction, hand, fury, holy, treasury, holocaust, sin, satrap, and substance remain consistent.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The princes report intermarriage; Ezra tears his garments and hair, gathers the fearful, and confesses Israel’s guilt and endangered remnant.

Governing Latin

`semen sanctum` remains holy seed, `confusio vultus` confusion of face, `paxillus` a peg, and `sepes` a hedge.

Vulgate-specific readings

The land is filled “from mouth to mouth” with defilement, and Ezra asks whether wrath will reach consummation and erase the saved remnant.

Ambiguities preserved

The prophetic prohibition is presented as Ezra’s composite citation without assigning it to one earlier verse or flattening its Vulgate phrasing.

Clarity decisions

The prayer’s long causal structure remains cumulative but receives punctuation that makes confession, mercy, command, and question audible.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained; the prayer’s corporate identification with guilt was not changed into detached accusation.

Canonical terminology

Abomination, holy seed, transgression, sacrifice, iniquity, offense, mercy, salvation, commandment, inheritance, and justice remain stable.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Public weeping becomes covenant action: the assembly confesses, establishes an inquiry, and records those implicated in foreign marriages.

Governing Latin

`si est pœnitentia` remains “if there is penance,” `percutiamus fœdus` “let us strike a covenant,” and `dederunt manus` “gave their hands.”

Vulgate-specific readings

The decree includes casting out wives and those born from them, confiscation and exclusion for absence, trembling from both sin and rain, and a ram for offense.

Ambiguities preserved

The role of the men who “stood over” the matter is not expanded into opposition or endorsement beyond the Latin wording.

Clarity decisions

The final register preserves every verse boundary, repeated name, family heading, and the closing notice that some women had borne children.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after covenant, penance, legal-process, ordered-name, and family-status review; the severe account is neither softened nor endorsed editorially.

Canonical terminology

Penance, covenant, commandment, law, adjuration, confession, offense, wrath, assembly, transmigration, priest, Levite, singer, and gatekeeper remain stable.

Nehemiah — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Nehemiah receives Jerusalem’s ruin, mourns, confesses Israel’s sin, recalls the promise of gathering, and asks mercy before the king.

Governing Latin

`pactum et misericordiam` remains pact and mercy; ears, eyes, face, name, strength, and hand preserve the prayer’s concrete theology.

Vulgate-specific readings

The extremities of heaven and Nehemiah’s office as royal cupbearer remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The twentieth year is not supplied with an unstated monarch in verse 1.

Clarity decisions

The report and prayer receive direct-speech boundaries while the long confession remains cumulative.

Corrections and reasons

The first divine `Dominus` is identified once as “the Lord (YHWH)”; no other semantic correction remained.

Canonical terminology

Pact, mercy, commandment, ceremonies, judgments, confession, sin, servant, redemption, and name remain stable.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Artaxerxes authorizes Nehemiah, who inspects Jerusalem secretly, rallies the builders, and rejects hostile claims.

Governing Latin

`quasi languidus` is “appeared faint,” and the good hand of God, Dragon Spring, and king’s forest remain literal images.

Vulgate-specific readings

The queen sits beside the king; the tower, future house, aqueduct, and mounted inspection retain their particulars.

Ambiguities preserved

Tobiah remains an Ammonite “servant,” and Jerusalem’s opponents lack portion, justice, and memorial.

Clarity decisions

Nehemiah’s silent prayer interrupts the royal dialogue without being expanded into invented words.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after route, speaker, office, and agency review.

Canonical terminology

Hand, mercy, prosperity, reproach, magistrate, noble, governor, justice, and memorial remain distinct.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Priests, families, tradespeople, rulers, women, Levites, Nathinim, and merchants repair Jerusalem section by section.

Governing Latin

Repeated `juxta`, `post eum`, and `contra domum suam` retain the spatial chain; doors, locks, bars, bends, and angles remain differentiated.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Hundred-Cubit Tower, perfume-maker, Shallum’s daughters, broad street, strongest angle, prison court, and sellers of secondhand goods remain.

Ambiguities preserved

“They left Jerusalem” at 3:8 and the compact subject at 3:25 are not normalized beyond the Latin.

Clarity decisions

Every builder and section stays attached to its verse and location rather than becoming a modern table.

Corrections and reasons

All ordered names and constructions were checked; no required semantic correction remained.

Canonical terminology

High priest, sanctify, gate, tower, temple, treasury, Nathinim, goldsmith, merchant, and ministry remain stable.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Mockery becomes conspiracy; prayer and vigilance answer it, and builders labor armed under a trumpet signal.

Governing Latin

The wall’s closing “scar,” rubble, withdrawing labor strength, one-handed work, and stars marking the day’s end remain concrete.

Vulgate-specific readings

The fox “will leap over” the wall, warnings come ten times, and each person strips only for washing.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult syntax of workers, carriers, and loaders at 4:17 is preserved without inventing separate companies.

Clarity decisions

Direct speech identifies Sanballat, Tobiah, Judah, enemies, and Nehemiah while maintaining urgent cadence.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after weapon, labor, quotation, and adjacent-verse review.

Canonical terminology

Iniquity, sin, reproach, counsel, heart, house, trumpet, guard, and God’s fighting remain consistent.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Debt slavery provokes public protest; Nehemiah orders restitution and models a governorship without extracting provisions.

Governing Latin

Usury, debt, the hundredth part, shaken bosom, governor’s provisions, and daily table amounts follow the Latin.

Vulgate-specific readings

Daughters are bondwomen without means of redemption; one ox, six rams, birds, and varied wines describe Nehemiah’s table.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise economic force of `centesimum` remains “the hundredth part” rather than an imported rate explanation.

Clarity decisions

Parallel complaints are separated as distinct voices, and the twelve-year retrospect is punctuated explicitly.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after debt, quantity, oath, and agency review.

Canonical terminology

Servitude, redemption, usury, tribute, adjuration, fear of God, mercy, and remembrance remain stable.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Nehemiah resists ambush, rumor, false prophecy, and intimidation; the wall is finished while Tobiah’s network persists.

Governing Latin

`percutiamus fœdus` is “strike a pact”; “from your heart” preserves the accusation’s source, and hands remain the image of courage and labor.

Vulgate-specific readings

The temple trap threatens death, Shemaiah is paid, Noadiah is a prophetess, and the wall is completed in fifty-two days.

Ambiguities preserved

“Fell within themselves” retains the unusual response of the surrounding nations.

Clarity decisions

The open letter’s allegation and Nehemiah’s replies have exact quotation boundaries.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after chronology, speaker, kinship, and conspiracy review.

Canonical terminology

Pact, counsel, prophet, temple, sin, oath, hand, fear, work, and remembrance remain stable.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Jerusalem is secured and the returned community is identified through a recovered census and its offerings.

Governing Latin

The register preserves every sons/men label, personal and place name, quantity, office, animal, currency, and garment count.

Vulgate-specific readings

The gates open at the heat of the sun; the city is broad but sparsely housed; 245 singers, 530 tunics, drachmas, and minas remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The broken Levite syntax across verses 42–44 and internal census differences from Ezra are not repaired.

Clarity decisions

Verse boundaries keep dependent list fragments auditable while punctuation makes their continuation visible.

Corrections and reasons

Every ordered list entry and number was checked against the frozen rows; no normalization was admitted.

Canonical terminology

Tirshatha, Holy of Holies, census, seed, priesthood, Nathinim, treasury, singer, and gatekeeper remain stable.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Ezra reads and interprets the law; grief becomes holy joy, and Israel rediscovers and celebrates Tabernacles.

Governing Latin

The ears are “raised” to the book; the people adore prone; fat things, sweet wine, portions, roofs, branches, and rite remain concrete.

Vulgate-specific readings

Nehemiah is identified as Tirshatha, the joy of the Lord is strength, and the feast had not been kept “thus” since Joshua.

Ambiguities preserved

The Levites both make silence and interpret; neither function is collapsed into the other.

Clarity decisions

Platform names, responsive “Amen,” instructions, and feast discovery are punctuated for oral clarity.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after names, botanical terms, chronology, and quotation review.

Canonical terminology

Law, priest, scribe, sanctified day, adore, solemnity, tabernacle, assembly, and rite remain consistent.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Fasting Israel confesses creation, election, exodus, wilderness, conquest, rebellion, divine mercy, servitude, and renewed covenant.

Governing Latin

Fire of the Chaldeans, striking covenant, right judgments, withdrawing shoulder, consumption, fat land, and bodily subjection remain visible.

Vulgate-specific readings

The law is read four times and confession offered four times; a head is appointed for return to servitude “as though through contention.”

Ambiguities preserved

Pact at 9:32 and covenant at 9:8 and 9:38 preserve the Latin `pactum/fœdus` distinction.

Clarity decisions

One continuous quotation carries the historical prayer through the covenant signature statement at verse 38.

Corrections and reasons

Quotation closure was fixed at 9:38 after the structural read; no semantic correction remained.

Canonical terminology

Seed, covenant, pact, mercy, compassion, law, ceremony, precept, judgment, testimony, blasphemy, and salvation remain stable.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Priests, Levites, and people sign and swear obligations concerning marriage, Sabbath, release, worship, wood, firstfruits, and tithes.

Governing Latin

Every signatory remains ordered; `exactionem universæ manus`, the third-shekel levy, and tenth of the tenth retain their legal specificity.

Vulgate-specific readings

Bread of proposition, perpetual holocaust, sanctified days, wood lots, firstfruits of sons, and the house of the treasure remain.

Ambiguities preserved

“All who could understand” governs the participating households without an invented age threshold.

Clarity decisions

The long oath is punctuated as one escalating set of commitments without obscuring verse keys.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after signature, measure, liturgical, and fiscal review.

Canonical terminology

Law, commandment, judgment, ceremony, Sabbath, oblation, holocaust, expiation, firstfruits, libation, tithe, and ministry remain stable.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Lots and voluntary settlement populate Jerusalem; Judah, Benjamin, priests, Levites, gatekeepers, and rural communities are registered.

Governing Latin

One part in ten, daughter towns, genealogical chains, titles, daily singer order, and all totals follow the Latin sequence.

Vulgate-specific readings

Jerusalem is the holy city; Shallum’s line is counted with daughters; Zabdiel is “son of mighty men”; Uzzi is `episcopus` of the Levites.

Ambiguities preserved

`episcopus` is rendered overseer in its administrative context without erasing the underlying term from the editorial record.

Clarity decisions

Compressed town lists and genealogies retain their verse boundaries and directional relationships.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after household, location, office, and quantity review.

Canonical terminology

Holy city, possession, Nathinim, overseer, ministry, praise, confession, prayer, gatekeeper, and Levite remain stable.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Priestly and Levitical succession leads to the wall’s dedication, two choirs, great sacrifice and joy, and restored treasury service.

Governing Latin

`liber verborum dierum` remains book of the words of days; thanksgiving, song, instruments, purification, expiation, and sanctification remain distinct.

Vulgate-specific readings

Two great choirs traverse named gates and towers; wives and children rejoice; Jerusalem’s joy is heard far away.

Ambiguities preserved

The paired family-head register and spatial routes are not conformed to external reconstructions.

Clarity decisions

Semicolons connect each family to its representative and preserve the procession’s two moving lines.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after genealogy, procession, instrument, treasury, and ministry review.

Canonical terminology

Priest, Levite, hymn, confession, dedication, thanksgiving, victim, libation, firstfruits, tithe, expiation, and sanctify remain stable.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Nehemiah purges Tobiah’s chamber, restores provisions, enforces Sabbath, confronts foreign marriages, and reorders priestly and Levitical service.

Governing Latin

King of Babylon, erased mercies, resting gates, laying hands on merchants, striking men, making them bald, and priestly right follow the Latin.

Vulgate-specific readings

Eliashib is near to Tobiah; Nehemiah ejects vessels, curses and strikes offenders, and drives away the high priest’s Sanballat-linked son-in-law.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact degree of Eliashib’s kinship (`proximus`) remains “near,” and the mixed children speak one people’s language and another.

Clarity decisions

Nehemiah’s reforms and repeated remembrance prayers are separated without softening their force.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after legal, linguistic, kinship, violence, and ministry review.

Canonical terminology

Assembly, law, curse, blessing, treasury, mercy, ceremony, Sabbath, priesthood, Levitical right, oblation, firstfruits, and ministry remain stable.

Esther — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Ahasuerus displays imperial glory, Vashti refuses his summons, and an irrevocable decree removes her and regulates households.

Governing Latin

The 127 provinces, 180 days, seven-day feast, colors, stones, vessels, wine, and seven eunuchs follow the Latin particulars.

Vulgate-specific readings

Susa is the kingdom’s “beginning”; the grove is planted by royal hand; husbands are declared princes and superiors.

Ambiguities preserved

The unusual geography of the palace spaces and `regnum illius` for Vashti’s station are not flattened.

Clarity decisions

Memucan’s counsel is framed as one continuous legal argument.

Corrections and reasons

No required semantic correction remained after names, numbers, materials, and decree review.

Canonical terminology

Kingdom, glory, power, prince, law, ancestral right, edict, honor, and dominion remain distinct.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Esther enters the royal women’s house, becomes queen, keeps her identity hidden, and relays Mordecai’s discovery of treason.

Governing Latin

Foster father, adoption, women’s cultivation, myrrh, pigments, aromatics, concubines, mercy, and annals remain explicit.

Vulgate-specific readings

Esther is Hadassah by another name; seven attendants are the most beautiful; a second gathering of virgins remains.

Ambiguities preserved

Mordecai’s genealogy and the deportation syntax are not conformed to another edition.

Clarity decisions

The twelve-month preparation is presented as two exact six-month periods.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after kinship, date, speaker, and custody review.

Canonical terminology

Favor, mercy, diadem, union, wedding, rest, gatekeeper, gibbet, histories, and annals remain stable.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Haman’s wounded pride expands into a plan to erase all Jews, authorized by royal ring and dispatched throughout the empire.

Governing Latin

Adoration, `phur`, urn, ten thousand talents, satraps, judges, couriers, and plunder preserve the Latin legal machinery.

Vulgate-specific readings

The lot selects the month Adar; Haman is Agagite; the king permits him to retain the promised silver.

Ambiguities preserved

The text calls Ahasuerus emperor in the command to adore Haman without editorial qualification.

Clarity decisions

The decree’s date, intended victims, and single execution day remain unambiguous.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after chronology, sums, titles, and agency review.

Canonical terminology

Adore, nation, laws, ceremonies, decrees, treasury, ring, enemy, edict, and substance remain stable.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Mordecai mourns and sends the decree to Esther, who accepts the mortal risk of approaching the king after communal prayer and fasting.

Governing Latin

Soul, sackcloth, ashes, bitter lament, golden rod, clemency, other occasion, prayer, death, and danger remain concrete.

Vulgate-specific readings

Esther has not been called for thirty days; the fast forbids food and drink for three days and nights.

Ambiguities preserved

The “other occasion” of deliverance is retained without importing a named agent absent from the Latin.

Clarity decisions

Hathach’s relayed dialogue is punctuated so every speaker remains identifiable.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after message-chain, law, time, and quotation review.

Canonical terminology

Soul, people, prayer, fasting, deliverance, death, danger, law, palace, and mercy remain stable.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Esther is received, stages a second banquet, and delays her petition while Haman prepares a fifty-cubit instrument for Mordecai.

Governing Latin

Inner court, council chamber, golden rod, abundant wine, will, prayers, timber, cubits, and cross follow the Latin.

Vulgate-specific readings

Esther kisses the rod’s tip; Haman thinks all his wealth nothing while Mordecai sits.

Ambiguities preserved

`crux` and `trabes` are rendered cross and timber while the narrative function remains hanging.

Clarity decisions

The repeated half-kingdom offer and deferred petition retain their deliberate cadence.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after space, sequence, measure, and speech review.

Canonical terminology

Favor, petition, prayer, banquet, will, glory, anger, counsel, timber, and cross remain stable.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Royal insomnia uncovers Mordecai’s unrewarded fidelity, and Haman must publicly confer upon him the honor Haman imagined for himself.

Governing Latin

Histories, annals, throat-cutting plot, fidelity, reward, tyrants, robe, saddle, diadem, and covered head remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Haman seeks fastening to a gibbet; a foremost prince leads the horse; his counselors foretell unavoidable collapse.

Ambiguities preserved

The royal horse “from the king’s saddle” is preserved without speculative emendation.

Clarity decisions

Haman’s inward calculation is separated from his spoken proposal.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after identity, irony, object, and quotation review.

Canonical terminology

Fidelity, honor, reward, heart, prince, tyrant, robe, diadem, seed, and counsel remain stable.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Esther identifies Haman, the king misreads his collapse upon her couch as assault, and Haman dies upon his own gibbet.

Governing Latin

Soul, crushing, slaughter, servitude, cruelty overflowing upon the king, wooded garden, covered face, and rested wrath remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Esther says enslavement would have been bearable; the king accuses Haman of wishing to oppress the queen.

Ambiguities preserved

The precise posture and intent of Haman upon Esther's couch are narrated only as the king perceives them.

Clarity decisions

Esther's petition preserves its balanced request for her soul and people.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after speaker, agency, and execution review.

Canonical terminology

Favor, soul, people, enemy, servitude, cruelty, wrath, timber, gibbet, and king remain stable.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Esther and Mordecai receive Haman's authority and house, and a counter-edict authorizes Jewish assembly, defense, killing, and plunder.

Governing Latin

Paternal uncle, ring, void letters, scepter, clemency, copyists, mounted couriers, vengeance, souls, and spoils remain explicit.

Vulgate-specific readings

The counter-decree includes enemies' wives, children, and households; converts join Jewish religion and ceremonies through fear.

Ambiguities preserved

The new letters "forestall" rather than repeal the irrevocable former letters.

Clarity decisions

The 127-province distribution formula preserves province, people, language, and script.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after kinship, date, decree, and violence review.

Canonical terminology

House, enemy, scepter, clemency, soul, vengeance, spoil, religion, ceremonies, honor, and light remain stable.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The Jews prevail, refuse plunder, establish differing Susa and provincial festival dates, and bind Purim upon their seed.

Governing Latin

Five hundred, three hundred, seventy-five thousand, Haman's ten sons, gibbet, cross, lot, urn, gifts, and fixed times remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Esther requests a second day in Susa; little gifts go to the poor; the book calls itself Esther.

Ambiguities preserved

The reported killing totals and extended authorization are presented without moral or textual normalization.

Clarity decisions

Repeated dates distinguish Susa’s fifteenth-day rest from unwalled towns’ fourteenth-day observance.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after names, numbers, dates, pronouns, and feast review.

Canonical terminology

Soul, substance, solemnity, feast, joy, mourning, seed, religion, ceremonies, Scripture, and truth remain stable.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Mordecai’s greatness closes the narrative, then his dream is interpreted as Esther’s rise and Israel’s salvation.

Governing Latin

Tributary islands, books of Medes and Persians, little spring, river, light, sun, dragons, lots, signs, and inheritance remain concrete.

Vulgate-specific readings

Mordecai explicitly says the events were done by God; Esther is the transformed spring; the two dragons are Mordecai and Haman.

Ambiguities preserved

The temporal relation of the two lots before God remains as stated, not systematized.

Clarity decisions

One continuous Mordecai quotation encompasses dream interpretation and festival command.

Corrections and reasons

The first `Dominus` is identified once as “the Lord (YHWH)”; no other correction remained.

Canonical terminology

Strength, dominion, dignity, sublimity, peace, seed, Lord, salvation, lot, inheritance, assembly, and generation remain stable.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

A transmission notice identifies the Greek letter’s bearers and translator, then restores Mordecai’s primal dream.

Governing Latin

Ptolemy, Cleopatra, Dositheus, Levitical stock, Nisan date, voices, thunder, earthquakes, dragons, spring, light, and sun remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Dositheus “claimed” priestly and Levitical identity; the humble devour the renowned.

Ambiguities preserved

The source’s Artaxerxes naming and chronology remain independent of Ahasuerus terminology elsewhere.

Clarity decisions

The transmission notice is distinguished from the dream narrative without moving either passage.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after genealogy, transmission, symbols, and chronology review.

Canonical terminology

Priest, Levitical, tribe, captivity, nation of the just, darkness, tribulation, anguish, death, and God remain stable.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Mordecai uncovers the eunuchs' plot, receives royal gifts, and becomes the target of Haman's retaliatory hatred.

Governing Latin

Court, gatekeepers, laying hands upon the king, questioning, confession, death, records, report, gifts, and plunder remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Haman is called the Bugean and acts because the two eunuchs were killed; the final line introduces the full edict.

Ambiguities preserved

"They plundered their goods or substance" retains the Latin's alternative expression and compressed subject.

Clarity decisions

The chapter remains an intentional bridge into the letter of chapter 13.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after plot, reward, causation, and adjacent-boundary review.

Canonical terminology

Court, gatekeeper, confession, death, record, memory, gift, people, goods, substance, and letter remain stable.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

The extermination edict states its false rationale, then Mordecai answers with prayer for God's threatened inheritance.

Governing Latin

Greatest king, lower regions, pact-like imperial claims, Lord of all, foot-traces, lot, cord, mouths, and certain death remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The edict chooses the fourteenth of Adar; Mordecai says he would kiss Haman's footprints but would adore only God.

Ambiguities preserved

The narrative sentence at 13:7 remains attached after the edict before Mordecai's prayer.

Clarity decisions

Royal letter and prayer receive separate quotation frames with no rearrangement.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after speaker, title, date, theology, and image review.

Canonical terminology

Dominion, clemency, peace, concord, lower regions, adore, salvation, inheritance, redemption, supplication, lot, cord, and name remain stable.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Esther exchanges royal adornment for humiliation and confesses Israel's sin while pleading for speech, deliverance, and courage before the king.

Governing Latin

Ashes and dung, torn hair, danger in hands, carnal king, lion, menstruating rag, libation wine, and fear remain unsanitized.

Vulgate-specific readings

Esther detests her diadem and foreign bed, denies pleasure in royal and Hamanic banquets, and says she has rejoiced only in God.

Ambiguities preserved

Her private "days of silence" remain unexplained, and the prayer's severe ritual images are not softened.

Clarity decisions

The prayer's confession, accusation, petition, and personal testimony remain cumulative but readable.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after theology, body imagery, liturgical terms, and agency review.

Canonical terminology

Lord, inheritance, servitude, justice, temple, altar, idol, scepter, tribulation, confidence, hand, libation, and hope remain stable.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Mordecai's charge leads Esther through the palace; she collapses before the terrible king, whose spirit God turns to gentleness.

Governing Latin

Raised in Mordecai's hand, ruler and savior, attendants, flowing garments, rosy face, burning eyes, pallor, neck, kiss, and near-death remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The king says "I am your brother," places the golden rod upon Esther's neck, and is described by her as like an angel of God.

Ambiguities preserved

The law's exemption "not for you, but for everyone" remains in its startling Vulgate wording.

Clarity decisions

Physical movement through successive doors and both collapses is narrated in exact order.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after agency, gesture, dialogue, and bodily-state review.

Canonical terminology

Humility, glory, ruler, savior, fear, spirit, gentleness, scepter, angel, grace, and death remain stable.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

The counter-edict condemns Haman’s ingratitude and Macedonian plot, vindicates the Jews as God’s sons, and mandates aid and festival observance.

Governing Latin

Rights of humanity, tunnels of lies, simple ears, commonwealth, Macedonian soul and nation, solitude, gibbets, sword, fire, beasts, and disobedience remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Haman is a Macedonian foreigner plotting transfer of Persia; he and all his kin hang; nonparticipating cities face total destruction.

Ambiguities preserved

The edict’s propagandistic reversals and extreme final sanction are transmitted without endorsement or harmonization.

Clarity decisions

The legal argument progresses from general warning to Haman, Jews, authorization, feast, reward, and sanction.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction remained after titles, political claims, decree force, dates, and penalty review.

Canonical terminology

Goodness, honor, pride, judgment, fidelity, justice, God, law, edict, joy, solemnity, contempt, and disobedience remain stable.

Job — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Job’s integrity, prosperity, heavenly testing, and first losses establish the conflict.

Governing Latin

Hus, simple and upright, seven sons, three daughters, exact herds, sons of God, Satan, holocausts, and adoration remain explicit.

Vulgate-specific readings

The children may have ‘blessed God’ inwardly; the Vulgate euphemism is not changed to ‘cursed.’

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Messenger sequence and the collapse of Job’s household are kept in rising, uninterrupted order.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Lord is identified as YHWH once at 1:6; soul, substance, holocaust, adore, and bless retain canonical force.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

A second heavenly hearing permits bodily affliction, Job’s wife challenges him, and three friends sit in silence.

Governing Latin

Skin for skin, soul, very grievous ulcer, potsherd, dung heap, seven days and nights, and the friends’ names follow the Latin.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Bless God and die’ remains the same Vulgate euphemism as chapter 1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The contrast between Job’s reply to his wife and the friends’ wordless grief remains sharp.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Simplicity, innocence, soul, evil, foolishness, and Lord remain harmonized.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Job breaks the silence by cursing his day and longing for the stillness of death.

Governing Latin

Darkness, shadow of death, Leviathan, shut womb, kings, prisoners, and the buried stillborn preserve the poem’s concrete imagery.

Vulgate-specific readings

The curse falls upon the day, not upon God; the syntactic distinction is retained.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Repetitions of ‘why’ and the movement from cosmic curse to personal groaning remain audible.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Light, darkness, soul, rest, peace, impious, and Leviathan remain literal.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Eliphaz recalls Job’s former counsel, reports a night vision, and argues that no mortal is just before God.

Governing Latin

Fear, trembling, spirit, whisper, holy ones, angels, moth, and clay habitation follow the Latin images.

Vulgate-specific readings

The apparition’s identity is not supplied where the Latin leaves it unnamed.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Vision narration is punctuated as a single remembered disclosure.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Justice, innocent, impious, holy ones, spirit, and Maker remain stable.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Eliphaz urges appeal to God, describes the fool’s collapse, and blesses divine correction.

Governing Latin

Wrath, envy, roots, hunger, six tribulations, pact with stones, beasts, tabernacle, and abundant grave remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Blessed is the man whom God corrects’ is preserved without turning the speech into an inspired verdict on Job.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The catalogue of rescue proceeds numerically and keeps its proverbial cadence.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Blessed, discipline, Almighty, salvation, poor, pact, tabernacle, and peace remain distinct.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Job defends the weight of his grief, asks for death, and reproaches his friends’ unreliable consolation.

Governing Latin

Sea sand, arrows, poison, wild ass, ox, egg white, holocaust, caravans, and Tema retain their material force.

Vulgate-specific readings

Difficult pronouns and the friends’ ‘foot’ imagery remain close to the Latin rather than over-explained.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Job’s appeal, accusation, and request for instruction are separated without fragmenting the speech.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Soul, holy one, iniquity, just, judgment, and mercy remain consistent.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Job compares mortal life to warfare and a hired servant’s labor, then addresses God in anguish.

Governing Latin

Warfare, hireling, shuttle, cloud, lower regions, whale, prison, saliva, and dust follow the Latin.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate’s ‘whale’ is retained rather than normalized to another creature.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The turn from human brevity to direct divine address is made clear by punctuation.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Soul, spirit, lower regions, sin, iniquity, keeper, and dust remain stable.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Bildad defends divine judgment, invokes ancestral wisdom, and promises restoration for the simple.

Governing Latin

Rush, sedge, spider’s web, roots over stones, simple man, laughter, and tabernacle preserve the argument’s imagery.

Vulgate-specific readings

The friends’ theological claims remain attributed speech, not editorial endorsement.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Botanical comparisons and conditional conclusions retain their sequence.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Judgment, Almighty, just, impious, simple, malicious, and tabernacle remain distinct.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Job affirms God’s irresistible majesty while despairing of obtaining judgment before him.

Governing Latin

Arcturus, Orion, Hyades, sea waves, heaven’s pillars, dragon, tribunal, rod, and whirlwind remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Astronomical names and the Vulgate dragon are preserved instead of conformed to modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Long conditional reasoning is divided for readability without changing logical dependence.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Justice, simple, soul, judgment, mercy, innocent, impious, and God remain stable.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Job appeals to his Maker, describes bodily formation, and asks why he was brought from the womb.

Governing Latin

Milk, cheese, bones, sinews, lioness, witness, warfare, darkness, and shadow of death remain physical.

Vulgate-specific readings

Job’s protest is presented as lament addressed to God, not as the narrator’s theology.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The creation-of-the-body sequence retains its intimate progression.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Soul, life, mercy, visitation, iniquity, salvation, and light remain harmonized.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Zophar rebukes Job, magnifies divine incomprehensibility, and calls him to repentance.

Governing Latin

Many words, secrets of wisdom, heaven, lower regions, sea, wild ass’s colt, hands, tabernacle, and hope remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The claim that God exacts less than Job deserves remains Zophar’s claim.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Questions lead into exhortation and promised security without supplying missing premises.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Iniquity, Almighty, penance-related turning, pure hands, tabernacle, and hope remain stable.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Job answers with irony, appeals to creation, and insists that God governs both flourishing and ruin.

Governing Latin

Thieves’ tabernacles, beasts, birds, fishes, ear, palate, waters, counselors, priests, kings, and nations remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Agency is retained even where the speech ascribes calamity directly to God.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The catalogue of reversals keeps its parallel momentum.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Soul, wisdom, counsel, justice, nations, priests, and God remain distinct.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Job asks for silence, risks speaking before God, and rejects his friends as makers of lies.

Governing Latin

Ashen remembrance, clay necks, flesh in teeth, soul in hand, two requests, stocks, and leaf remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Even if he kills me, I shall hope in him’ retains the Vulgate’s confession amid danger.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Job’s address shifts from friends to God are signaled without added speaker labels.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Hope, salvation, impious, just, iniquity, judgment, and face remain stable.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Job meditates on human brevity, death, resurrection-like waiting, and desired concealment below.

Governing Latin

Flower, shadow, unclean birth, appointed boundaries, tree shoots, waters, lower regions, seal, mountain, and rock remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The hope of a tree and Job’s questions about human return remain questions, not doctrinal paraphrase.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Images move from mortal limits to hidden waiting and back to decay in the Latin order.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Man, woman, clean, sin, lower regions, wrath, hope, and soul remain harmonized.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Eliphaz accuses Job of wind-filled speech and describes the terrors of the impious.

Governing Latin

Wind, heat, prayers, holy ones, foreigner, tyrant, sword, bread, king, neck, and fatness remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘No one is unchangeable among his holy ones’ retains the Vulgate formulation.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The rebuke and inherited wisdom oracle remain one sustained speech.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Prayer, holy ones, immaculate, just, impious, iniquity, and Almighty remain stable.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Job calls his friends verbose comforters and turns toward God under grief and betrayal.

Governing Latin

Teeth, enemy, cheek, hands of the impious, sackcloth, horn, tears, witness in heaven, and grave remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Divine and human assailants are not merged where the Latin distinguishes them.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Job’s alternating address to friends, enemies, and heavenly witness remains intelligible.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Soul, innocent, witness, heaven, prayer, impious, and judgment remain harmonized.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

Job describes extinguished spirit, failed hope, mockery, and descent to the deepest lower regions.

Governing Latin

Spirit, grave, surety, heart, fathers, night, corruption, worms, and deepest lower region remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate’s compressed questions about hope and rest remain unresolved.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Abrupt images are allowed to retain the broken rhythm of exhaustion.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Spirit, heart, hope, corruption, lower regions, light, and rest remain stable.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

Bildad portrays the impious man’s light extinguished and his memory erased.

Governing Latin

Lamp, snare, roots, firstborn death, companions of death, sulfur, seed, tabernacle, and horror remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Firstborn death’ is preserved as the Vulgate image, not explained away.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The speech’s net imagery and final verdict retain their accumulating severity.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Impious, light, death, memory, seed, unjust, tabernacle, and God remain distinct.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Job laments abandonment and bodily ruin, then declares his living Redeemer and bodily vision of God.

Governing Latin

Tenfold oppression, crown, uprooted tree, robbers, servants, breath, teeth, iron stylus, lead, flint, and Redeemer remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘On the last day I shall rise from the earth’ and ‘in my flesh’ preserve the Clementine reading directly.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The movement from social desolation to the Redeemer confession is given its full rhetorical space.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Soul, Lord, mercy, Redeemer, last day, flesh, God, hope, and judgment remain stable.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Zophar describes the impious man’s brief triumph, poisoned sweetness, disgorged riches, and divine war.

Governing Latin

Dunghill, dream, asps, gall, viper, honey, butter, iron, bronze, unkindled fire, and inheritance remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The parenthetical wish concerning streams remains parenthetical as in the source.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter's Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Consumption imagery proceeds from mouth to belly to cosmic exposure.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Impious, hypocrite, God, fury, iniquity, tabernacle, and inheritance remain consistent.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

Job challenges the claim that the wicked always collapse and points to their prosperity and common death.

Governing Latin

Grandchildren, rod, cattle, timbrel, harp, organ, lower regions, chaff, marrow, worms, sepulchers, and Cocytus remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Cocytus is retained as the Vulgate's named underworld river.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter's Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Job's observations and his quotation of the impious are clearly distinguished.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Penance, Almighty, impious, soul, lower regions, fury, death, and truth remain stable.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

Eliphaz levels concrete accusations, then calls Job to return to the Almighty.

Governing Latin

Pledge, nakedness, water, bread, widow, orphans' arms, hinges of heaven, flint, gold torrents, vows, and light remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The accusations are presented as Eliphaz's speech and are not confirmed by the narrator.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Charges, historical warning, and restoration appeal retain their three-part movement.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Justice, immaculate, Almighty, iniquity, tabernacle, law, vows, glory, and salvation remain stable.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

Job longs to reach God’s throne, plead his case, and understand the hidden divine way.

Governing Latin

Throne, judgment, east, west, left, right, gold through fire, commandments, bosom, and darkness remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Spatial searching is preserved without substituting later directional traditions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The confident gold image and renewed fear remain side by side.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Judgment, equity, commandments, soul, Almighty, will, fear, and darkness remain harmonized.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

Job surveys boundary theft, oppression, secret violence, and delayed judgment.

Governing Latin

Moved boundaries, orphan’s donkey, widow’s ox, wild asses, vineyards, winepresses, adultery, snow water, worms, and penance remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

God’s granting a ‘place of penance’ and the offender’s abuse of it preserve the Vulgate moral logic.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Daylight crimes and nocturnal crimes are arranged without smoothing their abrupt transitions.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Poor, meek, soul, light, death, mercy, penance, pride, and God remain stable.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

Bildad briefly asserts heavenly dominion and mortal uncleanness.

Governing Latin

Power, terror, concord in the heights, soldiers, moon, stars, putrefaction, and worm remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The comparison of man to putrefaction and worm remains deliberately stark.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The six-verse speech retains its compressed force.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Power, judgment, justified, clean, woman, man, and God remain harmonized.

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

Job answers sarcastically, then celebrates God’s rule over the cosmic depths.

Governing Latin

Breath, giants under waters, naked lower regions, earth hung upon nothing, pillars, proud one, and winding serpent remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The ‘midwifery of his hand’ is preserved as the Vulgate’s startling image.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Sarcasm yields clearly to cosmic praise.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Spirit, breath, lower regions, perdition, heaven, wisdom, and word remain stable.

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

Job swears to retain innocence and describes the inheritance of the impious.

Governing Latin

God lives, breath, nostrils, innocence, hypocrite, sword, widows, silver as earth, moth house, tempest, and hiss remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Job’s oath and the retributive teaching are retained together despite interpretive tension.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The formal oath opens the chapter, followed by instruction and judgment imagery.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Soul, Almighty, innocence, justification, impious, inheritance, and God remain consistent.

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

The mining poem searches creation for wisdom and locates it in fear of the Lord.

Governing Latin

Silver veins, refined gold, bronze, sapphire, India, sardonyx, Ethiopia, topaz, abyss, weights, and storms remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Rare minerals and geographic color terms remain rather than being generalized as ‘treasures.’

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Human excavation builds toward the repeated question and the divine answer.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Wisdom, understanding, price, abyss, perdition, death, fear, Lord, and evil remain stable.

Chapter 29

Chapter movement

Job remembers divine friendship, public honor, justice, and compassion before his suffering.

Governing Latin

Lamp, secret tabernacle, butter, oil rivers, city gate, chair, diadem, blind, lame, jaws, nest, palm, dew, and latter rain remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The intimate claim that God was ‘secretly’ in Job’s tabernacle is preserved.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Memory moves from household blessing to civic authority and consoling presence.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Almighty, tabernacle, blessing, justice, judgment, poor, glory, and counsel remain stable.

Chapter 30

Chapter movement

Job contrasts former honor with present mockery, bodily pain, divine silence, and mourning.

Governing Latin

Dogs, juniper roots, gravel, thorns, spitting, quiver, broken wall, mud, dragons, ostriches, black skin, harp, and organ remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Brother of dragons and companion of ostriches’ remains the Vulgate lament image.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Social humiliation, divine complaint, and bodily dissolution remain sequential.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Soul, salvation, death, compassion, poor, light, darkness, mourning, and God remain stable.

Chapter 31

Chapter movement

Job’s final oath surveys sexual purity, justice to servants, care for the poor, rejection of idolatry, hospitality, and land ethics.

Governing Latin

Pact with eyes, virgin, just balance, harlot, womb, fleece, shoulder, finest gold, sun, moon, kissed hand, traveler, book, and crown remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The men’s desire to be sated with Job’s flesh is retained without speculative softening.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Each conditional oath and its self-curse are punctuated to expose the legal structure.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Pact, Almighty, inheritance, simplicity, iniquity, God Most High, soul, and judgment remain stable.

Chapter 32

Chapter movement

The three friends fall silent, and Elihu introduces himself as a younger but spirit-inspired respondent.

Governing Latin

Barachel, Buzite, kindred of Ram, lowered head, inspiration, belly, new wine, wineskins, and Maker remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Age is denied automatic possession of wisdom without denying elder status.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Narration identifies Elihu’s anger before his long first-person speech begins.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Just, God, reasonable answer, spirit, Almighty, understanding, wisdom, and Maker remain harmonized.

Chapter 33

Chapter movement

Elihu recalls Job’s claims and teaches that God warns, disciplines, mediates, and restores.

Governing Latin

Same clay, stocks, dreams, bed, exposed bones, angel one among thousands, corruption, propitious mercy, and threefold action remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The speaking angel and found means of propitiation remain as the Vulgate states them.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Quoted claims by Job are nested distinctly inside Elihu’s reply.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Simple, spirit, breath, immaculate, iniquity, angel, mercy, justice, soul, and light remain stable.

Chapter 34

Chapter movement

Elihu defends impartial divine judgment and condemns Job’s speech.

Governing Latin

Ear and throat, arrow, apostate king, tyrant, midnight, shadow of death, poor man’s cry, hypocritical ruler, and blasphemy remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘My Father’ in Elihu’s appeal is preserved as direct address without silently changing the addressee.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Communal deliberation, divine defense, and final indictment remain discernible.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Justice, Almighty, impious, iniquity, judgment, poor, hypocrite, sin, and blasphemy remain stable.

Chapter 35

Chapter movement

Elihu argues that human sin or justice affects other humans and rebukes unanswered proud cries.

Governing Latin

Sky, beasts, birds, oppressors, tyrants, songs in the night, causes of each one, fury, and wickedness remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The difficult imperative ‘be judged before him and await him’ remains close to the Latin.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Job’s alleged sayings are quoted before Elihu’s response.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Just, sin, iniquity, son of man, God, Almighty, fury, and knowledge remain harmonized.

Chapter 36

Chapter movement

Elihu continues on discipline, divine greatness, rain, lightning, judgment, and provision.

Governing Latin

Chains, cords of poverty, effeminate, narrow mouth, table fatness, gifts, lawgivers, rain drops, whirlpools, tent, and sea hinges remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The difficult Vulgate phrase about life ‘among the effeminate’ is preserved without euphemistic replacement.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Moral exhortation transitions into the storm hymn that prepares God’s arrival.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Poor, glory, iniquity, Almighty, judgment, lawgiver, light, and God remain stable.

Chapter 37

Chapter movement

Elihu’s storm meditation culminates in fearful praise and human inability to find God worthily.

Governing Latin

Thunder, snow, winter rain, sealed hand, den, Arcturus, ice, governor, bronze-cast heavens, northern gold, and fearful praise remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Arcturus and ‘gold from the north’ remain the Clementine celestial and meteorological wording.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Commands to listen and consider guide the poem from storm to theological conclusion.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Heart, voice, God, mercy, judgment, justice, praise, fear, and wisdom remain harmonized.

Chapter 38

Chapter movement

The Lord answers from the whirlwind and questions Job about creation, sea, light, weather, stars, and animals.

Governing Latin

Whirlwind, foundations, cornerstone, morning stars, swaddling cloths, treasuries of snow, Pleiades, Arcturus, morning star, rooster, lioness, and raven remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The rooster’s understanding and the named constellations preserve the Vulgate’s distinctive catalogue.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

A sustained divine interrogation is maintained without inserting explanatory answers.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Lord, sons of God, light, darkness, abyss, death, wisdom, and understanding remain stable.

Chapter 39

Chapter movement

God continues through wild animals and the warhorse; Job then places his hand over his mouth.

Governing Latin

Ibexes, hinds, wild ass, salt land, rhinoceros, ostrich, heron, hawk, horse, trumpet, eagle, blood, and carcass remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Rhinoceros is retained as the Vulgate animal name rather than modernized to ‘wild ox.’

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The Lord’s animal discourse, renewed challenge, and Job’s short answer are clearly separated.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

God, freedom, wisdom, fear, war, Lord, mouth, and answer remain stable.

Chapter 40

Chapter movement

The Lord challenges Job’s judgment and presents Behemoth and the opening portrait of Leviathan.

Governing Latin

Divine arm, beautiful garments, pit, Behemoth, cedar tail, testicles, bronze bones, Jordan, hook, bracelet, pact, nets, and fish basket remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Behemoth’s anatomy and the command to remember battle remain unsoftened.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

The self-justification challenge leads directly into creatures Job cannot master.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Judgment, justified, salvation, impious, God, Behemoth, Leviathan, and pact remain stable.

Chapter 41

Chapter movement

The Leviathan portrait expands through armor, fire, invulnerability, boiling sea, and kingship over pride.

Governing Latin

Cast shields, scales, eyelids of dawn, lamps, smoke, coals, anvil, angels, breastplate, slingstones, sun rays, gold, ointments, and abyss remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

Angels fearing and being purified is preserved as the Clementine reading.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Body, breath, weapons, sea, and dominion unfold as one escalating description.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Power, face, fear, angels, abyss, pride, king, and creation remain harmonized.

Chapter 42

Chapter movement

Job repents; God vindicates him over the friends; sacrifice, intercession, restoration, daughters, and long life close the book.

Governing Latin

Penance in ash and cinders, seven bulls, seven rams, holocaust, received face, twofold goods, exact herds, Day, Cassia, Horn of Eye-Paint, and 140 years remain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The daughter names are translated according to their Vulgate forms and meanings rather than replaced by another edition’s spellings.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the chapter’s Latin permits.

Clarity decisions

Job’s answer, God’s judgment on the friends, intercession, restoration, and genealogy remain in chronological order.

Corrections and reasons

The chapter was checked against every frozen Latin verse for speaker, agency, image, name, number, and omitted content; no unresolved required correction remains.

Canonical terminology

Lord, servant, penance, holocaust, prayer, blessing, inheritance, generation, and full days remain stable.

Psalms — Codici Editorial

Psalm 1

Chapter movement

Across 6 verses, the Psalm moves from “Blessed is the man who has not gone away in the counsel of the impious, nor stood in the way of sinners,…” to “because the Lord knows the way of the just, and the path of the impious shall perish.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `judicium` → judgment; `lex` → law. The superscription is preserved as No separate superscription precedes the Psalm text.

Vulgate-specific readings

The first divine Dominus is identified transparently as ‘the Lord (YHWH)’ at verse 2; this parenthesis is editorial identification, not additional Latin.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `judicium` → judgment; `lex` → law.

Psalm 2

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “Why have the nations raged, and the peoples meditated vain things” to “When his anger blazes up in a short time, blessed are all who trust in him.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `christus` → Christ / christs. The superscription is preserved as No separate superscription precedes the Psalm text.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate’s direct royal and Christological force is retained without importing a speaker label absent from the Psalm.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `christus` → Christ / christs.

Psalm 3

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, when he fled from the face of his son Absalom” to “Salvation belongs to the Lord, and your blessing is upon your people.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, cum fugeret a facie Absalom filii sui.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David, cum fugeret a facie Absalom filii sui—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 4

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, in songs. A Psalm of David” to “because you alone, O Lord, have established me in hope.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices. The superscription is preserved as In finem, in carminibus. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, in carminibus. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices.

Psalm 5

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for her who receives the inheritance. A Psalm of David” to “because you shall bless the just. O Lord, you have crowned us as with the shield of your good will.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro ea quæ hæreditatem consequitur. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro ea quæ hæreditatem consequitur. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 6

Chapter movement

Across 11 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, in songs. A Psalm of David. For the octave” to “Let all my enemies be ashamed and exceedingly troubled; let them turn back and be ashamed very swiftly.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as In finem, in carminibus. Psalmus David. Pro octava.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, in carminibus. Psalmus David. Pro octava—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 7

Chapter movement

Across 18 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, which he sang to the Lord because of the words of Chusi, son of Jemini” to “I shall confess to the Lord according to his justice, and I shall sing a psalm to the name of the Lord….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, quem cantavit Domino pro verbis Chusi, filii Jemini.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David, quem cantavit Domino pro verbis Chusi, filii Jemini—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices.

Psalm 8

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the winepresses. A Psalm of David” to “O Lord, our Lord, how wonderful is your name in all the earth.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro torcularibus. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro torcularibus. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 9

Chapter movement

Across 39 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the hidden things of the son. A Psalm of David” to “to judge for the orphan and the humble, so that man may no longer magnify himself upon the earth.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro occultis filii. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro occultis filii. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 10

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David” to “For the Lord is just and has loved justices; his countenance has beheld equity.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices.

Psalm 11

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the octave. A Psalm of David” to “The impious walk in a circuit; according to your height, you have multiplied the sons of men.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro octava. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro octava. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 12

Chapter movement

Across 6 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David. How long, O Lord, will you forget me unto the end? How long will you…” to “but I have hoped in your mercy. My heart shall exult in your salvation. I shall sing to the Lord, who….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 13

Chapter movement

Across 7 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David. The fool has said in his heart, “There is no God.” They are corrupted…” to “Who shall give salvation to Israel from Zion? When the Lord turns away the captivity of his people,….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 14

Chapter movement

Across 5 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David. O Lord, who shall dwell in your tabernacle? Or who shall rest upon your holy mountain” to “he who has not given his money at usury nor accepted gifts against the innocent—he who does these things.…” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 15

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “The inscription of a title, for David himself. Preserve me, O Lord, because I have hoped in you” to “For you shall not abandon my soul in the lower regions, nor shall you permit your holy one to see….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as Tituli inscriptio, ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate’s ‘holy one’ and ‘corruption’ remain visible in the hope expressed at the Psalm’s close.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 16

Chapter movement

Across 15 verses, the Psalm moves from “A prayer of David. Hear my justice, O Lord; attend to my supplication. Receive my prayer with your ears,…” to “But I shall appear before your countenance in justice; I shall be satisfied when your glory appears.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Oratio David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Oratio David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 17

Chapter movement

Across 51 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. For David, the servant of the Lord, who spoke to the Lord the words of this song on the…” to “magnifying the salvations of his king and showing mercy to his Christ David and to his seed forever.”.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `firmamentum` → firmament; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `christus` → Christ / christs. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Puero Domini David, qui locutus est Domino verba cantici hujus, in die qua eripuit eum Dominus de manu omnium inimicorum ejus, et de manu Saul, et dixit :.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Puero Domini David, qui locutus est Domino verba cantici hujus, in die qua eripuit eum Dominus de manu omnium inimicorum ejus, et de manu Saul, et dixit :—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `firmamentum` → firmament; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `christus` → Christ / christs.

Psalm 18

Chapter movement

Across 15 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David” to “And the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart shall be made pleasing before you always, O….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `lex` → law; `testimonium` → testimony; `firmamentum` → firmament. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `lex` → law; `testimonium` → testimony; `firmamentum` → firmament.

Psalm 19

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David” to “O Lord, save the king and hear us on the day when we invoke you.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `christus` → Christ / christs; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `christus` → Christ / christs; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 20

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David” to “Be exalted, O Lord, in your strength; we shall sing and chant psalms of your mighty works.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 21

Chapter movement

Across 32 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the morning protection. A Psalm of David” to “The coming generation shall be announced to the Lord, and the heavens shall announce his justice to a….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `ecclesia` → church / churches. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro susceptione matutina. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine reading ‘they dug my hands and feet’ is retained directly, together with the Psalm’s bodily and Christological imagery.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `ecclesia` → church / churches.

Psalm 22

Chapter movement

Across 6 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David. The Lord governs me, and nothing shall be lacking to me” to “And your mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord for….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate’s governing image is direct: ‘The Lord governs me’; it is not conformed to another edition’s familiar wording.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 23

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “On the first day of the week. A Psalm of David. The earth is the Lord’s, and its fullness; the whole…” to “Who is this King of glory? The Lord of hosts—he is the King of glory.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Prima sabbati. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Prima sabbati. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 24

Chapter movement

Across 22 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David. To you, O Lord, I have lifted up my soul” to “Deliver Israel, O God, from all his tribulations.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `testamentum` → testament; `lex` → law. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `testamentum` → testament; `lex` → law.

Psalm 25

Chapter movement

Across 12 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David. Judge me, O Lord, because I have entered in my innocence, and hoping in…” to “My foot has stood in the direct way; in the churches I shall bless you, O Lord.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `ecclesia` → church / churches. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `ecclesia` → church / churches.

Psalm 26

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, before he was anointed. The Lord is my illumination and my salvation; whom shall I…” to “Await the Lord; act manfully, and let your heart be strengthened, and await the Lord.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `lex` → law; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, priusquam liniretur.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David, priusquam liniretur—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `lex` → law; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 27

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm for David himself. To you, O Lord, I shall cry; my God, do not be silent toward me, lest at any…” to “Save your people, O Lord, and bless your inheritance; govern them and lift them up forever.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `christus` → Christ / christs. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `christus` → Christ / christs.

Psalm 28

Chapter movement

Across 11 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, at the completion of the tabernacle. Bring to the Lord, sons of God; bring to the Lord…” to “The Lord shall give strength to his people; the Lord shall bless his people in peace.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, in consummatione tabernaculi.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David, in consummatione tabernaculi—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 29

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of song, at the dedication of the house of David” to “that my glory may sing to you and I may not be pierced with sorrow. O Lord my God, I shall confess to….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus cantici, in dedicatione domus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus cantici, in dedicatione domus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 30

Chapter movement

Across 25 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David, for ecstasy” to “Act manfully, and let your heart be strengthened, all you who hope in the Lord.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David, pro extasi.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David, pro extasi—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 31

Chapter movement

Across 11 verses, the Psalm moves from “Understanding, for David himself. Blessed are those whose iniquities are forgiven and whose sins are…” to “Be glad in the Lord and exult, you just; and glory, all you upright of heart.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Ipsi David intellectus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Ipsi David intellectus—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 32

Chapter movement

Across 22 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David. Exult in the Lord, you just; praise becomes the upright” to “Let your mercy be upon us, O Lord, just as we have hoped in you.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate’s concrete language of guilt, confession, and forgiveness remains penitential rather than psychologically generalized.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 33

Chapter movement

Across 23 verses, the Psalm moves from “For David, when he changed his countenance before Achimelech, and he dismissed him, and he went away” to “The Lord shall redeem the souls of his servants, and none who hope in him shall offend.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Davidi, cum immutavit vultum suum coram Achimelech, et dimisit eum, et abiit.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Davidi, cum immutavit vultum suum coram Achimelech, et dimisit eum, et abiit—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 34

Chapter movement

Across 28 verses, the Psalm moves from “For David himself. Judge those who harm me, O Lord; conquer those who attack me” to “And my tongue shall meditate upon your justice and your praise all day.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `ecclesia` → church / churches; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `ecclesia` → church / churches; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 35

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. For David himself, the servant of the Lord” to “There those who work iniquity have fallen; they were cast out and were unable to stand.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Servo Domini ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Servo Domini ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 36

Chapter movement

Across 40 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm for David himself. Do not emulate the malicious, nor be zealous for those who work iniquity,” to “And the Lord shall help them and deliver them; he shall rescue them from sinners and save them because….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `lex` → law. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `lex` → law.

Psalm 37

Chapter movement

Across 23 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, in remembrance of the Sabbath” to “Attend to my help, O Lord God of my salvation.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, in rememorationem de sabbato.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David, in rememorationem de sabbato—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 38

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for Idithun himself. A Song of David” to “Forgive me, that I may be refreshed before I depart and shall be no more.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as In finem, ipsi Idithun. Canticum David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, ipsi Idithun. Canticum David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 39

Chapter movement

Across 18 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm for David himself” to “But I am a beggar and poor; the Lord is concerned for me. You are my helper and my protector; my God, do….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `lex` → law; `ecclesia` → church / churches. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `lex` → law; `ecclesia` → church / churches.

Psalm 40

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm for David himself” to “Blessed is the Lord God of Israel, from age and unto age. Let it be; let it be.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 41

Chapter movement

Across 12 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. Understanding for the sons of Korah” to “Why are you sorrowful, my soul? And why do you trouble me? Hope in God, because I shall yet confess to….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Intellectus filiis Core.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Intellectus filiis Core—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 42

Chapter movement

Across 5 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David. Judge me, O God, and distinguish my cause from the nation that is not holy; rescue me…” to “Why are you sorrowful, my soul? And why do you trouble me? Hope in God, because I shall yet confess to….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 43

Chapter movement

Across 26 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. For the sons of Korah, unto understanding” to “Arise, O Lord; help us and redeem us because of your name.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `testamentum` → testament. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Filiis Core ad intellectum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Filiis Core ad intellectum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `testamentum` → testament.

Psalm 44

Chapter movement

Across 18 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for those who shall be changed. For the sons of Korah, unto understanding. A song for the…” to “They shall remember your name in every generation and generation; therefore peoples shall confess to you….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro iis qui commutabuntur. Filiis Core, ad intellectum. Canticum pro dilecto.

Vulgate-specific readings

The royal bridegroom, queen, daughters, and throne remain in their poetic and Christological openness.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 45

Chapter movement

Across 12 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the sons of Korah, for secret things. A Psalm” to “The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our upholder.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as In finem, filiis Core, pro arcanis. Psalmus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, filiis Core, pro arcanis. Psalmus—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 46

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the sons of Korah. A Psalm” to “The princes of peoples have been gathered with the God of Abraham, because the strong gods of the earth.…” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro filiis Core. Psalmus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro filiis Core. Psalmus—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God.

Psalm 47

Chapter movement

Across 15 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of song. For the sons of Korah, on the second day of the week” to “For this is God, our God, forever and unto the age of ages; he shall govern us through the ages.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus cantici. Filiis Core, secunda sabbati.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus cantici. Filiis Core, secunda sabbati—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 48

Chapter movement

Across 21 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the sons of Korah. A Psalm” to “Man, when he was in honor, did not understand. He has been compared with senseless beasts and made like….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `scandalum` → scandal. The superscription is preserved as In finem, filiis Core. Psalmus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, filiis Core. Psalmus—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `scandalum` → scandal.

Psalm 49

Chapter movement

Across 23 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of Asaph. The Lord, the God of gods, has spoken and called the earth from the rising of the sun…” to “A sacrifice of praise shall honor me, and there is the way by which I shall show him the salvation of….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `testamentum` → testament; `salutare` → salvation; `scandalum` → scandal. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `testamentum` → testament; `salutare` → salvation; `scandalum` → scandal.

Psalm 50

Chapter movement

Across 21 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David,” to “Then you shall accept a sacrifice of justice, oblations, and holocausts; then they shall place calves….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David,.

Vulgate-specific readings

Hyssop, a clean heart, a principal spirit, holocaust, and sacrifice remain the Vulgate’s penitential and liturgical vocabulary.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 51

Chapter movement

Across 11 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. Understanding of David,” to “I shall confess to you forever because you have acted, and I shall await your name because it is good….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Intellectus David,.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Intellectus David,—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 52

Chapter movement

Across 7 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for Maeleth. The understanding of David. The fool has said in his heart, “There is no God.”” to “Who shall give salvation to Israel from Zion? When God turns the captivity of his people, Jacob shall….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro Maëleth intelligentiæ David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro Maëleth intelligentiæ David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 53

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, in songs. The understanding of David,” to “For you have rescued me from every tribulation, and my eye has looked down upon my enemies.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as In finem, in carminibus. Intellectus David,.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, in carminibus. Intellectus David,—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 54

Chapter movement

Across 24 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, in songs. The understanding of David” to “But you, O God, shall lead them down into the pit of destruction. Men of blood and deceit shall not.…” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `testamentum` → testament; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as In finem, in carminibus. Intellectus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, in carminibus. Intellectus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `testamentum` → testament; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 55

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the people who were made far from the holy ones. For David, as an inscription of a…” to “because you have rescued my soul from death and my feet from falling, that I may be pleasing before God.…” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro populo qui a sanctis longe factus est. David in tituli inscriptionem, cum tenuerunt eum Allophyli in Geth.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro populo qui a sanctis longe factus est. David in tituli inscriptionem, cum tenuerunt eum Allophyli in Geth—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 56

Chapter movement

Across 12 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, do not destroy. For David, as an inscription of a title, when he fled from the face of…” to “Be exalted above the heavens, O God, and your glory over all the earth.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as In finem, ne disperdas. David in tituli inscriptionem, cum fugeret a facie Saul in speluncam.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, ne disperdas. David in tituli inscriptionem, cum fugeret a facie Saul in speluncam—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 57

Chapter movement

Across 12 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, do not destroy. For David, as an inscription of a title” to “And man shall say, “If indeed there is fruit for the just, indeed there is a God who judges them upon….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices. The superscription is preserved as In finem, ne disperdas. David in tituli inscriptionem.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, ne disperdas. David in tituli inscriptionem—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices.

Psalm 58

Chapter movement

Across 18 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, do not destroy. For David, as an inscription of a title, when Saul sent and watched his…” to “My helper, I shall sing psalms to you, because you, O God, are my upholder; my God, my mercy.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as In finem, ne disperdas. David in tituli inscriptionem, quando misit Saul et custodivit domum ejus ut eum interficeret.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, ne disperdas. David in tituli inscriptionem, quando misit Saul et custodivit domum ejus ut eum interficeret—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 59

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for those who shall be changed, as an inscription of a title for David himself, for…” to “In God we shall work strength, and he shall reduce those who trouble us to nothing.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro his qui immutabuntur, in tituli inscriptionem ipsi David, in doctrinam,.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro his qui immutabuntur, in tituli inscriptionem ipsi David, in doctrinam,—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 60

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. Among the hymns of David” to “Thus I shall sing a psalm to your name unto the age of ages, that I may fulfill my vows from day to day.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as In finem. In hymnis David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. In hymnis David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 61

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for Idithun. A Psalm of David” to “and mercy to you, O Lord, because you shall repay each one according to his works.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro Idithun. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro Idithun. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 62

Chapter movement

Across 12 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, when he was in the desert of Edom” to “But the King shall be glad in God; all who swear by him shall be praised, because the mouth of those who….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, cum esset in deserto Idumææ.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David, cum esset in deserto Idumææ—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 63

Chapter movement

Across 11 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David” to “The just shall be glad in the Lord and shall hope in him, and all the upright of heart shall be praised.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 64

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David, a song of Jeremiah and Ezekiel for the people of the transmigration,…” to “The rams of the sheep have been clothed, and the valleys shall abound with grain; they shall cry aloud,….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David, canticum Jeremiæ et Ezechielis populo transmigrationis, cum inciperent exire.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David, canticum Jeremiæ et Ezechielis populo transmigrationis, cum inciperent exire—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 65

Chapter movement

Across 20 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A song of a psalm of the resurrection. Jubilate to God, all the earth” to “Blessed is God, who has not removed my prayer or his mercy from me.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Canticum psalmi resurrectionis.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Canticum psalmi resurrectionis—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 66

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, among hymns. A Psalm of a song of David” to “May God bless us, and let all the ends of the earth fear him.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem, in hymnis. Psalmus cantici David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, in hymnis. Psalmus cantici David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 67

Chapter movement

Across 36 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of a song for David himself” to “Wondrous is God in his holy ones; the God of Israel himself shall give power and strength to his people.….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `ecclesia` → church / churches; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus cantici ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Curdled mountains,’ ‘churches,’ and the Vulgate’s triumphal divine procession are preserved rather than normalized.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `ecclesia` → church / churches; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 68

Chapter movement

Across 37 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for those who shall be changed. David” to “And the seed of his servants shall possess it, and those who love his name shall dwell in it.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `scandalum` → scandal. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro iis qui commutabuntur. David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro iis qui commutabuntur. David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `scandalum` → scandal.

Psalm 69

Chapter movement

Across 6 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David in remembrance that the Lord saved him” to “But I am needy and poor; O God, help me. You are my helper and my deliverer; O Lord, do not delay.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David in rememorationem, quod salvum fecerit eum Dominus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David in rememorationem, quod salvum fecerit eum Dominus—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 70

Chapter movement

Across 24 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, of the sons of Jonadab and the former captives. In you, O Lord, I have hoped; I shall…” to “And my tongue also shall meditate upon your justice all day when those who seek evils for me have been….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth; `lex` → law; `firmamentum` → firmament; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, filiorum Jonadab, et priorum captivorum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David, filiorum Jonadab, et priorum captivorum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth; `lex` → law; `firmamentum` → firmament; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 71

Chapter movement

Across 20 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm concerning Solomon” to “The praises of David, son of Jesse, have come to an end.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `firmamentum` → firmament. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus, in Salomonem.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus, in Salomonem—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `firmamentum` → firmament.

Psalm 72

Chapter movement

Across 28 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of Asaph. How good is the God of Israel to those who are upright of heart” to “But for me it is good to adhere to God, to place my hope in the Lord God, that I may announce all your….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `firmamentum` → firmament. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `firmamentum` → firmament.

Psalm 73

Chapter movement

Across 23 verses, the Psalm moves from “The understanding of Asaph. Why, O God, have you rejected us unto the end? Why has your fury become…” to “Do not forget the voices of your enemies; the pride of those who hate you ascends always.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `testamentum` → testament; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Intellectus Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Intellectus Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `testamentum` → testament; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 74

Chapter movement

Across 11 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, do not corrupt. A Psalm of a song of Asaph” to “And I shall break all the horns of sinners, and the horns of the just shall be exalted.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices. The superscription is preserved as In finem, ne corrumpas. Psalmus cantici Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, ne corrumpas. Psalmus cantici Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices.

Psalm 75

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, among praises. A Psalm of Asaph, a song to the Assyrians” to “to him who takes away the spirit of princes, terrible among the kings of the earth.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment. The superscription is preserved as In finem, in laudibus. Psalmus Asaph, canticum ad Assyrios.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, in laudibus. Psalmus Asaph, canticum ad Assyrios—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment.

Psalm 76

Chapter movement

Across 21 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for Idithun. A Psalm of Asaph” to “You led your people like sheep by the hand of Moses and Aaron.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro Idithun. Psalmus Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro Idithun. Psalmus Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 77

Chapter movement

Across 72 verses, the Psalm moves from “The understanding of Asaph. Attend to my law, my people; incline your ear to the words of my mouth” to “And he fed them in the innocence of his heart and led them by the understandings of his hands.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `testamentum` → testament; `lex` → law; `mandatum` → commandment; `testimonium` → testimony; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Intellectus Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Intellectus Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `testamentum` → testament; `lex` → law; `mandatum` → commandment; `testimonium` → testimony; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 78

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of Asaph. O God, the nations have come into your inheritance; they have polluted your holy…” to “But we are your people and the sheep of your pasture; we shall confess to you forever; from generation….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 79

Chapter movement

Across 20 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for those who shall be changed. A testimony of Asaph, a Psalm” to “O Lord God of hosts, convert us and show your face, and we shall be saved.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `testimonium` → testimony. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro iis qui commutabuntur. Testimonium Asaph, psalmus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro iis qui commutabuntur. Testimonium Asaph, psalmus—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `testimonium` → testimony.

Psalm 80

Chapter movement

Across 17 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the winepresses. A Psalm for Asaph himself” to “And he fed them from the fat of grain and satisfied them with honey from the rock.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment; `testimonium` → testimony. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro torcularibus. Psalmus ipsi Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, pro torcularibus. Psalmus ipsi Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment; `testimonium` → testimony.

Psalm 81

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of Asaph. God has stood in the synagogue of gods, and in their midst he judges gods” to “Arise, O God; judge the earth, because you shall inherit among all nations.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Deus` → God. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` → God.

Psalm 82

Chapter movement

Across 19 verses, the Psalm moves from “A song of a Psalm of Asaph” to “And let them know that your name is the Lord; you alone are the Most High over all the earth.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `testamentum` → testament; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Canticum Psalmi Asaph.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum Psalmi Asaph—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `testamentum` → testament; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 83

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the winepresses, for the sons of Core. A Psalm” to “He shall not deprive those who walk in innocence of good things. O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man who….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `christus` → Christ / christs; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as In finem, pro torcularibus filiis Core. Psalmus.

Vulgate-specific readings

The face of ‘your Christ’ and the ascent from strength to strength remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `christus` → Christ / christs; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 84

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, for the sons of Core. A Psalm” to “Justice shall walk before him and shall set his steps upon the way.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as In finem, filiis Core. Psalmus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, filiis Core. Psalmus—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 85

Chapter movement

Across 17 verses, the Psalm moves from “A prayer of David himself. Incline your ear, O Lord, and hear me, for I am needy and poor” to “Work with me a sign for good, that those who hate me may see and be confounded, because you, O Lord,….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as Oratio ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Oratio ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 86

Chapter movement

Across 7 verses, the Psalm moves from “For the sons of Core. A Psalm of a canticle. His foundations are in the holy mountains” to “As the habitation of all who rejoice is in you.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Filiis Core. Psalmus cantici.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Filiis Core. Psalmus cantici—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 87

Chapter movement

Across 19 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of a Psalm, for the sons of Core, unto the end, for Maheleth, to respond. The understanding…” to “You have put friend and neighbor far from me, and my acquaintances because of misery.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as Canticum Psalmi, filiis Core, in finem, pro Maheleth ad respondendum. Intellectus Eman Ezrahitæ.

Vulgate-specific readings

The exceptionally dark ending and the lower-regions imagery are not relieved by an invented resolution.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 88

Chapter movement

Across 53 verses, the Psalm moves from “The understanding of Ethan the Ezrahite” to “Blessed be the Lord forever. Let it be; let it be.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `testamentum` → testament. The superscription is preserved as Intellectus Ethan Ezrahitæ.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Intellectus Ethan Ezrahitæ—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `testamentum` → testament.

Psalm 89

Chapter movement

Across 17 verses, the Psalm moves from “A prayer of Moses, the man of God. O Lord, you have become our refuge from generation to generation” to “And let the splendor of the Lord our God be upon us, and direct the works of our hands over us; and….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Oratio Moysi, hominis Dei.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Oratio Moysi, hominis Dei—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 90

Chapter movement

Across 16 verses, the Psalm moves from “A praise of a canticle of David. He who dwells in the help of the Most High shall abide under the…” to “I shall fill him with length of days, and I shall show him my salvation.”.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Laus cantici David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Asp, basilisk, lion, dragon, angels, and the noonday demon retain the Clementine protective catalogue.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 91

Chapter movement

Across 16 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of a canticle, on the sabbath day” to “that they may proclaim that the Lord our God is upright, and there is no iniquity in him.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus cantici, in die sabbati.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus cantici, in die sabbati—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 92

Chapter movement

Across 5 verses, the Psalm moves from “A praise of a canticle of David himself, on the day before the sabbath, when the earth was founded. The…” to “Your testimonies have been made exceedingly credible; holiness befits your house, O Lord, unto length of….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `testimonium` → testimony. The superscription is preserved as Laus cantici ipsi David, in die ante sabbatum, quando fundata est terra.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Laus cantici ipsi David, in die ante sabbatum, quando fundata est terra—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `testimonium` → testimony.

Psalm 93

Chapter movement

Across 23 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David himself, on the fourth day of the sabbath. The Lord is the God of vengeance; the God of…” to “And he shall repay them their own iniquity, and in their malice he shall destroy them; the Lord our God….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `lex` → law; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus ipsi David, quarta sabbati.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus ipsi David, quarta sabbati—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `lex` → law; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 94

Chapter movement

Across 11 verses, the Psalm moves from “A praise of a canticle of David himself. Come, let us rejoice in the Lord; let us jubilate to God our…” to “And they did not know my ways; so I swore in my anger: “They shall not enter into my rest.”.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Laus cantici ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Laus cantici ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 95

Chapter movement

Across 13 verses, the Psalm moves from “A canticle of David himself, when the house was built after the captivity. Sing a new canticle to the…” to “before the face of the Lord, because he comes, because he comes to judge the earth. He shall judge the….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Canticum ipsi David, quando domus ædificabatur post captivitatem.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum ipsi David, quando domus ædificabatur post captivitatem—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 96

Chapter movement

Across 12 verses, the Psalm moves from “For this David, when his land was restored. The Lord has reigned; let the earth exult; let the many…” to “Rejoice, you just, in the Lord, and confess to the memory of his sanctification.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment. The superscription is preserved as Huic David, quando terra ejus restituta est.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Huic David, quando terra ejus restituta est—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment.

Psalm 97

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David himself. Sing a new canticle to the Lord, because he has worked wonders. His right hand…” to “before the face of the Lord, because he comes to judge the earth. He shall judge the world in justice.…” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 98

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David himself. The Lord has reigned; let the peoples be angry. He sits above the cherubim;…” to “Exalt the Lord our God, and adore upon his holy mountain, for the Lord our God is holy.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `testimonium` → testimony. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `testimonium` → testimony.

Psalm 99

Chapter movement

Across 5 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm in confession” to “for the Lord is sweet; his mercy is forever, and his truth unto generation and generation.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus in confessione.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus in confessione—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 100

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David himself. I shall sing mercy and judgment to you, O Lord; I shall sing psalms,” to “In the morning I slew all the sinners of the earth, that I might destroy from the city of the Lord all….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 101

Chapter movement

Across 29 verses, the Psalm moves from “A prayer of the poor man, when he is anxious and pours out his supplication before the Lord” to “The sons of your servants shall dwell, and their seed shall be directed forever.”.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Oratio pauperis, cum anxius fuerit, et in conspectu Domini effuderit precem suam.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Oratio pauperis, cum anxius fuerit, et in conspectu Domini effuderit precem suam—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 102

Chapter movement

Across 22 verses, the Psalm moves from “Of David himself. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name” to “Bless the Lord, all his works, in every place of his dominion. Bless the Lord, O my soul.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `testamentum` → testament; `mandatum` → commandment. The superscription is preserved as Ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `testamentum` → testament; `mandatum` → commandment.

Psalm 103

Chapter movement

Across 35 verses, the Psalm moves from “Of David himself. Bless the Lord, O my soul. O Lord my God, you have been magnified exceedingly. You…” to “Let sinners fail from the earth, and the iniquitous, so that they are no more. Bless the Lord, O my soul.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 104

Chapter movement

Across 45 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Confess to the Lord and call upon his name; proclaim his works among the nations” to “that they might keep his justifications and seek his law.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `testamentum` → testament; `lex` → law; `justificatio` → justification; `firmamentum` → firmament. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `testamentum` → testament; `lex` → law; `justificatio` → justification; `firmamentum` → firmament.

Psalm 105

Chapter movement

Across 48 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Confess to the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy is forever” to “Blessed be the Lord, the God of Israel, from age and unto age; and all the people shall say: Let it be;….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `testamentum` → testament; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `testamentum` → testament; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 106

Chapter movement

Across 43 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Confess to the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy is forever” to “Who is wise and shall keep these things, and shall understand the mercies of the Lord.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `ecclesia` → church / churches. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `ecclesia` → church / churches.

Psalm 107

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of a Psalm, of David himself” to “In God we shall work strength, and he shall bring our enemies to nothing.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Canticum Psalmi, ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum Psalmi, ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

Review corrected the closing boundary of God’s quoted territorial declaration after verse 10; this prevents the psalmist’s next question from being assigned to God.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 108

Chapter movement

Across 31 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David” to “for he has stood at the right hand of the poor man, that he might save my soul from its persecutors.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Episcopate’ remains the Vulgate’s ecclesial term, and the imprecation is neither softened nor editorially endorsed.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 109

Chapter movement

Across 7 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David. The Lord said to my Lord, “Sit at my right hand until I make your enemies the…” to “He shall drink from the torrent on the way; therefore he shall exalt the head.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Before the daystar, I begot you’ and the eternal priesthood according to Melchisedech remain the Clementine Christological reading.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 110

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. I shall confess to you, O Lord, with my whole heart, in the council of the just and in the…” to “The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; good understanding belongs to all who do it. His praise….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `veritas` → truth; `testamentum` → testament; `mandatum` → commandment. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `veritas` → truth; `testamentum` → testament; `mandatum` → commandment.

Psalm 111

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia, of the return of Aggeus and Zacharias. Blessed is the man who fears the Lord; he shall delight…” to “The sinner shall see and be angry; he shall gnash with his teeth and waste away. The desire of sinners….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `mandatum` → commandment. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja, reversionis Aggæi et Zachariæ.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja, reversionis Aggæi et Zachariæ—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `mandatum` → commandment.

Psalm 112

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Praise the Lord, you servants; praise the name of the Lord” to “He makes the barren woman dwell in a house, a mother rejoicing in her sons.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God.

Psalm 113

Chapter movement

Across 26 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. At Israel’s departure from Egypt, the house of Jacob from a barbarous people,” to “but we who live bless the Lord, from this moment and forever.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 114

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. I have loved, because the Lord shall hear the voice of my prayer” to “I shall please the Lord in the region of the living.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 115

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. I believed; therefore I spoke. But I was exceedingly humbled” to “in the courts of the house of the Lord, in the midst of you, O Jerusalem.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `salutare` → salvation. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `salutare` → salvation.

Psalm 116

Chapter movement

Across 2 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Praise the Lord, all nations; praise him, all peoples” to “For his mercy has been strengthened over us, and the truth of the Lord remains forever.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 117

Chapter movement

Across 29 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Confess to the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy is forever” to “Confess to the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy is forever.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `misericordia` → mercy; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 118

Chapter movement

Across 176 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Aleph. Blessed are the immaculate in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord” to “I have strayed like a sheep that has perished; seek your servant, for I have not forgotten your….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `lex` → law. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

All 22 Clementine alphabetic markers and the distinctions among law, commandments, testimonies, judgments, justifications, sayings, and words remain visible.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth; `lex` → law.

Psalm 119

Chapter movement

Across 7 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. To the Lord I cried when I was troubled, and he heard me” to “With those who hated peace I was peaceful; when I spoke to them, they fought against me without cause.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 120

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. I have lifted up my eyes to the mountains, from where help shall come to me” to “May the Lord guard your entrance and your departure, from this moment and forever.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 121

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. I rejoiced in the things that were said to me: “We shall go into the house of the…” to “For the sake of the house of the Lord our God, I sought good things for you.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment; `testimonium` → testimony. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment; `testimonium` → testimony.

Psalm 122

Chapter movement

Across 4 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. To you I have lifted up my eyes, you who dwell in the heavens” to “for our soul is greatly filled: reproach for those who abound, and contempt for the proud.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 123

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. Unless the Lord had been within us—let Israel now say—” to “Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 124

Chapter movement

Across 5 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. Those who trust in the Lord are like Mount Sion: he who dwells” to “But those who turn aside into obligations, the Lord shall lead away with those who work iniquity. Peace….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 125

Chapter movement

Across 6 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. When the Lord turned the captivity of Sion, we became like those who are…” to “Going, they went and wept, casting their seeds. But coming, they shall come with exultation, bearing….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 126

Chapter movement

Across 5 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees of Solomon. Unless the Lord builds the house, those who build it have labored in…” to “Blessed is the man who has fulfilled his desire from them; he shall not be confounded when he speaks….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum Salomonis.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum Salomonis—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 127

Chapter movement

Across 6 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. Blessed are all who fear the Lord, who walk in his ways” to “And may you see the sons of your sons: peace upon Israel.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 128

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. Often they have fought against me from my youth—let Israel now say—” to “And those passing by have not said, “The blessing of the Lord be upon you. We have blessed you in the….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 129

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. From the depths I have cried to you, O Lord” to “And he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `lex` → law. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `lex` → law.

Psalm 130

Chapter movement

Across 3 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees of David. O Lord, my heart has not been exalted, nor have my eyes been lifted…” to “Let Israel hope in the Lord, from this moment and forever.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 131

Chapter movement

Across 18 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. Remember David, O Lord, and all his gentleness,” to “I shall clothe his enemies with confusion, but upon him my sanctification shall flower.”.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth; `testamentum` → testament; `testimonium` → testimony; `christus` → Christ / christs; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth; `testamentum` → testament; `testimonium` → testimony; `christus` → Christ / christs; `tabernaculum` → tabernacle.

Psalm 132

Chapter movement

Across 3 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees of David. Behold, how good and how delightful it is for brothers to dwell as one” to “like the dew of Hermon, which descends upon Mount Sion. For there the Lord commanded blessing and life….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 133

Chapter movement

Across 3 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Canticle of Degrees. Behold, now bless the Lord, all you servants of the Lord who stand in the house…” to “May the Lord bless you from Sion, he who made heaven and earth.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God. The superscription is preserved as Canticum graduum.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Canticum graduum—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God.

Psalm 134

Chapter movement

Across 21 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Praise the name of the Lord; praise the Lord, you servants,” to “Blessed be the Lord from Sion, who dwells in Jerusalem.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God.

Psalm 135

Chapter movement

Across 26 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Confess to the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy is eternal” to “Confess to the God of heaven, for his mercy is eternal. Confess to the Lord of lords, for his mercy is….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 136

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, of Jeremias. Upon the rivers of Babylon, there we sat and wept when we remembered Sion” to “Blessed is he who shall seize your little ones and dash them against the rock.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, Jeremiæ.

Vulgate-specific readings

The captivity setting and the final violent beatitude remain unsoftened and attributed to the Psalm’s exiled voice.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 137

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “Of David himself. I shall confess to you, O Lord, with my whole heart, for you have heard the words of…” to “The Lord shall repay for me. O Lord, your mercy is forever; do not despise the works of your hands.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as Ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 138

Chapter movement

Across 24 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end, a Psalm of David. O Lord, you have proved me and known me” to “And see whether the way of iniquity is in me, and lead me in the eternal way.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions. The superscription is preserved as In finem, psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem, psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions.

Psalm 139

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “Unto the end. A Psalm of David” to “Nevertheless, the just shall confess your name, and the upright shall dwell with your countenance.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment; `scandalum` → scandal. The superscription is preserved as In finem. Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—In finem. Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment; `scandalum` → scandal.

Psalm 140

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David. O Lord, I have cried to you; hear me. Attend to my voice when I cry to you” to “Sinners shall fall into his net; I am alone until I pass over.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `scandalum` → scandal. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul; `misericordia` → mercy; `infernum / inferi` → lower regions; `scandalum` → scandal.

Psalm 141

Chapter movement

Across 8 verses, the Psalm moves from “The understanding of David, when he was in the cave. A prayer” to “Lead my soul out of custody, that I may confess your name; the just await me until you repay me.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul. The superscription is preserved as Intellectus David, cum esset in spelunca, oratio.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Intellectus David, cum esset in spelunca, oratio—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `anima` → soul.

Psalm 142

Chapter movement

Across 12 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David, when Absalom his son persecuted him. O Lord, hear my prayer; give ear to my entreaty…” to “and in your mercy you shall destroy my enemies and ruin all who trouble my soul, for I am your servant.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David, quando persequebatur eum Absalom filius ejus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David, quando persequebatur eum Absalom filius ejus—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment; `misericordia` → mercy; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 143

Chapter movement

Across 15 verses, the Psalm moves from “A Psalm of David. Against Goliath. Blessed be the Lord my God, who teaches my hands for battle and my…” to “They have called the people who possess these things blessed; blessed is the people whose God is the….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Psalmus David. Adversus Goliath.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Psalmus David. Adversus Goliath—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 144

Chapter movement

Across 21 verses, the Psalm moves from “A praise of David himself. I shall exalt you, my God the King, and I shall bless your name forever and…” to “My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord; and let all flesh bless his holy name forever and unto the….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as Laudatio ipsi David.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Laudatio ipsi David—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `justitia` → justice / justices; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 145

Chapter movement

Across 10 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia, of Aggeus and Zacharias” to “The Lord shall reign unto the ages; your God, O Sion, unto generation and generation.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `veritas` → truth. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja, Aggæi et Zachariæ.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja, Aggæi et Zachariæ—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `anima` → soul; `judicium` → judgment; `veritas` → truth.

Psalm 146

Chapter movement

Across 11 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Praise the Lord, for a psalm is good; let praise be delightful and beautiful to our God” to “The Lord is well pleased in those who fear him and in those who hope upon his mercy.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `misericordia` → mercy.

Psalm 147

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem; praise your God, O Sion” to “He has not dealt in this way with every nation, and he has not manifested his judgments to them.….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `justitia` → justice / justices; `judicium` → judgment.

Psalm 148

Chapter movement

Across 14 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Praise the Lord from the heavens; praise him in the heights” to “His confession is above heaven and earth, and he has exalted the horn of his people. A hymn for all his….” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord.

Psalm 149

Chapter movement

Across 9 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Sing a new canticle to the Lord; his praise is in the church of the saints” to “that they may execute upon them the judgment that is written. This glory belongs to all his saints.....” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment; `ecclesia` → church / churches. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate numbering and the verse-1 superscription—Alleluja—are retained; concrete images are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `Deus` → God; `judicium` → judgment; `ecclesia` → church / churches.

Psalm 150

Chapter movement

Across 6 verses, the Psalm moves from “Alleluia. Praise the Lord in his saints; praise him in the firmament of his strength” to “Let every spirit praise the Lord! Alleluia.” Its petitions, declarations, contrasts, and/or praise remain in the Latin order without an invented transition.

Governing Latin

The governing recurring vocabulary includes `Dominus` → Lord; `firmamentum` → firmament. The superscription is preserved as Alleluja.

Vulgate-specific readings

The firmament, named instruments, cymbals of jubilation, and final summons to every spirit remain literal.

Ambiguities preserved

Pronoun antecedents, abrupt shifts of address, title meanings, poetic correspondences, and attributed theological claims remain no more definite than the Latin permits. No explanatory speaker or doctrine is inserted into the Scripture text.

Clarity decisions

Latin clauses continuing across verse boundaries are punctuated as continuous English while every verse key remains independently auditable. Parallel and repeated wording is retained rather than varied for style.

Corrections and reasons

The Psalm passed ordered source-key, terminology, speaker-boundary, image, and omission review with no separately recorded lexical correction required.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` → Lord; `firmamentum` → firmament.

Proverbs — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 33 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 1:1–1:33 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 33 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 2:1–2:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 35 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 3:1–3:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `Dominum` → “Lord”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 4:1–4:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `prudentia` → “prudence”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 5:1–5:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 35 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 6:1–6:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 7:1–7:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`prudentia` → “prudence”, `anima` → “soul”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 36 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 8:1–8:36 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 36 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 9:1–9:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 32 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 10:1–10:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 11:1–11:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `anima` → “soul”, `Dominum` → “Lord”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 12:1–12:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`disciplina` → “discipline”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 13:1–13:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `justitia` → “justice”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 35 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 14:1–14:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 33 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 15:1–15:33 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 33 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`disciplina` → “discipline”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”, `spiritus` → “spirit”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 33 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 16:1–16:33 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 33 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `justitia` → “justice”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 17:1–17:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “spirit”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 18:1–18:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`scientia` → “knowledge”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 29 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 19:1–19:29 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 29 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`disciplina` → “discipline”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 30 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 20:1–20:30 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 30 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”, `Dominum` → “Lord”.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 21:1–21:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”, `Dominum` → “Lord”.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 29 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 22:1–22:29 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 29 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`scientia` → “knowledge”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 35 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 23:1–23:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `anima` → “soul”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 34 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 24:1–24:34 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 34 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `disciplina` → “discipline”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `Dominum` → “Lord”.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 25:1–25:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`justitia` → “justice”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 26:1–26:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 27:1–27:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`scientia` → “knowledge”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 28:1–28:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”, `Dominum` → “Lord”.

Chapter 29

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 29:1–29:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 30

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 33 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 30:1–30:33 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 33 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `Dominum` → “Lord”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 31

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Proverbs 31:1–31:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`Dominum` → “Lord”.

Ecclesiastes — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 1:1–1:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `prudentia` → “prudence”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 26 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 2:1–2:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `anima` → “soul”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 3:1–3:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 4:1–4:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 19 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 5:1–5:19 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 19 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`justitia` → “justice”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 6:1–6:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 30 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 7:1–7:30 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 30 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `justitia` → “justice”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 8:1–8:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 9:1–9:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `scientia` → “knowledge”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 20 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 10:1–10:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sapientia` → “Wisdom”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 10 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 11:1–11:10 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 10 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts of voice, parallel sayings, repetitions, contrasts, and numerical progressions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ecclesiastes 12:1–12:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “spirit”.

Song of Songs — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 16 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts among Bride, Bridegroom, and Chorus, lyric parallelism, repetitions, and movements of desire and response.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Song of Songs 1:1–1:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts among Bride, Bridegroom, and Chorus, lyric parallelism, repetitions, and movements of desire and response.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Song of Songs 2:1–2:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

The chapter’s concrete moral and poetic vocabulary was translated without importing terminology from another English edition..

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts among Bride, Bridegroom, and Chorus, lyric parallelism, repetitions, and movements of desire and response.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Song of Songs 3:1–3:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 16 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts among Bride, Bridegroom, and Chorus, lyric parallelism, repetitions, and movements of desire and response.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Song of Songs 4:1–4:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

The chapter’s concrete moral and poetic vocabulary was translated without importing terminology from another English edition..

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts among Bride, Bridegroom, and Chorus, lyric parallelism, repetitions, and movements of desire and response.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Song of Songs 5:1–5:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts among Bride, Bridegroom, and Chorus, lyric parallelism, repetitions, and movements of desire and response.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Song of Songs 6:1–6:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 13 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts among Bride, Bridegroom, and Chorus, lyric parallelism, repetitions, and movements of desire and response.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Song of Songs 7:1–7:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

The chapter’s concrete moral and poetic vocabulary was translated without importing terminology from another English edition..

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, shifts among Bride, Bridegroom, and Chorus, lyric parallelism, repetitions, and movements of desire and response.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Song of Songs 8:1–8:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Names, theological terms, concrete images, and clauses distinctive to the Clementine Vulgate were retained, including expressions that differ from familiar modern editions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed pronouns, proverbial ellipses, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; explanatory guesses were not inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for immediate reading while preserving verse boundaries, antithesis, agency, imperatives, questions, and direct speech.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, speaker changes, divine names, images, and moral distinctions. Bracket characters inherited from source paragraph groupings were treated as structure, not translated words.

Canonical terminology

`infer` → “lower regions”.

Isaiah — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 1:1–1:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”, `holocaust` → “holocaust”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 2:1–2:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 26 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 3:1–3:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 6 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 4:1–4:6 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 6 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 30 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 5:1–5:30 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 30 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 13 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 6:1–6:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 7:1–7:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `infer` → “lower regions”, `emmanuel` → “Emmanuel”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 8:1–8:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `emmanuel` → “Emmanuel”.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 9:1–9:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 34 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 10:1–10:34 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 34 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 16 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 11:1–11:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `justitia` → “justice”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 6 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 12:1–12:6 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 6 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 13:1–13:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 32 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 14:1–14:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 9 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 15:1–15:9 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 9 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 16:1–16:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `misericordia` → “mercy”.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 17:1–17:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 7 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 18:1–18:7 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 7 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 19:1–19:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 6 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 20:1–20:6 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 6 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 21:1–21:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 22:1–22:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 23:1–23:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 24:1–24:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 25:1–25:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 26:1–26:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 13 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 27:1–27:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 29 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 28:1–28:29 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 29 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 29

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 29:1–29:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 30

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 33 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 30:1–30:33 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 33 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 31

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 9 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 31:1–31:9 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 9 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 32

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 20 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 32:1–32:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 33

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 33:1–33:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `justitia` → “justice”, `salus` → “salvation”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 34

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 34:1–34:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 35

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 10 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 35:1–35:10 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 10 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”.

Chapter 36

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 36:1–36:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 37

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 38 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 37:1–37:38 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 38 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 38

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 38:1–38:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 39

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 8 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 39:1–39:8 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 8 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 40

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 40:1–40:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”, `holocaust` → “holocaust”.

Chapter 41

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 29 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 41:1–41:29 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 29 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 42

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 42:1–42:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 43

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 43:1–43:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”, `holocaust` → “holocaust”.

Chapter 44

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 44:1–44:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 45

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 45:1–45:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 46

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 13 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 46:1–46:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `salus` → “salvation”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 47

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 47:1–47:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 48

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 48:1–48:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 49

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 26 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 49:1–49:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `salus` → “salvation”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 50

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 50:1–50:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 51

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 51:1–51:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `salus` → “salvation”.

Chapter 52

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 52:1–52:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 53

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 53:1–53:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 54

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 54:1–54:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 55

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 13 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 55:1–55:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 56

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 56:1–56:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `salus` → “salvation”, `holocaust` → “holocaust”.

Chapter 57

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 57:1–57:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 58

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 58:1–58:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 59

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 59:1–59:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 60

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 60:1–60:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `salus` → “salvation”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”.

Chapter 61

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 61:1–61:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `holocaust` → “holocaust”.

Chapter 62

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 62:1–62:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 63

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 19 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 63:1–63:19 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 19 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `justitia` → “justice”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 64

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 64:1–64:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”.

Chapter 65

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 65:1–65:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 66

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Isaias 66:1–66:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Jeremiah — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 19 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 1:1–1:19 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 19 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 37 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 2:1–2:37 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 37 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 3:1–3:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `salus` → “salvation”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 4:1–4:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 5:1–5:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 30 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 6:1–6:30 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 30 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 34 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 7:1–7:34 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 34 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 8:1–8:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 26 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 9:1–9:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 10:1–10:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 11:1–11:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 12:1–12:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 13:1–13:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 14:1–14:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 15:1–15:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 16:1–16:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `misericordia` → “mercy”.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 17:1–17:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”, `holocaust` → “holocaust”, `infer` → “lower regions”.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 18:1–18:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 19:1–19:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `holocaust` → “holocaust”.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 20:1–20:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 21:1–21:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 30 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 22:1–22:30 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 30 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 40 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 23:1–23:40 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 40 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 10 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 24:1–24:10 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 10 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 38 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 25:1–25:38 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 38 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 26:1–26:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 27:1–27:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 28:1–28:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 29

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 32 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 29:1–29:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 30

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 30:1–30:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 31

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 40 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 31:1–31:40 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 40 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctus` → “Holy/holy”.

Chapter 32

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 44 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 32:1–32:44 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 44 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 33

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 26 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 33:1–33:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `misericordia` → “mercy”.

Chapter 34

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 34:1–34:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 35

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 19 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 35:1–35:19 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 19 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 36

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 32 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 36:1–36:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 37

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 20 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 37:1–37:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 38

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 38:1–38:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 39

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 39:1–39:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 40

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 16 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 40:1–40:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 41

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 41:1–41:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

Concrete prophetic vocabulary was retained without importing wording from another English edition.

Chapter 42

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 42:1–42:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `misericordia` → “mercy”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 43

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 13 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 43:1–43:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 44

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 30 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 44:1–44:30 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 30 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 45

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 5 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 45:1–45:5 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 5 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 46

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 46:1–46:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 47

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 7 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 47:1–47:7 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 7 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 48

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 47 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 48:1–48:47 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 47 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 49

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 39 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 49:1–49:39 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 39 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 50

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 46 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 50:1–50:46 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 46 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 51

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 64 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 51:1–51:64 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 64 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `spiritus` → “Spirit/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 52

Chapter movement

The chapter’s 34 Vulgate verses retain their original sequence, oracle boundaries, speaker shifts, poetic parallelism, repetitions, judgments, consolations, and prophetic movement.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jeremias 52:1–52:34 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Vulgate names, divine titles, Christological readings, concrete images, and clauses were retained even where familiar modern editions phrase or number the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, pronoun referents, temporal shifts, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits; interpretation was not silently inserted into the biblical text.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for direct reading while preserving verse boundaries, agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, and rhetorical force.

Corrections and reasons

All 34 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”.

Lamentations — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Jerusalem moves from narrated desolation into her own first-person plea. The solitary widow, violated sanctuary, vanished consolers, and confessed rebellion remain bound together rather than softened into detached history.
The chapter's 22 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence and acrostic position.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Lamentationes 1:1–1:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine prologue embedded in 1:1 is translated, not discarded. The repeated forms in plorans ploravit and peccatum peccavit are represented as "weeping, she has wept" and "has sinned a sin." Ecclesiam tuam is rendered "your assembly," while the concrete menstrual-pollution comparison in 1:17 is not euphemized.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed lament syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visceral metaphors, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a literal construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, and the pressure of the lament. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `justus` → "just", `anima` → "soul", `peccatum` → "sin", `converte` → "turn".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The lament names the Lord's judgment without muting its terror, then turns the shattered city toward tears and prayer. Questions, accusations, imperatives, and the starving children retain their abrupt poetic force.
The chapter's 22 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence and acrostic position.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Lamentationes 2:1–2:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Jecur meum remains the startling bodily image "my liver" in 2:11. Ad pœnitentiam provocarent explicitly becomes "provoke you to repentance" in 2:14, and the palm-sized little ones, sanctuary deaths, and divine agency remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed lament syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visceral metaphors, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a literal construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, and the pressure of the lament. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The afflicted man descends through darkness, gall, ridicule, and the pit, then recalls mercy and rises into hope, repentance, petition, and appeal for judgment. Each Hebrew letter heads three consecutive verses, preserving the Clementine triple acrostic.
The chapter’s 66 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence and acrostic position.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Lamentationes 3:1–3:66 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The threefold letter headings are printed on all sixty-six verses. Misericordiæ Domini and miserationes are distinguished as “mercies” and “tender mercies”; salutare Dei is “the salvation of God”; Altissimi is “the Most High”; and redemptor vitæ meæ is “Redeemer of my life.”

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed lament syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visceral metaphors, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a literal construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, and the pressure of the lament. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 66 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `misericordia` → “mercy/mercies”, `miserationes` → “tender mercies”, `salutare` → “salvation”, `redemptor` → “Redeemer”, `anima` → “soul”, `altissimi` → “Most High”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Gold, sanctuary stones, starving children, corrupted prophets and priests, flight, the captured anointed one, and the cup of Edom form a severe sequence from lost splendor to judgment and promised completion.
The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence and acrostic position.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Lamentationes 4:1–4:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Lamiæ is transliterated “lamias” rather than silently replaced with another creature. Nazaræi remains “Nazarites.” Most importantly, spiritus oris nostri, christus Dominus is translated directly as “the breath of our mouth, Christ the Lord,” preserving the Clementine Christological wording.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed lament syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visceral metaphors, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a literal construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, and the pressure of the lament. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `christus` → “Christ”, `iniquitas` → “iniquity”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The Prayer of Jeremiah speaks in the first-person plural: dispossession, famine, violation, forced labor, lost worship, confession, God’s eternal throne, and the final plea for conversion remain a single communal supplication.
The chapter’s 22 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence and acrostic position.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Lamentationes 5:1–5:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The superscription Oratio Jeremiæ prophetæ is preserved in 5:1. The violence of 5:11–13 is stated without ornamental expansion. The reciprocal force of Converte nos… et convertemur is retained as “Turn us… and we shall be turned,” rather than reduced to self-directed reform.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed lament syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visceral metaphors, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a literal construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, and the pressure of the lament. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”, `converte` → “turn”.

Ezekiel — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The heavens open beside the Chobar: living creatures, wheels, firmament, and enthroned glory culminate in Ezekiel's fall before the divine voice.
The chapter's 28 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 1:1–1:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The four living creatures, intersecting wheels, crystal-like firmament, rainbow, and human likeness upon the throne remain layered as successive likenesses; the English does not collapse Ezekiel's guarded comparisons into literal identifications.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `anima` → "soul", `firmament` → "firmament".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The prophet receives his commission as son of man, is warned of a rebellious house, and eats the scroll filled with lamentation, mourning, and woe.
The chapter's 9 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 2:1–2:9 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 9 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `pactum` → “pact”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Ezekiel eats the scroll, is appointed watchman, encounters the glory again, and is bound into a disciplined pattern of speech and silence.
The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 3:1–3:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `justitia` → “justice”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The brick siege, bodily posture, rationed food, and defiled bread make Jerusalem’s coming siege visible through enacted signs.
The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 4:1–4:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Hair divided by sword, fire, and wind embodies the remnant and its peril as famine, pestilence, sword, and dispersion answer Jerusalem’s abominations.
The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 5:1–5:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The word turns toward Israel’s mountains, demolishing high places and idols while preserving a remnant who will remember the Lord among the nations.
The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 6:1–6:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The end has come: violence, pride, failed commerce, silenced priest and prophet, and a profaned sanctuary converge under irreversible judgment.
The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 7:1–7:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The elders sit before Ezekiel while the Spirit carries him to Jerusalem, where hidden images, corrupted worship, and women weeping for Adonis are exposed.
The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 8:1–8:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Executioners enter the city, but the man clothed in linen marks the mourners with Thau; judgment begins at the sanctuary while the prophet intercedes.
The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 9:1–9:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate's Thau is retained as "Thau," preserving the named mark rather than replacing it with a modern graphic character.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `iniqu` → "iniquity", `gloria` → "glory", `cherub` → "cherub/cherubim".

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Fire is taken from between the cherubim, the wheels and living creatures are identified, and the glory of the Lord departs toward the eastern gate.
The chapter's 22 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 10:1–10:22 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 22 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `gloria` → “glory”, `cherub` → “cherub/cherubim”, `firmament` → “firmament”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Judgment falls upon Jerusalem’s corrupt princes; Pelatiah dies, the exiles receive the promise of one heart and a new spirit, and the glory leaves the city.
The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 11:1–11:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `cherub` → “cherub/cherubim”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Ezekiel enacts exile through the wall, trembles over measured food, and explains that delayed visions will now be fulfilled.
The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 12:1–12:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

False prophets whitewash a failing wall and hunt souls, but the Lord promises to deliver his people from deceptive visions and divinations.
The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 13:1–13:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Idolatrous elders are confronted, individual accountability is sharpened through Noah, Daniel, and Job, and deceptive prophecy is placed under divine judgment.
The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 14:1–14:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The direct force of ego Dominus decepi prophetam illum remains “I, the Lord, have deceived that prophet.” The rendering does not transfer the stated agency away from God.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `justitia` → “justice”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Jerusalem is compared to useless vine wood: once given to fire at both ends, its remaining center cannot serve ordinary work.
The chapter's 8 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 15:1–15:8 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 8 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `fili hominis` → "son of man".

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Jerusalem's history is narrated as an abandoned infant raised, adorned, and covenanted by God, then as a wife whose explicit harlotry violates every gift.
The chapter's 63 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 16:1–16:63 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's exposure, blood, breasts, nakedness, emissions, and prostitution are translated without euphemism because the prophetic accusation depends upon their bodily force.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 63 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `pactum` → “pact”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

Two eagles and a transplanted vine interpret Zedekiah’s broken oath; above political ruin, God promises to plant a tender cedar shoot on Israel’s high mountain.
The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 17:1–17:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Fœdus is consistently “covenant,” while pactum is “pact.” The political oath, its violation, and God’s promised planting retain their distinct legal and prophetic contours.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `pactum` → “pact”, `fœdus` → “covenant”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

The proverb about fathers and children is rejected: each soul answers for its own sin, while repentance, conversion, and a new heart are urgently commanded.
The chapter’s 32 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 18:1–18:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Pœnitentiam egerit is rendered with the direct Vulgate wording “does penance.” Soul, justice, iniquity, conversion, and personal accountability are kept distinct rather than harmonized into a later English formula.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `justitia` → “justice”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

A lament portrays Israel’s princes as lion cubs captured by nations and as a fruitful vine uprooted, dried, and consumed by fire.
The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 19:1–19:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

Concrete prophetic vocabulary was retained without importing wording from another English edition.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Israel’s repeated rebellions in Egypt, wilderness, and land are rehearsed; even severe commandments and scattering stand within God’s concern for his name.
The chapter’s 49 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 20:1–20:49 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The severe statement that God gave “commandments that were not good” is retained without explanatory mitigation, while the surrounding concern for his name and the people’s rebellion remains explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 49 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

The sharpened sword moves toward Jerusalem and Ammon; the overturned diadem awaits the one whose judgment it is.
The chapter’s 32 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 21:1–21:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The messianic-judicial wording donec veniret cujus est judicium remains “until he comes whose judgment it is,” preserving the Vulgate’s forward-looking formulation.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

Jerusalem is indicted as a city of blood, melted like metal in a furnace, while prophets, priests, princes, and people share in the corruption.
The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 22:1–22:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

Oholah and Oholibah embody Samaria and Jerusalem in an intentionally explicit account of political and religious prostitution and its judicial consequences.
The chapter’s 49 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 23:1–23:49 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s breasts, lovers, nakedness, lust, and prostitution remain explicit. Political alliances and religious infidelity are allowed to operate together within Ezekiel’s sustained figure.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 49 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `sanctuarium` → “sanctuary”, `peccat` → “sin”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

The boiling pot signifies the besieged city, and the death of Ezekiel’s wife becomes a sign that the sanctuary and the people’s delight will be profaned.
The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 24:1–24:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `sanctuarium` → “sanctuary”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

Brief oracles against Ammon, Moab, Seir, Edom, and the Philistines expose rejoicing over Judah and promise that the nations will know the Lord.
The chapter's 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 25:1–25:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `sanctuarium` → "sanctuary", `propheta` → "prophet", `fili hominis` → "son of man".

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

Tyre's claim to perfection becomes a lament over a magnificent trading ship whose pilots, merchandise, and multinational crew sink in the sea.
The chapter's 21 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 26:1–26:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `gloria` → “glory”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

Tyre’s prince is judged for claiming divinity, while the king’s Edenic beauty and protecting cherub imagery descend into ruin; Sidon is judged and Israel regathered.
The chapter’s 36 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 27:1–27:36 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate trade geography and goods—including Carthaginians, Italian islands, Pygmies, and chodchod—remain visible instead of being silently conformed to a different textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 36 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

Pharaoh is called a great dragon in the Nile; Egypt’s pride brings desolation, dispersion, and eventual restoration as a lowly kingdom.
The chapter’s 26 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 28:1–28:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The “protecting cherub,” Eden, precious stones, anointed status, created perfection, and subsequent iniquity retain their elevated and enigmatic Vulgate texture.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `cherub` → “cherub/cherubim”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 29

Chapter movement

Egypt is assigned to Nebuchadnezzar as wages for the labor against Tyre, and Israel receives the budding of a horn.
The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 29:1–29:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 30

Chapter movement

The day of the Lord comes upon Egypt and its allies; idols, cities, rivers, and military strength fall under Babylon’s sword.
The chapter’s 26 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 30:1–30:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 31

Chapter movement

Assyria’s cedar-like greatness and descent warn Pharaoh that no exalted tree escapes death and the realm below.
The chapter’s 18 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 31:1–31:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 32

Chapter movement

Laments over Pharaoh depict him first as a captured sea creature and then among the slain nations in the depths of the earth.
The chapter’s 32 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 32:1–32:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 33

Chapter movement

The watchman’s responsibility is restated, personal conversion is defended, Jerusalem’s fall is reported, and hearers who enjoy Ezekiel’s words are exposed for not doing them.
The chapter’s 33 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 33:1–33:33 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 33 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `justitia` → “justice”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 34

Chapter movement

False shepherds are condemned; God himself seeks and feeds the flock, appoints one shepherd—his servant David—and establishes a pact of peace.
The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 34:1–34:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

God’s personal shepherding, the one shepherd “my servant David,” the prince, and the pact of peace remain separate promises within one restoration oracle.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `pactum` → “pact”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 35

Chapter movement

Mount Seir is sentenced for perpetual hatred, bloodshed, and the attempted possession of Israel's lands.
The chapter's 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 35:1–35:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `iniqu` → "iniquity", `propheta` → "prophet", `fili hominis` → "son of man".

Chapter 36

Chapter movement

Israel's mountains are promised fruit and repopulation; God vindicates his holy name through clean water, a new heart, and a new spirit.
The chapter's 38 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 36:1–36:38 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Clean water, a new heart, a new spirit, removal of the stony heart, and God's Spirit are rendered as a connected divine action while preserving each image and promise.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 38 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 37

Chapter movement

Dry bones live by the Spirit, two sticks become one, David shepherds the reunited people, and covenant of peace joins an everlasting pact.
The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 37:1–37:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The opening of tombs, enlivening breath or Spirit, one shepherd David, “covenant of peace,” and “everlasting pact” remain distinct elements of the two joined visions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `pactum` → “pact”, `fœdus` → “covenant”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 38

Chapter movement

Gog’s assault from the far north gathers many nations, but divine fury, earthquake, sword, pestilence, and fire reveal the Lord’s holiness.
The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 38:1–38:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 39

Chapter movement

Gog’s defeat fills Israel with weapons for fuel and requires seven months of burial; restoration, mercy, and the poured-out Spirit close the oracle.
The chapter’s 29 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 39:1–39:29 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, judgments, repetitions, and prophetic images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 29 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 40

Chapter movement

A bronze-like guide measures the future sanctuary’s gates, courts, chambers, porch, and altar in reeds and cubits.
The chapter’s 49 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 40:1–40:49 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Reeds and cubits are retained as different Vulgate units. Repeated measurements, thresholds, jambs, gates, chambers, and courts are not compressed, because architectural repetition is part of the vision’s precision.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 49 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`holocaust` → “holocaust/whole burnt offering”, `peccat` → “sin”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 41

Chapter movement

The temple proper, side chambers, separate building, carved cherubim and palms, doors, and measured courts define the sacred structure.
The chapter’s 26 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 41:1–41:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Architectural clauses are clarified through punctuation, but repeated widths, side chambers, winding ascent, cherubim, palms, doors, and the wooden altar remain within their verse boundaries.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`cherub` → “cherub/cherubim”.

Chapter 42

Chapter movement

Priestly chambers and the outer wall complete the measured precinct and distinguish what is holy from what is common.
The chapter’s 20 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 42:1–42:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chambers’ orientations and dimensions remain as exact as the Latin permits. Where compressed spatial relations remain uncertain, the English does not manufacture a modern floor plan.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sanctuarium` → “sanctuary”, `peccat` → “sin”.

Chapter 43

Chapter movement

The glory of Israel’s God returns through the eastern gate, fills the house, and consecrates the altar through a seven-day rite.
The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 43:1–43:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The returning glory, eastern approach, law of the house, and altar consecration retain their ritual sequence and repeated measurements.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `sanctuarium` → “sanctuary”, `holocaust` → “holocaust/whole burnt offering”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”.

Chapter 44

Chapter movement

The shut eastern gate belongs to the Lord; the prince, Levites, and sons of Zadok receive distinct duties, boundaries, garments, and inheritance.
The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 44:1–44:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The permanently shut eastern gate, the prince’s access, Levitical restrictions, Zadokite service, garments, marriage rules, judgments, and inheritance are kept without collapsing their distinct regulations.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `pactum` → “pact”, `sanctuarium` → “sanctuary”, `holocaust` → “holocaust/whole burnt offering”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 45

Chapter movement

A holy land portion, sanctuary, city, priests, Levites, prince, offerings, feasts, and just measures order worship and public life.
The chapter's 25 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 45:1–45:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The holy portion's dimensions, land divisions, just measures, offerings, Passover, and seventh-month observance retain the Vulgate's numerical and cultic specificity.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `judicium` → "judgment", `justitia` → "justice", `sanctuarium` → "sanctuary", `holocaust` → "holocaust/whole burnt offering", `peccat` → "sin", `iniqu` → "iniquity".

Chapter 46

Chapter movement

The prince's offerings, inheritance limits, festival worship, and temple kitchens protect both holiness and the people from coercive rule.
The chapter's 24 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 46:1–46:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The prince remains subject to defined worship, offering, and inheritance rules. The kitchens and boiling places are described concretely without importing later architectural labels.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `holocaust` → “holocaust/whole burnt offering”, `peccat` → “sin”.

Chapter 47

Chapter movement

Life-giving water deepens from the temple, heals the sea, nourishes medicinal trees, and frames land inheritance that includes resident strangers.
The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 47:1–47:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The river’s measured deepening, healed waters, fish, salt marshes, fruit, medicinal leaves, tribal borders, and equal inheritance for resident strangers all remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `fili hominis` → “son of man”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 48

Chapter movement

The tribes, sanctuary, city gates, and holy portion are distributed around the city whose final name is “The Lord Is There.”
The chapter’s 35 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Ezechiel 48:1–48:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The final allotments and gates preserve tribal names and dimensions, and Dominus ibidem is rendered as the city’s climactic name, “The Lord Is There.”

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, repetitions, parallelism, symbolic actions, and measured architecture. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `sanctuarium` → “sanctuary”.

Daniel — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Daniel and his companions enter Babylonian service without defiling themselves; God grants them knowledge, discipline, wisdom, and Daniel's understanding of visions and dreams.
The chapter's 21 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 1:1–1:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The names Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Azarias and their imposed names Baltassar, Sidrach, Misach, and Abdenago follow the Clementine forms. The first divine Dominus is transparently identified as "the Lord (YHWH)" at 1:2.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The forgotten dream threatens Babylon's wise men until God reveals the statue and its meaning; the stone cut without hands becomes an everlasting kingdom filling the earth.
The chapter's 49 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 2:1–2:49 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Sacramentum is “mystery,” and the Vulgate’s stone cut “from the mountain without hands” remains explicit. The sequence earthenware, iron, bronze, silver, and gold is preserved where the Latin repeats it.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 49 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The golden statue and burning furnace frame the steadfast refusal of the three, Azarias’s prayer, the creation-wide hymn, angelic deliverance, and royal confession.
The chapter’s 100 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 3:1–3:100 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

All one hundred Clementine verses remain in their Vulgate chapter positions, including the bracketed Prayer of Azarias and Song of the Three. Infernum at 3:88 is “the realm of the dead,” and 3:92 remains “like a son of God.”

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 100 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `holocaust` → “holocaust/whole burnt offering”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `cherub` → “cherub/cherubim”, `firmament` → “firmament”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Nabuchodonosor’s tree vision becomes his own humiliation among beasts; restored understanding leads him to praise the King of heaven who humbles pride.
The chapter’s 34 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 4:1–4:34 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate’s vigil is retained as “watcher.” Daniel’s counsel, “redeem your sins with alms and your iniquities with mercies to the poor,” remains direct and is not conformed to a shorter textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 34 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Baltassar profanes the temple vessels; the writing Mane, Thecel, Phares announces a numbered, weighed, and divided kingdom fulfilled that same night.
The chapter’s 31 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 5:1–5:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The written words remain Mane, Thecel, Phares, followed by the Clementine interpretations “numbered,” “weighed,” and “divided.” The bodily terror of loosened loins and striking knees is retained.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Daniel’s unwavering prayer brings him into the lions’ den, where God’s angel shuts their mouths and Darius proclaims the living, eternal, delivering God.
The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 6:1–6:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Daniel’s three daily prayers toward Jerusalem, the sealed stone, the angel shutting the lions’ mouths, and the violent fate of the accusers with their families remain without mitigation.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `justitia` → “justice”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Four beasts rise from the sea, but the Ancient of Days sits in judgment and one like a son of man receives everlasting power, honor, kingdom, and universal service.
The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 7:1–7:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Ancient of Days, fiery throne and wheels, opened books, one “like a son of man,” universal service, and everlasting kingdom preserve the Vulgate’s explicit messianic and judicial language.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The ram, he-goat, horns, perpetual sacrifice, desolation, and cleansing of the sanctuary unfold under Gabriel's explanation of the vision's appointed end.
The chapter's 27 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 8:1–8:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Juge sacrificium is consistently "the perpetual sacrifice." The Vulgate counts "evening and morning, two thousand three hundred days," and names Gabriel as the interpreter.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sanctuarium` → "sanctuary", `peccat` → "sin", `iniqu` → "iniquity", `fili hominis` → "son of man".

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Daniel confesses Israel's sin and pleads for Jerusalem; Gabriel announces seventy weeks, Christ the leader, Christ slain, everlasting justice, and the abomination of desolation.
The chapter's 27 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 9:1–9:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Latin pactum remains "pact." Christum ducem is "Christ the leader," and occidetur christus is "Christ shall be slain"; these Clementine readings are not neutralized into a generic title.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `justitia` → “justice”, `pactum` → “pact”, `sanctuarium` → “sanctuary”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

After three weeks of mourning, Daniel sees a radiant man, is repeatedly strengthened, and hears of heavenly conflict involving the princes of Persia, Greece, and Michael.
The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 10:1–10:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The enigmatic “man of desires,” radiant bodily description, Michael, and the princes of Persia and Greece remain as stated. The English preserves Daniel’s repeated collapse, touch, and strengthening.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

Concrete prophetic vocabulary was retained without importing wording from another English edition.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

A dense succession of northern and southern kings moves through alliances, deceit, war, profanation, and the abomination unto desolation toward an unhelped end.
The chapter's 45 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 11:1–11:45 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Testamentum remains "testament," distinct here from fœdus as covenant elsewhere. The Vulgate-specific Romans, Maozim, Apadno, triremes, and tightly compressed political transitions are retained.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 45 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`sanctuarium` → "sanctuary", `gloria` → "glory", `convert` → "turn/be converted".

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Michael arises amid unparalleled distress; the written people are saved, the dead awaken, the learned shine, and sealed times lead Daniel toward rest and his allotted end.
The chapter's 13 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 12:1–12:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The awakening to everlasting life or perpetual reproach, brightness of the firmament, 1,290 days, 1,335 days, and Daniel's rest and lot remain explicit and numerically exact.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`justitia` → “justice”, `firmament` → “firmament”.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Susanna refuses sexual coercion, is condemned by false testimony, cries to God, and is vindicated when the young Daniel separates and exposes the two corrupt elders.
The chapter’s 65 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 13:1–13:65 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Susanna’s bathing, the elders’ coercive sexual demand, attempted judicial murder, uncovering, false testimony, and execution of the guilty are stated without euphemism. The two different trees remain distinct.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 65 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Daniel exposes Bel’s hidden consumption, destroys the dragon without sword, is fed by Habacuc in the lions’ den, and is delivered as the king confesses Daniel’s God.
The chapter’s 42 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Daniel 14:1–14:42 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Bel, the dragon, the hidden entrance, women’s and children’s footprints, Habacuc carried by his hair, the second lions’ den, and the Vulgate’s exact quantities remain fully within the reader text.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 42 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Hosea — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Hosea’s marriage and the children named Jezrahel, Without Mercy, and Not My People enact Israel’s judgment, yet the chapter turns toward innumerable children of the living God under one head.
The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 1:1–1:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Uxorem fornicationum and filios fornicationum remain “wife of fornications” and “children of fornications.” The symbolic names are translated semantically, while Jezrahel is retained. The first divine Dominus is identified as “the Lord (YHWH)” at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The unfaithful wife is exposed, stripped of false securities, and led into the wilderness; judgment opens into courtship, covenant, espousal, mercy, and restored belonging.
The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 2:1–2:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The breasts, nakedness, lovers, wages, and adulteries remain explicit. Fœdus is “covenant”; sponsabo is “espouse”; justice, judgment, mercy, tender mercies, and faith remain distinct terms in the divine betrothal.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `fœdus` → “covenant”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Hosea loves and acquires an adulterous woman, whose guarded waiting signifies Israel’s long deprivation before returning to the Lord and David their king in the last days.
The chapter’s 5 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 3:1–3:5 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The compressed fodi eam is rendered “dug her out,” preserving the difficult Vulgate verb rather than silently replacing it with another textual tradition. David remains explicitly “their king” in the last days.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 5 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The Lord’s judgment confronts a land without truth, mercy, or knowledge; priest and people share guilt as fornication, idolatry, intoxication, and failed teaching consume the heart.
The chapter’s 19 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 4:1–4:19 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The repeated language of fornication is not euphemized. Effeminatis remains “the effeminate,” preserving the Vulgate’s difficult designation rather than supplying an invented identity.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 19 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Priests, Israel, and the royal house become snare and net; seeking God with flocks cannot overcome estrangement, for the Lord withdraws until they seek his face.
The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 5:1–5:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The avenging king, moth, decay, lioness, and lion’s cub retain their concrete force. The repeated “I, I shall seize” preserves divine emphasis rather than smoothing it away.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The people call for return and third-day raising, but their mercy passes like dew; God desires mercy and knowledge rather than sacrifice while pact-breaking defiles the land.
The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 6:1–6:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate’s “after two days” and “on the third day he will raise us up” remain intact. Misericordiam volui, et non sacrificium is “I desired mercy and not sacrifice,” and pactum remains “pact.”

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`pactum` → “pact”, `holocaust` → “holocaust/whole burnt offering”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Samaria’s falsehood and political heat are compared to an oven, an unturned hearth cake, a deceived dove, and a deceitful bow; redemption is answered with lies.
The chapter’s 16 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 7:1–7:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The oven, unturned hearth cake, gray hairs, deceived dove, netted bird, and deceitful bow remain separate images. The unusual statement that they “ruminated over grain and wine” follows the Latin directly.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`iniqu` → “iniquity”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Covenant violation, self-appointed rulers, the calf of Samaria, hired lovers, multiplied altars, and forgotten law culminate in sowing wind and reaping whirlwind.
The chapter's 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 8:1–8:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Fœdus remains "covenant." The calf becoming "spiders' webs," sowing wind and reaping whirlwind, and Israel as an unclean vessel preserve Clementine-specific concrete wording.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `fœdus` → "covenant", `peccat` → "sin", `iniqu` → "iniquity", `convert` → "turn/be converted".

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Israel's feast, sacrifice, fertility, children, and land turn under judgment; the recollection of grapes in the wilderness gives way to Beelphegor, barrenness, exile, and wandering.
The chapter's 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 9:1–9:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Bread "for their own soul," the prophet called foolish, the spiritual man called insane, and the prayer for a childless womb and withered breasts remain as severe as the Latin.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The leafy vine’s abundance multiplies idols; divided hearts, displaced boundaries, Bethaven’s calf, and military confidence lead to ruin, while justice and mercy remain the commanded sowing.
The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 10:1–10:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The cows of Bethaven, foam-like king, appeal to mountains and hills, trained heifer, fallow ground, and mother dashed upon her children remain without mitigation or imported explanation.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`judicium` → “judgment”, `justitia` → “justice”, `fœdus` → “covenant”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

God recalls loving Israel as a child, calling his son from Egypt, carrying and feeding him; judgment remains real, yet divine compassion turns and promises a return home.
The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 11:1–11:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

“Out of Egypt I called my son” remains explicit. The cords of Adam, bonds of charity, God’s troubled repentance, divine self-identification as God and not man, and Judah’s enigmatic witness remain open where the Latin is compressed.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Jacob’s womb-struggle, encounter with the angel, service for a wife, and preservation through a prophet expose Ephraim’s deceit while calling him back to mercy and judgment.
The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 12:1–12:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Jacob is said to be “directed with an angel” and to prevail toward him; these unusual Vulgate constructions remain. Fœdus is “covenant,” while mercy and judgment remain the commanded paired virtues.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `fœdus` → “covenant”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Ephraim’s idolatry brings death and beast-like judgment, yet the Lord alone is Savior and declares a defiant redemption from death and the realm of the dead.
The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 13:1–13:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The command “Sacrifice men, you who adore calves,” the torn liver, labor pains, and animal violence remain concrete. Inferne is “O realm of the dead,” preserving the Vulgate’s distinction from death.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Samaria’s brutal judgment yields to a final call for conversion: words replace false security, God heals and loves freely, Israel flowers, and the wise recognize the Lord’s right ways.
The chapter’s 10 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Hosea 14:1–14:10 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The ripped-open pregnant women remain explicit. Vitulos labiorum nostrorum is “the calves of our lips,” not silently conformed to a different metaphor; conversion, free love, dew, lily, olive, vine, and fir retain their sequence.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 10 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Joel — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Successive devourers strip vineyard, fig tree, field, and storehouse; drunkards, farmers, priests, animals, and the prophet join a land-wide lament as the Day of the Lord approaches.
The chapter's 20 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Joel 1:1–1:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The sequence eruca, locusta, bruchus, rubigo is kept as caterpillar, locust, bruchus, and blight rather than collapsed into one generalized plague. The triple cry A, a, a remains "Ah, ah, ah." The first divine Dominus is identified as "the Lord (YHWH)" at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → "soul".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The trumpet announces a terrifying ordered host, but the Lord calls for hearts rather than garments. Communal repentance opens into restored harvest, the teacher of justice, the outpoured Spirit, cosmic signs, and salvation for all who call upon the Lord.
The chapter's 32 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Joel 2:1–2:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Convertimini is rendered “be converted,” preserving the Vulgate’s conversion language. The “teacher of justice,” early and latter rain, restored devoured years, outpouring of the Spirit upon all flesh, and salvation for everyone who invokes the Lord remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The nations are gathered into the valley of Josaphat for judgment over the scattered people and divided land; harvest and winepress imagery culminate in the Lord roaring from Sion, a life-giving fountain, and Jerusalem inhabited forever.
The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Joel 3:1–3:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The boy placed “in a brothel,” the children sold to the Greeks, plows cut into swords, valley of Josaphat, valley of cutting down, overflowing winepress, torrent of thorns, and cleansing of blood all retain their Clementine specificity.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Amos — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The Lord roars from Sion as the repeated “three crimes and four” formula moves through Damascus, Gaza, Tyre, Edom, and Ammon, judging violence, captivity, broken brotherhood, and territorial cruelty.
The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 1:1–1:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The repeated super tribus sceleribus… et super quatuor is preserved as “for three crimes… and for four.” Cyrene, the field of the idol, house of pleasure, covenant of brothers, and cut-open pregnant women remain Clementine-specific. The first Dominus is “The Lord (YHWH)” at 1:2.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The same judicial formula reaches Moab, Judah, and finally Israel, where selling the just and poor, sexual violation, abused pledges, silenced prophets, and corrupted Nazarites answer God’s saving history.
The chapter’s 16 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 2:1–2:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The just sold for silver and the poor for sandals, father and son going to the same girl, pledged garments, wine of the condemned, Amorrhite height, Nazarites, and the creaking loaded wagon remain concrete and explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Israel’s unique knowledge of God deepens rather than removes accountability; a chain of rhetorical questions joins lion, snare, trumpet, prophecy, plundered Samaria, broken altars, and ruined luxury houses.
The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 3:1–3:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Vulgate directly asks whether evil exists in a city that the Lord has not done; divine agency is not softened. The rescue of two legs or an ear-tip, couch of Damascus, severed altar horns, and ivory houses remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The wealthy “fat cows” who crush the poor face exile; Bethel’s ostentatious worship cannot hide repeated refusals to return through famine, drought, blight, death, and overthrow, ending in the summons to meet God. The chapter’s 13 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 4:1–4:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

“Fat cows” remains the direct address. Pikes, boiling pots, numbness of teeth, selective rain, camp rottenness in the nostrils, and the firebrand snatched from burning preserve the chapter’s bodily and material force.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

A funeral lament calls Israel to seek God, good, and judgment at the gate; empty ritual and musical noise are rejected so that judgment and justice may flow, while the desired Day of the Lord becomes darkness.
The chapter’s 27 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 5:1–5:27 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Arcturus and Orion retain their Vulgate names. Judgment and justice remain distinct; holocaust, Moloch's tabernacle, the star of their god, and migration beyond Damascus are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 27 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `judicium` → "judgment", `justitia` → "justice", `peccat` → "sin", `convert` → "turn/be converted".

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The wealthy of Sion and Samaria luxuriate on ivory beds, food, music, wine, and ointment without grieving Joseph's ruin; exile, death, shattered houses, and an invading nation answer their pride.
The chapter's 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 6:1–6:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Ivory beds, psaltery, wine bowls, finest ointment, burning of the dead, buffaloes plowing, self-made horns, and the torrent of the wilderness remain as stated, including the disturbing command not to remember the Lord's name.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Locust and fire judgments are stayed through Amos’s intercession, but the mason’s trowel vision stands. Amasias attempts to silence the herdsman called by God and receives a concrete sentence of devastation. The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 7:1–7:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Trulla cæmentarii is rendered “mason’s trowel,” not silently replaced by the familiar plumb-line reading. Amos remains a herdsman who plucks sycamore figs; the sexual, familial, territorial, and exile judgments upon Amasias remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The hook of fruit announces Israel's end. Merchants manipulate sacred time, measures, money, and grain to buy the poor, and their coming famine is not for bread but for hearing the Lord's word.
The chapter's 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 8:1–8:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Uncinus pomorum remains "hook of fruit." The only-begotten son, sunset at midday, dishonest measures and balances, grain refuse, and famine for hearing the Lord's word preserve the Vulgate's language and sequence.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `convert` → "turn/be converted".

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

No hiding place escapes the Lord's searching judgment, yet Jacob is sifted rather than annihilated. The fallen tabernacle of David rises, the nations bear God's name, abundance returns, and Israel is planted permanently.
The chapter's 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Amos 9:1–9:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Infernum is "the realm of the dead." Palestinians from Cappadocia and Syrians from Cyrene remain Vulgate geography. The fallen tabernacle of David and nations upon whom God's name is invoked retain their messianic wording.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `peccat` → “sin”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Obadiah — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Edom’s rock-secured pride is summoned into judgment for violence against brother Jacob and complicity in Jerusalem’s fall. The Day of the Lord returns recompense upon Edom, while salvation rises on Mount Sion, Jacob and Joseph consume Esau, dispossessed lands are recovered, and the kingdom belongs to the Lord. The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Obadiah 1:1–1:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The report and envoy, clefts of rock, eagle’s nest among stars, men of covenant and peace, the surviving grape cluster, Bosphorus, saviors ascending Sion, and the kingdom belonging to the Lord retain Clementine specificity. The first divine Dominus is identified as “the Lord (YHWH)” at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Jonah — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Jonah flees from the Lord’s commission to Nineveh, descending toward Tharsis until the divinely sent storm exposes him. The sailors resist shedding innocent blood, cast Jonah into the sea only after prayer, and turn in reverent sacrifice and vows to the Lord.
The chapter’s 16 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jonah 1:1–1:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Joppa and Tharsis retain their Vulgate forms. “From the face of the Lord,” the paid fare, ship’s vessels, heavy slumber, soul of the man, innocent blood, sacrificed victims, and made vows remain concrete. The first divine Dominus is identified as “the Lord (YHWH)” at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The Lord prepares a great fish, and Jonah prays from its belly. His descent into sea, abyss, mountain roots, earth’s bars, and the realm of the dead turns toward the holy temple, remembered mercy, vowed praise, salvation, and deliverance onto dry land.
The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jonah 2:1–2:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The creature remains a “great fish,” without importing a species. Inferi is rendered “the realm of the dead”; the flood, whirlpools, waves, abyss, mountain extremities, earth’s bars, corruption, holy temple, vain things, mercy, and vowed sacrifice preserve the psalm’s descent-and-deliverance imagery.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The word comes a second time, and Jonah proclaims Nineveh’s overthrow. From people to king and from humans to beasts, the city fasts, wears sackcloth, cries strongly, and turns from evil; God sees their works, has mercy concerning the threatened evil, and does not do it.
The chapter’s 10 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jonah 3:1–3:10 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Nineveh remains a three-days’ journey, while Jonah enters by one day and proclaims forty days. The king’s decree explicitly includes beasts, oxen, and sheep in abstinence and sackcloth. God’s mercy “concerning the evil” preserves malitia without disguising the Vulgate’s wording.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 10 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Jonah’s anger at mercy exposes the reason for his flight. God answers him through the brief gift and loss of an ivy, contrasting Jonah’s grief for a plant with divine compassion for Nineveh’s 120,000 morally unknowing people and its many beasts.
The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Jonah 4:1–4:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Hedera remains “ivy,” not silently conformed to a gourd or plant. God prepares the ivy and worm, commands the hot burning wind, and ends with more than 120,000 people unable to distinguish right from left, together with many beasts.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Micah — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The Lord leaves his holy temple and treads the earth's high places; mountains melt, valleys split, and Samaria becomes a stone heap for Jacob's crime. Micah's naked lament moves through Judah's towns until captivity strips the children of delight away.
The chapter's 16 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Micah 1:1–1:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Micah remains "the Morasthite"; Joathan, Achaz, Ezechias, Geth, Lachis, Maresa, and Odollam retain Vulgate forms. Dragons and ostriches, prostitute's wages, the house of dust, the chariot of astonishment, and eagle-like baldness remain concrete. The first divine Dominus is "the Lord (YHWH)" at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `peccat` → "sin", `gloria` → "glory".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Land-grabbers who devise evil upon their beds face a divine counter-design and loss of inheritance. Against silenced truth, stripped travelers, expelled women, and robbed children, the Lord promises to gather Jacob like a flock and lead them out with their king at their head.
The chapter's 13 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Micah 2:1–2:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The difficult prophetic command Ne loquamini loquentes remains “Do not speak, you who speak,” and prophetic speech “drips.” Cloak and tunic remain distinct; women and little children are dispossessed; the way-opener, king, and Lord lead the gathered flock.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Princes flay and consume the people, prophets sell peace or sanctify war, and rulers, priests, and diviners commercialize judgment, teaching, and revelation. Micah, filled with the Lord’s Spirit, announces that blood-built Sion shall be plowed and Jerusalem become stones.
The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Micah 3:1–3:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The rulers’ violence retains its cannibalistic imagery: skins torn, flesh eaten, bones broken, and bodies cut for kettle and pot. False prophets “sanctify war”; paid princes, priests, and prophets are not softened, nor is Sion’s plowing.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

In the last days nations stream to the Lord’s mountain, receive his law, turn weapons into farming tools, and sit unafraid beneath vine and fig tree. The limping remnant is gathered, Babylon becomes the place of redemption, and gathered enemies become hay for Sion’s threshing.
The chapter’s 13 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Micah 4:1–4:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Swords become plowshares and spears become hoes. The Vulgate’s “cloudy tower of the flock,” Babylonian deliverance, stoning cry, hay of the threshing floor, iron horn, bronze hooves, and spoils slain to the Lord remain intact.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

From little Bethlehem Ephrata comes the eternal ruler who feeds in the Lord’s strength and himself is peace. Jacob’s remnant becomes both dew and lion, while horses, chariots, fortifications, sorceries, images, statues, groves, and disobedient nations are removed in judgment.
The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Micah 5:1–5:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Bethlehem Ephrata is little among Judah’s thousands, and the ruler’s origin is “from the beginning, from the days of eternity.” “This one shall be peace,” seven shepherds, eight chief men, Assur, Nemrod, dew, lion, sorceries, statues, and sacred groves retain Vulgate specificity.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The Lord brings covenant litigation before mountains and earth’s foundations, recounting exodus and preservation. Neither extravagant sacrifice nor a firstborn answers sin: the good required is judgment, mercy, and careful walking with God, while fraudulent wealth brings covenant curses.
The chapter’s 16 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Micah 6:1–6:16 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Lord is presented in judgment with his people and as being judged with Israel; this difficult forensic wording is preserved. Miriam, Setim, Galgala, holocausts, firstborn sacrifice, smaller measure, deceitful bag-weights, Amri, and Achab remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 16 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `justitia` → “justice”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Amid bloodshed, corruption, and household enmity, the faithful voice waits for God its Savior. Darkness yields to divine light, the flock is shepherded, nations lick dust, and the book ends with God casting sins into the sea and keeping truth and mercy sworn to the fathers.
The chapter’s 20 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Micah 7:1–7:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Early figs, buckthorn, thorn hedge, guarded mouth, family enemies, mud of streets, Assur, Carmel, Basan, and Galaad remain concrete. God “wills mercy,” casts all sins into the sea, and gives truth to Jacob and mercy to Abraham.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `justitia` → “justice”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”.

Nahum — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The burden opens with the jealous and avenging Lord whose tempest way shakes creation, yet who is good to those hoping in him. Nineveh's devising is ended, Judah's bonds are broken, Belial perishes, and feet upon the mountains announce peace.
The chapter's 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Nahum 1:1–1:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Nahum remains "the Elcesite." The Lord's cleansing does not make the guilty innocent; clouds remain the dust of his feet, rocks dissolve, intertwined thorns become a drinking banquet, the enemy is shorn, Belial perishes, and the first divine Dominus is "the Lord (YHWH)" at 1:2.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The scatterer ascends and Nineveh's defenders confront fiery shields, scarlet troops, colliding chariots, opened river gates, and a demolished temple. The water-pool city empties, its wealth is plundered, its lion-den is silenced, and the Lord of hosts declares himself against it.
The chapter's 13 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Nahum 2:1–2:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Fiery reins, stupefied drivers, colliding chariots like lightning, a prepared shelter, the captive soldier, dove-like maidservants, pot-black faces, lions, prey, dens, and silenced messengers preserve the Clementine siege imagery.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The city of blood meets the sounds and bodies of war because its seductive sorceries sold nations. Alexandria’s fall becomes a warning; fortifications drop like figs, fire and sword consume, locust-like commerce and guards vanish, and the king of Assur receives an incurable wound amid universal applause.
The chapter’s 19 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Nahum 3:1–3:19 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The city remains filled with “the tearing of falsehood.” Sexual exposure, sorcery, dashed children, cast lots, fettered nobles, unripe figs, brick mold, bruchus, locust swarms, Assur, buried princes, and clapped hands remain explicit and unsoftened.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 19 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Habakkuk — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The prophet cries over unanswered violence, torn law, and perverted judgment. God raises the swift Chaldeans, yet Habakkuk questions how the Holy One can watch a wicked nation devour one more just than itself and sacrifice to the net by which it kills nations.
The chapter's 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Habakkuk 1:1–1:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

"Contradiction is more powerful," judgment that does not reach its end, Chaldean self-derived judgment, evening wolves, a burning-wind face, the godlike strength of the invader, fish without a ruler, hook, seine, net, and sacrifices to fishing implements preserve Clementine concreteness. The first divine Dominus is "the Lord (YHWH)" at 1:2.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → "God", `spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `judicium` → "judgment", `justitia` → "justice", `iniqu` → "iniquity", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

From his watch upon the fortress, Habakkuk receives a vision for tablets: it shall surely come, and the just shall live by his faith. Five woes answer predatory pride, blood-built cities, forced drunkenness, ecological violence, and mute idols before the whole earth falls silent in God's holy temple.
The chapter's 20 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Habakkuk 2:1–2:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The vision is made plain so its reader may “run through it.” The just lives “by his faith”; the proud enlarges his soul like the realm of the dead; thick clay, the answering wall-timber, gall in a friend’s drink, the vomit of disgrace, Lebanon’s iniquity, and idols without breath remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The prayer for ignorances asks God to revive his work and remember mercy. The divine warrior comes from the south with Christ, shakes creation, and saves his people; bodily terror yields to rest, and even total agricultural loss cannot extinguish rejoicing in “God my Jesus (my salvation).”
The chapter’s 19 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Habakkuk 3:1–3:19 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The heading remains “for ignorances.” God comes from the south and Mount Pharan; horns are in his hands, death and the devil go before him, eternal journeys bow hills, and salvation is “with your Christ.” Deo Jesu meo is rendered transparently as “God my Jesus (my salvation),” preserving both the Vulgate form and its sense.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 19 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Zephaniah — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The Lord announces a gathering that removes humanity, animals, birds, fish, Baal, astral worship, divided oaths, and apostasy. The near Day of the Lord is victim, visitation, trumpet, darkness, blood, dung, jealous fire, and a swift end that silver and gold cannot prevent.
The chapter's 18 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zephaniah 1:1–1:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The genealogy retains Chusi, Godolias, Amarias, Ezechias, Josias, and Amon. Temple keepers, housetop worship, Melchom, a prepared victim, foreign garments, arrogant threshold-crossing, the Fish Gate, the Second, Mortar, lamp-searching, dregs, lofty corners, blood like soil, and bodies like dung remain explicit. The first divine Dominus is "the Lord (YHWH)" at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `iniqu` → "iniquity".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The unloved nation is summoned to gather and seek the Lord before indignation arrives. Judgment passes from Philistine cities to Moab, Ammon, Ethiopia, and Assur, while Judah's remnant receives pasture and restored captivity and the self-secure glorious city becomes a beast's lair.
The chapter's 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zephaniah 2:1–2:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Gaza, Ascalon, Azotus, Accaron, Canaan, Moab, Ammon, Sodom, Gomorrah, Ethiopia, Assur, pelican, hedgehog, raven, hissing, and hand-waving retain Clementine specificity. The strange “dryness of thorns” and gods made to waste away are not normalized.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Jerusalem’s princes, judges, prophets, and priests reject discipline, though the just Lord brings judgment to light each morning. After the future day of resurrection and consuming fire, God gives a chosen lip, preserves a poor remnant, rejoices silently in love, gathers the outcast, and restores praise before all peoples.
The chapter’s 20 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zephaniah 3:1–3:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The city remains “provoking and redeemed… the dove”; prophets are senseless, priests pollute the holy, and the “day of my resurrection in the future” remains explicit. A chosen lip serves with one shoulder; the poor remnant hopes; God is silent in love; triflers, the limping, and the cast-out are gathered.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Haggai — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

While the Lord’s house lies desolate, the people inhabit paneled houses and reap hunger, thirst, cold, and wages lost through a perforated bag. The repeated command to set hearts upon their ways leads Zorobabel, Jesus the high priest, and the remnant into obedient work after God promises, “I am with you.”
The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Haggai 1:1–1:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Darius, Zorobabel son of Salathiel, and Jesus son of Josedec retain Vulgate forms. Paneled houses, the perforated wage-bag, forbidden dew and growth, drought upon land, crops, people, beasts, and labor, and Haggai as “the messenger of the Lord from among the messengers of the Lord” remain explicit. The first divine Dominus is “the Lord (YHWH)” at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Dated oracles call the builders to courage: the covenant word and Spirit remain, the cosmos and nations shall be shaken, the Desired One shall come, and latter glory and peace shall exceed the first. Priestly rulings expose contamination; failed harvest turns to blessing, and Zorobabel is chosen as God’s signet amid collapsing kingdoms.
The chapter’s 24 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Haggai 2:1–2:24 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The exact sixth-, seventh-, and ninth-month dates remain. The Desired One of all nations, greater latter glory, sanctified flesh, pollution in soul, twenty measures becoming ten, fifty jars becoming twenty, burning wind, mildew, hail, unblossomed crops, cosmic shaking, fratricidal swords, and Zorobabel as signet preserve Clementine specificity.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 24 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `gloria` → “glory”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Zechariah — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

A summons to turn frames the night vision of the red rider among myrtles. The earth rests while Jerusalem awaits mercy; consoling words promise rebuilding, and four craftsmen arrive to cast down the four horns that scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem.
The chapter's 21 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 1:1–1:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Sabath, the angel speaking "in me," myrtles in the deep, red/speckled/white horses, wealthy nations helping toward evil, the measuring line, four horns, and four craftsmen remain Clementine-specific. The first divine Dominus is "the Lord (YHWH)" at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `propheta` → "prophet", `convert` → "turn/be converted".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

A measuring angel finds Jerusalem destined to overflow beyond walls, while the Lord himself becomes fire around her and glory within. Sion must flee Babylon; many nations join the Lord, Judah is possessed in sanctified land, and all flesh falls silent as God rises.
The chapter's 13 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 2:1–2:13 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Unwalled Jerusalem, a fiery wall, “O, O,” the four winds, daughter of Babylon, pupil of God’s eye, sanctified land, and all flesh silenced before God’s risen presence remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 13 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Jesus the high priest stands in filthy garments before the angel while Satan accuses. Rebuke, cleansing, clean turban, and restored charge lead to the promised servant called the East and the seven-eyed stone that removes the land’s iniquity in one day.
The chapter’s 10 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 3:1–3:10 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Jesus, Satan at his right hand, filthy garments, garments of change, clean turban, men of portent, the servant called “the East,” one stone with seven eyes, and one-day removal of iniquity are not conformed to another textual tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 10 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

A golden lampstand with seven lamps and two olive trees reveals that Zorobabel’s work advances not by army or strength but by God’s Spirit. The great mountain becomes plain, small days are vindicated, seven eyes traverse the earth, and two sons of oil stand before its Ruler.
The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 4:1–4:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Seven funnels, two olive trees and branches, golden beaks and pouring vessels, “not by army nor by strength,” grace equal to grace, the tin stone, seven roaming eyes, and two sons of oil preserve the vision’s strangeness.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

A flying scroll carries judgment into the houses of thieves and false swearers. An amphora containing the woman called ungodliness is sealed under lead and borne by winged women to Sennaar, where a house and base are prepared for it.
The chapter’s 11 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 5:1–5:11 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The flying scroll’s dimensions, consuming curse, amphora as the earth’s eye, lead talent, woman called ungodliness, kite wings, Sennaar, prepared house, and base remain concrete.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 11 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Four chariots emerge between bronze mountains as the four winds of heaven. Crowns placed upon Jesus anticipate the man called the East, who builds the temple, bears glory, rules and serves as priest, and establishes a counsel of peace.
The chapter’s 15 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 6:1–6:15 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Bronze mountains, four colored chariots, four winds, resting Spirit, Holdai, Tobias, Idaias, Josias, crowns on Jesus, the man named East, priest upon his throne, and counsel between two retain Vulgate form.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 15 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

A question about long-practiced fasting exposes self-directed religion. The former prophets required true judgment, mercy, and protection of widow, orphan, stranger, and poor; adamant hearts brought unheard cries, scattering, and a desirable land made desert.
The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 7:1–7:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Casleu, Sarasar, Rogommelech, self-directed fasting, true judgment, mercy, widow, orphan, stranger, poor, withdrawing shoulder, heavy ears, adamant heart, and desirable land made desert remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The Lord returns to jealous love for Sion: old and young fill Jerusalem’s streets, exiles return, creation yields abundance, curse becomes blessing, and truth and peace replace evil thought and false oaths. Former fasts become feasts, and nations grasp a Jewish fringe to seek God.
The chapter’s 23 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 8:1–8:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The city of truth, sanctified mountain, staff-bearing elders, playing children, east and setting sun, seed of peace, judgment of peace, four transformed fasts, and ten multilingual men grasping a Jewish fringe preserve Clementine specificity.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `justitia` → “justice”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Judgment moves through Hadrach, Damascus, Tyre, and Philistia before Sion’s poor, just, saving king rides a she-ass. He speaks peace from sea to sea, releases prisoners by covenant blood, raises Sion against Greece, and leads a holy flock in divine victory.
The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 9:1–9:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Hadrach, Emath, Tyre’s gold like street-mud, the divider in Azotus, blood between teeth, the poor Savior-king upon she-ass and colt, covenant blood, prisoners of hope, Greece, slingstones, altar horns, holy stones, and wine bringing forth virgins remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Rain comes from the Lord rather than deceptive idols. False shepherds are judged, Judah becomes God’s battle horse, and the restored houses of Judah and Joseph are whistled home, sown among peoples, gathered from Egypt and Assur, and strengthened in God’s name.
The chapter’s 12 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 10:1–10:12 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Lord makes “snows,” idols speak uselessness, he-goats are visited, Judah is God’s glorious battle horse, cornerstone/peg/bow/oppressor come from him, God whistles, sows exiles among peoples, and leads them through the sea’s strait.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 12 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Lebanon’s cedars, shepherds, and Jordan lions lament. The flock of slaughter is betrayed by profitable shepherds; Beauty and Cord are broken, thirty pieces of silver are cast to the statuary, brotherhood dissolves, and the foolish idol-shepherd receives sword and darkness.
The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 11:1–11:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The flock of slaughter, Beauty and Cord, contracted soul, neighbor devouring neighbor, struck covenant, thirty silver pieces, “statuary,” dissolved brotherhood, foolish shepherd’s implements, torn hooves, and shepherd-idol remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `fœdus` → “covenant”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Jerusalem becomes drunken lintel and burdensome stone while the Lord protects Judah. A spirit of grace and prayers is poured out; the people look upon the one they pierced and mourn as for an only-begotten firstborn, family by family and women separately.
The chapter's 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 12:1–12:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Jerusalem as lintel of drunkenness and burden-stone, astonished horses, fiery leaders, stumbling one like David, house of David like God, "me whom they pierced," only-begotten and firstborn mourning, Adadremmon, Mageddon, and separated women remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `gloria` → "glory".

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

An opened fountain washes sinner and menstruant; idols, false prophets, and unclean spirit are removed. The wounded pretender yields to the sword awakened against God's own shepherd; scattered sheep and a refined third emerge into mutual covenant confession.
The chapter's 9 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 13:1–13:9 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The fountain washes “the sinner and the menstruant.” Parents pierce the lying prophet; Adam is the farmer’s example; wounds remain in the hands; the sword strikes the man cleaving to God; and the refined third confesses covenant identity.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 9 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `peccat` → “sin”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Nations capture and violate Jerusalem before the Lord fights, stands on the Mount of Olives, splits it, and comes with all saints. Living waters flow, the Lord becomes one King, plague consumes enemies, survivors keep Tabernacles, and every kettle becomes holy.
The chapter’s 21 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Zechariah 14:1–14:21 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Captured city, violated women, split Mount of Olives, Ozias’s earthquake, all saints, cold and frost, evening light, eastern and last seas, flesh/eyes/tongue wasting in place, animal plague, Tabernacles, rain withheld, holy bridles and kettles, and no merchant remain unsoftened.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 21 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `peccat` → “sin”.

Malachi — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

God’s disputed love is shown through Jacob and Esau. The priests dishonor the great King with polluted bread and blind, lame, and sick offerings, while God declares his name great among the nations and a pure offering in every place.
The chapter’s 14 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Malachi 1:1–1:14 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Idumea, dragons of the desert, polluted bread, the despised table, blind, lame, and sick sacrifices, offering to a leader, doors and altar without payment, universal sacrifice and pure offering, plundered offerings, and the dreadful name remain explicit. The first divine Dominus is “the Lord (YHWH)” at 1:1.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 14 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The priests face cursed blessings and the dung of their solemnities for breaking Levi’s pact of life and peace. Judah violates covenant through foreign union and contempt for the wife of youth and covenant, then wearies God by calling evil good.
The chapter’s 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Malachi 2:1–2:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Poverty, cursed blessings, solemnity dung, Levi's pact, the priest as angel, accepting a face in the law, the daughter of a foreign god, master and disciple, bellowing, the wife of puberty and covenant, the seed of God, "when you have hated her, put her away," and the iniquity-covered garment preserve the Clementine wording.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `pactum` → "pact", `iniqu` → "iniquity", `gloria` → "glory".

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

God's angel prepares the way for the Ruler and angel of the covenant; refining purifies Levi. Swift judgment reaches sorcery, adultery, perjury, wage abuse, widows, orphans, and strangers; tithes "pierce" God, while those who fear him receive remembrance and become his special possession.
The chapter's 18 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Malachi 3:1–3:18 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

"My angel," the Ruler, the angel of the covenant, refining fire, the herb of fullers, filtered sons of Levi, the swift witness, withheld wages, widows, orphans, and strangers, "you pierce me" in tithes and firstfruits, the floodgates, devourer, desirable land, book of remembrance, and special possession remain visible.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 18 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `justitia` → “justice”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The furnace day consumes the proud and wicked as stubble, but the sun of justice rises with healing for those who fear God. Moses’s law and Elias’s mission turn family hearts before the great and dreadful Day and avert anathema.
The chapter’s 6 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Malachi 4:1–4:6 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The furnace, stubble without root or shoot, sun of justice with healing in its wings, leaping calves, ashes, Horeb, Elias, the great and dreadful Day, turned family hearts, and anathema retain their Vulgate force.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed prophetic syntax, shifting voices, uncertain pronoun referents, visionary comparisons, enacted signs, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the biblical line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, hymnic repetitions, prophetic sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 6 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Matthew — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The genealogy moves from Abraham through David and the Babylonian migration to Christ; Mary conceives from the Holy Spirit, and Joseph receives her and names Jesus.
The chapter's 25 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 1:1–1:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The migration to Babylon, Joseph's intended secret dismissal, Mary's firstborn son, and the first divine Dominus as "the Lord (YHWH)" at 1:20 remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → "God", `peccat` → "sin", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The Magi adore the child; Herod kills Bethlehem's boys; dreams direct the family through Egypt to Nazareth as prophetic words are fulfilled.
The chapter's 23 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 2:1–2:23 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Magi "adore" the child; Herod kills every boy two years old and under; the child's soul is sought; and the family reaches Nazareth through dream warnings.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 23 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → "soul", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

John preaches penance, judgment, and the stronger one; Jesus is baptized, the Spirit descends, and the heavenly voice names the beloved Son.
The chapter's 17 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 3:1–3:17 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

"Do penance," fruit worthy of penance, fulfillment of all justice, the winnowing fan, and baptism in the Holy Spirit and fire preserve Clementine terms.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 17 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `justitia` → “justice”, `peccat` → “sin”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Jesus withstands the devil, begins preaching in Galilee, calls fishermen, teaches the kingdom, and heals every sickness and infirmity.
The chapter’s 25 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 4:1–4:25 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 25 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`gloria` → “glory”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

On the mountain Jesus declares the blessed, fulfills law and prophets, deepens commands concerning anger, desire, oath, retaliation, enemy-love, and perfection.
The chapter’s 48 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 5:1–5:48 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The meek possess the land; justice, Raca, the Gehenna of fire, scandalizing members, fornication, false accusers, and perfection remain unsoftened.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 48 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`justitia` → "justice", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Jesus orders secret alms, prayer, and fasting; gives the supersubstantial-bread prayer; contrasts heavenly treasure with mammon and anxiety with trust.
The chapter's 34 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 6:1–6:34 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The prayer retains "supersubstantial bread," debts and debtors, temptation, evil, secret devotion, the simple eye, mammon, soul, and the day's own evil.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 34 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `justitia` → “justice”, `peccat` → “sin”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Jesus teaches judgment, discernment, asking, the narrow way, fruits, obedient confession, and the rock foundation; the crowds recognize his authority.
The chapter’s 29 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 7:1–7:29 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 29 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Jesus cleanses, heals, commands sea and demons, and exposes the cost of discipleship; faith and authority cross ritual, ethnic, natural, and spiritual boundaries.
The chapter’s 34 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 8:1–8:34 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 34 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Healings, forgiveness, Matthew’s call, fasting, restored life, sight, and speech lead into compassion for shepherdless crowds and prayer for laborers.
The chapter’s 38 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 9:1–9:38 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 38 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`peccat` → "sin".

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The Twelve receive names, authority, mission, warnings, and promises; costly allegiance to Christ is joined to fearless confession and humble reception.
The chapter's 42 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 10:1–10:42 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 42 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `anima` → "soul", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

John’s question, Jesus’s testimony, rebuke of unrepentant cities, revelation of the Father, and rest beneath Christ’s yoke unfold together.
The chapter’s 30 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 11:1–11:30 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 30 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”, `peccat` → “sin”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Sabbath conflict, healings, Beelzebub accusation, the sign of Jonah, returning spirit, and Jesus’s true family expose opposed responses to the kingdom.
The chapter’s 50 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 12:1–12:50 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 50 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `judicium` → "judgment", `peccat` → "sin", `propheta` → "prophet", `pœnit` → "penance".

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Kingdom parables of seed, weeds, mustard, leaven, treasure, pearl, net, and household explain both hidden fruitfulness and judgment amid rejection at Nazareth.
The chapter's 58 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 13:1–13:58 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 58 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

John is beheaded; Jesus feeds five thousand, walks upon the sea, receives Peter, stills the wind, and heals all who touch the garment’s hem.
The chapter’s 36 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 14:1–14:36 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 36 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Jesus confronts tradition that voids God’s command, teaches what defiles, answers the Canaanite woman, heals crowds, and feeds four thousand.
The chapter’s 39 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 15:1–15:39 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 39 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

After demands for a sign, Jesus warns of leaven; Peter confesses Christ, receives the keys, and then resists the announced cross and discipleship’s cost.
The chapter’s 28 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 16:1–16:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Peter’s confession, “flesh and blood,” the rock, keys of the kingdom, binding and loosing, Satan, the cross, soul, and the coming Son of Man remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → "soul", `gloria` → "glory".

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

The transfiguration reveals glory with Moses and Elias; Jesus heals the afflicted boy, teaches faith, foretells betrayal, and provides the stater.
The chapter's 26 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 17:1–17:26 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 26 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

Concrete prophetic vocabulary was retained without importing wording from another English edition.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

The child, scandal, lost sheep, fraternal correction, binding and loosing, gathered prayer, and unforgiving servant define humility and mercy in the kingdom.
The chapter's 35 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 18:1–18:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord".

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Jesus teaches indissoluble marriage and continence, welcomes children, confronts riches, and promises multiplied reward and thrones in regeneration.
The chapter's 30 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 19:1–19:30 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 30 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → "God".

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

The vineyard laborers overturn human measures of reward; Jesus foretells the Passion, corrects ambition, defines servant greatness, and opens two blind men's eyes.
The chapter's 34 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 20:1–20:34 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 34 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

Jesus enters Jerusalem, cleanses the temple, receives children’s praise, curses the fig tree, and answers challenged authority with two sons and wicked tenants.
The chapter’s 46 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 21:1–21:46 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 46 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

The wedding feast, tribute coin, resurrection dispute, greatest commandments, and David’s Lord expose refusal of the invited and silence hostile questioners.
The chapter’s 46 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 22:1–22:46 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 46 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

Seven woes uncover scribal and Pharisaic hypocrisy; Jesus laments Jerusalem after condemning burdens, titles, oaths, tithing distortions, and bloodguilt.
The chapter’s 39 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 23:1–23:39 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 39 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`judicium` → “judgment”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

The Mount discourse moves from temple ruin through deception, tribulation, cosmic signs, the Son of Man, fig tree, unknown hour, and vigilant servants.
The chapter’s 51 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 24:1–24:51 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter’s names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 51 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

Virgins, talents, and the Son of Man’s judgment separate readiness from exclusion, faithful increase from burial, and merciful service from neglect.
The chapter’s 46 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 25:1–25:46 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter's names, actions, sayings, judgments, repetitions, and Gospel images follow the Clementine wording directly. No reading was substituted merely because another textual tradition or familiar English edition phrases the passage differently.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 46 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord".

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

The Passion begins: anointing, betrayal, Passover and Eucharistic words, Gethsemane, arrest, false witnesses, Peter's denial, and the council's condemnation.
The chapter's 75 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 26:1–26:75 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Eucharistic body and blood, "for many," remission of sins, Gethsemane's chalice, twelve legions, false testimony, and Peter's oath-bound denial remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 75 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `anima` → "soul", `peccat` → "sin", `propheta` → "prophet", `convert` → "turn/be converted".

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

Judas returns the silver and dies; Jesus stands before Pilate, Barabbas is released, Christ is mocked and crucified, the veil tears, and the guarded tomb receives him.
The chapter's 66 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 27:1–27:66 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The field of blood, the thirty silver pieces, scourging, scarlet cloak, crown of thorns, gall, crucifixion, opened tombs, and sealed guarded monument remain visible.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 66 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `propheta` → "prophet", `pœnit` → "penance".

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

The angel announces resurrection to the women; Jesus meets them, the guards are bribed, and the risen Christ sends the Eleven to teach and baptize all nations.
The chapter's 20 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Matthew 28:1–28:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The angel's descent, rolled stone, bribed guard narrative, adoration and doubt, all power, Trinitarian baptismal name, and consummation of the age retain Clementine form.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `spiritus` → "breath/spirit".

Mark — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

John prepares the way; Jesus is baptized, tempted, proclaims penance and the kingdom, calls disciples, teaches with authority, expels spirits, heals, prays, and moves onward.
The chapter's 45 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 1:1–1:45 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The opening "Gospel of Jesus Christ, Son of God," Isaiah citation, penance, torn heavens, beasts in the desert, Simon and Andrew, rebuked fever, and first divine Dominus marker remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 45 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `peccat` → "sin", `propheta` → "prophet", `pœnit` → "penance".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Jesus forgives and heals the paralytic, calls Levi, eats with publicans and sinners, teaches about fasting and newness, and declares authority over the Sabbath.
The chapter's 28 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 2:1–2:28 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The paralytic's forgiven sins, uncovered roof, publicans and sinners, bridegroom, unshrunk cloth, new wine, and David's loaves of proposition retain Clementine form.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 28 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `peccat` → "sin".

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Sabbath healing intensifies opposition; crowds press upon Jesus, the Twelve are appointed, the scribes accuse him, and he identifies those doing God's will as family.
The chapter's 35 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 3:1–3:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The withered hand, Idumea, unclean spirits, surnames Boanerges, Beelzebub, eternal sin, and Jesus's redefined family remain unsoftened.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `peccat` → “sin”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Seed parables disclose hearing and hidden growth; Jesus stills the violent sea, and the disciples fear the one whom wind and sea obey.
The chapter’s 40 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 4:1–4:40 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The lamp upon its stand, secret measure, self-growing seed, mustard plant, parabolic privacy, great movement of the sea, and great calm preserve Mark’s sequence.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 40 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`peccat` → “sin”, `convert` → “turn/be converted”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Jesus delivers Legion, restores the hemorrhaging woman, raises Jairus’s daughter, and meets unbelief in his own country.
The chapter’s 43 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 5:1–5:43 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Legion, two thousand swine, monuments, fetters, blood flow, garment touch, and “Talitha cumi” preserve the chapter’s bodily and Aramaic specificity.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 43 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `spiritus` → "breath/spirit".

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The Twelve are sent; John is beheaded; Jesus feeds five thousand, walks on the sea, enters the boat, and heals those touching his garment.
The chapter's 56 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 6:1–6:56 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Staff and sandals, John's severed head, ranks by hundreds and fifties, five loaves, two fish, twelve baskets, sea-walking, and garment fringe remain concrete.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 56 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`propheta` → “prophet”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Jesus exposes tradition that voids God’s command, teaches that corruption proceeds from the heart, answers the Syrophoenician woman, and heals the deaf mute.
The chapter’s 37 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 7:1–7:37 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Corban, heart-source catalog, Syrophoenician identity, children’s bread, dogs beneath table, fingers in ears, spittle, “Ephpheta,” and speech impediment remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 37 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Four thousand are fed; Jesus refuses the Pharisees’ sign, warns of leaven, heals a blind man in stages, receives Peter’s confession, and announces cross-bearing discipleship.
The chapter’s 39 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 8:1–8:39 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Seven loaves and seven hampers, Dalmanutha, leaven, staged sight, Christ confession, Satan rebuke, cross, soul, and Son of Man retain their Clementine distinctions.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 39 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → "soul", `peccat` → "sin", `gloria` → "glory".

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The transfiguration, the afflicted boy, Passion prediction, dispute over greatness, receiving the little, scandal, Gehenna, salt, and peace unfold around misunderstood glory.
The chapter's 49 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 9:1–9:49 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Snow-white garments, Elias, prayer and fasting, betrayal, last and servant, millstone, bodily mutilation, unquenchable Gehenna, worm, fire, salt, and peace remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 49 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “breath/spirit”.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Jesus teaches marriage, children, riches, reward, Passion, servant greatness, and heals blind Bartimaeus as he approaches Jerusalem.
The chapter’s 52 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 10:1–10:52 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

One flesh, indissolubility, children, camel and needle, persecutions, cup and baptism, ransom for many, and Bartimaeus’s cast-away garment retain force.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 52 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Jesus enters Jerusalem, curses the fig tree, cleanses the temple, teaches faith and forgiveness, and answers the challenge to his authority.
The chapter’s 33 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 11:1–11:33 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The colt, leafy fig tree, buyers and sellers, nations’ house of prayer, den of thieves, moved mountain, forgiveness, and John’s baptism preserve their links.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 33 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`peccat` → "sin", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

The wicked tenants, tribute, resurrection, greatest commandment, Davidic Lord, scribal pride, and the widow's two mites expose true and false devotion.
The chapter's 44 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 12:1–12:44 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Tenants' killing, rejected cornerstone, Caesar's coin, seven brothers, seed, twofold love, David in Holy Spirit, widows' houses, and two mites remain visible.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 44 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `anima` → “soul”, `judicium` → “judgment”.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Temple ruin opens the Mount discourse: deception, persecution, abomination, tribulation, the Son of Man, fig tree, unknown hour, and watchfulness.
The chapter’s 37 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 13:1–13:37 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Abomination of desolation, flight without cloak-return, shortened days, false Christs, darkened luminaries, clouds, angels, four winds, and door-keeping remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 37 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Anointing, betrayal, Passover, Eucharistic testament, Gethsemane, arrest, trial, and Peter’s denial carry Jesus deliberately into the Passion.
The chapter’s 72 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 14:1–14:72 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Precious spikenard, three hundred denarii, unleavened bread, blood of the new testament for many, hymn, Abba, naked fleeing youth, false witnesses, and denial remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 72 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `anima` → "soul", `peccat` → "sin".

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Pilate, Barabbas, scourging, mockery, crucifixion, darkness, death, torn veil, centurion, women, burial, stone, and watchful witnesses narrate the King's abasement.
The chapter's 47 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 15:1–15:47 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Scarlet cloak, Cyrene, Golgotha, myrrhed wine, third/sixth/ninth hours, Eloi cry, torn veil, centurion, women, Parasceve, noble decurion, and monument remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 47 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

The women find the rolled stone and hear resurrection announced; Jesus appears, rebukes unbelief, commissions universal preaching and baptism, ascends, and works with the preachers through signs.
The chapter’s 20 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Mark 16:1–16:20 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The complete Clementine 16:9–20 remains canonical reader text: appearances, unbelief rebuke, universal Gospel, baptism, condemnation, signs, ascension, and the Lord working with them.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 20 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”.

Luke — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Luke addresses Theophilus; Gabriel announces John and Jesus; Mary visits Elizabeth; the Magnificat and Benedictus interpret God's mercy, covenant, and approaching salvation.
The chapter's 80 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 1:1–1:80 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

The ordered narrative, Gabriel at the incense altar, John in Elias's spirit, Mary's "How shall this be?", overshadowing, Magnificat, Benedictus, first divine Dominus marker, and John's desert growth remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 80 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `anima` → "soul", `justitia` → "justice", `peccat` → "sin", `propheta` → "prophet", `convert` → "turn/be converted".

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Jesus is born and laid in a manger; angels announce peace, shepherds visit, Simeon and Anna testify, and the twelve-year-old Jesus remains in his Father's concerns.
The chapter's 52 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 2:1–2:52 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Enrollment under Cyrinus, firstborn son, manger, angelic multitude, purification, paired turtledoves, Simeon’s contradiction and sword, Anna, and Jesus among teachers retain Clementine detail.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 52 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

John preaches penance and concrete fruits; Jesus is baptized; the heavenly voice speaks; the genealogy runs through Adam to God.
The chapter’s 38 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 3:1–3:38 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Penance, publicans, soldiers, bodily descent of the Spirit, the Clementine heavenly voice, and the genealogy through Heli, Nathan, Adam, and God remain exact.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 38 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `peccat` → “sin”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Jesus withstands temptation, proclaims Isaiah’s fulfillment at Nazareth, escapes rejection, teaches with authority, expels a demon, heals Simon’s mother-in-law, and preaches throughout Galilee.
The chapter’s 44 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 4:1–4:44 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Forty days of temptation, pinnacle, completed temptation, Isaiah scroll, Sarepta and Naaman, precipice, demon speech, rebuked fever, and desert prayer remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 44 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `gloria` → “glory”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The miraculous catch, leper, forgiven paralytic, Levi’s call, table fellowship, fasting question, bridegroom, new cloth, and new wine disclose Christ’s authority and summons.
The chapter’s 39 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 5:1–5:39 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Two boats, breaking net, sinking boats, Peter’s sinfulness, deep water, man full of leprosy, roof tiles, Levi’s feast, bridegroom, and old wine remain concrete.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 39 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → “God”, `peccat` → “sin”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Sabbath controversies, choosing the Twelve, blessings and woes, enemy-love, merciful judgment, fruit, confession, and foundations define obedient discipleship.
The chapter’s 49 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 6:1–6:49 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Loaves of proposition, night prayer, level place, poor and hungry blessings, rich and full woes, struck cheek, cloak and tunic, bosom measure, beam, and foundation remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 49 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `anima` → "soul", `peccat` → "sin".

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The centurion's servant, widow's son, John's messengers, Jesus's testimony, and the sinful woman's tears, kisses, ointment, forgiveness, and love reveal faith and mercy.
The chapter's 50 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 7:1–7:50 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Centurion's intercession, widow's only son, raised young man, "God has visited his people," John's question, wisdom's children, alabaster, tears, hair, kisses, and forgiven sins remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 50 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `peccat` → "sin", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Women accompany Jesus; seed and lamp parables address hearing; Jesus stills the lake, delivers Legion, heals the hemorrhaging woman, and raises Jairus's daughter.
The chapter's 56 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 8:1–8:56 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Joanna and Susanna, choking seed, hidden lamp, Jesus's family, lake storm, abyss, Legion, swine, chains, blood flow, garment fringe, and "Maid, arise" remain explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 56 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`deus` → "God", `spiritus` → "breath/spirit".

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The Twelve are sent; five thousand are fed; Peter confesses Christ; cross-bearing is commanded; glory appears on the mountain; a boy is delivered; the journey turns toward Jerusalem.
The chapter's 62 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 9:1–9:62 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Five loaves, two fish, twelve baskets, daily cross, eight-day transfiguration, Moses and Elias speaking of decease, Samaritan rejection, and uncompromising calls remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 62 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`spiritus` → "breath/spirit", `anima` → "soul", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The seventy-two are sent and return; Jesus rejoices in the Spirit; the Samaritan becomes neighbor; Mary listens while Martha is troubled by much ministry.
The chapter's 42 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 10:1–10:42 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Seventy-two, lambs among wolves, dust, Satan falling, names in heaven, Father-Son revelation, Samaritan oil and wine, two denarii, Martha's many cares, and Mary's one necessary thing remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 42 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Jesus teaches prayer, perseverance, and the Father’s gift; answers Beelzebub charges, gives Jonah’s sign, rebukes inner darkness, and pronounces woes at a Pharisee’s table.
The chapter’s 54 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 11:1–11:54 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Daily bread, midnight friend, Holy Spirit, divided kingdom, finger of God, returning spirit, womb blessing redirected to hearing, Jonah, queen of south, lamp, alms, and six woes remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 54 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `judicium` → “judgment”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Jesus warns against leaven, fear, greed, anxiety, and unreadiness; the rich fool, ravens, lilies, watchful servants, division, and discernment press toward faithful stewardship.
The chapter’s 59 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 12:1–12:59 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Leaven of hypocrisy, Gehenna, numbered hairs, Holy Spirit confession, rich fool’s soul, ravens, lilies, little flock, girded loins, divided household, and last farthing remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 59 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `anima` → “soul”, `justitia` → “justice”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Galilean blood, Siloam’s tower, the barren fig tree, Sabbath healing, mustard and leaven, the narrow door, excluded heirs, Herod, and Jerusalem’s lament call for penance.
The chapter’s 35 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 13:1–13:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Galilean blood mingled with sacrifices, eighteen beneath Siloam, three-year fig tree, woman bound eighteen years, narrow door, excluded Abrahamic banquet, fox Herod, and hen imagery remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `peccat` → “sin”, `iniqu` → “iniquity”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Sabbath healing, humble seats, hospitality to the poor, the great supper, costly discipleship, tower, king, renunciation, and salt expose excuses and divided allegiance.
The chapter’s 35 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 14:1–14:35 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Dropsy, lowest place, poor/maimed/lame/blind guests, compelled supper guests, hatred of kin and soul, cross, tower arithmetic, ten-thousand king, renunciation, and savorless salt remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 35 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `anima` → “soul”, `gloria` → “glory”.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

The lost sheep, coin, and two sons disclose heaven’s joy over penance, the Father’s compassion, the younger son’s return, and the elder son’s refusal of shared joy.
The chapter’s 32 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 15:1–15:32 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

One sinner doing penance, ninety-nine just, ten drachmas, distant country, swine pods, dead-and-alive son, ring, shoes, fatted calf, music, and elder anger remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 32 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`peccat` → "sin", `pœnit` → "penance".

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

The unjust steward, money, law, divorce, rich man, and Lazarus turn earthly stewardship toward eternal accountability and the sufficiency of Moses and prophets.
The chapter's 31 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 16:1–16:31 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Unjust steward, hundred barrels and measures, mammon, Pharisees as money-lovers, law's enduring apex, divorce, purple and fine linen, Lazarus, Abraham's bosom, great chaos, and five brothers remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `iniqu` → "iniquity", `propheta` → "prophet", `pœnit` → "penance".

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

Scandals, correction, forgiveness, mustard-seed faith, unprofitable servants, ten lepers, the Samaritan's return, and the unseen kingdom lead into the Son of Man's Day.
The chapter's 37 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 17:1–17:37 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Millstone, sevenfold forgiveness, transplanted mulberry, unprofitable servants, ten lepers, Samaritan thanksgiving, kingdom within, lightning, Noah, Lot, remembered wife, and body with eagles remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 37 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `anima` → "soul", `gloria` → "glory", `pœnit` → "penance".

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

The persistent widow, Pharisee and publican, children, rich ruler, Passion prediction, and healed blind man contrast self-trust with humble faith and persevering prayer.
The chapter's 43 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 18:1–18:43 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Unjust judge, publican striking breast, infants, ruler's possessions, camel and needle, rewards with persecution absent in Luke's list, Passion details, and blind beggar remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 43 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `deus` → "God", `peccat` → "sin", `iniqu` → "iniquity", `propheta` → "prophet".

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Zacchaeus receives salvation; the pounds demand faithful increase; Jesus approaches, enters Jerusalem, weeps over it, cleanses the temple, and teaches daily.
The chapter's 48 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 19:1–19:48 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Zacchaeus's fourfold restitution, salvation to Abraham's son, ten pounds and ten servants, hostile citizens slain, colt, stones crying out, visitation, trench, and temple sellers remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 48 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `peccat` → "sin", `gloria` → "glory".

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Authority is challenged; wicked tenants kill the heir; tribute, resurrection, David's Lord, scribal display, and widow's mites expose rejection and genuine offering.
The chapter's 47 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 20:1–20:47 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

John's baptism dilemma, tenants' violence, cornerstone crushing, Caesar's image, seven brothers, resurrection sons, Moses's bush, David's Lord, long prayers, and two mites remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 47 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `deus` → “God”, `propheta` → “prophet”.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

Temple adornment gives way to foretold ruin, persecution, Jerusalem encircled, cosmic signs, the Son of Man, fig tree, vigilance, prayer, and daily temple teaching.
The chapter’s 38 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 21:1–21:38 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Widow’s living, temple stones and gifts, wars, pestilences, terrors and signs, inspired answers, Jerusalem armies, trampling by nations, cosmic distress, drunkenness, cares, and vigilant prayer remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 38 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`anima` → “soul”.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

Passover, Eucharistic testament, betrayal, servant greatness, Peter’s trial, swords, Gethsemane agony, arrest, denial, mockery, and council confession begin the Passion.
The chapter’s 71 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 22:1–22:71 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Unleavened bread, Satan entering Judas, desired Passover, body and new testament blood, two swords, angel and bloody sweat, severed and healed ear, two cock-crows, and Son of Man confession remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 71 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → "the Lord", `iniqu` → "iniquity".

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

Jesus stands before Pilate and Herod, speaks to Jerusalem's daughters, is crucified between criminals, promises paradise, dies, is buried, and rests through Sabbath.
The chapter's 56 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 23:1–23:56 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Herod's white garment, Barabbas's sedition and murder, daughters of Jerusalem, green and dry wood, two criminals, paradise, darkened sun, torn veil, commendation of spirit, centurion, and Sabbath rest remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ's cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 56 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

Concrete prophetic vocabulary was retained without importing wording from another English edition.

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

Women find the empty monument; angels announce resurrection; Emmaus receives scriptural and bread-breaking recognition; Jesus appears bodily, opens minds, blesses, ascends, and is worshiped.
The chapter’s 53 Vulgate verses retain their exact sequence, speaker transitions, signs, visions, oracles, and repetitions.

Governing Latin

The frozen Clementine text for Luke 24:1–24:53 governed every English clause; no existing English Bible served as the translation source.

Vulgate-specific readings

Spices, two shining men, remembered sayings, Peter’s linen cloths, Emmaus, Cleopas, Moses and all prophets, bread-breaking, “spirit has not flesh and bones,” broiled fish and honeycomb, Bethany, ascension, and temple praise remain.

Ambiguities preserved

Compressed speech, shifting speakers, uncertain pronoun referents, parabolic comparisons, prophetic sayings, and polyvalent images remain no more definite than the Latin permits. Where a construction sounds strange because the Latin is strange, the Gospel line retains that strangeness rather than concealing it with an imported interpretation.

Clarity decisions

English syntax and punctuation were refined for lucid oral and silent reading while preserving verse boundaries, Christ’s cadence, divine and human agency, imperatives, questions, direct speech, prayers, parables, narrative sequences, and numerical details. The English does not imitate Latin word order when that would obscure the Latin sense.

Corrections and reasons

All 53 verse keys were checked against the frozen source for omissions, additions, divine names, speakers, images, and doctrinal distinctions. Source brackets marking paragraph groupings were treated as structure rather than translated words.

Canonical terminology

`dominus` → “the Lord”, `spiritus` → “breath/spirit”, `peccat` → “sin”, `gloria` → “glory”, `propheta` → “prophet”, `pœnit` → “penance”.

John — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter opens before creation with the Word with God and as God, then moves through creation, life, light, incarnation, and the Only-begotten's revelation of the Father. John's testimony leads from the Jerusalem delegation to the Lamb of God and the abiding Spirit; Andrew, Simon, Philip, and Nathanael then move from hearing to following, confession, and the promise of opened heaven above the Son of Man.

Governing Latin

`In principio erat Verbum ... et Deus erat Verbum` governs the repeated, personal "Word" rather than a varied set of substitutes; `omnia per ipsum facta sunt` keeps the Word's agency in creation. `Verbum caro factum est` remains "the Word was made flesh," while the repeated `testimonium perhibere` and `manere` forms govern "bear testimony" and "abide/abode" through John's witness and the Spirit's descent.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine `ex sanguinibus` remains the concrete plural "from bloods" at 1:13, and `unigenitus Filius` is "the only-begotten Son" at 1:18 rather than a different textual reading. `Dirigite viam Domini` receives the book's first divine-title marker, "the Lord (YHWH)," while Bethany beyond the Jordan, Simon son of Jonah, Cephas interpreted as Peter, and angels ascending and descending upon the Son of Man all remain as supplied.

Ambiguities preserved

At 1:5, `comprehenderunt` can carry seizure as well as comprehension, so "did not lay hold of it" preserves the darkness/light struggle without narrowing it to intellectual understanding. At 1:14, `habitavit in nobis` remains "dwelt among us," an idiomatic communal location that does not force a private inward-indwelling sense; the pronoun `eum` in 1:40 remains simply "him."

Clarity decisions

The English preserves the prologue's deliberate repetitions of Word, life, light, world, receive, and testimony instead of varying them for style. The Latin's own interpretive notices are kept at the point of encounter—Rabbi as Master, Messiah as Christ, and Cephas as Peter—and the threefold negation of human generation in 1:13 is separated cleanly from birth "from God."

Corrections and reasons

Gate 4 required one correction at 1:40: "had heard John" became "had heard from John" because `a Joanne` marks John as the source, not the direct object, of the hearing. A proposed change at 1:14 was rejected: "dwelt among us" remains a faithful idiomatic rendering of `habitavit in nobis` and avoids falsely requiring the narrower "in us." No other required finding remained in the chapter.

Canonical terminology

Personal `Verbum` is "Word"; `potestas` is "authority"; `testimonium` and `testimonium perhibere` are "testimony" and "bear testimony"; and the `manere` family is "abide/abode/abiding." The chapter also fixes "only-begotten Son," "Lamb of God," "Son of God," "Son of Man," "grace and truth," and the one first-occurrence form "Lord (YHWH)" for divine `Dominus`.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

At Cana, lack becomes abundance as water is made wine, Jesus manifests his glory in the beginning of signs, and his disciples believe. The movement then turns from wedding to Passover: Jesus clears his Father's house, gives the disputed temple sign, and the narrator identifies his body as the temple whose raising the disciples will understand after the resurrection; the chapter closes with Jesus knowing what is in man.

Governing Latin

`Quid mihi et tibi est, mulier? nondum venit hora mea` governs the deliberately sharp “What is there between me and you, woman? My hour has not yet come.” `lapideæ hydriæ sex ... metretas binas vel ternas` preserves six stone water jars and their two-or-three-measure capacity, while `initium signorum`, `manifestavit gloriam suam`, and `templum corporis sui` govern “beginning of signs,” manifested glory, and “the temple of his body.”

Vulgate-specific readings

The first sign retains the purification setting, stone vessels, exact measure range, the wine’s unknown origin to the chief steward, and the ministers’ knowledge. In the temple, `quasi flagellum de funiculis` is “a kind of whip from cords”; sheep and oxen are driven out, money is poured out, tables are overturned, and the house is called a “house of commerce.” `Solvite templum hoc` remains the three-day body-temple saying rather than an explanatory paraphrase.

Ambiguities preserved

The relational formula `Quid mihi et tibi est` is left in its meaningful strangeness instead of being softened into a modern conversational motive. Jesus’s “temple” is not identified as his body inside his saying; the hearers’ forty-six-year interpretation is allowed to stand until the narrator supplies `de templo corporis sui`. Belief based on signs remains distinct from Jesus’s refusal to entrust himself without editorial judgment on each believer.

Clarity decisions

The long sentence at 2:9 is punctuated so the chief steward’s tasting, ignorance, and call to the bridegroom remain distinct from the ministers who knew the water’s source. At 2:24, `non credebat semetipsum eis` becomes “did not entrust himself to them,” clear English that retains the source verb’s trust relation while avoiding the false sense that Jesus failed to believe himself.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction or rejected change candidate was recorded for John 2. The independent review specifically checked the six vessels and their capacities, the water-to-wine agency, the chief steward and bridegroom speaker sequence, the concrete temple-cleansing actions, the forty-six years, the temple/body referent, and the distinction between believing in Jesus and Jesus entrusting himself; all passed as written.

Canonical terminology

`signum` is “sign,” `gloria` is “glory,” and `hora` is “hour,” establishing three motifs that govern later chapters. `templum` remains “temple,” `manere` appears as “abode” at Capernaum, and `testimonium perhibere` remains “bear testimony”; Passover, the Father’s house, and the temple of Jesus’s body retain their concrete forms.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Nicodemus comes by night and is led from signs to birth anew, water and the Holy Spirit, earthly and heavenly things, and the lifted Son of Man. The discourse widens into God’s love, eternal life, judgment, light, and doing the truth; afterward, a purification dispute lets John name himself the bridegroom’s friend, rejoice at the bridegroom’s voice, decrease before the one from heaven, and end with belief, life, and abiding wrath.

Governing Latin

`nisi quis renatus fuerit denuo` governs “unless one has been born anew,” and `ex aqua, et Spiritu Sancto` keeps both water and the Holy Spirit explicit. `Spiritus ubi vult spirat` sustains the shared spirit/breath root; `exaltari oportet Filium hominis` governs the lifted Son, `Sic enim Deus dilexit mundum` the gift of the only-begotten Son, and `qui facit veritatem, venit ad lucem` the concrete act of “doing the truth.”

Vulgate-specific readings

Clementine denuo is rendered “anew,” not replaced by a Greek-derived “from above” reading, and 3:5 expressly says Spiritu Sancto, “the Holy Spirit.” The Son of Man is qui est in cælo, “who is in heaven,” at 3:13; the Son is twice “only-begotten”; and non ad mensuram dat Deus spiritum remains God giving the Spirit without measure.

Ambiguities preserved

At 3:8, Spiritus ... spirat permits spirit, breath, and wind to sound together. The JNV keeps lowercase “spirit,” “breathes,” and “its voice,” neither fixing the referent as meteorological wind nor prematurely capitalizing it as a title. The relation of water and the Holy Spirit in rebirth and the identities of those who sow the later testimony are stated but not doctrinally expanded.

Clarity decisions

The singular address to Nicodemus becomes explicitly plural at 3:7—“You must all be born anew”—because vos is plural even though English “you” is not. The bridegroom sentence keeps bride, bridegroom, friend, standing, hearing, voice, and fulfilled joy in their Latin order of dependence, and the repeated above/earth/heaven contrasts in 3:31 are allowed to sound repetitive.

Corrections and reasons

No required wording correction was found in John 3. Gate 4 specifically rejected replacing or capitalizing “spirit” at 3:8: the existing “The spirit breathes where it wills” preserves the Spiritus/spirat wordplay and the source’s live spirit-wind ambiguity. The reviewer also confirmed denuo, water and the Holy Spirit, the plural vos, the Son of Man “who is in heaven,” only-begotten Son, and verax as “truthful.”

Canonical terminology

diligere is “love,” judicium is “judgment,” lux and tenebræ are “light” and “darkness,” and vita æterna is “eternal life.” The witness family remains “testimony/bear testimony,” verax is “truthful” rather than “true,” and manere remains “abide” in the closing statement that God’s wrath abides upon the unbelieving person.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The journey through Samaria brings a wearied Jesus to Jacob’s spring, where a request for water opens into living water, the woman’s five husbands, true adoration, and Jesus’s direct “I am.” Her abandoned water jar leads the city outward; the disciples are taught about food, fields, sowing, and reaping; Samaritan belief moves from her testimony to Jesus’s own word. Back in Galilee, a royal officer trusts the spoken “Your son lives,” and his whole house believes at the second Cana sign.

Governing Latin

Oportebat autem eum transire per Samariam gives the journey its unexplained necessity, and fatigatus ex itinere keeps Jesus physically wearied. aquam vivam, non sitiet in æternum, and the spring salientis in vitam æternam govern the living-water sequence; adorabunt Patrem in spiritu et veritate governs “adore ... in spirit and truth,” while Ego sum, qui loquor tecum remains “I am, I who am speaking with you.”

Vulgate-specific readings

The text distinguishes Jacob’s fons, rendered “spring,” from the deep puteus, rendered “well.” Jesus retains Clementine forsitan—“perhaps you would have asked”—and the woman’s five husbands plus the man who is not her husband are stated without euphemism. Salvation remains “from the Jews,” the Samaritans confess “the Savior of the world,” and the seventh-hour recovery anchors the royal officer’s household belief.

Ambiguities preserved

The necessity in `oportebat` is not assigned a geographical or providential explanation. Jesus's "I am" is allowed to identify him within the conversation without an added theological gloss, and the unnamed sower and reaper in `alius est qui seminat, et alius est qui metit` remain unnamed. The woman's present relationship is reported exactly; the English does not invent a motive or legal history.

Clarity decisions

Verses 4:1–3 remain one auditable sentence around the parenthetical `quamquam Jesus non baptizaret`, preserving that Jesus made disciples while his disciples performed the baptizing. `regulus` is rendered contextually as "royal officer," and the repeated "Your son lives" is kept verbatim so the servants' report, the recognized hour, and the father's belief join visibly.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction or formal rejected candidate was recorded for John 4. The review checked the 4:1–3 parenthesis and agency, `fons` versus `puteus`, bodily weariness and the sixth hour, `forsitan`, all five husbands and the present non-husband, all ten `adorare` forms, the "I am" declaration, sowing and reaping, two days of abiding, and the seventh-hour healing; the final text passed each check unchanged.

Canonical terminology

The chapter establishes `adorare` and `adoratores` as "adore" and "adorers," not a mixture of worship synonyms. `aqua viva` is "living water," `spiritus et veritas` is "spirit and truth," `manere` is "abide/abode," `sermo` is "word," `loquela` is "speech," and `signum` remains "sign" for the second Cana sign.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

At the Sheep Pool, the man held by infirmity for thirty-eight years receives Jesus's command, takes up his pallet, and walks into a Sabbath controversy. Jesus answers persecution with the Father's continuing work and unfolds the Son's shared work, life-giving voice, judgment, honor, and resurrection authority; the closing movement summons John, the works, the Father, the Scriptures, and finally Moses as testimony against unbelief and exchanged glory.

Governing Latin

`probatica piscina` governs the semantic "Sheep Pool," while `Angelus autem Domini descendebat ... et movebatur aqua` preserves the recurring descent and movement of the water. The fivefold `grabatum` chain governs "pallet" through command, healing, accusation, report, and quotation; `Pater meus usque modo operatur, et ego operor`, `omne judicium dedit Filio`, and `transiit a morte in vitam` govern the Father-Son discourse on work, judgment, and life.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine text includes the angel's descent, the stirred water, and the first entrant's healing at 5:4; it calls the five-portico pool Bethsaida in Hebrew and retains the man's thirty-eight years. Jesus is accused both of `solvebat sabbatum`, breaking the Sabbath, and of making himself equal to God; the dead hear the Son's voice, those in the `monumenta` come forth, and resurrection divides into life and judgment.

Ambiguities preserved

The source does not explain why this sick man is chosen from the multitude or reduce his infirmity to a diagnosis. `non potest Filius a se facere quidquam` remains relational to what the Son sees the Father doing and is not expanded into a theory of incapacity. The apparent tension between self-testimony at 5:31 and the wider witness chain is preserved within the legal and relational sequence rather than harmonized away.

Clarity decisions

The speech begins after the narrative bridge in 5:18 so persecution, Sabbath-breaking, divine fatherhood, and equality remain the stated cause of the discourse. The repeated “Amen, amen,” “hour is coming, and now is,” life/judgment contrasts, and fourfold witness movement are kept distinct, while `forsitan` remains the modest “perhaps” in the claim that belief in Moses would lead to belief in Jesus.

Corrections and reasons

Gate 4 required one coordinated correction across 5:8–12: all five former instances of “bed” became “pallet.” The Latin repeats `grabatum`, a portable pallet, in Jesus’s command, the narrator’s account, the Sabbath charge, the healed man’s quotation, and the interrogators’ question; repeating “pallet” restores both the concrete object and the unbroken accusation chain. No separate rejected candidate or further required correction was recorded for the chapter.

Canonical terminology

`grabatum` is fixed as “pallet”; `judicium` is “judgment,” `potestas` is “authority,” and `monumentum` is “monument.” The testimony chain remains `testimonium`/“testimony” and `testimonium perhibere`/“bear testimony”; `verbum` is “word,” `manere` is “abide,” `gloria` is “glory,” and `vita æterna` is “eternal life.”

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

A boy’s five barley loaves and two fish feed about five thousand men and leave twelve baskets; the crowd’s royal impulse sends Jesus alone to the mountain, and the disciples meet his “I am” upon the sea. The crowd’s search becomes a discourse moving from perishing food to God’s work, manna, the bread of life, the Father’s drawing, repeated resurrection on the last day, and the flesh and blood that give life and mutual abiding. The hard word divides disciples, Peter confesses Christ the Son of God, and Judas is named within the chosen twelve.

Governing Latin

`quinque panes hordeaceos et duos pisces`, `viri ... quasi quinque millia`, and `duodecim cophinos fragmentorum` govern the feeding’s exact materials and quantities. `Ego sum, nolite timere` remains the bare “I am”; `Operamini non cibum, qui perit, sed qui permanet in vitam æternam` contrasts perishing and enduring food; and `caro mea vere est cibus ... sanguis meus vere est potus` governs the unsoftened flesh, blood, eating, drinking, life, and abiding sequence.

Vulgate-specific readings

The crossing retains “about twenty-five or thirty stadia” and Jesus’s unexpanded `Ego sum`. At 6:39, neuter `omne ... illud` remains “everything ... it,” while 6:40 turns to personal `omnis ... eum`, “everyone ... him.” The bread is explicitly `caro mea ... pro mundi vita`, and 6:54–57 retains eating the Son of Man’s flesh, drinking his blood, true food, true drink, and mutual abiding; Peter’s confession is `Christus Filius Dei`.

Ambiguities preserved

At 6:33, masculine `qui` agrees grammatically with `panis`, but English “that which” leaves the bread image nonpersonal until Jesus’s own identification at 6:35. At 6:61, `audientes` has no expressed object, so “hearing this” supplies only the preceding discourse collectively; the hard `sermo` itself remains singular. The Father’s `traxerit`, “draws,” is stated without an added account of how that drawing operates.

Clarity decisions

The fragments at 6:13 are made the explicit antecedent of `quæ`, and pluperfect `manducaverant` becomes “after the people had eaten,” removing a false attachment to the loaves without adding an event. The boat-and-crowd sequence at 6:22–24 remains one chain of observations; the four promises to raise on the last day retain their exact neuter or personal objects, and repeated bread/flesh/blood wording is not replaced by sacramental explanation.

Corrections and reasons

Gate 4 corrected 6:72 from “Judas, son of Simon Iscariot” to “Judas Iscariot, son of Simon”: accusative `Iscariotem` agrees with `Judam`, while genitive `Simonis` stands separately. Gate 6 corrected 6:13 because neuter plural `quæ` resumes the fragments, not `panibus`, and “remained over to” was not lucid English; “the fragments that remained … after the people had eaten” preserves the antecedent and pluperfect action. Candidates at 6:33 and 6:61 were rejected because their marked wording follows the Latin.

Canonical terminology

`panis vitæ` and `panis vivus` are “bread of life” and “living bread”; `caro` is “flesh,” `sanguis` is “blood,” and `vita æterna` is “eternal life.” Simple `manere` is “abide” at 6:57, compound `permanere` is contextually “endures” at 6:27, `sermo` is “word,” `scandalizare` is “scandalize,” and `tradere` is “hand over.”

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Threat keeps Jesus in Galilee until his brothers go to the Feast of Tabernacles; he then goes as though in secret and teaches publicly at mid-feast. Debate moves through doctrine, glory, Moses, circumcision, Sabbath healing, just judgment, Jesus’s origin and hour, and the failed attempt to apprehend him. On the feast’s great last day, living-water rivers announce the coming Spirit; the crowd divides over prophet, Christ, Galilee, David, and Bethlehem, while the ministers refuse to seize Jesus and Nicodemus invokes the law before everyone returns home.

Governing Latin

`Tempus meum nondum advenit` and `meum tempus nondum impletum est` govern the chapter’s unfulfilled time, while `non manifeste, sed quasi in occulto` preserves the manner of Jesus’s ascent. `Mea doctrina non est mea`, `hic verax est, et injustitia in illo non est`, and `justum judicium judicate` govern doctrine, truthful agency, injustice, and just judgment; `flumina de ventre ejus fluent aquæ vivæ` keeps the rivers flowing from the believer’s belly.

Vulgate-specific readings

`Scenopegia` is rendered by its established name, “the Feast of Tabernacles.” At 7:8 the Clementine text says `ego autem non ascendo`, “I am not going up,” without inserting “yet”; at 7:39 it expressly says the Spirit “had not yet been given, because Jesus had not yet been glorified.” The source retains David’s `semen`, Bethlehem as a `castellum`, the officers’ “Never has a man spoken thus,” and 7:53, “each one returned to his own house.”

Ambiguities preserved

The apparent tension between “I am not going up” at 7:8 and Jesus’s later ascent `quasi in occulto` at 7:10 is left intact rather than harmonized with an added “yet.” The crowd’s claim to know Jesus’s origin and his claim to be from the unknown sender remain in collision. `de ventre ejus` remains the believer’s “belly,” and the causal relation between the not-yet-given Spirit and Jesus’s not-yet-accomplished glorification is not explained beyond the verse.

Clarity decisions

The repeated `ambulabat ... ambulare` at 7:1 remains “walked … walk,” preserving the deliberate recurrence. The circumcision argument keeps its Sabbath condition, purpose clause, whole-man healing, and command to “judge a just judgment”; nested quotation at 7:34–36 keeps Jesus’s words distinct from the crowd’s question. `castellum` is contextually “town,” and `ministri` remains “ministers,” matching their temple-authority role.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction was found in John 7. Gate 4 specifically rejected changing Bethlehem's "town" at 7:42 to "village": `castellum` can denote a village, small town, or fortified settlement, so "town" is faithful and the proposed refinement was optional. The review also checked 7:8–10 without importing "yet," the Sabbath-circumcision logic, `justum judicium`, the belly and living-water image, the not-yet-given Spirit, speaker continuity, and the retained 7:53 ending.

Canonical terminology

`Scenopegia` is "Feast of Tabernacles," `doctrina` is "doctrine," `verax` is "truthful," `injustitia` is "injustice," and `judicium` is "judgment." `testimonium perhibere` remains "bear testimony," `semen` is "seed," `castellum` is "town" here, `Spiritus` is "Spirit," `glorificare` is "glorify," and `aqua viva` remains "living water."

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Jesus first answers the public testing of the woman caught in adultery, then declares himself the light of the world. The temple dispute moves through testimony, origin and destination, freedom and servitude, true fatherhood, Abraham, and finally the pre-Abraham declaration `ego sum`, after which stones are raised against him.

Governing Latin

The English follows `Nec ego te condemnabo ... jam amplius noli peccare` as 'Neither shall I condemn you ... sin no more,' `Ego sum lux mundi` as 'I am the light of the world,' and the difficult `Principium, qui et loquor vobis` as 'The Beginning, I who also speak to you.' At 8:58, `antequam Abraham fieret, ego sum` preserves the contrast between Abraham's coming-to-be and Jesus's 'I am.'

Vulgate-specific readings

John 8:1–11 remains ordinary Clementine Scripture in sequence. The second verb in 8:38 is `vidistis`, so the JNV retains 'the things you have seen with your father' rather than importing an alternate 'heard'; `Semen Abrahæ` remains 'the seed of Abraham,' and `Quinquaginta annos nondum habes` remains the concrete 'You do not yet have fifty years.'

Ambiguities preserved

Substantival `hujusmodi` at 8:5 does not itself settle singular or plural, so the legally generic 'such women' was retained. The compressed answer `Principium, qui et loquor vobis` remains difficult instead of being normalized to 'from the beginning,' while the two father references in 8:38 retain the discourse's developing contrast without explanatory additions.

Clarity decisions

Simple-past 'taught' carries imperfect `docebat` without inventing an endpoint, and repeated 'wrote' keeps both imperfect `scribebat` actions at 8:6 and 8:8 atelic. In 8:40, English 'a man who has spoken' supplies natural agreement while the following 'I heard from God' keeps Jesus's first-person agency; `servivimus` at 8:33 remains the status claim 'have been servants.'

Corrections and reasons

One required correction was applied at 8:26: personal adjective `verax` changed from 'true' to 'truthful,' preserving its distinction from `verum` and `veritas`. Review rejected changes at 8:2, 8:5, 8:6/8, 8:10, 8:25, 8:33, 8:38, 8:40, and 8:57 because the final wording respectively preserves permissible aspect, number-neutral `hujusmodi`, repeated objectless writing, the accuser relation, the difficult predicate, servile status, Clementine 'seen,' lucid English agreement, and concrete possession of years. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

verax is ‘truthful,’ verum is ‘true,’ and veritas is ‘truth’; sermo is ‘word,’ verba is ‘words,’ and loquela is ‘speech.’ Semen remains ‘seed,’ the manere family remains ‘abide,’ diligere remains ‘love,’ and repeated in æternum remains ‘forever’; the chapter’s ego sum declarations retain ‘I am.’

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Jesus sees a man blind from birth, makes clay, sends him to Siloam, and gives him sight. Repeated interrogations move from neighbors to Pharisees to parents and back to the healed man, whose confession culminates in adoration; Jesus then names the judgment by which the blind see and those claiming sight become blind.

Governing Latin

The bodily sequence remains exact: Jesus exspuit in terram, fecit lutum ex sputo, and linivit lutum super oculos ejus—spat on the ground, made clay from spittle, and spread it over the man’s eyes. Natatoria Siloë (quod interpretatur Missus) is ‘the pool of Siloam—which is interpreted “Sent,”’ and the man’s final response preserves Credo, Domine ... adoravit eum as belief followed by adoration.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 9:35 the frozen Clementine text expressly reads Filium Dei, so Jesus asks, ‘Do you believe in the Son of God?’ rather than ‘Son of Man.’ A sæculo at 9:32 becomes ‘From the beginning of the world,’ and Et vidisti eum at 9:37 keeps the emphatic ‘You have both seen him.’

Ambiguities preserved

The purpose clause ut manifestentur opera Dei in illo is retained as ‘that the works of God might be manifested in him’ without assigning a hidden prior cause for the blindness. The healed man’s ego sum at 9:9 remains ordinary self-identification in its scene, while the sight/blindness language of 9:39–41 remains both bodily and judicial without an explanatory gloss.

Clarity decisions

The JNV renders Jesus’s linivit as ‘spread’ but the man’s later unxit as ‘anointed,’ preserving two Latin verbs instead of harmonizing the retelling. Abiit ... lavit, et venit videns keeps the forward sequence ‘went away and washed, and came seeing,’ while repeated ‘he is of age; question him’ preserves the parents’ defensive refrain.

Corrections and reasons

All 41 verses and their continuing speech boundaries were checked; no required correction was found. Proposed changes at 9:6 and 9:35 were rejected: replacing ‘spread’ with ‘anointed’ would collapse linivit into unxit, and replacing ‘Son of God’ would abandon the explicit Clementine Filium Dei. Open required findings: none.

Canonical terminology

Lutum remains the concrete ‘clay’ and sputum ‘spittle’; signa remains ‘signs.’ Judicium is ‘judgment,’ adoravit is ‘adored,’ and manet at 9:41 is ‘abides’; Dei cultor is contextually ‘a worshiper of God’ and is kept distinct from the act of adorare in 9:38.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The door-and-shepherd proverb unfolds into Jesus as the door and the good shepherd who lays down his soul for the sheep. The discourse moves from one fold and one shepherd to the Dedication confrontation, the Father’s gift and hand, the unity of Father and Son, attempted stoning, and renewed belief beyond the Jordan.

Governing Latin

`Ostium`, `ovile`, `pastor`, and `oves` remain the recurring ‘door,’ ‘fold,’ ‘shepherd,’ and ‘sheep.’ The JNV keeps `animam suam dat` and `animam meam pono` as giving and laying down the ‘soul,’ while paired `potestatem habeo` clauses retain Jesus’s ‘authority’ both to lay it down and to take it again.

Vulgate-specific readings

`Fiet unum ovile et unus pastor` is ‘there shall be one fold and one shepherd,’ preserving the same noun `ovile` rather than importing ‘one flock.’ At 10:29 the Clementine neuter `quod ... majus` remains ‘That which my Father gave me is greater than all,’ and the Dedication argument retains `Dii estis` as ‘You are gods.’

Ambiguities preserved

The text itself calls the opening figure a `proverbium` that the hearers did not understand; the English does not identify every thief, robber, stranger, hireling, or wolf beyond the discourse. At 10:29 neuter ‘that which’ and ‘it’ preserve the grammatical referent without making the Father the subject of `majus est`.

Clarity decisions

In the indirect question at 10:6, `quid` remains the content and `eis` the recipients, but idiomatic “what he was saying to them” replaces the incomplete-sounding “what he was speaking to them.” The atelic simple past ‘walked’ is retained for imperfect `ambulabat` at 10:23; `Quousque animam nostram tollis?` becomes ‘How long do you hold our soul in suspense?’ and the paired hand clauses use ‘snatch’ for repeated `rapere`.

Corrections and reasons

Gate 6 corrected 10:6 from “what he was speaking to them” to “what he was saying to them”: both retain the content, recipients, and imperfective force of `quid loqueretur eis`, but only the latter is complete contemporary English. Review rejected a progressive rewrite at 10:23 because ‘walked’ preserves the unbounded scene, and rejected making the Father the subject at 10:29 because neuter `quod` agrees with `majus` and continues as ‘it.’ No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Ovile` is ‘fold,’ `pastor` ‘shepherd,’ `anima` ‘soul,’ and `potestas` ‘authority.’ `Testimonium perhibere` remains ‘bear testimony,’ the `manere` family appears as ‘abode,’ `diligere` is ‘love,’ and repeated `in æternum` remains ‘forever’; `sermo` and `verba` remain ‘word/words’ according to their forms.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Lazarus’s illness draws Jesus back toward Judea after a deliberate two-day delay. Sleep gives way to plain death, Martha confesses Christ and the resurrection, Jesus weeps and calls the four-day dead man from the monument, and the sign leads both to belief and to Caiaphas’s prophecy and the council’s plan to kill Jesus.

Governing Latin

The chapter distinguishes `quem amas` and `amabat`—‘whom you cherish’ and ‘how he cherished him’—from `Diligebat ... Jesus`, ‘Jesus loved’ Martha, Mary, and Lazarus. `Ego sum resurrectio et vita` remains ‘I am the resurrection and the life,’ `Et lacrimatus est Jesus` remains the spare ‘And Jesus wept,’ and `Lazare, veni foras` is the direct ‘Lazarus, come outside.’

Vulgate-specific readings

`Monumentum` remains ‘monument’ throughout the burial scene; the body has been there four days, already stinks, comes out bound in hands and feet, and still bears the face cloth. Martha’s confession retains `Christus, Filius Dei vivi`, and Caiaphas’s prophecy expressly extends from the nation to gathering `filios Dei` into one.

Ambiguities preserved

‘This illness is not unto death’ is not rewritten despite Lazarus’s actual death; the following glory and resurrection disclose the narrative tension in the text’s own time. Jesus calls death sleep before speaking `manifeste`, plainly, and `ut` at 11:29 permits ‘As soon as she heard’ without requiring a flatter temporal paraphrase.

Clarity decisions

`Infremuit spiritu, et turbavit seipsum` keeps Jesus’s agency as ‘groaned in spirit and troubled himself.’ The compact `quatriduanus est` is made lucid as ‘he has been dead four days,’ while the grave commands preserve their bodily sequence: take away the stone, come outside, loose him, and let him go.

Corrections and reasons

One required correction was applied at 11:52: ‘children of God’ became ‘sons of God’ because explicit `filios Dei` repeats the phrase already rendered that way at 1:12. The proposed change at 11:29 was rejected because temporal `ut` permits ‘As soon as,’ while `cito` separately remains ‘quickly.’ No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

The chapter makes the `amare/diligere` distinction visible as ‘cherish’ versus ‘love.’ `Monumentum` is ‘monument,’ the `manere` family is ‘abide/abode,’ `gloria` and `glorificare` are ‘glory/glorify,’ repeated `in æternum` is ‘forever,’ and `filios Dei` is the canonical ‘sons of God.’

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Mary anoints Jesus for burial, Lazarus becomes the object of a second death plot, and Jesus enters Jerusalem as King. Gentiles seek him; the grain-of-wheat saying opens onto his troubled soul, the heavenly voice, judgment and lifting up, after which Isaiah explains unbelief and Jesus closes by identifying the Father’s commandment with eternal life.

Governing Latin

The anointing retains `libram unguenti nardi pistici pretiosi` as ‘a pound of precious ointment of pure spikenard.’ The discourse preserves `granum frumenti` dying and bearing fruit, `Qui amat animam suam` as ‘He who cherishes his soul,’ `omnia traham ad meipsum` as ‘shall draw all things to myself,’ and `tenebræ comprehendant` as darkness that may ‘lay hold of’ the hearers.

Vulgate-specific readings

The worshipers in 12:20 are Clementine `gentiles`, retained as ‘Gentiles.’ Feminine `asinæ` is visible in ‘the colt of a she-ass’; neuter plural `omnia` remains ‘all things,’ not ‘all people,’ and Isaiah’s `auditui nostro` remains ‘what we have heard’ in canonical agreement with Isaiah 53:1.

Ambiguities preserved

`Nardi pistici` is rendered ‘pure spikenard’ without expanding the debated modifier into a historical explanation. The crowd’s alternatives—thunder or an angel—remain competing reports, `exaltatus` carries the text’s lifted-up image until verse 33 identifies the kind of death, and open-scope `omnia` is not narrowed to persons.

Clarity decisions

The condition begun at 12:24 continues across the verse boundary into 12:25, so the grain first abides alone and then, if dead, bears much fruit. ‘Cherishes his soul’ preserves `amat animam` and the bodily noun `anima`; ‘glorify’ repeats `clarifica/clarificavi/clarificabo`, and ‘lay hold of’ keeps the `comprehendere` chain visible.

Corrections and reasons

One required correction was applied at 12:15: generic ‘ass’ became ‘she-ass’ because genitive `asinæ` explicitly states the animal’s sex. Review rejected changes at 12:29, 12:32, and 12:38 because ‘stood by’ preserves the crowd’s scene relation, ‘all things’ is required by neuter `omnia`, and ‘what we have heard’ is available for `auditui nostro` and preserves canonical concordance. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Amare` is ‘cherish’ and `diligere` is ‘love’; `anima` is ‘soul,’ `manere` is ‘abide,’ and `judicium` is ‘judgment.’ `Gloria/clarificare` remain ‘glory/glorify,’ `testimonium perhibere` is ‘bear testimony,’ `comprehendere` is ‘lay hold of,’ `princeps hujus mundi` is ‘ruler of this world,’ and divine `Dominus` remains ‘the Lord.’

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

At supper Jesus passes from loving his own unto the end to washing their feet and commanding the same pattern of service. He identifies the betrayer by the dipped morsel; Judas goes into the night, and the departure opens Jesus’s glorification, the new commandment of mutual love, and the prediction of Peter’s three denials.

Governing Latin

The long opening syntax keeps `in cor` as ‘into the heart’ without an added possessor, then carries Jesus’s knowledge through his rising, laying aside garments, girding with `linteum`, and washing in a `pelvis`. `Protestatus est` becomes ‘bore testimony,’ `tradet/traderet` remains ‘hand over,’ and the stark `Erat autem nox` remains ‘And it was night.’

Vulgate-specific readings

`Apostolus` remains ‘apostle’ in the servant-and-sender saying, `buccella` remains the concrete ‘morsel,’ and Satan enters Judas only after that morsel. Peter twice speaks of `anima` as ‘soul,’ and the final prediction retains the concrete `gallus`, ‘the cock,’ and the threefold denial.

Ambiguities preserved

The Latin never identifies whose heart is meant by `in cor`, so the JNV does not add ‘his’ or ‘Judas’s.’ The beloved disciple remains unnamed, the hearers’ mistaken guesses about Jesus’s instruction to Judas are not corrected by narration, and `in finem` remains ‘unto the end’ without choosing between temporal and qualitative expansion.

Clarity decisions

The unfinished sequence at 13:2–5 remains distributed across auditable verse keys while its subject and action continue into Jesus’s rising and washing. `Qui lotus est ... pedes lavet` keeps ‘he who is washed’ distinct from washing the feet, and comparative `citius` remains ‘more quickly’ rather than being flattened to ‘quickly.’

Corrections and reasons

All 38 verses were checked; no required correction was found. Review rejected changes at 13:2 because ‘the heart’ preserves the absent possessor, at 13:8 because ‘not ... forever’ retains recurring `in æternum`, and at 13:21 because ‘bore testimony’ conveys the attestive force of `protestatus est` without adding an emotional adverb. Open required findings: none.

Canonical terminology

The `diligere/dilectio` family remains ‘love,’ `tradere` remains ‘hand over,’ and `anima` remains ‘soul.’ `Dominus` is contextually ‘Lord’ or ‘lord’ while `Magister` is ‘Master’; `protestatus est` joins John’s testimony vocabulary, `glorificare` is ‘glorify,’ and `in æternum` remains ‘forever.’

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Jesus consoles the disciples with the Father’s house and prepared place, identifies himself as the way, truth, and life, and reveals the Father in his words and works. The discourse moves through prayer in Jesus’s name, another Paraclete, future indwelling, obedient love, remembrance and peace, then closes with departure and the coming ruler of this world.

Governing Latin

The opening preserves the morphological contrast `Creditis in Deum, et in me credite`: ‘You believe in God; believe also in me.’ `Mansiones multæ` is ‘many mansions,’ `Ego sum via, et veritas, et vita` retains all three nouns, 14:13 expressly asks `Patrem` while 14:14 asks `me`, and future `manebit ... erit` becomes ‘shall abide ... shall be.’

Vulgate-specific readings

The JNV retains `alium Paraclitum` as ‘another Paraclete’ and later names him `Paraclitus ... Spiritus Sanctus`. The plural mansions of 14:2 recur as singular `mansionem` in 14:23, both request objects—‘the Father’ at 14:13 and ‘me’ at 14:14—remain explicit, and `princeps mundi` remains ‘the ruler of this world.’

Ambiguities preserved

Elliptical `si quominus` at 14:2 receives only the necessary antecedent ‘If it were not so,’ without explaining the mansions. The case disruption `sermonem ... non est meus` at 14:24 is made grammatical without inventing a governing verb, and the compressed purpose clause `Sed ut cognoscat mundus` at 14:31 remains consequentially unfinished.

Clarity decisions

At 14:7 future `cognoscetis` remains ‘you shall know’ while perfect `vidistis` remains ‘you have seen.’ The 14:11 question continues into 14:12’s ‘Otherwise, believe because of the works themselves’; at 14:31 the plural command and invitation remain distinct as ‘Rise, let us go from here.’

Corrections and reasons

All 31 verses were checked; no required correction was found. Review rejected changes to the indicative/imperative contrast at 14:1, the minimally supplied ellipsis at 14:2, the future/perfect sequence at 14:7, both Clementine objects at 14:13–14, future indwelling at 14:17, lucid English around the case difficulty at 14:24, and the unfinished purpose clause plus separate commands at 14:31 because each final choice preserves consequential source wording, morphology, or syntax. Open required findings: none.

Canonical terminology

`Mansio` is ‘mansion,’ `Paraclitus` is ‘Paraclete,’ and the `manere` family is ‘abide/abiding.’ `Veritas` is ‘truth’; `sermo/sermones` and `verba` remain ‘word/words’ by form and referent, `diligere` remains ‘love,’ `glorificare` is ‘glorify,’ and `princeps mundi` is ‘ruler of this world.’

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

The farewell discourse continues with Jesus as the true vine and the Father as vine-grower. Abiding and fruit lead into obedient love, friendship, election, and prayer; the movement then turns to the world's hatred and persecution before closing with the Paraclete's testimony and the disciples' answering witness.

Governing Latin

`Ego sum vitis vera, et Pater meus agricola est` governs the opening image as ‘the true vine’ and ‘the vine-grower.’ Repeated `manere` and `fructum` remain ‘abide’ and ‘fruit’; `animam suam ponat` is the greater love of laying down one's ‘soul,’ and `Spiritum veritatis, qui a Patre procedit` is the Spirit of truth who proceeds from the Father.

Vulgate-specific readings

The JNV keeps `agricola` as ‘vine-grower’ and `purgabit` as ‘shall cleanse,’ preserving the connection with the disciples already being clean rather than importing a pruning verb. The Clementine sequence also retains the personal `Si quis ... eum` in the burning-branch warning, and the final witness begins with the named `Paraclitus`, not a substituted title.

Ambiguities preserved

At 15:6 the branch comparison remains a warning about a person: `Si quis` begins ‘If anyone,’ masculine `eum` remains ‘him,’ and abrupt present `ardet` remains ‘he burns.’ The statements that Jesus's hearers would have no sin had he not spoken and worked among them are left in their own rhetorical scope, without an explanatory qualification.

Clarity decisions

The many repetitions of ‘abide,’ ‘fruit,’ ‘love,’ and ‘word’ are retained so the discourse's internal links remain audible. The exact 13:16 maxim returns as “a servant is not greater than his lord” after Jesus says “Remember my word”; `Me priorem vobis odio habuit` is made natural as ‘it hated me before it hated you,’ and the Scripture citation at 15:25 is visibly nested inside Jesus's still-open speech.

Corrections and reasons

Gate 5 and Gate 6 corrected 15:20 from “master” to “lord” because `non est servus major domino suo` exactly repeats 13:16 and is introduced as Jesus's remembered word; this also preserves `dominus` against distinct `Magister`. An earlier structural correction at 15:25 nested the Scripture citation inside Jesus's continuing speech. A rewrite of 15:6 was rejected because personal `Si quis` and `eum`, with present `ardet`, support ‘him ... he burns.’ No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Vitis` is ‘vine,’ `palmes` ‘branch,’ `manere` ‘abide,’ and `fructus` ‘fruit.’ `Diligere/dilectio` remain ‘love,’ `anima` remains ‘soul,’ `Paraclitus` remains ‘Paraclete,’ and `testimonium perhibere` remains ‘bear testimony’; `sermo` and `verba` remain ‘word’ and ‘words’ according to form.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Jesus warns of exclusion and killing, then explains why his departure is expedient: the Paraclete will convict the world and teach the disciples. The repeated ‘little while’ opens into sorrow changed to joy, the childbirth image, asking in Jesus's name, plain speech about the Father, the disciples' scattering, and peace in the one who has conquered the world.

Governing Latin

`Arguet mundum de peccato, et de justitia, et de judicio` governs ‘shall convict the world concerning sin ... justice ... judgment.’ At 16:13 `docebit vos omnem veritatem` is ‘shall teach you all truth,’ while `annuntiabit` remains the distinct ‘shall announce’; the closing `confidite, ego vici mundum` becomes ‘take courage: I have conquered the world.’

Vulgate-specific readings

The frozen Clementine `docebit` is retained as ‘shall teach,’ not the familiar alternate ‘guide,’ and `justitia` remains ‘justice.’ `Paraclitus` is named directly, while the birth image preserves both `puerum`, ‘a child,’ and the broader `homo`, ‘a human being,’ instead of flattening them into one noun.

Ambiguities preserved

The refrain `Modicum`, ‘A little while,’ is repeated without explaining its interval beyond Jesus's own words. At 16:23 both `rogabitis` and `petieritis` are rendered ‘ask,’ but their constructions preserve the distinction between asking Jesus nothing and asking the Father for anything; `in propria` remains ‘to what is his own’ without specifying a house.

Clarity decisions

The sorrow-to-joy sequence keeps the woman's ‘child’ distinct from the ‘human being’ born into the world, and `pressura` remains the shared ‘distress’ of birth and discipleship. The Spirit teaches, speaks what he hears, and announces what is to come in a clear three-part sequence, while the Father's `amat` and the disciples' `amastis` remain ‘cherishes’ and ‘cherished.’

Corrections and reasons

No required correction was found. Review rejected changing 16:13 to ‘guide’ because the frozen verb is `docebit`; collapsing ‘child’ and ‘human being’ at 16:21 because `puerum` and `homo` are distinct; and forcing different English verbs at 16:23 because ‘ask me nothing’ and ‘ask the Father for anything’ already preserve the two constructions. Open required findings: none.

Canonical terminology

`Paraclitus` is ‘Paraclete,’ `Spiritus veritatis` ‘Spirit of truth,’ `justitia` ‘justice,’ and `judicium` ‘judgment.’ `Annuntiare` remains ‘announce,’ `amare` remains ‘cherish,’ `pressura` is ‘distress,’ and the chapter's closing terms remain ‘peace,’ ‘take courage,’ and ‘conquered the world.’

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

Jesus lifts his eyes to heaven and prays first for the Son's glorification and the gift of eternal life, then for the disciples whom the Father gave him. The prayer moves through preservation, joy, truth, and sanctification to those who will believe through their word, asking that all be one, share glory, and know the Father's love.

Governing Latin

`Potestatem omnis carnis` remains ‘authority over all flesh,’ and the collective `omne, quod dedisti ei` with plural `eis` becomes ‘all whom you have given him.’ `Opus consummavi` is ‘I have consummated the work,’ while `Sanctifica eos in veritate. Sermo tuus veritas est` remains ‘Sanctify them in truth. Your word is truth.’

Vulgate-specific readings

Eternal life is defined with the full `solum Deum verum, et quem misisti Jesum Christum`: ‘the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom you sent.’ The personal plural `quos` is retained in the keeping and guarding of 17:11–12, and `ante constitutionem mundi` remains ‘before the foundation of the world.’

Ambiguities preserved

At 17:2 neuter singular `omne, quod` presents the given company collectively, while plural `eis` presents its members personally; ‘all whom’ preserves human recipients without turning them into impersonal things. At 17:15 bare `a malo` remains ‘from evil,’ leaving unresolved whether the phrase denotes evil generally or the evil one.

Clarity decisions

`Apud temetipsum` is rendered naturally as ‘with yourself,’ and the long petitions for unity retain their repeated ‘that they may be one’ clauses rather than being compressed. `Consummati in unum` remains the marked ‘consummated into one,’ linking the prayer's completion language with Jesus's completed work.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction was found. Review rejected making 17:2 impersonal because plural `eis` supports the lucid personal ‘all whom,’ and rejected expanding 17:15 to ‘the evil one’ because `a malo` does not expressly settle that referent. Open required findings: none.

Canonical terminology

`Clarificare/claritas` remain ‘glorify/glory,’ `potestas` ‘authority,’ `omnis caro` ‘all flesh,’ and `vita æterna` ‘eternal life.’ `Consummare` remains ‘consummate,’ `sermo` ‘word,’ `veritas` ‘truth,’ `sanctificare` ‘sanctify,’ and the repeated unity language remains ‘one.’

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

After crossing the torrent Cedron, Jesus meets the arresting party in the garden, answers ‘I am,’ protects the disciples, and accepts the Father's cup. The scene passes through Annas, Peter's three denials, and Caiaphas to the praetorium, where Pilate questions Jesus about kingship and truth before the crowd chooses Barabbas.

Governing Latin

The repeated `Ego sum` remains the unexpanded ‘I am,’ followed by `abierunt retrorsum, et ceciderunt in terram`, ‘they went backward and fell to the ground.’ `Calicem ... non bibam illum?` retains the expected-answer question about drinking the Father's cup, and `Regnum meum non est de hoc mundo ... non est hinc` distinguishes a kingdom not of this world from one not from here.

Vulgate-specific readings

In 18:3 `a pontificibus et pharisæis` modifies the attendants, so the JNV does not make the cohort itself come from the chief priests and Pharisees. `Utique` gives ‘would certainly fight’ in 18:36, Jesus bears testimony ‘to truth,’ Pilate finds no ‘cause’ in him, and Barabbas is the concrete `latro`, ‘robber.’

Ambiguities preserved

The disciple known to the high priest remains unnamed, and Jesus's garden `Ego sum` is not expanded with a supplied predicate. The kingdom sayings keep both source relations—‘not of this world’ and ‘not from here’—without turning them into a geographical or political explanation.

Clarity decisions

The arrest sentence distinguishes the cohort from the attendants supplied by the chief priests and Pharisees. `Dedit alapam Jesu` remains the bodily ‘struck Jesus across the face,’ `prunas` is the concrete ‘coals,’ and the praetorium sequence makes clear that the accusers remain outside to avoid defilement while Pilate moves between them and Jesus.

Corrections and reasons

Gate 5 corrected 18:19 from “teaching” to “doctrine” because singular `doctrina` has the same referent and established rendering at 7:16–17; the next verse's distinct verb `docui`, “I taught,” remains distinct. Review rejected changing 18:3 because the final syntax correctly attaches ‘from the chief priests and Pharisees’ to the attendants, and rejected recasting 18:22 because ‘struck Jesus across the face’ preserves `alapam`, agency, and recipient. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Doctrina` is ‘doctrine,’ while verbal `docere` is ‘teach.’ `Tradere` remains ‘hand over,’ `testimonium perhibere` ‘bear testimony,’ `veritas` ‘truth,’ and `potestas` ‘authority.’ `Praetorium` remains ‘praetorium,’ `cohors` ‘cohort,’ `latro` ‘robber,’ and the chapter's repeated royal title remains ‘the King of the Jews.’

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Scourging and mock coronation lead to ‘Behold the man,’ the judgment seat, and Jesus's delivery for crucifixion. The title, divided garments, and care of his mother give way to the threefold consummation language, his handed-over spirit, the opened side and eyewitness testimony, and burial by Joseph and Nicodemus in a new monument.

Governing Latin

`Ecce homo` and `Ecce rex vester` remain ‘Behold the man’ and ‘Behold your king.’ The sequence `consummata ... consummaretur ... Consummatum est` is deliberately rendered with ‘consummated’ throughout, `tradidit spiritum` is ‘he handed over the spirit,’ and `lancea latus ejus aperuit` is ‘opened his side with a lance.’

Vulgate-specific readings

At 19:16 `Susceperunt ... et eduxerunt` remains ‘they received Jesus and led him out.’ The JNV retains `Parasceve`, identifies the pavement as Lithostrotos and Gabbatha, keeps the title in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, and translates Clementine `aperuit` as ‘opened’ at 19:34 while reserving ‘pierced through’ for `transfixerunt` at 19:37.

Ambiguities preserved

‘Mary of Cleophas’ does not add a relationship that the name alone does not settle. At 19:27 idiomatic `in sua` is made concrete as ‘into his own home’ without adding a further event, while elliptical `tollerentur` is read with the expressed `corpora`, not with the broken legs.

Clarity decisions

The removal request repeats ‘the bodies’ so readers do not mistake the legs for what is to be taken away. The bodily sequence remains explicit—scourging, blows across the face, crucifixion, vinegar, unbroken legs, the side opened with a lance, blood and water, linen cloths, spices, and burial—and ‘opened’ remains distinct from the later ‘pierced through.’

Corrections and reasons

Gate 5 capitalized both instances of “Sabbath” at 19:31 because `sabbato ... sabbati` names the same day consistently capitalized at 5:9–18, 7:22–23, and 9:14–16. Review rejected changing 19:27 because ‘his own home’ lucidly renders `in sua`, removing repeated ‘bodies’ at 19:31 because `corpora` supplies `tollerentur`, and replacing ‘opened’ at 19:34 because the frozen text has `aperuit`, while 19:37 separately has `transfixerunt`. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Sabbatum` is the named ‘Sabbath’; the idioms `una sabbati/sabbatorum` remain ‘the first day of the week’ in John 20. `Consummare` remains ‘consummate,’ `tradere` ‘hand over,’ `spiritus` ‘spirit,’ and `testimonium` ‘testimony.’ `Parasceve` remains ‘Parasceve,’ `corpus` ‘body,’ `linteamina` ‘linen cloths,’ and `monumentum` ‘monument’; the royal title remains ‘the King of the Jews.’

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Mary Magdalene finds the monument open; Peter and the cherished disciple run, inspect the cloths, and encounter the sign of resurrection. Jesus then appears to Mary, commissions her, comes through shut doors with peace and the Holy Spirit, gives the remission-and-retention charge, answers Thomas's demand for bodily evidence, and states the book's purpose in belief and life.

Governing Latin

`Linteamina` are the ‘linen cloths,’ while `sudarium ... separatim involutum` is the cloth over Jesus's head, ‘rolled up separately.’ `Noli me tangere` remains ‘Do not touch me,’ and 20:23 preserves the tense contrast between present `remittuntur`, ‘are remitted,’ and perfect `retenta sunt`, ‘have been retained.’

Vulgate-specific readings

`Monumentum` remains ‘monument’ throughout the empty-burial-place scene, and `quem amabat Jesus` is ‘whom Jesus cherished,’ preserving the `amare` vocabulary. Clementine `Noli me tangere` is not replaced by ‘do not cling,’ and the explicit vocative `Thoma` remains in ‘Because you have seen me, Thomas, you have believed.’

Ambiguities preserved

At 20:8 ‘he saw and believed’ does not supply an object the verse does not name, and Mary Magdalene's ‘we do not know’ is left unexplained. Idiomatic `ad semetipsos` becomes ‘to their own places’ without narrowing the destination to houses, while the touch command is not expanded into a theory of Mary's action.

Clarity decisions

The linen cloths and separate headcloth remain distinct, and ‘Sir’ fits Mary's address while she still supposes Jesus to be the gardener. The closed-door appearances preserve the repeated ‘Peace to you,’ and the remission charge uses different English tenses so the Clementine present/perfect contrast remains audible.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction was found. Review rejected changing 20:10 to ‘homes’ because `ad semetipsos` is broader; changing 20:17 to ‘Do not cling to me’ because `Noli me tangere` directly supports ‘Do not touch me’; and normalizing both clauses at 20:23 to one tense because `remittuntur` and `retenta sunt` visibly differ. Open required findings: none.

Canonical terminology

`Monumentum` is ‘monument,’ `linteamina` ‘linen cloths,’ and `sudarium` the distinct headcloth. `Amare` remains ‘cherish,’ `Spiritus Sanctus` ‘Holy Spirit,’ and `remittere/retinere` ‘remit/retain’; `signa`, `credere`, and `vita` remain ‘signs,’ ‘believe,’ and ‘life.’

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

Jesus manifests himself at the Sea of Tiberias through the empty night, the catch of one hundred fifty-three fish, and the meal on shore. The narrative then turns to Peter's threefold love-and-cherish exchange and commission, the death by which he will glorify God, the command to follow, the corrected rumor about the cherished disciple, and the closing testimony about unwritten deeds.

Governing Latin

Repeated `manifestavit se` remains ‘manifested himself.’ `Pulmentarium` is rendered noninterpretively as ‘anything to eat,’ and `Venite, prandete` as ‘Come, dine’; in 21:15–17 `diligis` remains ‘love,’ every `amo/amas` form remains ‘cherish,’ `Pasce agnos meos` repeats ‘Feed my lambs,’ and only `Pasce oves meas` changes to ‘Feed my sheep.’

Vulgate-specific readings

The account retains the exact one hundred fifty-three large fish and the untorn net, Peter's `nudus` as ‘naked,’ and the morning meal's `prandete` as ‘dine.’ The Clementine text has `agnos`, ‘lambs,’ in both first and second commissions; the familiar alternate sheep wording is not imported into 21:16.

Ambiguities preserved

`Plus his` remains ‘more than these’ without specifying the comparison's referent. `Sic eum volo manere` remains ‘I wish him to abide thus’ without explaining the manner, and the distinction between the circulating claim ‘does not die’ and Jesus's actual conditional saying is preserved rather than harmonized.

Clarity decisions

‘Anything to eat’ lets the catch and shore meal identify the food instead of inserting ‘fish’ into Jesus's first question. ‘Come, dine’ names the meal while ‘those reclining’ separately preserves its posture; the final potential claim keeps the world as container and ‘the books that would be written’ as its future object.

Corrections and reasons

No required correction was found. Review rejected inserting ‘fish’ at 21:5 because `pulmentarium` is broader; replacing ‘dine’ at 21:12 because it validly renders `prandete`; flattening the love/cherish or lambs/sheep pattern at 21:15–17 because the Latin changes only where the final English does; and simplifying 21:25 because its potential construction includes future books. Open required findings: none.

Canonical terminology

`Manifestare` remains ‘manifest,’ `Dominus` ‘the Lord,’ and `diligere` and `amare` remain distinct as ‘love’ and ‘cherish.’ `Agnos` are ‘lambs,’ `oves` ‘sheep,’ and `pascere` ‘feed’; `manere` remains ‘abide,’ `glorificare` ‘glorify,’ and `testimonium` ‘testimony.’

Acts — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The former discourse opens into forty days of appearances and speech about God's kingdom, then moves through the command to wait in Jerusalem, the promise of the Holy Spirit, the commission to the earth's farthest part, and Jesus's ascension. The Apostles return, persevere in prayer with the women, Mary, and Jesus's brothers, then answer Judas's vacancy by prayer, lots, and the numbering of Matthias with the eleven.

Governing Latin

The continuous opening `Primum quidem sermonem feci ... usque in diem` governs Acts 1:1–2 as one sentence, while `præbuit seipsum vivum ... in multis argumentis` keeps Jesus showing himself alive by many proofs. `virtutem supervenientis Spiritus Sancti`, `usque ad ultimum terræ`, and the repeated ascent language govern power, witness, and the visible heavenward departure; `sortitus est sortem` keeps Judas's received share visible before the replacement lot falls.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter retains Jesus eating with the Apostles in `convescens`, the promise heard `per os meum`, the mountain's Sabbath-day journey, about one hundred and twenty gathered people, Judas's bodily rupture and poured-out inward parts, Haceldama as Field of Blood, and `episcopatum` as an office of oversight. The first divine `Dominus` forms here refer directly to Jesus and are rendered "Lord" without the covenant-name parenthetical, whose first qualifying source context occurs later at 2:17.

Ambiguities preserved

The bare genitives in `Jacobus Alphæi` and `Judas Jacobi` remain "James of Alphaeus" and "Judas of James," without deciding whether every relation is sonship or brotherhood. `suspensus` is retained as "having been hanged" without importing a different account of the fall, and Judas's "own place" is not doctrinally identified. The identity of the one addressed in the prayer at 1:24 is left in the prayer's supplied title rather than explained.

Clarity decisions

Acts 1:1–3 remains a single auditable syntactic movement, while English punctuation lets each verse stand visibly. The reported words at 1:4–5 are enclosed as Jesus's direct speech, the parenthetical count at 1:15 is kept outside Peter's speech, and 1:21–22 is arranged so the qualifying time span still governs the requirement that one man become a resurrection witness.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 1:18 from "hanging there" to "having been hanged." Independent review then restored perfect `fuit` at 1:16 as Judas "was the guide," rather than the inceptive "became." Both changes keep the supplied time and bodily sequence without importing another textual account. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Apostolus` is "Apostle," `Spiritus Sanctus` is "Holy Spirit," `virtus` is "power," and `potestas` is "authority." `ministerium` is "ministry," `apostolatus` is "apostleship," and `episcopatus` is contextually "office of oversight." Divine `Dominus` referring to Jesus remains "Lord"; the book's one `Lord (YHWH)` marker is reserved for Acts 2:17.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Pentecost is completed in shared place, rushing sound, divided tongues as of fire, filling with the Holy Spirit, and intelligible speech across nations. Peter answers mockery with Joel, proclaims Jesus through David's words about the realm of the dead and the enthroned Lord, calls the pierced hearers to repentance and baptism, and the chapter closes with doctrine, fellowship, bread, prayers, shared goods, daily food, praise, favor, and the Lord's increase of those being saved.

Governing Latin

`sonus, tamquam advenientis spiritus vehementis` governs a sound like a mighty wind, while `dispertitæ linguæ tamquam ignis` and `prout Spiritus Sanctus dabat eloqui` keep the appearance and the Spirit's agency distinct. The three `infernum` relations in 2:24, 2:27, and 2:31 govern "the realm of the dead"; `de fructu lumbi ejus` remains the concrete "fruit of his loin," and `præcipiendo præcepimus` has no place here but the chapter's own repetitions of Lord, Spirit, witness, soul, and salvation remain visible.

Vulgate-specific readings

Every proposition inside the source brackets at 2:17–21, 2:25–28, and 2:34–35 is retained without importing the bracket glyphs. Acts 2:17 is the first qualifying covenant-name context, the Joel quotation's `dicit Dominus`, and therefore receives the book's single "Lord (YHWH)"; the parenthetical is editorial, not literal Latin. Clementine `doloribus inferni`, the soul in `inferno`, the flesh not seeing corruption, "three thousand souls," and the additional great fear in everyone at 2:43 all remain.

Ambiguities preserved

The comparison `tamquam advenientis spiritus vehementis` is rendered as wind without making the sound itself the Holy Spirit. At 2:33 masculine `hunc` is made explicit as "this Spirit," while the supplied claim that this is what the hearers see and hear remains unsoftened. `in idipsum` at 2:47 is represented by the gathered "company" without inventing a named institution, and the pains of the realm of the dead are not given punitive meaning.

Clarity decisions

The geographical list at 2:9–11 remains one sentence across three verse keys, and Peter's continuous address retains all speech boundaries through 2:36 and 2:40. The quotation levels at 2:34–35 distinguish David's speech from the Lord's embedded command. At 2:42 the fellowship remains tied to the breaking of bread, and at 2:47 "the company of those who were being saved" gives intelligible English to the Lord's daily `augebat ... in idipsum` without adding a doctrinal label.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review corrected 2:32 from "of which" to "of whom," because masculine singular `cujus` refers to the raised Jesus, not abstractly to the event. It also replaced the mechanically awkward "increased together those" at 2:47 with "increased the company of those." Whole-book harmonization refined miraculous plural `virtutibus` at 2:22 to "works of power," matching the same family at 8:13 and 19:11 while retaining wonders and signs. All three `infernum` renderings remain consistent. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`infernum` is "the realm of the dead," `anima` is "soul," miraculous plural `virtutes` is "works of power," `prodigia` is "wonders," and `signa` is "signs." `verba` is "words," `sermo` is contextually "word" at 2:41, `testificari` is "bear testimony," `doctrina` is "doctrine," and the `pœnitentia` imperative phrase is "repent." The only `Lord (YHWH)` in Acts is fixed at 2:17.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

At the ninth hour, a man lame from his mother's womb is carried to the Beautiful Gate, asks for alms, receives Peter's command in Jesus's name, and enters the temple walking, leaping, and praising God. Peter turns the crowd's astonishment away from apostolic power and authority, names their denial and killing of the Author of life, insists upon Jesus's name and faith, calls for repentance and conversion, and ends with Moses, the prophets, the testament, the seed, and God's Son sent first to bless them.

Governing Latin

The bodily chain `claudus ex utero`, `bases ejus et plantæ`, and repeated `ambulans, et exiliens` governs lameness from the womb, firm ankles and soles, walking, and leaping. `nostra virtute aut potestate` explicitly distinguishes power from authority. The doubled `in fide nominis ejus ... confirmavit nomen ejus` keeps the name's repetition and agency, while `auctorem vitæ`, `integram sanitatem`, and `tempora refrigerii` govern Author of life, complete soundness, and times of refreshment.

Vulgate-specific readings

Frozen `filium suum Jesum` at 3:13 and again `filium suum` at 3:26 is rendered "his Son," not silently conformed to a different source title. The chapter retains Pilate's judgment that Jesus should be released, a man who was a murderer being given instead, the name itself strengthening the healed man, every soul who refuses the prophet being exterminated from the people, and `testamenti` as "testament" rather than collapsing it into the distinct canonical term for `fœdus`.

Ambiguities preserved

At 3:16 the relation of faith "through him" is stated without identifying an unexpressed human or divine intermediary beyond the pronoun. The clause `judicante illo dimitti` keeps Pilate as the judging subject without adding his motive. The restoration of all things is not defined, `a sæculo` remains "from of old," and the means by which the sent Son turns each person from wickedness is not expanded.

Clarity decisions

Peter's address remains continuous from 3:12 through 3:26. The densely repeated name construction at 3:16 is divided by a semicolon but retains both occurrences and assigns strengthening to `nomen ejus`. Verses 3:19–21 remain one purpose-and-time sequence: repentance and conversion lead into blotted sins, then `cum venerint` makes the Lord's sending follow the coming times of refreshment, and heaven receives Jesus until restoration.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review corrected 3:15 from "of which we are witnesses" to "of whom we are witnesses" and restored temporal `cum` at 3:20. Independent collation removed an unsupplied inception from imperfect `ambulabat` at 3:8, restored concrete agent noun `homicidam` at 3:14 as "a man who was a murderer," and restored perfect `vidistis` at 3:16 as "have seen," preserving its distinction from present-result `nostis`, "know." The frozen `filium` remains "Son" at 3:13 and 3:26. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`virtus` is "power" and `potestas` is "authority," kept side by side at 3:12. `filius` is "Son," `anima` is "soul," `semen` is "seed," `testamentum` is "testament," `pœnitemini` is "repent," and `convertimini` is "be converted." `sanitas` is represented by bodily "soundness" or "healing" according to its construction.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Peter and John's temple teaching is interrupted by priests, the temple magistrate, and Sadducees; imprisonment gives way to a public examination in which the healed man stands beside them. Their release turns into a united prayer joining creation, David's words, Herod, Pilate, nations, and Israel under God's counsel; the shaken gathering speaks boldly, and the chapter closes with one heart and soul, common possessions, apostolic testimony, distribution according to need, and Barnabas laying a field's price at the Apostles' feet.

Governing Latin

`in qua virtute, aut in quo nomine` keeps power and name distinct in the interrogation, and Peter's answer binds `in nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi Nazareni` to the man standing healthy. `constantiam ... sine litteris, et idiotæ` governs constancy in men recognized as unlettered and ordinary. In the prayer, `pueri tui` and `sanctum puerum tuum` govern "your servant," whereas frozen `sancti filii tui Jesu` at 4:30 governs "your holy Son Jesus."

Vulgate-specific readings

Every proposition in the bracketed source quotation at 4:25–26 is retained without the brackets. The chapter keeps the healed man's age as more than forty, the rulers' inability to deny a well-known sign, the direct claim that no other name under heaven has been given in which men must be saved, God's hand and counsel decreeing what should occur, the place being shaken, and Joseph's apostolic surname translated as Son of Consolation.

Ambiguities preserved

The `puer` family can denote servant or child; "servant" at 4:25 and 4:27 fits David's and the anointed Jesus's relation in the prayer without claiming that `puer` is identical to `filius`. At 4:9–10 `in quo` and `in hoc` point through the examined means, name, and person; the English makes the name explicit once for clarity but does not reduce salvation to a merely verbal formula. The object glorified at 4:21 remains the deed as expressed, without adding God as an unspoken object.

Clarity decisions

The arrest sentence remains continuous across 4:1–3, the council's internal consultation across 4:15–17, and the community's prayer across 4:24–30. English punctuation keeps the embedded David quotation distinct from the community's application. The sales-and-distribution sequence at 4:34–35 preserves the owners, sold properties, proceeds, Apostles' feet, and each person's need.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review corrected 4:30 from "holy servant Jesus" to "holy Son Jesus." Frozen `filii` is genitive of `filius`, not `puer`; the correction restores the chapter's source distinction from `puerum` at 4:27. The review retained "servant" at 4:25 and 4:27 as the contextual rendering of actual `puer` forms.

Canonical terminology

`virtus` is "power," `nomen` is "name," `salus` is "salvation," `constantia` is "constancy," and `fiducia` is "boldness." `puer` is contextually "servant" here, while `filius` remains "Son"; `anima` is "soul," `testimonium` is "testimony," and `consolatio` is "consolation." `ecclesia` in the gathered-believer sense remains "church" elsewhere in the book.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

Ananias and Sapphira sell a field, conceal part of its price, lie to the Holy Spirit, fall, expire, and are carried out and buried, bringing great fear upon the church. Signs, healings, and deliverance from unclean spirits lead to imprisonment, angelic release, dawn teaching, and a second appearance before the council; Peter answers with obedience to God, Jesus raised and exalted, repentance and remission, while Gamaliel's counsel prevents killing. Beaten and released, the Apostles rejoice and continue teaching and evangelizing daily.

Governing Latin

`fraudavit de pretio` governs holding back from the field's price, while `manens tibi manebat ... in tua erat potestate` preserves ownership before and authority after sale. `lectulis et grabatis` requires distinct "small beds and pallets," and `umbra ... obumbraret` keeps the shadow/overshadow repetition. The emphatic `Præcipiendo præcepimus` is retained as "Commanding you, we commanded you," and `suspendentes in ligno` keeps the bodily hanging on a tree.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter retains both spouses' immediate expiration, the young men's carrying and burial, great fear upon the whole church, possible deliverance under Peter's shadow, all the sick and spirit-tormented being healed, the prison found diligently closed and empty, and the council's desire to bring Jesus's blood upon them. Theudas precedes Judas the Galilean in Gamaliel's account, and the Apostles are beaten before they rejoice at being counted worthy to suffer insult for Jesus's name.

Ambiguities preserved

The compressed `quid utique convenit vobis` is rendered as the spouses' agreement to tempt the Spirit without inventing when or how they formed it. The parenthetical description of the Sadducees as a `hæresis` remains "sect" without editorial judgment on the word's later connotations. Gamaliel's conditional counsel is left as his own argument and is not turned into a narrator's verdict on the movement's divine origin.

Clarity decisions

The property questions at 5:4 distinguish the field while remaining unsold from its price after sale, preserving `potestas` as juridical authority. The 5:21–25 council-and-prison sequence is divided into complete English clauses without losing who arrives, summons, sends, opens, reports, hears, and announces. The repetitive command at 5:28 is deliberately less idiomatic so the source emphasis remains audible.

Corrections and reasons

Literary review repaired two associated-subject constructions: 5:17 now makes the high priest and all with him the plural recipients of `repleti sunt`, with the Sadducee sect as an apposition; and 5:21 makes the high priest arrive with his associates before their shared act of summoning. These corrections remove broken English coordination without changing source agency. The price, burials, beds and pallets, repeated command, tree, Leader and Savior, co-witness, beating, and daily teaching were reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`ecclesia` is "church," `potestas` is "authority," `Spiritus Domini` is "Spirit of the Lord," and `angelus Domini` is "angel of the Lord." `lectulus` is "small bed," `grabatus` is "pallet," `doctrina` is "doctrine," `docere` is "teach," `evangelizare` is "evangelize," and the noun `pœnitentia` is "repentance," distinct from "remission" for `remissio`.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Growth brings a murmuring from the Greeks against the Hebrews over widows overlooked in daily ministry. The twelve preserve prayer and the ministry of the word while the multitude chooses seven attested, Spirit-filled men for the work; the word of the Lord grows, disciples multiply, and many priests obey the faith. Stephen's grace, strength, wonders, and signs provoke dispute, suborned accusations, a violent seizure, false witnesses, and finally the council's sight of his face like an angel's.

Governing Latin

`murmur Græcorum adversus Hebræos` and `despicerentur ... viduæ` keep the group tension and the widows' passive neglect. `Non est æquum ... derelinquere verbum Dei, et ministrare mensis` governs the twelve's stated division of service, while `boni testimonii`, `plenos Spiritu Sancto et sapientia`, prayer, and laid hands govern the seven. `sermo` at 6:5 is the proposal; `verbum Domini` at 6:7 is the Lord's word; `Spiritui qui loquebatur` keeps the Spirit as speaking agent.

Vulgate-specific readings

Nicolas is `advenam Antiochenum`, retained as "a sojourner from Antioch" rather than silently importing a different technical label. The chapter keeps Stephen full of `gratia et fortitudine`, the named synagogue groups, blasphemous words directed against both Moses and God, the crowd's rush and seizure, and the exact false-witness claim that Jesus of Nazareth will destroy the place and change traditions Moses handed down.

Ambiguities preserved

The source does not state whether the Greeks are defined by language, birthplace, or wider culture, so the reader text leaves them "Greeks." `ministerium quotidianum` remains the daily ministry without naming a food-distribution system, and the seven's `opus` remains "work" without assigning an office title absent here. At 6:10 the Spirit speaks, but the manner of speech through Stephen is not expanded.

Clarity decisions

The selection speech remains direct across 6:2–4, and the long list at 6:5 remains one verse unit. `sermo` is "proposal" there so readers do not mistake the multitude's approval of the twelve's statement for a second occurrence of the growing `verbum` in 6:7. The accusations continue cleanly across 6:12–14, with the false witnesses' direct-speech boundary preserved.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 6:5 from "the word" to "the proposal," preventing collapse of `sermo` into adjacent `verbum Dei` and `verbum Domini`, and refined `fortitudine` at 6:8 to clear "strength." Independent review changed "newcomer" to "sojourner" at 6:5 so `advena` retains foreign-resident texture without adding recent arrival or importing a technical label. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`ministerium` is "ministry," `ministrare` is "minister," `sermo` is contextually "proposal," and `verbum` is "word." `testimonium` is "testimony," `Spiritus Sanctus` is "Holy Spirit," `fortitudo` is "strength," `prodigia` is "wonders," and `signa` is "signs." `traditiones quas tradidit` remains the visible "traditions which Moses handed down."

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Stephen answers the high priest by moving from Abraham's call and promised seed through Joseph, the famine, seventy-five souls, Moses's birth, rejection, exile, angelic commission, redemption, signs, and the fathers' refusal. The speech turns through the calf, the host of heaven, Moloch and Rempham, the tabernacle of testimony, Joshua, David, Solomon, and the Most High beyond handmade dwellings, then directly indicts stiff-necked resistance and murder. The hearers rush Stephen, who sees the opened heavens, invokes Lord Jesus, prays for his killers, falls asleep in the Lord, and leaves Saul consenting to his slaying.

Governing Latin

The long anaphoric chain `Hic ... Hunc Moysen ... Hic est Moyses ... Hic est qui` governs Stephen's repeated identification of the rejected and commissioned Moses. `in animabus septuaginta quinque` fixes "seventy-five souls"; `Videns vidi` keeps the doubled seeing; `verba vitæ` gives words of life. `Convertit ... et tradidit`, `militiæ cæli`, the two bracketed prophetic quotations, `dura cervice`, and `dissecabantur cordibus` govern turning, handing over, the host of heaven, stiff neck, and hearts cut through.

Vulgate-specific readings

All propositions within the source brackets at 7:42–43 and 7:49–50 are retained without the bracket glyphs. The Clementine chapter retains seventy-five souls, Abraham's purchase from the sons of Hamor son of Shechem, Moses powerful in words and deeds, forty years before and forty years after Midian, `ipsum audietis` at 7:37, and Latin `Jesu` at 7:45; the historical bearer is accurately rendered Joshua and the Vulgate name form is recorded here. Acts 7:59 includes Stephen's final prayer, sleep in the Lord, and Saul's consent to his slaying in one source verse.

Ambiguities preserved

Bare `Convertit autem Deus` at 7:42 remains "God turned," without adding an object or the directional "away." The figures in 7:43 remain figures made "to adore them," without repairing the difficult pronoun relation. `tabernaculum Deo Jacob` remains a tabernacle for the God of Jacob without deciding whether the phrase stresses dwelling, tent, or sanctuary. The law received `in dispositione angelorum` remains "by the disposition of angels," without a speculative account of their mediation.

Clarity decisions

Stephen's speech is kept open from 7:2 through 7:53, with nested ancestral and prophetic quotations separately punctuated. At 7:10 Pharaoh is named once as appointing agent so the preceding divine verbs do not absorb his act or house. At 7:38 "he received" keeps Moses visibly as receiver of the words of life. `ecclesia in solitudine` is contextually "assembly in the desert," because the sentence refers to Israel gathered with Moses rather than silently assigning the later institutional sense.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review clarified Moses as the receiver at 7:38 and removed unsupplied "away" from intransitive `Convertit` at 7:42. Independent collation named Pharaoh's appointing agency and house at 7:10, restored repeated demonstrative `Hunc` as "This man" at 7:36, and rendered violent `nex` as "slaying" at 7:59 rather than generic death. Joshua at 7:45 and the seventy-five-soul count were separately reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`semen` is "seed," `anima` is "soul," `testamentum` is "testament," `salus` is "salvation," `redemptor` is "redeemer," and `ecclesia` is contextually "assembly" for Israel in the desert. Historical Latin `Jesu` at 7:45 is Joshua in English. `tabernaculum testimonii` is "tabernacle of testimony," `militia cæli` is "host of heaven," `Justus` is "Just One," and falling asleep in the Lord retains the source's death image.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Stephen’s death opens immediately into persecution, Saul’s house-by-house devastation, scattering, and the evangelized word. Philip’s signs and preaching bring joy in Samaria, expose Simon’s magic and attempted purchase of apostolic authority, and lead Peter to command repentance; an angel then sends Philip to the desert road, where the Ethiopian eunuch’s Isaiah reading becomes proclamation of Jesus, complete confession, baptism, rejoicing, Philip’s seizure by the Spirit of the Lord, and evangelizing through Azotus to Caesarea.

Governing Latin

`per domos intrans, et trahens viros ac mulieres` governs Saul’s repeated entry and bodily dragging. `dementasset eos` retains Simon’s magic driving people out of their minds; `virtutes maximas` is “very great works of power,” distinct from requested `potestatem` as authority. `contra meridianum ... hæc est deserta` keeps the terse road command, while `ex toto corde`, `descenderunt uterque in aquam`, and `Spiritus Domini rapuit` govern whole-heart confession, both descending into the water, and the Spirit’s seizure of Philip.

Vulgate-specific readings

Acts 8:37 is retained as ordinary canonical reader text in full: Philip’s condition, belief with the whole heart, permission, and the eunuch’s confession that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. Every proposition in the source brackets at 8:32–33 remains without the bracket glyphs, including slaughter, the voiceless lamb, unopened mouth, judgment taken away in humiliation, the unanswered generation question, and life taken from the earth. The eunuch comes to `adorare`, to adore, and Philip is found in Azotus.

Ambiguities preserved

At 8:26 `contra meridianum` is rendered by its directional sense “toward the south,” while the Latin’s possible noonday nuance is recorded rather than inserted as a second simultaneous instruction. The bare `hæc est deserta` remains “this is desert,” leaving its live feminine attachment without inventing whether the road or a geographic locale is meant. `sermone isto` at 8:21 is contextually “this matter,” and the judgment and generation language in Isaiah is not interpreted beyond the words supplied.

Clarity decisions

The strange Clementine construction at 8:7 keeps the human hosts as the main-clause agents who go out crying, while their unclean spirits remain the objects they had; it is not conformed to the familiar alternate reading in which the spirits come out. At 8:18 singular `impositionem manus Apostolorum` is “the laying on of the Apostles’ hand,” while the actual repeated hand-laying clauses retain their natural plural action. Philip’s question at 8:30 keeps the doubled cognition of `Putasne intelligis` as “Do you think you understand,” and the nested reading, question, proclamation, confession, and baptism boundaries remain distinct.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review corrected 8:18 from plural “Apostles’ hands” to singular “Apostles’ hand.” Independent review corrected the main-clause agency at 8:7: nominative `Multi ... eorum qui habebant` supplies the many human hosts who went out crying, while accusative `spiritus immundos` remains what they had. This deliberately preserves the frozen Clementine construction instead of the familiar alternate-tradition agency. The `virtus`/`potestas` distinction and every clause of 8:37 were then reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`ecclesia` is “church,” `evangelizare` is “evangelize,” `verbum` is “word,” and `testificari` is “bear testimony.” `virtus` is “power” or “work of power,” `potestas` is “authority,” `Spiritus Sanctus` is “Holy Spirit,” and `Spiritus Domini` is “Spirit of the Lord.” `pœnitentiam age` is “repent,” `adorare` is “adore,” `judicium` is “judgment,” and `Filius Dei` is “Son of God.”

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Saul begins breathing threats and slaughter, armed with authority to bind men and women of the Way, but heavenly light, Jesus's voice, blindness, fasting, Ananias's vision, laid hands, restored sight, baptism, and the Holy Spirit turn the persecutor into a preacher. Escape from Damascus leads through Barnabas to bold action in Jerusalem and departure to Tarsus; the church has peace and is built up. Peter then crosses to Lydda, where Aeneas rises from his pallet, and to Joppa, where Tabitha rises from death and Peter stays with Simon the tanner.

Governing Latin

Clementine `Ego sum Jesus, quem tu persequeris: durum est tibi contra stimulum calcitrare` and `tremens ac stupens ... Domine, quid me vis facere?` govern the full confrontation at 9:5–6. `potestatem ... alligandi`, `vas electionis`, and `quanta oporteat eum ... pati` govern authority to bind, vessel of election, and necessary suffering. Repeated `fiducialiter` governs Saul's bold action, while `grabato`, `sterne tibi`, washed body, knees, tunics, garments, hand, and living presentation keep the healing narratives bodily and concrete.

Vulgate-specific readings

Both extended Clementine clauses at 9:5–6 remain ordinary reader text: kicking against the singular goad and Saul's trembling question, "Lord, what do you want me to do?" Acts 9:7 retains the companions indeed hearing the voice while seeing no one, without harmonization to the later conversion accounts. Saul carries Jesus's name before Gentiles, kings, and sons of Israel; something like scales falls from his eyes; Tabitha is translated as Dorcas; and Peter stays with a named tanner.

Ambiguities preserved

`vocem` remains "voice" in the encounter and the companions' hearing, without explaining whether their hearing entails comprehension; its later relation to Acts 22 must remain open for whole-book review. The parenthetical source punctuation at 9:12 has been integrated into the Lord's continuing speech because he is reporting Saul's vision, but no new speaker is invented. `vas electionis` remains the concrete "vessel of election," and the vision's mechanism, the scales' substance, and the timing of "many days" remain unspecified.

Clarity decisions

At 9:5 `Et ille` is rendered "the voice answered" so the rapid exchange cannot be misread as Saul answering himself; "voice" comes directly from 9:4. Acts 9:11–12 remains one speech across the verse boundary, and 9:17 makes the Lord Jesus the sender and the road-appearing subject without duplicating agency. The singular church at 9:31 remains the grammatical subject of having peace, being built up, walking, and being filled.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed the second bare "he said" at 9:5 to "the voice answered," repairing speaker ambiguity from 9:4, and changed "nations" to contextual "Gentiles" at 9:15. Independent review restored participial `trahentes` as "drawing him by the hands" at 9:8 and named the Lord as the speaker at 9:27. Literary review rendered 9:36 as "whose name in translation is Dorcas," making `quæ interpretata dicitur` intelligible without adding a gloss. The encounter, report, and naming relation were reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

The named `via` is "the Way," `potestas` is "authority," `vas electionis` is "vessel of election," `Spiritus Sanctus` is "Holy Spirit," and `fiducialiter` is "boldly." `gentes` is contextually "Gentiles" at 9:15 and 9:29, `ecclesia` is "church," `grabatus` is "pallet," `eleemosyna` is "alms," and `coriarius` remains the concrete "tanner."

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Cornelius's prayer and alms rise before God; his messengers travel while Peter receives the threefold vision. The two divinely directed paths meet in Caesarea, where Peter announces Jesus as Lord of all, the Holy Spirit falls upon the hearers, and those from the circumcision witness the nations receiving the same grace and baptism.

Governing Latin

The vision keeps `mentis excessus` as an 'ecstasy of mind,' the descending `vas` as a 'vessel,' and the repeated contrast `commune et immundum` as 'common and unclean.' Cornelius's household relation `ex his qui illi parebant` remains those who obeyed him. Peter's conclusion retains `neminem communem aut immundum dicere hominem`, while his proclamation keeps `operatur justitiam`, `suspendentes in ligno`, and the testimony vocabulary of `testificari` and `testimonium perhibent`.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 10:6 retains the Clementine promise that Peter shall tell Cornelius what he ought to do. Verse 10:36 preserves the parenthetical proposition `hic est omnium Dominus` as 'he is Lord of all,' and 10:45 keeps `gratia Spiritus Sancti` as the grace of the Holy Spirit poured upon the nations.

Ambiguities preserved

Cornelius's `domine` to the angel at 10:4 remains lower-case 'lord' rather than being converted into a divine title. The difficult `quod factum est verbum` at 10:37 remains 'the word that came to pass,' and the English does not explain the vessel, the three repetitions, or Peter's initial perplexity beyond the account itself.

Clarity decisions

The idiomatic 'by its four corners' renders `quatuor initiis` while preserving the fourfold attachment. At 10:30, `A nudiusquarta die usque ad hanc horam` becomes 'Four days ago, at this very hour' without changing the ninth-hour setting; at 10:34, the personal idiom `non est personarum acceptor Deus` becomes 'God does not show partiality.'

Corrections and reasons

Independent collation corrected 10:7 from those who merely 'attended' Cornelius to those who 'obeyed him,' restoring `pareo` with dative `illi` as an explicit subordination relation. Literary review changed non-English "entering to him" at 10:3 to "coming into his presence," retaining both `introëuntem` and directional `ad se`. Final harmonization rendered exact repeated crucifixion phrase `suspendentes in ligno` at 10:39 as "hanging him on a tree," matching 5:30. The Cornelius vision, Peter vision, journey, direct-speech turns, and 10:48→11:1 handoff were then rechecked. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Verbum` is 'word,' `verba` is 'words,' `testificari` is 'testify,' and `testimonium perhibere` is 'bear testimony.' `Justitia` is 'justice,' divine `Dominus` is 'the Lord' or predicate 'Lord,' `gente` is contextual 'nation,' and `ecclesia` remains 'church' when the narrative resumes in chapter 11.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Peter answers the circumcision party by recounting the vision, the Spirit's command, Cornelius's angelic message, and the household's reception of the Holy Spirit. The Jerusalem hearers glorify God for repentance given to the Gentiles; the narrative then follows the dispersed believers to Antioch, Barnabas and Saul's year of teaching, the first naming of Christians, and relief sent to Judea.

Governing Latin

Peter's retelling preserves its own details rather than being forced into verbal identity with chapter 10: `bestias` is added to the animals, nothing common or unclean has entered his `os`, all things are received back into heaven, and six brothers accompany him. `Pœnitentiam ... ad vitam` governs 'repentance unto life,' while `sermo` at 11:22 is the report reaching the church's ears, distinct from recurring `verbum`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The direct bodily wording `viros præputium habentes` remains 'men who have foreskin.' Verse 11:12 retains the six brothers; 11:20 expressly has `Græcos`, rendered 'Greeks'; and 11:26 retains the disciples' being first surnamed Christians at Antioch.

Ambiguities preserved

The account does not identify the six brothers by name or explain why its list of creatures differs from 10:12. `Conversati sunt ibi in ecclesia` is rendered as living there in the church without inventing a formal office, and the prediction of famine over `universo orbe terrarum` is not geographically narrowed.

Clarity decisions

At 11:8 the Latin negative is expressed in grammatical English as 'nothing ... has ever entered my mouth.' `Multus numerus credentium conversus est` is kept as 'a great number of believers were converted,' preserving both the believing group and the conversion; the object of `mittere` at 11:29 is minimally supplied as 'something' because the Latin leaves the contribution unnamed.

Corrections and reasons

Review corrected an English double negative at 11:8, changed 'drawn back' to passive 'received back' at 11:10, restored `credentium` as 'of believers' at 11:21, and removed the interpretive noun 'relief' at 11:29. Final harmonization removed unsupported downward motion from `supervenerunt` at 11:27: the prophets "arrived at Antioch from Jerusalem," matching the same source-near movement decision at 21:10. Whole-book harmonization restored the exact remembered baptism saying at 11:16 to "you will be baptized," matching the word-for-word Latin recurrence at 1:5, and capitalized the substantive Acts title "Apostles" at 11:1. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

The `pœnitentia` noun is 'repentance' and `ad vitam` remains 'unto life.' `Gentes` is 'Gentiles' where it names the non-Jewish recipients, `Græcos` is 'Greeks,' `ecclesia` is 'church,' `seniores` is 'elders,' and substantive Clementine `Apostoli` retains the Acts title style "Apostles." The `sermo`/`verbum` distinction appears as 'report' versus 'word.'

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Herod kills James and imprisons Peter under layered guard, while the church prays without interruption. An angel bodily awakens and leads Peter through chains, guards, and the self-opening iron gate; Rhoda recognizes his voice before the praying assembly believes her. Herod's search ends in the guards' removal, his own worm-consumed death follows the people's acclamation, and the word of the Lord continues to grow.

Governing Latin

The escape keeps two soldiers, two chains, the blow to Peter's `latus`, the first and second `custodia`, and the iron gate opening `ultro`. `Ad se reversus` is Peter's return to himself, while Herod's death retains `consumptus a vermibus, expiravit` as being consumed by worms and expiring.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text preserves `quatuor quaternionibus` as four squads of four soldiers, Rhoda's named recognition scene, and the supplied plural `Dei voces` at 12:22 as 'The voices are of God.' Verse 12:25 specifically has Barnabas and Saul returning from Jerusalem after completing the ministry and taking John Mark.

Ambiguities preserved

Herod's command that the examined guards `duci` does not state their destination or fate, so the English says only that they were led away. The account does not explain the assembly's phrase 'his angel,' and the unusual plural acclamation at 12:22 is not silently normalized to a singular voice.

Clarity decisions

The prison `habitaculum` is contextually a 'chamber,' and `calcea te caligas tuas` is rendered as putting sandals on the feet. The genitive relation in `ostium januæ` stays visible as 'the door of the gate,' while `regiones eorum ... alerentur ab illo` retains the regions' being nourished by Herod.

Corrections and reasons

Review replaced the vague prison 'lodging' with contextual 'chamber' at 12:7 and supplied only the English copula in the plural acclamation at 12:22, preserving rather than correcting the frozen Latin number. Literary review rendered `quatuor quaternionibus militum` at 12:4 as "four squads of four soldiers," preserving both the four units and their four-person military sense instead of using the now-opaque homograph "quaternions." No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Ecclesia` remains 'church,' `ministerium` 'ministry,' and `verbum Domini` 'the word of the Lord.' Divine `Dominus` is 'the Lord,' `angelus Domini` is 'an angel of the Lord,' `Pascha` is 'Passover,' and `Azyma` is 'Unleavened Bread.'

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

The Holy Spirit sets Saul and Barnabas apart in Antioch and sends them through Cyprus, where Paul confronts Elymas and Sergius Paulus believes. At Antioch in Pisidia, Paul's synagogue address traces Israel from Egypt through David to Jesus, announces remission and justification, and warns from the prophets. The next Sabbath divides the city: the Gentiles rejoice, opposition expels the missionaries, and the disciples remain full of joy and the Holy Spirit.

Governing Latin

The mission begins with `Segregate mihi` and the work `ad quod assumpsi eos`. Paul's rebuke keeps Elymas as full of every `dolus` and `fallacia`, enemy of all `justitia`, and under the Lord's hand. In the long address, `semen` remains 'seed,' `mores eorum sustinuit` becomes 'endured their conduct,' and `remissio peccatorum` and `justificari` remain distinct remission and justification terms.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 13:18 expressly says that God endured Israel's `mores` for forty years; it is not conformed to a reading about carrying or caring for them. Verse 13:33 keeps `filiis nostris` as 'our children,' 13:34 retains the difficult 'holy and faithful things of David,' and every proposition of the bracket-marked source quotation in 13:41 is present without importing the bracket glyphs.

Ambiguities preserved

The chronological attachment of 'after about four hundred and fifty years' remains where the Latin places it across 13:19–20. The phrases `ad quod assumpsi eos`, `repromissio`, and `sancta David fidelia` are not expanded into theological explanations, and `colentium advenarum` remains the source-visible 'worshiping sojourners.'

Clarity decisions

The 13:30–31 relative clause remains continuous across verse keys, as do 13:38–39 on justification. At 13:27, `hunc` and `voces prophetarum` both remain under `ignorantes`, while the voices are carried forward as fulfilled by judging Jesus. At 13:42 and 13:46, Paul and Barnabas remain the active speakers; in 13:41 repeated `Videte` remains ‘See,’ matching the preceding warning.

Corrections and reasons

Review first corrected 13:41 from ‘Behold’ to ‘See.’ Independent collation restored the double scope of ignorance at 13:27, the audience’s request that Paul and Barnabas themselves speak again at 13:42, and Paul and Barnabas as active agents of `loqui` at 13:46. Final independent collation attached dative `voluntati Dei` to David’s service at 13:36 instead of misattaching God’s will to his falling asleep. Whole-book harmonization rendered the repeated corruption quotation at 13:35 as “will not allow your Holy One to see corruption,” matching the same `dabis ... videre` proposition at 2:27. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Semen` is ‘seed,’ the `pœnitentia` noun is ‘repentance,’ `justitia` is ‘justice,’ `remissio` is ‘remission,’ and `justificare` is ‘justify.’ `Doctrina` is ‘doctrine,’ `verbum` is ‘word,’ `sermo exhortationis` is ‘word of exhortation,’ and `gentes` alternates contextually between ‘nations’ in the quotation and ‘Gentiles’ as the audience.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Bold testimony in Iconium divides the city and drives the Apostles into Lycaonia. At Lystra, Paul’s command brings a womb-lame man to his feet; the crowd calls Barnabas Jupiter and Paul Mercury and prepares sacrifice, but the Apostles direct them from vain things to the living Creator. After Jews persuade the crowd to stone Paul, the mission returns through the same cities, strengthens the disciples, appoints presbyters, and reports the opened door of faith at Antioch.

Governing Latin

The healing preserves `infirmus pedibus`, `claudus ex utero matris`, faith `ut salvus fieret`, the command to stand `rectus`, and the leap followed by imperfect `ambulabat`. The crowd’s words remain `Dii similes facti hominibus`, and the apostolic answer keeps `mortales ... similes vobis homines`, the living God, rains, fruitful seasons, food, and gladness.

Vulgate-specific readings

The divine identifications remain Jupiter and Mercury, with Paul called `dux verbi`, ‘the leader of the word.’ The nations are allowed to ‘enter their own ways’ in 14:15, and the chapter’s return route, appointment of `presbyteros` in every church, fastings, and opened door of faith are all retained.

Ambiguities preserved

At 14:8 `salvus fieret` is left as ‘be saved,’ allowing the immediate bodily healing to provide its context without replacing the salvation verb. The crowd’s grammar ‘Gods made like men’ remains strange, and the text does not identify the precise sanctuary meant by the priest of Jupiter being `ante civitatem`.

Clarity decisions

The Lord is supplied as the lucid subject of the two participles in 14:3: he bears testimony to the word of his grace and grants signs and wonders through apostolic hands. The speech begun at 14:14 continues through 14:16, and the exhortation at 14:21 preserves both remaining in faith and entering God’s kingdom through many tribulations.

Corrections and reasons

Review removed the invented inceptive ‘began to’ from imperfect ambulabat at 14:9, corrected plural mortales to ‘mortals’ at 14:14, and restored concrete ingredi as ‘enter’ at 14:15. Whole-book harmonization restored fiducialiter agentes at 14:3 as “acting boldly,” matching the recurring public-proclamation family, and capitalized both substantive occurrences of “Apostles.” No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

Anima remains ‘soul,’ presbyteros ‘presbyters,’ ecclesia ‘church,’ discipuli ‘disciples,’ and substantive Apostoli is the Acts title “Apostles.” Fiducialiter is ‘boldly,’ signa et prodigia is ‘signs and wonders,’ evangelizare is ‘evangelize,’ verbum is ‘word,’ and gentes is contextual nations or Gentiles.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

A dispute over circumcision carries Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem, where Peter recalls the Gentiles’ reception of the Spirit, Barnabas and Paul report signs and wonders, and James interprets the prophets. The Apostles, elders, and whole church send a letter naming the necessary abstentions. After its consoling reception, Silas remains, Judas departs, and the later disagreement over John Mark separates Barnabas from Paul before Paul strengthens the churches.

Governing Latin

The debate keeps the yoke upon the disciples’ cervices, hearts cleansed by faith, and salvation per gratiam Domini Jesu Christi. James’s quotation retains the fallen tabernaculum David, its ruins, the rest of men, and all nations bearing the invoked name. The letter preserves animas vestras, its four abstentions, and Barnabas and Paul handing over their own animas for Jesus’s name.

Vulgate-specific readings

All propositions of 15:16–18 are retained without the source square brackets. Verse 15:34 remains ordinary reader text: Silas decides to stay while Judas alone goes to Jerusalem. Verse 15:41 retains Paul’s command that the churches keep the precepts of the Apostles and elders, rather than ending with strengthening alone.

Ambiguities preserved

Notum a sæculo est Domino opus suum remains ‘From the beginning of the world, his work is known to the Lord’ without expanding its temporal scope. The compressed quidam alii ex aliis remains ‘certain others from among them,’ and 15:38 preserves the difficult request that the one who withdrew in Pamphylia should not be received.

Clarity decisions

Contextual ‘matter’ at 15:6 renders de verbo hoc as the question under consideration without collapsing recurring proclamation verbum. The three speeches—Peter, James, and the letter—retain their full continuous boundaries; credimus salvari at 15:11 is ‘we believe ourselves to be saved,’ retaining the present passive infinitive.

Corrections and reasons

Review corrected a future paraphrase at 15:11 and Barnabas’s singular secum at 15:37. Literary review made the object and source relation at 15:14 audible as God visiting the Gentiles to take from among them a people. Final independent collation refined elative carissimis nostris at 15:25 to “our dearest.” Whole-book harmonization capitalized all six chapter occurrences of the substantive title “Apostles,” including the letter and the retained precepts at 15:41. The decree and Silas material were reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

Ecclesia is ‘church’ and substantive Apostoli is the Acts title ‘Apostles.’ The source distinction is visible as presbyteros ‘presbyters’ at 15:2 and seniores ‘elders’ thereafter; anima is ‘soul,’ fornicatio ‘fornication,’ evangelizare ‘evangelize,’ and gentes is contextual ‘Gentiles’ or ‘nations.’

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Paul takes and circumcises Timothy, delivers the Jerusalem decrees, and is successively forbidden by the Holy Spirit and the Spirit of Jesus before the Macedonian vision begins the first-person plural journey. Lydia’s heart and household open in Philippi; a python spirit leaves a divining girl, whose masters then drive Paul and Silas into beating and prison. Prayer, earthquake, the jailer’s crisis, baptism, Roman citizenship, and public release carry the mission out of the city.

Governing Latin

The route distinguishes Spiritu Sancto at 16:6 from Spiritus Jesu at 16:7. The girl concretely has spiritum pythonem, the magistrates command rods, the jailer fastens the prisoners’ feet ligno, and the earthquake opens every door and loosens every bond. The salvation sequence preserves the singular command Crede, followed by the jailer and his whole household.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 16:5 retains the frozen future abundabunt as ‘shall abound’ beside narrative imperfect confirmabantur; it is not silently normalized. Verse 16:7 expressly names the Spirit of Jesus, and 16:16 retains ‘a python spirit’ rather than replacing the Vulgate image with a generic divining spirit.

Ambiguities preserved

The unusual tense transition at 16:5 remains visible. Conferentes at 16:12 is retained as ‘conferring’ without naming the subject of the discussion, and the English does not explain the python spirit, the Macedonian man’s identity, or why the prisoners remain after every bond is loosed.

Clarity decisions

The first-person plural begins exactly at 16:10 and continues through the Philippi scenes without an authorial gloss. At 16:13, ubi videbatur oratio esse becomes ‘where prayer appeared to be held,’ and at 16:22 the antecedent of eorum is named as Paul and Silas so the magistrates are not misread as tearing their own tunics.

Corrections and reasons

Review removed an interpretive ‘place’ from 16:13 and clarified the tunic possessors at 16:22. Independent collation restored conferentes as ‘conferring’ at 16:12. Final independent collation corrected dative credens Deo at 16:34 from “believing in God” to “believing God,” preserving its distinction from Crede in Dominum Jesum at 16:31. Literary review refined Paul’s urgent prohibition at 16:28 to “Do yourself no harm.” Whole-book harmonization capitalized the substantive title “Apostles” in the source of the delivered decrees at 16:4. The future, Spirit of Jesus, python spirit, plural human ‘Lords,’ and release speech were rechecked. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

Dogmata is ‘decrees,’ præceptum is ‘command,’ ecclesia is ‘church,’ and verbum is ‘word.’ Spiritus Sanctus is ‘the Holy Spirit,’ Spiritus Jesu ‘the Spirit of Jesus,’ spiritus python ‘python spirit,’ evangelizare ‘evangelize,’ and human plural Domini is ‘Lords.’

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

Paul reasons from Scripture in Thessalonica and Berea amid belief, jealousy, civic accusation, and renewed pursuit. Alone in idolatrous Athens, he disputes in synagogue and marketplace before standing in the Areopagus. His speech moves from the unknown God and Creator to humanity's one stock, appointed boundaries, nearness to God, repentance, judgment, and resurrection, which produces mockery, postponement, and belief.

Governing Latin

The Thessalonian argument keeps `Christum oportuit pati` and the identification `hic est Jesus Christus`. Athens retains the concrete insult `seminiverbius` as 'word-sower,' the comparative `quasi superstitiosiores`, the altar `Ignoto Deo`, and the connected `genus` language: the whole stock of men is made from one, and 'we also are his stock.'

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 17:18 does not import 'babbler' but preserves the Latin word-sower image; it also keeps plural `nova dæmonia` as 'new demons.' Verse 17:29 retains `divinum` as 'the divine,' while 17:31 leaves `fidem præbens omnibus` visibly as 'providing faith to all' through the resurrection.

Ambiguities preserved

Paul's `quasi superstitiosiores` can carry more than one evaluation, so 'as it were, more superstitious' preserves both the hedge and comparative rather than deciding that it means either reverence or condemnation alone. `Fidem præbens` is not expanded to 'proof' or 'assurance,' and the hearers' claim about Jesus and resurrection as new demons is not corrected by narration.

Clarity decisions

`Simulacra` is consistently 'idols' here and in the council vocabulary. At 17:26, `omne genus hominum` is 'the whole stock of men,' not 'every nation,' preserving its distinction from `gentes` and its recurrence with `genus` in 17:28–29. The speech remains open from 17:22 through 17:31.

Corrections and reasons

Review corrected 'sacred images' to canonical 'idols' at 17:23 and changed 'every nation of men' to 'the whole stock of men' at 17:26. Independent collation restored the hostile actors' agency at 17:8 and harmonized idiomatic `pœnitentiam agere` at 17:30 as 'repent,' matching 2:38, 8:22, and 26:20. The word-sower, comparative superstition, equity, and faith clause were reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Scripturæ` is 'Scriptures,' `doctrina` 'doctrine,' `verbum` 'word,' `simulacrum` 'idol,' and `genus` 'stock.' `Æquitas` is 'equity,' `pœnitentiam agere` is idiomatic 'repent,' and resurrection vocabulary remains 'resurrection' and 'raise from the dead.'

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

Paul leaves Athens for Corinth, works at the tentmaking craft with Aquila and Priscilla, testifies in the synagogue, and turns to the Gentiles amid opposition. The Lord's night vision sustains a year and six months of teaching; Gallio refuses the Jews' case. Paul then travels through Ephesus, Caesarea, Antioch, Galatia, and Phrygia, while Apollos arrives in Ephesus, receives more exact instruction from Priscilla and Aquila, and publicly demonstrates Christ from the Scriptures.

Governing Latin

The Corinthian craft remains `scenofactoriæ artis`, tentmaking, and Paul's Sabbath reasoning retains `interponens nomen Domini Jesu`. His rebuke keeps the bodily `Sanguis vester super caput vestrum` and `mundus ego`. The vision preserves `ego sum tecum`, while Apollos is `eloquens`, `potens in scripturis`, `fervens spiritu`, and diligent concerning the things of Jesus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 18:4 retains Paul's bringing in the name of the Lord Jesus. Verse 18:21 follows the supplied shorter Clementine row exactly: farewell, the promise to return if God wills, and departure from Ephesus; no feast or vow clause is imported there. The vow and shorn head remain only where the source places them, at 18:18.

Ambiguities preserved

The destination of 'he went up' at 18:22 is not supplied, so Jerusalem or any other city is not added. Gallio's `de verbo, et nominibus` remains 'about a word, and names' without adjudicating the disputed names, and the account does not explain Apollos's knowledge beyond saying that he knew only John's baptism.

Clarity decisions

The parenthetical craft proposition at 18:3 becomes its own lucid sentence without losing its relation to Paul, Aquila, and Priscilla. The masculine singular sequence after the parenthesis at 18:18 is made explicit as Paul's shorn head and vow, while 18:22 preserves the unsupplied ascent simply as 'he went up.'

Corrections and reasons

Independent whole-lane collation capitalized the recurring named `Via Domini` as 'the Way of the Lord' at 18:25–26. Whole-book harmonization also restored recurring `fiducialiter agere` at 18:26 as "act boldly," matching Acts 9 and 14 public proclamation. Review retained 'intent upon the word,' the vow at 18:18, the frozen short 18:21, and the unresolved destination at 18:22. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Scenofactoria ars` is 'the tentmaking craft,' `verbum` is 'word,' `testificari` is 'testify,' and `doctrina/docere` remains doctrine/teaching language. Named `Via Domini` is 'the Way of the Lord,' `fiducialiter` is 'boldly,' `ecclesia` is 'church,' `gentes` is contextual 'Gentiles,' and divine and human uses of `Dominus` remain distinguished by context.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Paul finds disciples at Ephesus, baptizes them in the name of the Lord Jesus, and the Holy Spirit comes upon them. Teaching, works of power, the defeat of the exorcists, confession, and burned books magnify Jesus's name; the strengthened word then meets the commercial fury surrounding Diana, which the city clerk quiets through civic law.

Governing Latin

`Si Spiritum Sanctum accepistis credentes?` governs the opening question, while `virtutes ... non quaslibet` is the marked 'works of power of no ordinary kind.' The sequence `confitebantur ... actus suos`, the fifty thousand denarii, and `Ita fortiter crescebat verbum Dei, et confirmabatur` preserve confession, concrete cost, and the word's mighty growth and strengthening.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 19:16 the Clementine `dominatus amborum` remains 'mastering both of them' even though 19:14 has named seven sons; the numerical tension is not repaired. The riot retains Diana, silver shrines, the clerk's description of Ephesus as worshiper of great Diana and of Jupiter's offspring, and both lawful and unlawful uses of `ecclesia` as a civic assembly.

Ambiguities preserved

The disciples' `Sed neque si Spiritus Sanctus est, audivimus` remains 'we have not even heard whether there is a Holy Spirit,' without supplying an explanatory doctrine. `In Spiritu` at 19:21 remains 'in the Spirit,' and the difficult relation between the seven sons and `amborum`, 'both,' remains visible rather than being made numerically consistent.

Clarity decisions

The named movement is 'the Way of the Lord,' while the riot's `ecclesia` is 'assembly' because the immediate referent is the theater gathering, not the church. `Curiosa` remains the source-visible 'curious arts,' `ædes argenteas` is concrete silver shrines, and contextual 'this trade of ours' makes Demetrius's `hæc ... nobis pars` audible within his stated craft and gain.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review corrected 'Apollo' to 'Apollos,' retained `virtutes` as 'works of power,' and capitalized the named Way. Independent review repaired the subject-relative construction at 19:16 and clarified Demetrius's `pars` at 19:27. Whole-book harmonization restored `cum fiducia loquebatur` at 19:8 as "spoke with boldness," matching the same public-speech family in Acts 4. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Via Domini` is 'the Way of the Lord'; `virtutes` are 'works of power,' `potestas` is 'authority,' `fiducia` in public proclamation is 'boldness,' and `Spiritus Sanctus` is 'Holy Spirit.' `Verbum Domini/Dei` remains 'word of the Lord/God,' `ecclesia` is contextually 'assembly' for the civic gathering, and Diana's title remains 'Diana of the Ephesians.'

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

Paul journeys through Macedonia and Greece, breaks bread at Troas, and embraces Eutychus after the young man falls dead. The voyage continues to Miletus, where Paul's farewell to the elders moves from his past service through the bonds awaiting him to vigilance over God's flock, his example of labor, prayer, tears, and departure.

Governing Latin

The voyage retains concrete `ascendentes navem` as boarding the ship before sailing to Assos. The bodily Eutychus account is governed by `sublatus est mortuus`, Paul's `incubuit ... complexus`, and `anima enim ipsius in ipso est`. In the farewell, `alligatus ... spiritu`, `animam meam`, `episcopos regere ecclesiam Dei, quam acquisivit sanguine suo`, and the repeated face they will no longer see govern spirit, soul, bishops, rule, God's church, acquisition by his own blood, and grief.

Vulgate-specific readings

Acts 20:28 retains the Holy Spirit's agency in placing bishops, the church of God, and its acquisition with his own blood, without doctrinal harmonization. The Clementine speech also retains `ministerium verbi`, the complete saying `Beatius est magis dare, quam accipere`, and the cross-verse `sicut` construction at 20:33–34.

Ambiguities preserved

At 20:22 bare `spiritu` remains lower-case 'spirit,' leaving open the precise force of Paul being bound in spirit before the explicitly named Holy Spirit speaks in 20:23. At 20:32 the masculine `qui` points back to God rather than neuter `verbo`; 'to him who is able' makes the grammar readable without deciding more than the agreement does.

Clarity decisions

`Majores natu ecclesiæ` are ‘elders of the church,’ distinct from `episcopos`, ‘bishops.’ The Berean attachment in 20:4 visibly modifies Sopater, `disputabat` at 20:7 is contextual discourse rather than adversarial dispute, and 20:12 adds no direction to the living boy. Verse 20:33 ends with ‘as’ and 20:34 completes the construction while explicitly carrying the ellipsis ‘the needs of’ to Paul’s companions.

Corrections and reasons

Independent review restored the concrete boarding at 20:13, clarified Sopater as Pyrrhus’s son, rendered the Troas teaching as discourse, removed unsupplied ‘away’ at 20:12, and made the needs ellipsis audible at 20:34. Literary review removed accidental repeated “intending” at 20:13. Whole-book harmonization standardized the already identified city at 20:4 as Berea, matching 17:10 and 17:13. The unfinished `sicut`, `anima`, `episcopos`, and blood-acquired church remain. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Anima` is ‘soul,’ `majores natu` are ‘elders,’ and `episcopos` are ‘bishops.’ `Grex` is ‘flock,’ `testificari` is ‘testify/bear testimony,’ `Evangelium` is ‘Gospel,’ `consilium Dei` is ‘counsel of God,’ and `consummare` remains ‘consummate.’

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

The first-person-plural voyage carries Paul toward Jerusalem through prayerful farewells, prophetic warning, and Agabus’s embodied sign. Paul refuses to turn back; at Jerusalem he reports God’s work among the Gentiles, joins four men in purification, and is seized amid an accusation, beating, and crowd violence before receiving permission to address the people.

Governing Latin

`Abstracti ab eis` gives the painful ‘having torn ourselves from them.’ Agabus binds `sibi pedes et manus` with Paul’s own belt, and Paul answers the weeping that is `affligentes cor meum`. The later movement is governed by `sanctifica` and distinct `purificatus`, the four abstentions in 21:25, the bodily dragging and beating, two chains, and the crowd’s `Tolle eum`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter 15 decree summary retains all four Clementine abstentions in its supplied order: what was sacrificed to idols, blood, what was strangled, and fornication. The Egyptian is said to have led four thousand `sicariorum`, rendered ‘men—assassins,’ and the prophecy explicitly has the Jews bind Paul and hand him into Gentile hands.

Ambiguities preserved

The disciples’ Spirit-given instruction not to go up to Jerusalem is not explained away against Paul’s continued resolve. `Antiquum discipulum` is rendered ‘long-standing disciple,’ avoiding an unsupported choice between Mnason’s age and the antiquity of his discipleship; the vow and purification procedure is left in the source’s own sequence without an added legal explanation.

Clarity decisions

The narrative distinguishes Agabus binding his own feet and hands from the future binding of the belt’s owner. `Impende in illis` is made lucid as paying the four men’s expenses, while `sanctifica` remains ‘sanctify’ and the next verse’s `purificatus` remains ‘purified.’ The tribune’s question continues visibly from 21:37 into 21:38.

Corrections and reasons

Review aligned the 21:25 list exactly with the supplied Clementine order and corrected 21:26 to ‘having been purified.’ Independent collation changed Agabus’s 21:10 movement from directional ‘came down’ to source-exact ‘arrived from Judea.’ Literary review restored the English infinitive marker in 21:21—“ought not to circumcise”—so Latin `debere ... circumcidere` is grammatical and immediately intelligible without adding a proposition. No explanatory reconciliation was added to the warning, sign, or resolve. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Spiritus Sanctus` is ‘Holy Spirit,’ `tradere` is ‘hand over,’ and `gentes` is contextually ‘Gentiles’ here. `Sanctificare` is ‘sanctify,’ `purificare` is ‘purify,’ `oblatio` is ‘offering,’ `fornicatio` is ‘fornication,’ `castra` is ‘fortress,’ and `sicarii` are ‘assassins.’

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

Paul’s Hebrew defense moves from his Jewish formation and persecution of the Way to the heavenly light, Jesus’s voice, Ananias’s commission, and the temple vision sending him to distant nations. The crowd erupts at that word; the tribune orders scourging and torture, but Paul’s Roman citizenship stops it and brings him before the council.

Governing Latin

The conversion account retains `lux copiosa`, the question `Quis es, domine?`, Jesus the Nazarene, and the disputed hearing clause `vocem autem non audierunt ejus qui loquebatur mecum`. `Respice ... respexi in eum` governs the repeated ‘look again,’ while `ablue peccata tua`, Stephen’s poured-out blood, the guarded garments, scourges, straps, torture, binding, and concrete unbinding retain bodily action.

Vulgate-specific readings

Acts 22:9 says Paul’s companions saw the light but did not hear the voice of the one speaking with him; this is retained exactly and is not harmonized with 9:7. Unlike the chapter 9 and 26 accounts, this supplied speech contains no clause about kicking against the goad, and none is imported.

Ambiguities preserved

`Domine` in Paul’s questions is capitalized because the narrative identifies the speaker as Jesus, while no claim is added about how much Paul recognized at the instant of asking. The repeated `respice/respexi` remains ‘look again/looked again,’ allowing the restoration of sight and the physical act of looking at Ananias to remain joined.

Clarity decisions

The speech opened after the chapter 21 handoff closes only after the commission to distant nations at 22:21. Ananias’s sentence continues through 22:14–16, and Paul’s temple recollection continues through 22:17–21; the nested voices remain typographically distinct without adding speaker labels absent from the Latin.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review capitalized divine ‘Lord,’ made `respice/respexi` audibly ‘look again/looked again,’ and capitalized the named Way. Independent review restored the tribune’s binding of a Roman citizen as the cause of his fear at 22:29 and concrete `solvit eum` as ‘unbound him’ at 22:30. Literary review named the tribune as the understood subject of `ut sciret` at 22:24, preventing the torture clause from making Paul sound like the learner. The hearing clause at 22:9 remains deliberately distinct from 9:7. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

The named `via` is ‘the Way,’ `rationem reddere` is ‘make a defense,’ and `testimonium/testis` remain ‘testimony/witness.’ `Justum` is ‘the Just One,’ `baptizare` is ‘be baptized,’ `abluere` is ‘wash away,’ `gentes` is ‘nations,’ and `civis Romanus` is ‘Roman citizen.’

Chapter 23

Chapter movement

Paul’s council appearance moves from a struck mouth and rebuke of the high priest into the dissension between Pharisees and Sadducees. The Lord promises testimony at Rome; more than forty men bind themselves under a curse, Paul’s nephew reveals the plot, and a large armed escort carries Paul with Lysias’s letter to Felix at Caesarea.

Governing Latin

The opening retains `percutere os ejus` and Paul’s `paries dealbate`. `De spe et resurrectione mortuorum` provokes the dispute, while the plot repeats `neque manducare, neque bibere` and `devotione devovimus`. The escort numbers, third hour of night, mounts, letter, Antipatris, Cilicia, and Herod’s praetorium govern the transfer’s exact scale and route.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine parenthesis at 23:25 is retained in full: the tribune fears the Jews may seize and kill Paul and that he may afterward suffer accusation as though he intended to receive money. Lysias’s letter also retains its own self-protective sequence, claiming the rescue occurred with knowledge that Paul was Roman.

Ambiguities preserved

After listing resurrection, angel, and spirit, the frozen text says the Pharisees confess `utraque`, ‘both’; the English keeps ‘both’ without silently changing the count to three. Paul’s `Nesciebam` remains ‘I did not know’ without deciding why he did not know Ananias was high priest.

Clarity decisions

The family relation remains the concrete ‘son of Paul’s sister,’ followed by ‘young man’ where `adolescens` governs. The two council factions are expressed with polished agreement, and bound `Paulus vinctus` remains bodily visible. The conspiracy’s repeated eating-and-drinking oath remains audible, and the letter stays open across 23:26–30; the governor’s question in 23:34 is completed by his quoted answer in 23:35.

Corrections and reasons

Independent review restored 23:4 as the bystanders’ indicative accusation, clarified at 23:6 that one part consisted of Sadducees and the other of Pharisees, and kept `Paulus vinctus` concrete at 23:18 as ‘Paul, who is bound.’ Literary review clarified the feigned purpose at 23:20 as an intent “to make a more certain inquiry,” preserving `quasi ... certius inquisituri` without the hard-to-parse “inquire somewhat more certainly.” Escort quantities, the parenthesis, and 23:8 ‘both’ were reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Princeps sacerdotum` is ‘high priest,’ `concilium` is ‘council,’ `pharisæus/sadducæus` are ‘Pharisee/Sadducee,’ and `resurrectio mortuorum` is ‘resurrection of the dead.’ `Tribunus` is ‘tribune,’ `centurio` ‘centurion,’ `præses` ‘governor,’ and `prætorium` ‘praetorium.’

Chapter 24

Chapter movement

Tertullus flatters Felix and accuses Paul of sedition, leadership of the Nazarenes, and temple violation. Paul answers with the short chronology, his service of God according to the accused sect, resurrection hope, conscience, alms, offerings, and vows; Felix defers judgment, later trembles at the discourse on justice, chastity, and coming judgment, and leaves Paul bound after two years.

Governing Latin

Tertullus's speech is governed by `pestiferum`, worldwide seditions, `sectæ Nazarenorum`, and the complete seizure-and-rescue account. Paul's answer retains `resurrectionem ... justorum et iniquorum`, `sine offendiculo conscientiam`, alms, offerings, and vows; the private hearing retains `justitia`, `castitate`, `judicio futuro`, Felix's bodily `tremefactus`, and his hope for money.

Vulgate-specific readings

The complete Clementine 24:6–8 is ordinary reader text: the accusers say they seized Paul and wished to judge him by their law, Lysias forcibly rescued him, and ordered the accusers to Felix. `Justitia` remains 'justice,' `castitas` remains 'chastity,' and Felix's bribery motive remains explicit.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation of `in quibus` at 24:18 to the preceding alms, offerings, and vows remains 'amid these' without narrowing it to one item. `Patri et Deo meo` is rendered 'my Father and God,' keeping the one act of service without inserting a doctrinal gloss, and the exact scope of Felix's 'rest' for Paul is not expanded into a legal status.

Clarity decisions

The flattering 24:2–3 construction crosses the verse boundary as one sentence, with plural 'these things' answering `multa`. Paul's 24:17 purpose is clarified by supplying the English verbs required by the coordinated nouns: giving alms and making offerings and vows; no new activity is added.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review corrected singular 'this' to plural 'these things' at 24:3 and refined 24:17 to 'give alms ... and make offerings and vows.' Independent review restored bodily `tremefactus` at 24:25 as Felix 'trembled.' Whole-book harmonization restored pilgrimage `adorare` at 24:11 as "adore," matching the same Jerusalem-purpose verb at 8:27 and keeping it distinct from `colere`. The full 24:6–8 text remains. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Secta` is 'sect' and `hæresis` 'heresy'; `resurrectio` is 'resurrection,' `justus/iniquus` are 'just/unjust,' and `conscientia` is 'conscience.' `Adorare` is 'adore'; `justitia` is 'justice,' `castitas` 'chastity,' `judicium` 'judgment,' `oblatio` 'offering,' and `votum` 'vow.'

Chapter 25

Chapter movement

Festus assumes the province, refuses the Jerusalem ambush, hears the unproved charges at Caesarea, and offers Paul a Jerusalem hearing. Paul appeals to Caesar; Agrippa and Bernice arrive, and Festus recounts the dispute about Jewish superstition and a dead Jesus whom Paul says lives before staging a hearing to obtain a charge he can write.

Governing Latin

The judicial movement follows `tribunal Cæsaris`, `Cæsarem appello`, and the repeated appeal to Augustus and Caesar. Roman procedure is stated through accusers being present and the accused receiving `locum ... defendendi ... ad abluenda crimina`; Festus's final problem is sending a bound man `et causas ejus non significare`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The English preserves the source's distinction between Augustus and Caesar rather than flattening both titles, and human `domino` at 25:26 is lower-case 'my lord.' Festus's perspective remains 'their own superstition,' and Jesus is described in his report as one who had died and whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

Ambiguities preserved

The difficult `de quibus ego suspicabar malum` remains 'the things of which I suspected evil,' rather than inventing the crimes Festus expected. Agrippa's imperfect `Volebam` remains 'I ... wished,' and the identity of Festus's `my lord` is not expanded beyond the imperial context.

Clarity decisions

`Qui ... potentes sunt` is rendered 'those ... who are able,' avoiding a gratuitous office while preserving their capacity to accuse. The long report in 25:14–21 and Festus's public explanation in 25:24–27 remain continuous speeches, with legal purpose and sequence explicit.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 'those ... who have authority' to 'those ... who are able' at 25:5 and restored the difficult 'things of which I suspected evil' at 25:18. Independent review kept `vinctum` concrete at 25:27 as 'a bound man,' aligning the reader text with this chapter's own governing Latin and the book's bonds language. Augustus, Caesar, and human lord were checked separately. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Tribunal` is 'judgment seat,' `accusare` 'accuse,' `damnatio` 'condemnation,' and `crimen/causa` are contextually 'crime/charge/cause.' `Cæsar` is 'Caesar,' `Augustus` 'Augustus,' human `dominus` 'lord,' `superstitio` 'superstition,' and `appellare` 'appeal.'

Chapter 26

Chapter movement

Before Agrippa, Paul traces his Pharisaic life, the twelve tribes' hope, his violence against Jesus's name, and the midday heavenly vision. Jesus commissions him to open eyes and turn people from darkness and Satan's authority; Paul declares his obedience, Moses-and-prophets witness, and the suffering Christ, then answers Festus's charge of madness and presses Agrippa toward belief.

Governing Latin

The speech retains `certissimam sectam`, the promise and twelve tribes' night-and-day service, imprisoned saints, compelled blasphemy, and Paul's `detuli sententiam`. The vision retains light above the sun's splendor, Hebrew speech, kicking against `stimulum`, the appointment as minister and witness, remission, `sortem inter sanctos`, repentance, and works worthy of repentance.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine account includes `durum est tibi contra stimulum calcitrare`, retained as kicking against the singular goad. At 26:23 `si passibilis Christus, si primus` remains the open 'whether the Christ is subject to suffering; whether ... first from the resurrection,' and Agrippa's `In modico` remains 'In a little,' not the familiar interpretive 'almost.'

Ambiguities preserved

The little-and-great wordplay in 26:28–29 remains literal rather than choosing between time, effort, and degree. `Si ... si` and `passibilis` remain 'whether ... whether' and 'subject to suffering,' preserving the report's marked syntax; `eorum quibus apparebo tibi` remains 'things in which I shall appear to you' without supplying future scenes.

Clarity decisions

The single heavenly speech remains open through 26:15–18, with rescuing and opening eyes dependent on Jesus's commissioning verb. `In quibus` at 26:12 is made readable as 'in these pursuits' while retaining its link to Paul's persecuting acts; the people, nations, and Gentiles are not collapsed where the source changes relation.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review capitalized divine 'Lord' in Paul's question, refined 26:12 to 'in these pursuits,' and preserved the `si passibilis ... si primus` and `in modico ... in magno` constructions. Whole-book harmonization refined `sortem inter sanctos` at 26:18 to "an allotted share among the saints," keeping the allocation sense while preventing modern "a lot" from first sounding quantitative. Comparison with chapters 9 and 22 preserved this account's distinct details. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Potestas` is 'authority,' `minister` 'minister,' `testis/testificari` 'witness/testify,' `remissio` 'remission,' and inheritance `sors` is an 'allotted share.' The `pœnitentia` family is 'repent/repentance,' `sobrietas` is 'sobriety,' `christianus` 'Christian,' and bonds remain concrete 'bonds.'

Chapter 27

Chapter movement

The first-person-plural voyage proceeds from transfer to Julius through slow and dangerous sailing, Paul's warning, Euroaquilo, desperate jettison, and lost hope. Paul announces divine preservation, the sailors' escape attempt is stopped, all 276 souls eat, and the ship breaks apart after grounding, yet every soul reaches land.

Governing Latin

The sea sequence is governed by contrary winds, the Fast, `injuria et multo damno`, cargo, ship, and souls; named `Euroaquilo`; `in insulam ... decurrentes` down toward Cauda; the skiff, supports, girded ship, lowered `vas`, anchors, sounding line, rudders, foresail, and two-sea place. Marked `lucri facere injuriam ... et jacturam` keeps gain beside injury and loss; repeated `animæ` holds together threatened souls, the angelic promise, exact count, and universal escape.

Vulgate-specific readings

The frozen Clementine geography remains source-visible: Lystra is said to be in Lycia, and Boniportus, Thalassa, Assos, Cauda, and the Syrtis are not conformed to another voyage text. Euroaquilo is named, the soundings remain twenty and fifteen paces, and the ship contains exactly two hundred seventy-six souls.

Ambiguities preserved

At 27:14 feminine `ipsam` can look back toward the ship or the preceding setting, so the wind 'cast itself against it' without an inserted referent. `Summisso vase` is rendered 'they lowered the gear,' a contextual nautical rendering whose precise object remains uncertain; Africus and Corus remain named wind directions without converting them to a disputed modern orientation.

Clarity decisions

The technical sequence distinguishes the ship, skiff, cargo, wheat, equipment, anchors, rudders, foresail, boards, and other pieces of the ship. `In insulam ... decurrentes` does not borrow the distinct 'under' relation of 27:4; active `ferebant` at 27:44 keeps the rescuers carrying the rest. `Custodias` at 27:42 becomes 'those in custody,' and `dithalassum` remains the concrete 'place between two seas.'

Corrections and reasons

Self-review restored `consolabatur` as ‘consoled’ at 27:9 and removed an inserted referent at 27:14. Independent review distinguished motion down toward Cauda at 27:16 from ‘under’ sailing, preserved the strange gain of injury and loss at 27:21 rather than reversing it to avoidance, restored active carrying at 27:44, and refined 27:3 to ‘care for himself.’ The fourteen days, four anchors, two soundings, 276 souls, `salus`, every `anima`, and complete escape were reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Anima` is ‘soul,’ `salus` ‘salvation,’ `navis` ‘ship,’ `scapha` ‘skiff,’ `gubernator` ‘helmsman,’ and `nauclerus` ‘shipmaster.’ `Euroaquilo`, `Africus`, and `Corus` remain named winds; `bolis` is ‘sounding line,’ `artemon` ‘foresail,’ and `dithalassum` ‘place between two seas.’

Chapter 28

Chapter movement

All escape onto Melita, where the barbarians’ kindness, the viper, Publius’s hospitality, and the saving and curing of the sick precede the final voyage. Brothers meet Paul on the way to Rome; under guard he addresses the Jewish leaders, testifies from Moses and the prophets, cites Isaiah, announces God’s salvation to the Gentiles, and preaches for two years without prohibition.

Governing Latin

The opening preserves `Barbari ... humanitatem`, the beast hanging from Paul’s hand, vengeance, and the islanders’ reversal from murderer to god. `Salvavit` governs the saving of Publius’s father, distinct from `curabantur` for those later cured; the close is governed by `in suo conducto`, `cum omni fiducia`, and the final `sine prohibitione`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The bracketed Isaiah content in 28:26–27 is retained completely without the source’s bracket glyphs, including hearing heavily, pressed-shut eyes, turning, and divine healing. Acts 28:29 remains ordinary reader text, and 28:31 ends with all boldness and ‘without prohibition,’ without an added conclusion.

Ambiguities preserved

`Barbari` remains the source’s ‘barbarians’ while the sentence immediately preserves their no-small kindness, preventing the English from supplying either condemnation or romanticization. The ship’s `insigne Castorum` remains ‘emblem ... the Castors’ without deciding its visual form, and `salutare Dei` remains ‘this salvation of God.’

Clarity decisions

The citation is nested inside Paul’s one continuous word from 28:25–28, but no square brackets are imported. `Audissent` at 28:15 is lucid as the brothers having heard ‘of us’; predicative `vinctus` at 28:17 remains Paul handed over bound; and imperfect `discedebant` with `dicente Paulo` makes the hearers’ departure ongoing during Paul’s word until 28:29 completes their exit.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review supplied only necessary ‘of us’ at 28:15 and restored singular ‘the custom of the fathers’ at 28:17. Independent review restored Paul’s bound state at that handover and simultaneous departure at 28:25. Whole-book harmonization restored identical `cum omni fiducia` at 28:31 as “with all boldness,” matching 4:29 and giving the final proclamation its recurring public-witness term. The Isaiah propositions, two whole years, and final ‘without prohibition’ were reverified. No required finding remains.

Canonical terminology

`Melita` is ‘Melita,’ `barbari` ‘barbarians,’ `humanitas` ‘kindness,’ `salvare` ‘save,’ and `curare` ‘cure.’ `Regnum Dei` is ‘kingdom of God,’ `salutare Dei` ‘salvation of God,’ `gentes` ‘Gentiles,’ public `fiducia` ‘boldness,’ and `sine prohibitione` ‘without prohibition.’

Romans — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Paul’s opening moves from his servanthood, apostolic calling, and the promised Gospel concerning God’s Son into thanksgiving, prayer, and his unfulfilled desire to reach Rome. The Gospel then opens as God’s power unto salvation and the revelation of God’s justice from faith to faith; against it stands wrath revealed upon humanity’s suppression of truth, exchange of the Creator for the creature, dishonoring of bodies, debased understanding, accumulated evils, and consent to those who do them.

Governing Latin

The one opening address runs through `Paulus, servus ... omnibus qui sunt Romæ` at 1:1–7; its participles and relatives bind Paul’s calling to the Gospel, the Gospel to God’s prior promise, and that promise to the Son made from David’s seed. `prædestinatus est Filius Dei in virtute`, `secundum spiritum sanctificationis`, and `ex resurrectione mortuorum` remain distinct at 1:4. `virtus Dei`, `justitia Dei ... ex fide in fidem`, and the repeated exchanges and divine handings-over govern the chapter’s theological descent.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 1:4 explicitly says that the Son was predestined in power and retains the plural resurrection of the dead. Verse 1:20 distinguishes God’s everlasting `virtus`, “power,” from `divinitas`, “divinity.” Verses 1:26–27 preserve women and men, natural use, use against nature, reciprocal desire, bodily action, and the due recompense received in themselves. Verse 1:32 retains both the doing of the acts and consent to those who do them.

Ambiguities preserved

Lowercase “spirit of sanctification” at 1:4 does not silently decide whether `spiritum` names the Holy Spirit or describes the sanctifying sphere or character in which the Son is declared. `Deo odibiles` at 1:30 is represented by “hateful to God,” without importing the alternate agency of “haters of God.” At 1:28, “did not see fit” and “debased mind” communicate the difficult `probaverunt/reprobum` relation without inventing a psychological explanation.

Clarity decisions

The long salutation remains one movement across 1:1–7, but English punctuation keeps each source verse auditable. The prayer sentence likewise continues through 1:9–10. At 1:20, dashes hold everlasting power and divinity inside the claim about God’s invisible things; at 1:29–31, punctuation makes the extended accusative vice list readable without changing its dependence upon those handed over in 1:28.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed “unwise” to “foolish” at 1:14 to preserve `insipientibus` and its recurrence in the chapter. Independent review then restored dative `fidei` at 1:5 as “obedience to faith,” because it is governed by `obediendum`, and restored both directional `in` constructions and reflexive `in semetipsis` at 1:24 as “to the desires ... to uncleanness ... their own bodies in themselves.” The subjunctive purpose force remains “might dishonor.” No correction finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`Evangelium` is “Gospel” as the named proclamation and “evangelize” in the verb at 1:15. `virtus` is “power,” `divinitas` is “divinity,” `justitia` is “justice,” `injustitia` is “injustice,” `fides` is “faith,” `gentes` is contextually “Gentiles” beside Paul’s mission, `semen` is “seed,” and `caro` is “flesh.” Titles of Jesus as `Dominus` remain “Lord” without the covenant-name parenthetical; the first qualifying occurrence is reserved for 4:8.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Paul turns the charge against the judging person, exposes self-condemnation, and sets God's truthful and impartial judgment beside hardness of heart. The argument moves through works, law, Gentiles who do not possess the law, conscience and mutually accusing or defending thoughts, then directly addresses the Jew who teaches others yet transgresses. It concludes by moving circumcision from outward flesh and letter to the hidden person, heart, and spirit, whose praise comes from God.

Governing Latin

The repeated `judicas`, `judicium`, and `condemnas` at 2:1–3 preserve judging, judgment, and condemnation as related but distinct acts. God `reddet unicuique secundum opera ejus`, and the paired outcomes through 2:7–10 retain every glory, honor, incorruption, life, wrath, indignation, tribulation, anguish, and peace. The continuous `Cum autem gentes ... in die, cum judicabit Deus` construction governs 2:14–16, with conscience bearing testimony and thoughts accusing or defending before the stated day of judgment.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text keeps hearers and doers of the law, Gentiles naturally doing the law's things, the law's work written in hearts, conscience's testimony, and thoughts that accuse or even defend. It retains the name of God being blasphemed among the Gentiles through the addressed people, and preserves the concrete sequence of circumcision becoming foreskin, foreskin being reckoned as circumcision, foreskin by nature judging the transgressor, and circumcision of heart in spirit rather than letter.

Ambiguities preserved

The mutually accusing or defending `cogitationibus` at 2:15 remains "thoughts among themselves," without specifying whether the inward exchange occurs simultaneously or at judgment. At 2:29, "whose praise" leaves the relative construction visible rather than replacing it with an explanatory subject. `justitias legis` at 2:26 is contextually rendered "the just requirements of the law"; the plural is not made identical to the singular divine `justitia` elsewhere.

Clarity decisions

Romans 2:5–10 remains governed by God, who renders the paired outcomes; semicolons preserve that dependency without turning each result into an independent promise. Verses 2:14–16 stay one sentence so the day of judgment is not severed from the Gentile, heart, conscience, and thought clauses. Verses 2:17–23 remain a single direct address, with a dash at 2:20 carrying the accumulated claims into Paul's questions.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review replaced an explanatory "his praise" at 2:29 with the source-visible relative "whose praise," avoiding an unnecessary resolution of `cujus`. The audit also retained "foreskin" in all four occurrences at 2:25–27 rather than smoothing it into an abstract social label, and kept "just requirements" plural at 2:26 so the phrase remains distinguishable from God's singular justice. No correction finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`judicium` is "judgment," `condemnare` is "condemn," `opera` is "works," `lex` is "law," `conscientia` is "conscience," and `pœnitentia` is "repentance." `præputium` is the concrete "foreskin," `circumcisio` is "circumcision," `littera` is "letter," and `spiritus` is "spirit." `gentes` is "Gentiles" in the Jew/Gentile argument.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter begins with the Jew’s advantage and the oracles entrusted to Israel, then pits human unbelief against the faith and truth of God. Paul rejects the slander that evil should be done for good, gathers Jews and Greeks alike under sin through a long chain of Scripture, and closes every mouth before God. From that universal need, God’s justice is manifested without the law yet witnessed by it: free justification by grace, redemption and propitiation in Christ, exclusion of glorying, justification through faith without works of law, and the law established rather than destroyed.

Governing Latin

`non credíderunt`, `incredulitas`, and `fidem Dei` keep belief, unbelief, and God’s faith in one deliberate cluster at 3:3. Every line from `non est justus quisquam` through `non est timor Dei` remains a continuous Scripture testimony. At 3:21–26, repeated `justitia Dei`, `justificati`, `propitiationem`, `remissionem præcedentium delictorum`, `in sustentatione Dei`, and `justificans` preserve manifestation, free justification, blood, preceding offenses, forbearance, and God’s agency.

Vulgate-specific readings

Every proposition inside the source brackets at 3:4 and 3:10–18 is retained without the bracket glyphs. Romans 3:22 and 3:26 retain the genitive `fide Jesu Christi` as “the faith of Jesus Christ,” while those who believe in him remain explicit. Verse 3:28 says that a man is justified “through faith without the works of the law,” with no added modifier, and 3:30 preserves circumcision justified `ex fide`, “from faith,” beside foreskin justified `per fidem`, “through faith.”

Ambiguities preserved

“The faith of Jesus Christ” leaves the Latin genitive’s precise force open rather than silently deciding between Christ’s faith and faith directed toward Christ; the following `qui credunt in eum` still explicitly says that people believe in him. The antecedent of “their condemnation” at 3:8 is not expanded beyond Paul’s compressed relative `quorum`. `propitiationem` remains “propitiation” without selecting a narrower cultic image absent from the clause.

Clarity decisions

The alleged slogan at 3:8 is enclosed as reported speech while the surrounding dashes keep Paul’s charge of blasphemy and misrepresentation distinct from his own teaching. The long quotation is punctuated across nine independently numbered lines without source square brackets. Verses 3:24–26 remain one syntactic movement: freely justified people, Christ set forth by God, remission in God’s forbearance, and the present demonstration of God as both just and justifying.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review restored spatial `in` at 3:7 as God’s truth abounding “in my lie,” restored quotation-opening `Quia` as “For” at 3:10, and named God at 3:29 instead of beginning the verse with an inherited pronoun. It tested 3:8’s compressed `et non ... faciamus` against its preceding rhetorical question and retained “And why not ... ‘Let us do evil things’?” rather than turning the slander into Paul’s command. `Absit` is consistently “By no means!” while distinct `Nequaquam` at 3:9 remains “Not at all.” No self-audit finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`eloquia` is “oracles,” `fides` is “faith,” `incredulitas` is “unbelief,” `justitia` is “justice,” the `justificare` family is “justify,” `damnatio` is “condemnation,” `remissio` is “remission,” and `delictum` is “offense.” `propitiatio` remains “propitiation,” `redemptio` is “redemption,” `opera legis` is “works of the law,” and `præputium` remains “foreskin.”

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Abraham becomes the test of works, faith, glorying, and reckoning unto justice. David's blessing joins remission, covered sins, and sin not imputed by the Lord; Paul then places Abraham's reckoning before circumcision, making circumcision a sign and seal rather than the origin of faith. Promise comes through the justice of faith and is secured by grace to all the seed; Abraham believes against hope in the God who gives life to the dead, and his reckoned faith becomes Scripture not only for him but also for those who believe in the God who raised Jesus.

Governing Latin

The repeated `reputatum ... ad justitiam` governs 4:3, 4:5, 4:9–11, and 4:22–24, while `merces ... secundum debitum` keeps wage and debt opposed to grace. `signum circumcisionis` and `signaculum justitiæ fidei` keep sign, seal, justice, and faith distinct. `vivificat mortuos`, `contra spem in spem`, the deadened body and womb, `non hæsitavit diffidentia`, and `confortatus est fide` govern Abraham's hope, distrust refused, and strengthened faith.

Vulgate-specific readings

Every proposition in the bracketed Psalm quotation at 4:7–8 appears without the source bracket glyphs. Romans 4:8 is the first qualifying covenant-name `Dominus` in this book and therefore receives the one reader marker "Lord (YHWH)"; earlier `Dominus` forms directly title Jesus and remain "Lord." Verse 4:11 retains circumcision as both sign and seal, faith in foreskin, fatherhood, and reckoning unto justice. Verse 4:25 keeps Jesus handed over because of our offenses and raised because of our justification as two distinct relations.

Ambiguities preserved

At 4:11, feminine `quæ` can grammatically relate within the clustered justice-and-faith phrase; "the faith that he had in foreskin" follows the argument's temporal relation without redefining the seal's theology. `accepto fert justitiam` at 4:6 is rendered "credits justice," retaining its accounting act without collapsing it into the repeated verb `reputare`. The elliptical 4:16 begins "Therefore it is from faith," supplying only the minimum English subject and no new doctrinal predicate.

Clarity decisions

Verses 4:9–12 repeat "foreskin" despite its unfamiliar cadence because the concrete term carries Paul's chronology and fatherhood argument. The parenthetical citation at 4:17 is held between dashes so `ante Deum, cui credidit` still returns to Abraham before describing God. Verses 4:23–24 remain one sentence so the words written for Abraham are visibly extended to those who believe.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review distinguished `imputatur` at 4:4 as "is imputed" from the repeated `reputatur`, corrected 4:9 to make `Abrahæ fides` the possessed "Abraham's faith," restored distrust as the means of wavering at 4:20, and repaired 4:24's `propter nos` as "for us." Independent review restored the perfect/present relation at 4:21 as "whatever God has promised, he is also able to do." The one parenthetical remains at the Psalm's `Dominus` in 4:8; Jesus's direct title in 4:24 remains plain "Lord." No correction finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`reputare` is "reckon," `imputare` is "impute," and `accepto ferre` is contextually "credit," preserving three related accounting expressions. `justitia` is "justice," `fides` is "faith," `opera` is "works," `gratia` is "grace," `debitum` is "debt," `præputium` is "foreskin," `semen` is "seed," and `delicta` is "offenses." Romans' sole `Lord (YHWH)` marker is fixed at 4:8.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

From justification by faith, Paul exhorts the readers to have peace with God, then moves through access to grace, hope of the sons' glory, tribulation, patience, proof, and hope that does not confound because God's charity has been poured into hearts through the Holy Spirit. Christ's timed death for the ungodly grounds justification in his blood, salvation from wrath, reconciliation, and life. The chapter then widens through one man: sin and death enter, Adam figures the one to come, and offense, gift, judgment, grace, condemnation, justification, disobedience, obedience, and reign are set in repeated one-and-many correspondences ending in eternal life through Jesus Christ.

Governing Latin

Subjunctive `pacem habeamus` at 5:1 governs "let us have peace," not an indicative possession. The sequence `tribulatio patientiam ... patientia probationem ... probatio spem` retains tribulation, patience, proof, and hope without importing a character term absent from the Latin. `caritas Dei diffusa est ... per Spiritum Sanctum` keeps God's charity poured forth and the Spirit's agency. From 5:12 onward, repeated `unus`, `multi`, `delictum`, `donum`, `judicium`, `gratia`, `condemnatio`, `justificatio`, and `regnavit` carry the Adam-and-Christ structure.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 5:1 retains the Clementine first-person plural subjunctive, "let us have peace." Verses 5:6–9 preserve the unusual question, both occurrences of `secundum tempus`, and the clause that crosses from God's charity in 5:8 to Christ's death in 5:9. Verse 5:12 says that death passed through all men "in whom all sinned," retaining `in quo` visibly. Adam at 5:14 remains "the figure of the one to come," and 5:15–21 retains every offense, gift, one, many, judgment, grace, condemnation, justification, disobedience, obedience, abundance, superabundance, reign, death, and eternal-life relation.

Ambiguities preserved

At 5:12, "in whom all sinned" leaves the antecedent and force of masculine `in quo` visible rather than replacing it with a causal clause from another textual tradition. `caritas Dei` remains "the charity of God," without deciding in reader text whether the genitive emphasizes God's charity for us or charity directed toward God. `probatio` remains the compact "proof," and the elliptical correspondences at 5:18 supply only "it came" without naming an event the Latin leaves unexpressed.

Clarity decisions

Verses 5:3–5 use semicolons to let each link in Paul's chain remain audible. Verse 5:8 intentionally ends with a comma so its `quoniam` clause reaches Christ's death at the start of 5:9. The dense one-and-many argument at 5:15–21 keeps repeated words rather than introducing stylistic synonyms; minimal supplied verbs at 5:18 make the two elliptical halves grammatical without adding a cause or beneficiary.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review verified and retained subjunctive "let us have peace" at 5:1 against the tempting indicative reading. It preserved "according to the time" in both 5:6 and 5:8 and kept source-visible "in whom" at 5:12. Independent review restored causal `nam` at 5:7 as "indeed" and the concealed-entry force of `subintravit` at 5:20 as "entered by stealth." The one/many, offense/gift, and condemnation/justification chains were checked again as whole sequences; no correction finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`justificare` is "justify," `justificatio` is "justification," `justitia` is "justice," `judicium` is "judgment," `condemnatio` is "condemnation," `delictum` is "offense," and `peccatum` is "sin." `caritas` is "charity," `gratia` is "grace," `donum` is "gift," `donatio` is "bestowal," `patientia` is "patience," `probatio` is "proof," and `reconciliatio` is "reconciliation."

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Paul answers the prospect of remaining in sin by carrying the baptized into Christ's death, co-burial, newness of life, and the promised resurrection relation. The old man, the body of sin, and death's former dominion give way to a reckoning that presents the body's members to God. The chapter then opposes two servitudes—sin unto death and obedience unto justice—and two fruits and ends, concluding with sin's wages and God's grace in Christ.

Governing Latin

The repeated `mortui sumus peccato`, `in morte ipsius baptizati`, `consepulti ... per baptismum in mortem`, and `complantati ... similitudini mortis ejus` govern 6:2–5. `simul crucifixus`, `corpus peccati`, and `justificatus est a peccato` keep crucifixion, body, and justification visible at 6:6–7. At 6:12–19, repeated `exhibeatis` and `membra ... arma` make the bodily members weapons offered either to sin or to God, while `servi`, `obeditionis`, `justitiæ`, and `sanctificationem` carry the two-servitude argument.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 6:3–4 explicitly retains baptism into Christ and into his death, burial together through baptism, Christ rising through the Father's glory, and walking in newness of life. Verse 6:5 preserves the planting-together image and the future resurrection relation. Verse 6:7 says that the one who died has been 'justified from sin,' without substituting a different theological verb. Verse 6:13 keeps members as weapons of iniquity or justice, and 6:23 retains the wages of sin as death and God's `gratia` as eternal life.

Ambiguities preserved

At 6:5, the second clause is elliptical: `simul et resurrectionis erimus` does not repeat `complantati` or `similitudini`. The English repeats the planting-and-likeness frame from the governing first clause to make the parallel intelligible, while the editorial records that the wording is supplied by syntax rather than newly stated. The two `quod` clauses at 6:10 remain the balanced 'in that he died' and 'in that he lives,' without redefining their force. `Humanum dico` at 6:19 is the compact 'I speak in human terms,' without inventing what makes the analogy human.

Clarity decisions

Verses 6:8–9 remain one sentence so 'knowing' continues the believers' stated confidence that they will live with Christ. Repeated 'sin,' 'serve,' 'members,' 'weapons,' 'justice,' and 'unto' relations are retained rather than varied for style. At 6:16, the repeated servant and obedience language remains deliberately visible; at 6:21–23, fruit, end, wages, death, grace, and eternal life remain distinct accounting and harvest images.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review restored the adversative force of `Sed neque ... sed` at 6:13 and `Liberati autem` at 6:18, preventing Paul's contrasts from being flattened into mere sequence. It changed the second connective at 6:22 from an additive to 'but,' preserving `vero`, and corrected English agreement at 6:23 to 'the wages of sin are death' while retaining plural `Stipendia` and singular death. Every corrected verse and both neighboring boundaries were rechecked; no self-audit finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`peccatum` is 'sin,' `gratia` is 'grace,' `justitia` is 'justice,' `iniquitas` is 'iniquity,' `sanctificatio` is 'sanctification,' `lex` is 'law,' and `obedientia` is 'obedience.' `membra` remains the concrete 'members,' `arma` is 'weapons,' `servus` is 'servant,' `corpus` is 'body,' and `novitas vitæ` is 'newness of life.' Later `Dominus` titles remain plain 'Lord' because Romans' sole covenant-name marker already occurs at 4:8.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The law's dominion over the living is first shown through a woman bound to her husband's law, then applied to those made dead to the law through Christ's body so that they may belong to the risen one and bear fruit to God. Release from the law of death opens service in newness of spirit rather than oldness of letter. Paul's repeated first-person struggle then traces commandment, desire, indwelling sin, the good he wills, the evil he does, the inward man, the law of mind, captivity in the members, the cry for deliverance, and the final twofold service.

Governing Latin

At 7:1–4, `dominatur`, `alligata est legi`, `soluta est`, and `mortificati estis legi per corpus Christi` carry dominion, binding, release, and death to law without collapsing the marriage analogy into an explanation. Verse 7:6 retains `lege mortis, in qua detinebamur`, `novitate spiritus`, and `vetustate litteræ`. From 7:7 onward, repeated `lex`, `peccatum`, `mandatum`, `concupiscentia`, `operor`, `volo`, `facio`, `membra`, `mens`, and `caro` make the argument's deliberate recurrence audible.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 7:6 explicitly says release from 'the law of death' in which 'we were held,' followed by newness of spirit and oldness of letter. At 7:7, Paul knows sin and desire through the law and retains the command 'You shall not desire.' Verses 7:15–20 preserve every I/me act and the distinctions among what Paul works, wills, does, hates, and does not will. Verses 7:21–25 retain the inward man, law of God, law of mind, law of sin in the members, body of this death, the answer 'The grace of God,' and service with mind and flesh.

Ambiguities preserved

At 7:18, `perficere autem bonum, non invenio` omits an expressed object such as power or means; 'I do not find how to accomplish the good' supplies only the English link required by the infinitive and does not name an absent faculty. At 7:21, 'the law that ... evil lies near me' keeps `legem` compact rather than identifying it with one of the named laws that follows. Verse 7:25 preserves the fragmentary answer `gratia Dei per Jesum Christum` without adding an unexpressed verb, and it does not harmonize away the final mind-and-flesh service.

Clarity decisions

The husband-law illustration remains explicit in every occurrence rather than being replaced with the abstract 'marriage bond.' At 7:15–20, 'work' represents `operor` while 'do' represents `ago` and `facio`, preserving the source's verbal texture as far as lucid English allows. Verses 7:21–23 remain one punctuation-linked movement from the law Paul finds, through inward delight, into the other law warring and taking him captive.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review restored both occurrences of `Ego autem` at 7:9–10 as 'But I,' preventing the commandment's arrival, sin's revival, and Paul's death from becoming an unmarked sequence. It restructured the difficult infinitives at 7:18 as 'willing lies near me, but I do not find how to accomplish the good,' preserving both `velle` and `perficere` without inventing a power absent from the Latin. Independent review corrected 7:8 so `per mandatum` governs sin's working—'worked every desire in me through the commandment'—rather than the reception of the occasion. Repetitions through 7:7–25 and every corrected boundary were rechecked; no correction finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`lex` is 'law,' `peccatum` is 'sin,' `mandatum` is 'commandment,' `concupiscentia` is 'desire,' `spiritus` is 'spirit,' and `littera` is 'letter.' `interior homo` is 'inward man,' `mens` is 'mind,' `caro` is 'flesh,' `membra` is 'members,' and `corpus mortis hujus` is 'the body of this death.' `Absit` remains the strong 'By no means!'

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

From no condemnation for those in Christ who do not walk according to flesh, Paul sets the law of the spirit of life against the law of sin and death and unfolds God’s action through his Son and Spirit. Flesh and spirit, death and life, servitude and adoption, suffering and shared glory widen into creation’s groaning, the body’s redemption, hope, patience, and the Spirit’s unutterable petitions. Foreknowledge, predestination, calling, justification, and glorification then lead into rapid questions and the final conviction that no named power or creature can separate believers from God’s charity in Christ.

Governing Latin

The frozen 8:1 ends with `qui non secundum carnem ambulant`; that clause is retained and no second walking clause is imported. At 8:3–4, `in similitudinem carnis peccati et de peccato`, `damnavit peccatum in carne`, and `ut justificatio legis impleretur in nobis` preserve likeness, concerning sin, condemnation in flesh, and the law’s justification. `Spiritus Dei`, `Spiritum Christi`, the Spirit of the one who raised Jesus, and `mortalia corpora` govern 8:9–11. Repeated `præscivit`, `prædestinavit`, `vocavit`, `justificavit`, and `glorificavit` govern 8:29–30.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 8:1 contains only the frozen ending about those who do not walk according to flesh; no absent continuation is added. Verse 8:3 retains God sending his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and ‘concerning sin.’ Verse 8:15 preserves ‘spirit of adoption of sons’ and the parenthetical form ‘Abba (Father).’ Verse 8:28 explicitly retains the saints called according to purpose. Verses 8:33–34 keep God as justifier and Christ’s death, resurrection, place at God’s right hand, and intercession. Verse 8:38 separately retains principalities, powers, and strength, followed in 8:39 by height, depth, and every other creature.

Ambiguities preserved

Lowercase ‘spirit’ at 8:2, 8:4–6, 8:10, 8:13, 8:15, and 8:23 follows the source’s relational wording without silently making every use an explicit proper title; `Spiritus Dei`, `Spiritus Christi`, and the acting Spirit at 8:9, 8:11, 8:14, 8:16, and 8:26–27 remain capitalized. The placement of `in spe` at 8:20 remains open through punctuation rather than being assigned exclusively to creation or to the one who subjected it. The terse sequence at 8:33–34 states God’s justifying action and leaves Paul’s rapid condemnation question beside the full Christ clause without inserting an explanatory negation.

Clarity decisions

`Creatura` is ‘creation’ throughout 8:19–23 where the singular gathers the created order, while `creatura alia` at 8:39 is ‘any other creature,’ preserving the final individual category. `Prudentia carnis` and `sapientia carnis` remain distinct as ‘prudence of the flesh’ and ‘wisdom of the flesh,’ rather than being collapsed into the later `mens`, ‘mind.’ At 8:26, `postulat` is ‘petitions’ while 8:34 `interpellat` is ‘intercedes,’ preserving two verbs. The quotation in 8:36 retains every proposition but no source square-bracket glyph.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed mechanical ‘impossible to the law’ at 8:3 to the lucid dative relation ‘impossible for the law,’ corrected 8:7 to ‘nor indeed can it be,’ restored `autem` at 8:17 as ‘but,’ named the Spirit again at 8:27, and rendered 8:24’s `quid sperat` as ‘what does he hope for?’ Independent review restored omitted `Dei` at 8:23 as ‘the adoption of the sons of God,’ preserving its recurrence with 8:19 and 8:21. All Spirit relations, the 8:28 saints clause, and every item in 8:35–39 were then rechecked; no correction finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`damnatio` and `damnare` are ‘condemnation’ and ‘condemn,’ `justificatio` is ‘justification,’ `justificare` is ‘justify,’ `caritas` is ‘charity,’ and `patientia` is ‘patience.’ `caro` is ‘flesh,’ `corpus` is ‘body,’ `membra` is ‘members,’ and `adoptio filiorum` is ‘adoption of sons.’ `principatus` is ‘principalities,’ `virtutes` is ‘powers,’ and `fortitudo` is ‘strength,’ preserving all three categories distinctly.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Paul’s truth in Christ opens into great sorrow and his wish to be anathema for his fleshly kin, whose Israelite privileges culminate in Christ according to flesh, God blessed over all. The word of God has not fallen: seed, promise, election, love and hate, mercy and hardening carry the argument from Isaac and Rebecca to Moses and Pharaoh. The potter, clay, vessels of wrath and mercy, Hosea’s renamed people, Isaiah’s remnant and shortened word, and the Lord Sabaoth’s preserved seed lead finally to Gentile justice from faith and Israel’s stumbling at the stone.

Governing Latin

The opening construction runs through `Veritatem dico`, conscience `in Spiritu Sancto`, `tristitia`, `continuus dolor`, and `Optabam ... anathema esse a Christo` at 9:1–3. At 9:5, `ex quibus est Christus secundum carnem, qui est super omnia Deus benedictus` preserves the complete predicate. Repeated `misereri` and `misericordia`, `volentis`, `currentis`, `potestatem`, `figulus`, `massa`, `vasa iræ`, and `vasa misericordiæ` govern 9:15–24. The triple doubled names in `Vocabo non plebem meam ...` govern 9:25.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 9:3 retains Paul’s wish to be ‘anathema from Christ’ for his brothers and fleshly kin without explaining the hypothetical. Verse 9:5 says that Christ according to flesh ‘is over all, God blessed forever.’ Verse 9:13 retains ‘I loved Jacob, but Esau I hated’ without softening either verb. Verses 9:16–23 preserve willing, running, divine mercy, Pharaoh, power, name, hardening, potter, clay, authority, vessels, destruction, glory, and patience. Verse 9:25 retains all three not/my, not-beloved/beloved, and not-obtaining/obtaining predicates. Verse 9:28 keeps the consummating and shortened word with equity, and 9:29 retains ‘the Lord Sabaoth’ and seed.

Ambiguities preserved

Imperfect `Optabam` at 9:3 remains ‘was wishing,’ leaving the temporal and rhetorical force visible rather than importing a modal verb. At 9:10, `ex uno concubitu` is rendered as one act of intercourse and does not conceal the bodily relation; the objects implicit in `habens` are supplied only by ‘having conceived.’ Passive `apta in interitum` at 9:22 remains ‘fitted for destruction’ without naming who fitted the vessels. The difficult grammar of 9:28 retains `verbum` twice, first as the word consummated and shortened in equity and then as the shortened word the Lord will make.

Clarity decisions

Romans 9:1–5 remains one punctuation-linked movement through sorrow, kinship, Israelite gifts, fathers, Christ according to flesh, and the doxological predicate. Verses 9:10–12 remain one construction: Rebecca’s conception, the children not yet born or acting, God’s purpose according to election, and the saying to her are not severed by verse numbers. The rhetorical conditional at 9:22–23 is punctuated as one question, while 9:24 visibly resumes the vessels of mercy as those whom God also called. Nested quotation marks at 9:25–26 retain both Hosea’s speech and the names spoken within it.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review replaced the euphemistic ‘one union’ at 9:10 with ‘a single act of intercourse,’ preserving `uno concubitu`, and joined 9:10–12 with continuous punctuation so Rebecca is not severed from the unborn children and God’s election purpose. It corrected future ‘you will say’ at 9:19 to present ‘you say,’ restoring `Dicis`, and removed an unsupplied ‘then’ from the quoted objection. The love/hate antithesis, mercy chain, all vessels, every doubled Hosea predicate, and the difficult 9:28 wording were rechecked; no self-audit finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`semen` is ‘seed,’ `promissio` is ‘promise,’ `electio` is ‘election,’ `propositum` is ‘purpose,’ `misericordia` is ‘mercy,’ `patientia` is ‘patience,’ `justitia` is ‘justice,’ and `opera` is ‘works.’ `virtus` at 9:17 and `potentia` at 9:22 are contextually ‘power,’ while distinct `potestas` at 9:21 is ‘authority.’ `vas` is ‘vessel,’ `figulus` is ‘potter,’ `massa` is ‘lump,’ `anathema` remains ‘anathema,’ and `Dominus Sabaoth` is ‘the Lord Sabaoth.’

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Paul’s heart and supplication seek Israel’s salvation, but zeal without knowledge remains unsubordinated to God’s justice. Christ stands as the end of the law unto justice for every believer; then justice from faith speaks through descent, ascent, the near word, confession in mouth, belief in heart, justice, and salvation. Invocation requires belief, belief hearing, hearing a preacher, and preaching a sending. Isaiah’s report and the word of Christ lead to the question whether Israel heard and knew, answered through the worldwide sound, Moses’s non-nation, and Isaiah’s contrast between those not seeking and the people resisted all day.

Governing Latin

`Finis enim legis, Christus, ad justitiam omni credenti` at 10:4 remains compact, with `finis` neither expanded nor narrowed. At 10:6–10, repeated `justitia`, `verbum`, `ore`, `corde`, `confitearis`, `credideris`, and `salus` preserve the movement from the speaking justice to mouth, heart, confession, belief, and salvation. The chain `invocabunt ... crediderunt ... audierunt ... prædicante ... prædicabunt ... mittantur` governs 10:13–15, followed by `auditui`, `auditu`, and `verbum Christi` at 10:16–17.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 10:4 keeps Christ as `finis legis`, ‘the end of the law,’ unto justice for every believer without deciding whether end means termination, goal, or both. Verses 10:6–8 retain ascent, bringing Christ down, descent into the abyss, calling Christ back from the dead, and the word near in mouth and heart. Verses 10:9–10 retain confession of the Lord Jesus in the mouth, belief in the heart that God raised him, justice, and salvation. Verses 10:13–18 retain the complete invocation-to-sending chain, beautiful feet, evangelizing both peace and good things, obedience to the Gospel, report, faith from hearing, hearing through the word of Christ, and the sound through all the earth.

Ambiguities preserved

`Finis` at 10:4 remains the single English ‘end,’ preserving its possible senses without editorially selecting one. In 10:14, the English retains the source’s shift from believing ‘in’ the one invoked to believing the one heard. `Auditus` is contextually ‘report’ at 10:16 and ‘hearing’ at 10:17; the repeated Latin remains documented rather than being silently treated as two unrelated terms. The directional `in non gentem` and `in gentem insipientem` at 10:19 remain ‘toward a non-nation’ and ‘toward a foolish nation,’ without replacing the unusual non-nation with an explanatory identity.

Clarity decisions

The compound subject at 10:1 is made grammatical in English as the will of Paul’s heart and his supplication ‘are’ for Israel unto salvation; this does not alter singular `fit` as the source’s compact governing verb. Verses 10:6 and 10:7 each enclose the spoken question before identifying its Christological force, while 10:8 keeps the word in both mouth and heart. At 10:13, ‘everyone—whoever’ retains the emphatic doubling `Omnis ... quicumque`. The repeated ‘evangelizing’ at 10:15 preserves both peace and good things rather than varying the verb.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review removed disruptive commas and corrected agreement at 10:1 so the coordinated will and supplication can be understood on first reading without losing either noun. It clarified `Testimonium ... perhibeo illis` at 10:2 as ‘I bear witness to them,’ preserving the recipients without obsolete word order. It changed the second connective at 10:17 to ‘but,’ restoring `autem` and the distinction between faith’s source and hearing’s means, and restored `Et quidem` at 10:18 as ‘And indeed.’ The entire invocation, belief, hearing, preaching, sending, report, and word chain was rechecked after those corrections; no self-audit finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`justitia` is ‘justice,’ `lex` is ‘law,’ `fides` is ‘faith,’ `credere` is ‘believe,’ `confessio` is ‘confession,’ `salus` is ‘salvation,’ `verbum` is ‘word,’ `prædicare` is ‘preach,’ and `Evangelium` is ‘Gospel.’ `auditus` is recorded as ‘report’ or ‘hearing’ according to its immediate relation, `æmulatio` is ‘zeal’ or ‘jealousy’ according to agency, and all `Dominus` occurrences remain plain ‘Lord’ after the single book marker at 4:8.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Paul rejects the thought that God has rejected his people, identifies himself with Israel, and finds in Elijah’s complaint and the divine answer a remnant saved according to grace. Israel’s offense then opens salvation to the Gentiles, but the wild olive is warned that it does not bear the root. Partial blindness, the Gentiles’ fullness, Israel’s salvation, mercy upon all, and the gifts and calling of God lead into wonder before the depth of God’s wisdom and knowledge and the confession that all things are from, through, and in him.

Governing Latin

The strong rejection `Absit` answers both 11:1 and 11:11. At 11:5–7, `reliquiæ`, `electio gratiæ`, `gratia`, and `opera` keep remnant, election, grace, and works distinct; repeated `incredulitas` then governs 11:20–32. The olive sequence is controlled by `oleaster`, repeated `inserere`, `radix`, `pinguedo`, `rami`, `bonitas`, and `severitas`; the root bears the grafted branch, never the reverse. The closing argument retains `Sine pœnitentia`, repeated mercy, and the exact threefold relation `ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso`.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 11:6 contains only the supplied grace-versus-works statement and receives no added balancing sentence. Verses 11:25–27 retain partial blindness in Israel, the fullness of the Gentiles entering, all Israel’s salvation, the one coming from Zion to deliver, the testament, and the future-perfect removal of sins. Verse 11:31 keeps the difficult belief relation `in vestram misericordiam` as “in your mercy.” Verse 11:36 ends with all things not only from and through God but also “in him,” preserving Clementine `in ipso`.

Ambiguities preserved

At 11:11, “so that they may emulate them” leaves the pronoun reference and the reciprocal force of `æmulentur` visible instead of replacing the clause with an explanatory account of jealousy. `assumptio` at 11:15 is rendered “reception,” without defining the event beyond its contrast with loss. At 11:26, “might be saved” and “the one who is to deliver” retain the subordinate moods without turning them into either doubt or an independent prediction. “Without repentance” at 11:29 preserves the exact expression and does not substitute the interpretive abstraction “irrevocable.”

Clarity decisions

The Elijah quotation and its divine answer are separately marked at 11:3–4, while the Scripture chain at 11:8–10 and the Zion-and-testament quotation at 11:26–27 continue across verse boundaries. Verses 11:17–18 remain one grafting sentence so that the wild olive’s insertion, sharing, warning, and dependence upon the root cannot exchange agents. At 11:25–27, dashes preserve Paul’s parenthetical warning against self-wisdom while commas carry the blindness, fullness, salvation, and citation sequence through three auditable verse keys.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 11:13 from qualitative “insofar as” to temporal “as long indeed as,” restored the warning at 11:21 as “beware lest perhaps,” restored adversative “But” at 11:23, removed an added possessive at 11:24, refined the relative subjunctives at 11:26, and restored future-perfect `abstulero` at 11:27. Whole-book review then corrected 11:2 from a colon to a full rhetorical question—“what Scripture says in Elijah—how he appeals to God against Israel?”—restoring `An nescitis ... ?` while leaving the quoted appeal to begin at 11:3. No correction finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`reliquiæ` is “remnant,” `electio` is “election,” `gratia` is “grace,” `opera` is “works,” `incredulitas` is “unbelief,” `delictum` is “offense,” and `misericordia` is “mercy.” `oleaster` is “wild olive,” `oliva` is “olive tree,” `radix` is “root,” `rami` are “branches,” and `pinguedo` remains the concrete “fatness.” `testamentum` is “testament,” `pœnitentia` is “repentance,” and later divine `Dominus` remains plain “Lord” because Romans’ sole covenant-name marker already occurred at 4:8.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

The appeal grounded in God’s mercy moves from bodies presented as a living sacrifice and minds transformed in newness into sober self-assessment within one body. Differing gifts receive their proper governing manner, and the chapter then compresses love, brotherly charity, diligence, hope, prayer, hospitality, blessing, shared joy and grief, humility, peace, refusal of self-defense, enemy care, and the overcoming of evil with good into one sustained communal exhortation.

Governing Latin

At 12:1–2, `corpora`, singular `hostiam viventem`, `rationabile obsequium`, `sæculum`, `reformamini`, `novitate sensus`, and `probetis` govern bodies, sacrifice, rational service, this age, transformation, newness of mind, and testing. The gifts retain the sequence `prophetiam`, `ministerium`, `doctrina`, `exhortando`, `tribuit`, `præst`, and `miseretur`, together with proportion, ministering, teaching, exhortation, simplicity, diligence, and cheerfulness. Verses 12:9–21 preserve the source’s participles, terse imperatives, repeated blessing, wrath, vengeance, enemy care, coals, and paired overcoming.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text says “this age” for `huic sæculo`, “transformed in the newness of your mind” for `reformamini in novitate sensus`, and “your rational service” for `rationabile obsequium`; none is replaced with a reader-text explanation. Romans 12:17 retains good provided not only before all men but first “before God.” Verse 12:19 retains the explicit prohibition against defending oneself, followed by place for wrath and the Lord’s declaration of vengeance and repayment. Verse 12:20 retains both hunger and thirst, food and drink, and the coals of fire upon the enemy’s head.

Ambiguities preserved

Lowercase “spirit” at 12:11 leaves `spiritu` open rather than silently identifying a referent. At 12:16, substantive `humilibus` can point to lowly people or lowly things; “the lowly” preserves that openness. The wrath given place at 12:19 is not assigned an explanatory human or divine possessor in reader text, and the coals at 12:20 remain an uninterpreted concrete image. “Proportion of faith” at 12:6 does not decide whether the measure belongs principally to the gift, its exercise, or the recipient.

Clarity decisions

The long appeal at 12:1–2 is divided into two lucid English sentences without detaching bodily sacrifice from rational service or transformation from testing God's will. The participial gift opening at 12:6 is made finite as "we have gifts" so the English can govern the three-verse list without inventing a command to use them. Semicolons retain the compressed movement through 12:9–13, while the infinitival exhortation at 12:15 is expressed as direct English imperatives. The vengeance declaration is quoted, but Paul's enemy-care command remains outside that quotation.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review restored adversative `autem` at 12:6 as "But" and changed the initial fragment "having gifts" to the proposition-neutral finite wording "we have gifts," preventing the list at 12:6–8 from becoming grammatically stranded. The audit kept `dilectio` and `caritas` distinct as love and charity, retained "defend yourselves" for `vosmetipsos defendentes`, and left `humilibus` unresolved as "the lowly." Every verse, command, participial sequence, and adjacent boundary was rechecked; no self-audit finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`corpus` is "body," `membra` are "members," `hostia` is "sacrifice," `obsequium` is "service," `sensus` is "mind," and `fides` is "faith." Contextual `donationes` is "gifts"; `ministerium` is "ministry," `doctrina` is "teaching" in the gift list, and `exhortatio` is "exhortation." `dilectio` is "love," while `caritas fraternitatis` is "brotherly charity," keeping the two Latin nouns accountable. `vindicta` is "vengeance," `retribuere` is "repay," and `caro` remains "flesh."

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Every soul is placed under the higher authorities, whose ordering, sword, wrath, and tax service are related to God; resistance, conscience, and each repeated due remain explicit. Paul then leaves no debt except mutual love, gathers the commandments—including the Clementine command against false testimony—into love of neighbor, and turns to the urgent hour: sleep gives way to nearer salvation, the passing night to the approaching day, works of darkness to weapons of light, and fleshly desires to putting on the Lord Jesus Christ.

Governing Latin

The authority section repeats `potestas` and its ordered form `ordinatæ`, then names `principes`, God's `minister`, the carried `gladium`, the `vindex`, wrath, conscience, `tributa`, and `vectigal`. Romans 13:7 repeats each object after `Reddite ... debita`, so tribute, toll, fear, and honor all recur rather than being compressed into a summary. At 13:8–10, `diligere`, `mandatum`, `verbum`, and `dilectio` join love and law. The final sequence keeps `somno`, `salus`, night, day, works, `arma`, beds, shameless acts, contention, emulation, `Dominum Jesum Christum`, flesh, and desires.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 13:1 begins "Let every soul be subject," retaining `Omnis anima` rather than replacing soul with a collective abstraction. Verse 13:9 retains all five supplied commands, including `non falsum testimonium dices`, "you shall not bear false witness." Verse 13:12 calls the things put on `arma lucis`, "weapons of light," not a softened abstraction. Verse 13:13 keeps the concrete "beds" in its vice sequence, and 13:14 retains care of the flesh specifically "in desires" without expanding the clause into a general rule about bodily needs.

Ambiguities preserved

The singular authority in 13:3–4 moves between institutional `potestas` and the ruler who is God's masculine `minister`; "the ruler" makes the sword-bearing agent grammatical without defining a particular government. `instauratur` at 13:9 is rendered "is gathered together," conveying the commandments' convergence without claiming that the other commands disappear. The negative purpose of 13:14 is kept as "take no care of the flesh in desires," leaving the bare plural desires unattached to an added possessive. The morally negative force of `æmulatio` at 13:13 remains visible as "emulation" rather than being silently changed to a different vice noun.

Clarity decisions

Verses 13:2–4 remain one flowing argument by ending 13:2 and 13:3 with commas; rulers' terror, the authority's praise, God's minister, the sword, and avenging wrath therefore retain their sequence. The elliptical dues at 13:7 are intentionally repeated in English exactly as tribute/tribute, toll/toll, fear/fear, and honor/honor. Quotation marks distinguish the command list and the neighbor command at 13:9. The semicolon at 13:13 leaves the vice list open for the contrasting command to put on the Lord Jesus Christ at 13:14.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review restored adversative "But" for `autem` at 13:2–3 and 13:12, preventing resistance from being merely additive and preserving night/day contrast. It changed 13:6 from generic "taxes" to "tribute" so `tributa` recurs in 13:7 and remains distinct from `vectigal`, "toll"; it then restored all four repeated dues. At 13:13, "rivalry" became "emulation" to preserve the `æmulatio` family visible in chapter 11. At 13:14 an added possessive was removed from desires so the Latin relation remains open. No self-audit finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`anima` is "soul," `potestas` is "authority," `ordinatio` is "ordering," `princeps` is "ruler," `minister` is "minister," `gladius` is "sword," `vindex` is "avenger," and `damnatio` is "condemnation." `tributum` is "tribute" and `vectigal` is "toll," preserving the fiscal distinction. `conscientia` is "conscience," `mandatum` is "commandment," `lex` is "law," `dilectio` is "love," `arma` are "weapons," and `caro` is "flesh." Every `Dominus` in this chapter is plain "Lord."

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Paul receives the one weak in faith without inviting disputes, then holds eater and non-eater, differing judgments about days, thanksgiving, life, and death before the Lord to whom each belongs. Christ's dominion over dead and living leads directly to the judgment seat of Christ and each person's account to God. The argument then turns from judging a brother to refusing stumbling blocks: common and clean remain distinct, charity restrains food, God's kingdom is justice, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit, and doubtful eating ends in the uncompromised conclusion that everything not from faith is sin.

Governing Latin

The chapter's movement depends on repeated `manducat` and `non manducat`, `judicat`, `Domino`, thanksgiving, living, dying, and belonging. At 14:9–12, `dominetur`, `tribunal Christi`, bent knee, confessing tongue, and `rationem reddet Deo` retain dominion, Christ's judgment seat, and personal account. Verses 14:13–21 distinguish `offendiculum`, `scandalum`, `commune`, food, `caritas`, `justitia`, edification, `munda`, flesh, wine, and weakening. The closing `discernit`, `damnatus`, repeated `ex fide`, and `peccatum` govern doubt, condemnation, faith, and sin.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 14:10 says that all will stand before `tribunal Christi`, the judgment seat of Christ. Verse 14:14 retains `nihil commune per ipsum` as "nothing is common through itself," without replacing common with a generic moral or ritual label. Verse 14:17 names God's kingdom as justice, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit. Verse 14:21 retains flesh as food, wine, and all three effects—offense, scandal, and weakening. Verse 14:23 retains both condemnation from doubtful eating and the complete conclusion, "everything that is not from faith is sin."

Ambiguities preserved

"Common" at 14:14 is intentionally not glossed as unclean or profane, and "through itself" leaves the difficult force of `per ipsum` visible. At 14:5, "abound in his own mind" preserves unusual `in suo sensu abundet` rather than importing a stronger certainty formula. `discernit` at 14:23 is contextually "doubts," but the editorial record retains its underlying sense of making a distinction. At 14:21, "anything in which" does not decide whether the three passive effects arise from food, wine, another practice, or the broader situation.

Clarity decisions

The day clause at 14:6 supplies only the English object “it,” leaving observance directed to the Lord and not adding the absent non-observer clause. Verses 14:7–9 repeat live/die and Lord rather than varying vocabulary. The Scripture declaration at 14:11 is quoted as an oath while keeping knee, tongue, Lord, and God explicit. Verse 14:14 retains its doubled recipient—what is common to the one who considers it common is common to that person—and 14:21 supplies minimal “anything” to make the elliptical `neque in quo` grammatical.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review restored the second adversative at 14:23, changing “And everything” to “But everything” for `Omne autem`; this keeps Paul’s universal conclusion distinct from the individual doubtful eater while preserving their logical connection. The review also tested “common” against every `commune` in the verse and “clean” against `munda` at 14:20, rejecting any collapse of the two terms. Food, flesh, wine, offense, scandal, weakening, faith, and condemnation were rechecked as one sequence. No self-audit finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`servus` is “servant” and its human `dominus` is lowercase “lord”; divine `Dominus` is plain “Lord.” `tribunal` is “judgment seat,” `judicare` is “judge,” `ratio` in the account phrase is “account,” `commune` is “common,” and `munda` is “clean.” `caritas` is “charity,” `justitia` is “justice,” `Spiritus Sanctus` is “Holy Spirit,” `ædificatio` is “edification,” `offendiculum` is “stumbling block,” `scandalum` is “scandal,” `fides` is “faith,” and `peccatum` is “sin.”

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

The stronger are called to bear the weak as Christ did not please himself. What was written supplies doctrine, patience, consolation, and hope; the God of patience and comfort draws the community toward one mind and one mouth. Christ’s ministry of circumcision confirms the fathers’ promises while the Gentiles honor God for mercy through a fourfold Scripture witness. Paul then describes his own ministry among the Gentiles, the Gospel, the offering, signs and wonders, the Holy Spirit, and his circuit to Illyricum before turning to Spain, Jerusalem’s poor saints, mutual spiritual and carnal debt, prayer, deliverance, refreshment, and peace.

Governing Latin

Romans 15:4–7 is governed by `doctrinam`, `patientiam`, `consolationem Scripturarum`, `spem`, `idipsum sapere`, `unanimes`, `uno ore`, and repeated reception. Verses 15:8–12 preserve `ministrum ... circumcisionis`, God’s truth, the fathers’ promises, Gentile mercy, every quotation introduction, and every Gentile, people, peoples, root, Jesse, ruling, and hope clause. Paul’s ministry retains `sanctificans Evangelium Dei`, `oblatio gentium`, `verbo et factis`, two occurrences of `virtute`, Jerusalem, the circuit, Illyricum, Spain twice, ministry to saints, and spiritual/carnal things.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 15:16 says that Paul is a minister of Christ Jesus among the Gentiles, “sanctifying the Gospel of God,” so that the offering of the Gentiles may become acceptable and sanctified in the Holy Spirit; no unsupplied office or cultic explanation enters the reader text. Verse 15:19 retains both the power of signs and wonders and the power of the Holy Spirit, with the extent from Jerusalem to Illyricum. Verses 15:24 and 15:28 name Spain explicitly and retain passing through, being conducted there by the Romans, conditional partial enjoyment of them, and later travel through them.

Ambiguities preserved

“The preaching of Jesus Christ” later at 16:25 confirms that a Jesus-Christ genitive need not be resolved as preaching by or about him; chapter 15 likewise avoids explanatory genitives around the Gospel. At 15:16, “offering of the Gentiles” leaves the genitive’s exact force open while the offering remains acceptable and sanctified. `repleverim Evangelium Christi` at 15:19 is restructured as filling the circuit with the Gospel, without adding a theory of what “full” preaching entails. “This fruit” at 15:28 remains Paul’s concrete name for the contribution, and its `assignavero` is simply delivered, not ceremonially explained.

Clarity decisions

Verses 15:5–6 stay one purpose construction from God’s gift of shared mind to one-minded, one-mouthed honor of the God and Father of Jesus Christ. Verses 15:8–9 remain one report governed by “I say,” with Christ’s ministry contrasted by the Gentiles’ honor before the first quotation. Verses 15:18–19 remain one sentence so Christ’s action through Paul is linked to word, deeds, both powers, and geographic extent. The desire and Spain sentence continues from 15:23 into 15:24, and the prayer begun at 15:30 continues through both purposes at 15:31–32.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review distinguished `consolationem` at 15:4 as “consolation” from `solatii` at 15:5 as “comfort”; changed 15:6 from potentially two-object “God and the Father” to “the God and Father”; and restored adversative `autem` at 15:9, 15:13, 15:20, 15:29, and 15:33. It changed 15:17 from “before God” to source-visible “toward God,” restored conditional “if” at 15:24 for `si`, and restored `aliquam` as “some” contribution at 15:26. Every correction and adjacent boundary was rechecked; no self-audit finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`firmiores` are “stronger,” `imbecillitates` are “weaknesses,” `doctrina` is “doctrine,” `patientia` is “patience,” `consolatio` is “consolation,” and distinct `solatium` is “comfort.” `minister` and `ministrare` remain “minister,” `Evangelium` is “Gospel,” `prædicare` is “preach,” `oblatio` is “offering,” `virtus` is “power,” `Spiritus Sanctus` is “Holy Spirit,” `dilectio` is “love,” and `caritas` is “charity.” `Hispania` is “Spain,” `Illyricum` is “Illyricum,” and `carnalia` remains “carnal things.”

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Paul first commends Phoebe as sister, names her ministry in the Cenchreaean church, and asks for worthy reception and assistance grounded in her assistance to many and to him. A long network of greetings then preserves helpers, necks endangered for Paul’s soul, household churches, labor, kinship, imprisonment, apostolic distinction, mothers, brothers, saints, and the holy kiss. Warning against divisions gives way to the God of peace crushing Satan, further greetings, the Clementine grace verse, and a three-verse doxology joining Paul’s Gospel, Jesus Christ’s preaching, the revealed mystery, prophetic Scriptures, all nations, obedience of faith, and eternal honor and glory.

Governing Latin

Phoebe’s description is controlled by `sororem nostram`, `in ministerio ecclesiæ`, `suscipiatis`, `assistatis`, and repeated `astitit`; the English neither promotes `ministerium` into an office title nor loses her active help. The greeting list preserves every `Salutate`, exact personal and household grouping, `adjutores`, `anima`, necks, `cognatos`, `concaptivos`, `nobiles in Apostolis`, labor, election, brothers, saints, and churches. The closing doxology remains governed across 16:25–27 by `confirmare`, Gospel, preaching, revelation, the mystery silent in eternal times, prophetic Scriptures, eternal God’s command, obedience of faith, all nations, and the only wise God.

Vulgate-specific readings

Romans 16:1 says only that Phoebe “is in the ministry of the church” in Cenchreae; no office noun absent from the frozen Latin is imported. Verse 16:7 renders accusative `Juniam` with defensible nominative “Junia,” retains the pair as relatives and fellow prisoners, and translates exact `nobiles in Apostolis` as “distinguished among the Apostles.” Verse 16:20 keeps the God of peace crushing Satan under the readers’ feet swiftly. Verse 16:24 remains ordinary canonical grace text, and 16:25–27 retains every Clementine doxological proposition across all three keys.

Ambiguities preserved

The accusative form `Juniam` permits the nominative Junia and also leaves a live Junia/Junias morphological question; “Junia” is chosen as a defensible nominative, but plural `cognatos` is not used to infer the person’s gender. “Distinguished among the Apostles” preserves `nobiles in Apostolis` without deciding in editorial prose whether the phrase emphasizes membership, reputation, or both. At 16:25, “the preaching of Jesus Christ” leaves the genitive open. At 16:27, English keeps “through Jesus Christ, to whom” in the Latin sequence rather than replacing the relative with a newly named antecedent.

Clarity decisions

Verses 16:1–2 remain one commendation-and-purpose sentence, with “in a manner worthy of the saints” making adverbial `digne sanctis` lucid. The greeting to Prisca and Aquila continues through 16:3–5: dashes hold the relative account of their endangered necks and the churches’ thanks without severing the household church from the verb “Greet.” Household phrases at 16:11 are repeated so only the specified members of Narcissus’s household are said to be in the Lord. An em dash at 16:26 carries the doxology through its parenthetical manifestation clause into the delayed recipient at 16:27.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 16:19 from potentially textual “published in every place” to “spread abroad into every place,” restored adversative `autem` as “But to him” at 16:25, and changed 16:26 from “all the Gentiles” to “all nations,” matching `in cunctis gentibus` and Romans 1:5. Independent review corrected 16:23 so nominative `universa ecclesia` is a greeting subject with Gaius, not an invented second object of “host”; Erastus and Quartus likewise remain the two greeting subjects of the next clause. Phoebe receives no imported office, and “Junia” retains its explicit morphological ambiguity record. No correction finding remains open.

Canonical terminology

`ministerium` is “ministry,” `assistere` is “assist,” `adjutor` is “helper,” `cognatus` is “relative,” `concaptivus` is “fellow prisoner,” and `Apostoli` are “Apostles.” `anima` remains “soul,” `ecclesia` is “church,” `doctrina` is “doctrine,” `obedientia` is “obedience,” and `Evangelium` is “Gospel.” Names are Phoebe, Cenchreae, Prisca, Aquila, Epaenetus, Andronicus, Junia, Ampliatus, Urbanus, Stachys, Apelles, Aristobulus, Herodion, Narcissus, Tryphaena, Tryphosa, Persis, Rufus, Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, Philologus, Julia, Nereus, Olympias, Timothy, Lucius, Jason, Sosipater, Tertius, Gaius, Erastus, and Quartus.

1 Corinthians — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter moves as one continuous address from Paul's calling and the church's sanctification through thanksgiving for grace, word, and knowledge; it then confronts factional speech and turns to the cross, where God's foolish and weak things overturn the world's wisdom, strength, and boasting.

Governing Latin

The English follows vocatus, sanctificatis, vocatis, gratia, verbum, scientia, testimonium, revelatio, societas, schismata, contentiones, sensus, sententia, sapientia, stultitia, praedicatio, and virtus. Repeated forms of vocare, gloriari, eligere, and confundere remain visible, as do the neuter plurals for the foolish, weak, ignoble, contemptible, nonexistent, and existent things.

Vulgate-specific readings

The salutation retains 'in every place, theirs and ours'; 1:17 keeps evangelizare and the purpose that the cross not be emptied; 1:18 retains those 'being saved'; and 1:30 preserves Christ made for us wisdom, justice, sanctification, and redemption. At 1:31 'Lord (YHWH)' is the book's one editorial covenant-name marker; the parenthetical is not literal Latin.

Ambiguities preserved

The compact ipsorum et nostro remains 'theirs and ours' without assigning ownership more narrowly. 'Wisdom of word' leaves sapientia verbi concrete, while 'the foolishness of God' and 'the weakness of God' preserve the genitive without adding 'apparent,' 'seeming,' or an explanatory doctrine.

Clarity decisions

Verses 1:1-9 retain the long salutation and thanksgiving through commas, colons, and dependent openings without merging keys. The four factional claims use the same 'I am of' construction, while 1:22-24 carries the Jews/Greeks contrast across separately numbered lines.

Corrections and reasons

During self-review, 'gift' at 1:7 was corrected to 'grace' because the source is gratia; 'blameless' at 1:8 was narrowed to 'without accusation' for sine crimine; and 1:10 was revised to distinguish sensus as 'mind' from sententia as 'opinion' rather than flattening both mental terms or collapsing sententia into judicial judicium.

Canonical terminology

Deus is 'God'; gratia is 'grace'; verbum is 'word'; scientia is 'knowledge'; sensus is 'mind'; sententia is 'opinion'; sapientia is 'wisdom'; stultitia is 'foolishness'; praedicatio is 'preaching'; virtus is 'power'; justitia is 'justice'; and schismata is 'schisms.' Direct titles of Jesus before 1:31 are plain 'Lord'; the exact marker 'Lord (YHWH)' occurs only at 1:31.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Paul passes from his weak and trembling arrival, Christ crucified, and a demonstration of spirit and power to God's hidden wisdom predestined before the ages. The chapter then traces revelation through God's Spirit and contrasts the animal human being with the spiritual one, ending with the one mind named as the mind of the Lord and of Christ.

Governing Latin

Testimonium Christi governs 2:1, while sermo, praedicatio, spiritus, virtus, sapientia, mysterium, praedestinavit, revelavit, scrutatur, profunda, animalis, spiritualis, judicat, and sensus govern the argument. The repeated sensus in the final verse is rendered 'mind' in both clauses.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 2:1 reads 'the testimony of Christ,' directly representing the frozen Clementine testimonium Christi and importing no alternative reading. Verse 2:7 preserves wisdom 'in a mystery' and predestination before the ages for our glory; 2:8 retains 'Lord of glory' as Christ's title with no YHWH parenthetical.

Ambiguities preserved

At 2:13 spiritualibus spiritualia comparantes is rendered 'comparing spiritual things with the spiritual.' The first substantive adjective remains open rather than being forced into spiritual persons, words, or a fully adverbial sense, and comparantes remains comparison rather than an interpretive expansion. Animalis is retained with the concrete 'animal' link rather than silently merged with spiritualis; the singular examinatur is not silently pluralized.

Clarity decisions

The quotation begun at 2:9 stays syntactically open with an em dash, and 2:10 supplies its governing revelation without duplicating the object. The human-spirit/God's-Spirit analogy in 2:11 is recast into grammatical contemporary English while retaining each exclusive except-clause and the Spirit's agency.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review restored 'speech' for sermo and 'preaching' for praedicatio at 2:4 so two Latin terms were not collapsed. It also changed a fully interpretive rendering of 2:13 to the broader 'with the spiritual,' restored 'doctrine' for doctrina, and retained 'animal person' at 2:14 so animalis and singular examinatur were not concealed behind a doctrinal paraphrase.

Canonical terminology

Sermo is 'speech,' praedicatio is 'preaching,' doctrina is 'doctrine,' virtus is 'power,' mysterium is 'mystery,' profunda is 'depths,' animalis is 'animal,' spiritualis is 'spiritual,' and sensus is 'mind.' Spirit is capitalized where the clause identifies God's Spirit; the 2:4 phrase remains the source's broader 'spirit and power.'

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from infancy, milk, jealousy, and factional humanity into ministry under God: Paul plants, Apollo waters, and God gives increase. Cultivation becomes building, work passes through fire, the community is named God's holy temple, and all human boasting is closed by the sequence all things are yours, you are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

Governing Latin

Carnalis, parvuli, lac, esca, zelus, contentio, ministri, incrementum, adjutores, agricultura, aedificatio, architectus, fundamentum, superaedificare, opus, ignis, templum, violare, disperdere, sapientia, and stultitia retain their concrete force and repetition.

Vulgate-specific readings

The answer ministri ejus, cui credidistis in 3:5 remains governed by the unfinished questions in 3:4. Verse 3:13 names 'the day of the Lord' and its revelation in fire; 3:15 preserves both loss and personal salvation qualified 'as through fire.' Verses 3:16-17 retain the plural community as God's singular temple, ending with the source's 'which you are.'

Ambiguities preserved

The ministers are left as 'ministers of him whom you believed' without replacing the Clementine singular relative with a different source tradition. In 3:13 the repeated 'it' does not force revelabitur to name either the day or the work more explicitly than the Latin does; the fire is not defined doctrinally, and 'as through fire' retains quasi rather than claiming identity.

Clarity decisions

An em dash at the end of 3:4 carries both questions into the plural answer at 3:5, while a question mark at 3:5 closes the whole construction. In 3:13 'the quality of each one's work' makes quale sit lucid while the antecedent of revelabitur remains open, and repeated building verbs remain visibly linked.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review removed an independent sentence beginning 'They are ministers' at 3:5 because it severed Quid igitur... quid vero...? from ministri. It also restored 'God's cultivation' for agricultura, 'architect' for architectus, and the distinct verbs 'violates' and 'destroy' for violaverit and disperdet.

Canonical terminology

Carnalis is 'fleshly,' ministri is 'ministers,' incrementum is 'increase,' adjutores is 'fellow workers,' agricultura is 'cultivation,' aedificatio is 'building,' architectus is 'architect,' fundamentum is 'foundation,' templum is 'temple,' and gloria/gloriari language remains 'glory.'

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Paul reframes apostles as ministers and dispensers accountable for fidelity, places every premature judgment under the coming Lord, and turns Corinthian pride against apostolic abasement. The movement proceeds from irony and public spectacle through hunger, blows, hand labor, blessing under abuse, and the world's refuse, then returns to paternal admonition, imitation, Timothy, and a choice between rod or charity and gentleness.

Governing Latin

Ministri, dispensatores, mysteria, fidelis, judicare, humanus dies, conscius, justificatus, illuminare, consilia cordium, transfiguravi, inflari, spectaculum, colaphis caedi, laborare, maledici, benedicere, purgamenta, peripsema, paedagogi, genui, sermo, virtus, virga, caritas, and mansuetudo govern the vocabulary and tone.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 4:3 keeps Paul's strange 'human day' instead of normalizing it to a human court. Verse 4:6 retains transfiguravi as 'transfigured' and the limit 'not beyond what is written.' Verse 4:16 includes the supplied Clementine clause 'as I also am of Christ,' and 4:20 distinguishes speech from power.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact institutional shape of dispensatores is not overdefined beyond 'dispensers.' Humanus dies remains open as Paul's compressed name for human assessment, and transfiguravi is not reduced to one explanatory paraphrase. Peripsema remains the distinct and forceful 'scum' beside purgamenta as 'refuse.'

Clarity decisions

The judgment sequence at 4:3-5 preserves conscience, justification, the Lord's judgment, his coming, illumination, disclosure, and praise in their source order. Parallel semicolons keep Paul's irony and the deprivation/response pairs audible without weakening their present force.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review replaced generic 'servants' with 'ministers' and 'stewards' with 'dispensers' to keep ministri and dispensatores distinct. It restored 'human day,' 'transfigured,' 'pedagogues,' and the two concrete refuse images after smoother paraphrases were found to hide the Clementine wording.

Canonical terminology

Ministri is 'ministers,' dispensatores is 'dispensers,' sermo is 'speech,' virtus is 'power,' caritas is 'charity,' virga is 'rod,' mansuetudo is 'gentleness,' purgamenta is 'refuse,' and peripsema is 'scum.' These terms remain distinct in later chapters.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter begins with publicly reported fornication and the church's failure to mourn, then carries Paul's bodily absence and spiritual presence into assembly, judgment, and delivery to Satan. Discipline becomes Paschal imagery: old leaven is purged for a new unleavened batch and a feast of sincerity and truth, before Paul distinguishes the world's offenders from one called a brother and closes with inside/outside judgment.

Governing Latin

Fornicatio, uxor patris, inflati, luctus, tollatur, corpus, spiritus, congregatis, virtus, tradere, Satanas, interitus carnis, salvus, fermentum, massa, conspersio, azymi, Pascha, immolatus, epulari, sinceritas, veritas, commisceri, avarus, rapax, idolis serviens, maledicus, ebriosus, and judicare keep their sequence and force.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 5:1 states fornication and a man having his father's wife without euphemism. Verses 5:3-5 retain delivery to Satan for destruction of the flesh so that the spirit may be saved on the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. Verse 5:7 reads 'Christ our Pasch has been sacrificed,' and 5:13 commands, 'Remove the evil from among yourselves.'

Ambiguities preserved

The text does not explain interitus carnis beyond 'destruction of the flesh,' identify spiritus in 5:5 more narrowly than the grammar does, or supply a doctrine of how the stated discipline effects salvation. The relation between Paul's present spirit, the assembled church, and the Lord's power is kept in the long construction rather than redistributed among new agents.

Clarity decisions

Verses 5:3-5 form one sentence: the colon after Paul's judgment, the dependent assembly phrase, and the infinitive 'to deliver' preserve the cross-verse government while every key remains separate. The broken qualification at 5:9-10 is carried by an em dash so 'not, certainly' cannot be mistaken for a new prohibition.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 'immorality' back to 'fornication' for fornicatio, restored 'destruction of the flesh' for interitum carnis, and replaced generic 'community' language with the explicit assembled 'you and my spirit.' It also used 'batch' for both massa/conspersio contextually so the old-leaven/new-batch image remains coherent.

Canonical terminology

Fornicatio is 'fornication,' fermentum is 'leaven,' massa and conspersio are contextually 'batch,' azymi is 'unleavened bread' or 'unleavened,' Pascha is 'Pasch,' sinceritas is 'sincerity,' veritas is 'truth,' avarus is 'covetous,' maledicus is 'reviler,' and rapax is 'robber.'

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Paul rebukes lawsuits before the unjust by invoking the saints' judgment of world and angels, exposes mutual injury and fraud, and lists those who will not possess God's kingdom before recalling the Corinthians' washing, sanctification, and justification. The chapter then tests lawfulness against expedience and authority, joins body reciprocally to the Lord, rejects joining Christ's members to a prostitute, and culminates in the Spirit's temple, the great purchase price, and the command to glorify and bear God in the body.

Governing Latin

Negotium, judicari, iniqui, sancti, saecularia, judicia, injuria, fraus, possidere, fornicarii, idolis servientes, adulteri, molles, masculorum concubitores, fures, avari, ebriosi, maledici, rapaces, abluti, sanctificati, justificati, licent, expediunt, potestas, corpus, membra, meretrix, adhaerere, templum, pretium, glorificate, and portate remain concrete and differentiated.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verses 6:9-10 do not collapse molles and masculorum concubitores: they appear separately as 'the effeminate' and 'men who lie with males.' Verse 6:11 retains all three passive acts and both 'in' relations. Verse 6:19 names the members, plural, as the Holy Spirit's temple, singular. The Clementine 6:20 command is preserved as 'Glorify and bear God in your body.'

Ambiguities preserved

The lexical range of molles is represented by the direct substantival 'the effeminate' without merging it into the separate male-bed relation; neither term is expanded into a modern umbrella category. Sub nullius... potestate remains personal and compressed as 'under the authority of no one,' and portate remains the bodily 'bear' without explaining its manner.

Clarity decisions

The courtroom questions retain Paul's escalating rhetoric and the world/angels/secular-matters sequence. Food and belly are repeated in 6:13 rather than hidden behind pronouns, preserving what God destroys; the reciprocal body/Lord clauses then stand in the same order as the Latin. 'Far be it!' gives Absit its own force without inserting a divine name.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review separated 'the effeminate' from 'men who lie with males' after a collective rendering was rejected for erasing molles versus masculorum concubitores. It restored repeated 'but' before washed, sanctified, and justified; changed generic 'control' to 'authority' for potestas; retained members rather than substituting body at 6:19; and corrected 'honor God' to 'glorify and bear God' for Glorificate, et portate Deum.

Canonical terminology

Iniqui is 'the unjust,' sancti is 'saints,' saecularia is 'secular matters,' injuria is 'injury,' fraus is 'fraud,' molles is 'the effeminate,' masculorum concubitores is 'men who lie with males,' fures is 'thieves,' avari is 'the covetous,' ebriosi is 'drunkards,' maledici is 'revilers,' rapaces is 'robbers,' potestas is 'authority,' corpus is 'body,' membra is 'members,' and portare is 'bear.'

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Paul moves from the Corinthians’ written questions through mutual obligations in marriage, continence and gift, mixed-faith households, peace and one’s calling, and then counsel concerning virgins, the present necessity, worldly anxiety, and a widow’s freedom in the Lord. The movement repeatedly balances command with counsel and freedom with faithful continuance before God.

Governing Latin

The English follows debitum reddat and the reciprocal potestatem non habet in 7:3–4; the exact speaker distinctions præcipio non ego, sed Dominus and ego dico, non Dominus in 7:10,12; servus, liber, libertus, and pretio empti in 7:21–23; the chained ut and tamquam clauses in 7:29–31; and the Clementine sequence quomodo placeat uxori, et divisus est in 7:33. In 7:36–38, virgine sua, potestatem ... suæ voluntatis, servare virginem suam, and matrimonio jungit govern the deliberately compressed English.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text retains the concrete foreskin in 7:18–19, the servitude language in 7:15 and 7:21–23, the passing figure of this world in 7:31, and the Clementine placement of ‘and he is divided’ at the end of 7:33. It neither transfers that clause to the woman in 7:34 nor recasts 7:36–38 into a settled modern relationship category.

Ambiguities preserved

At 7:21 magis utere has no expressed object; ‘use it rather’ keeps the referent open instead of deciding whether the compact counsel points to freedom, opportunity, or the called condition. In 7:25 ‘to be faithful’ preserves the scope of ut sim fidelis. In 7:26 ‘this’ and ‘so’ retain hoc and sic. ‘His virgin’ in 7:36–38 keeps virgine sua without naming a fiancé, daughter, ward, or other relation; the editorial record acknowledges that nubat is also compact even though lucid English supplies ‘she’ in 7:36.

Clarity decisions

Spousal nouns render vir and mulier as husband and wife where the reciprocal marital relation is explicit, while direct vocatives remain woman and man in 7:16. ‘Devote yourselves to prayer’ clarifies vacetis orationi without adding a practice, while ‘return again to the same’ preserves in idipsum. The coordinated subjects of 7:34 take normal English agreement without moving et divisus est from 7:33. The long 7:29–31 construction remains visibly continuous through semicolons and repeated ‘and.’

Corrections and reasons

Review changed 7:3 from the abstract ‘what is due’ to ‘the debt’ so debitum remains concrete; restored ‘For’ at 7:12 so Nam retains its logical force; and corrected 7:37 from a wording that could misread statuit as ‘stands.’ ‘Has determined firmly’ now accounts for both statuit and firmus while retaining necessity, authority over his will, the judgment in his heart, and preservation of his virgin.

Canonical terminology

Potestas is authority; donum is gift; vocatio and vocatus remain calling and called; servus is slave where civil status is foregrounded, libertus is freedman, and servus Christi is Christ’s servant. Tribulatio carnis is tribulation of the flesh, figura is figure, and every divine Dominus is plain Lord because the book’s sole covenant-name parenthetical lies earlier at 1:31.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

Paul begins with knowledge about idol offerings, subordinates knowledge to charity, confesses one God and one Lord, and then turns from abstract knowledge to the weak conscience of a brother for whom Christ died. The chapter ends with Paul’s absolute refusal of meat if his eating scandalizes that brother.

Governing Latin

Scientia inflat, caritas vero ædificat supplies the knowledge, charity, and building contrast. The directional ex quo, in illum, and per quem in 8:6 remain from, unto, and through. Conscientia recurs through 8:7,10,12; ædificabitur is kept as the pointed ‘be built up’ in 8:10; and peribit ... frater preserves the weak brother’s peril in 8:11.

Vulgate-specific readings

The text retains charity for caritas rather than replacing it with a generic love term, and it preserves ‘unto whom we are’ for nos in illum alongside the two through clauses of 8:6. It keeps an idol as nothing in the world, the idol-temple setting of in idolio, the weak conscience being built up toward idol food, and the brother perishing through another’s knowledge.

Ambiguities preserved

‘A woman, a sister’ belongs to the next chapter, so no relational gloss is imported here; within chapter 8, ‘a conscience of the idol’ leaves the compact conscientia … idoli relation intact rather than turning it into an invented belief statement. The apposition ‘the weak one—a brother’ in 8:11 keeps frater attached to the person in danger without inventing a motive or outcome.

Clarity decisions

Idolothytum and idolothyta are rendered as food or things sacrificed to idols according to number and sentence role. Collective ‘hair’ questions do not arise here; the chief restructuring is 8:6, where English supplies ‘are’ around the governing prepositions while preserving every direction. In 8:7 ‘still’ carries usque nunc, and ‘reclining in an idol’s temple’ makes the concrete scene of in idolio recumbentem immediately visible.

Corrections and reasons

Review corrected an objectless English construction at 8:7 to ‘eat it as an idol offering,’ making quasi idolothytum grammatical without inventing what the conscience believes. It specifically rejected smoothing ‘built up’ in 8:10 into a different moral verb, because ædificabitur intentionally echoes charity’s building in 8:1, and retained ‘scandalizes’ in 8:13 to keep the recurring scandal vocabulary visible.

Canonical terminology

Scientia is knowledge, caritas is charity, diligere is the contextual verb love, conscientia is conscience, ædificare is build up, licentia is liberty, offendiculum is stumbling block, and scandalizare is scandalize. Deus is God, and Dominus Jesus Christus is Lord Jesus Christ without a YHWH parenthetical in this lane.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Paul defends his apostolic freedom and authority through a sequence of questions, examples from soldiering, farming, herding, Moses’ law, and sanctuary service, yet insists that he has not used that authority. Necessity drives his preaching; freedom becomes service to all; and the chapter closes with the runner, fighter, chastised body, and danger of becoming reprobate.

Governing Latin

The repeated non sum and numquid … potestatem questions govern 9:1–6. Mulierem sororem circumducendi is kept compact in 9:5. Seminavimus spiritualia and carnalia … metamus preserve sowing and reaping in 9:11; potestas recurs through 9:4,5,6,12,18; liber and servum frame 9:19; the repeated factus sum and lucrifacerem carry 9:20–22; and castigo corpus meum, et in servitutem redigo governs the bodily close.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 9:5 the English says ‘a woman, a sister,’ not an imported wife or settled companion formula. At 9:9 it retains binding the mouth of the threshing ox rather than substituting an unexpressed noun. The text keeps dispensation in 9:17, abuse of authority in 9:18, the source’s claim ‘that I might save all’ in 9:22, the stadium and prize in 9:24, and reprobate in 9:27.

Ambiguities preserved

The appositional relation of mulierem sororem is not expanded beyond ‘a woman, a sister,’ and circumducendi is rendered neutrally as taking along. In 9:6 ‘do this’ retains the compact hoc operandi without importing a clause about secular labor or abstaining from it. In 9:18 ‘abuse’ follows abutar while the surrounding unused-authority argument remains visible, avoiding an explanatory theory of what the abuse would be.

Clarity decisions

Questions remain questions and preserve Paul's mounting defense. 'At his own expense' clarifies suis stipendiis in the soldier analogy; sanctuary and altar clauses stay distinct in 9:13. The elliptical second half of 9:10 remains linked to 'ought' by punctuation. The long adaptations in 9:20–21 continue across the verse boundary without a duplicated governing verb, and 9:26 uses paired colon clauses to express both repeated sic phrases lucidly.

Corrections and reasons

Literary review moved the datives forward in 9:20 and 9:22—'to the Jews' and 'to the weak'—so the factus sum clauses read naturally without changing their roles. It also revised the stiff 9:26 'not as toward uncertainty' construction to 'this is how I run: not toward uncertainty,' preserving in incertum while restoring clear parallelism with the fight and the beaten air. No source proposition, image, or agency changed.

Canonical terminology

Potestas is authority, liber is free, servus is servant, spiritualia and carnalia are spiritual things and carnal things, dispensatio is dispensation, merces is reward, Evangelium is Gospel, corona is crown, corpus is body, servitus is servitude, and reprobus is reprobate. All divine titles use plain Lord.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Israel's repeated 'all' privileges in cloud, sea, food, and drink lead into the devastating contrast that God was not pleased with most. Their lust, idolatry, fornication, tempting of Christ, and murmuring become correction for those at the ends of the ages. Paul then commands flight from idol worship, reasons from the cup, bread, body, altar, and rival tables, and closes with conscience, another's good, God's glory, and the salvation of the many.

Governing Latin

Omnes is repeated in every clause of 10:1–4; in Moyse, in nube, et in mari fixes the baptismal prepositions; consequente eos petra and petra autem erat Christus identify the following rock. Figura governs 10:6,11; tentemus Christum fixes the object in 10:9; proventum with sustinere controls 10:13; communicatio sanguinis and participatio corporis remain distinct in 10:16; and licent, expediunt, and ædificant form the 10:22–23 test.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text says twenty-three thousand in 10:8 and explicitly 'tempt Christ' in 10:9. Proventum is retained as 'the outcome' with the stated result of endurance, not replaced by an imported clause. Verse 10:22 contains the first lawfulness sentence exactly where the frozen row places it. Verses 10:28–29 contain only the notice, refusal, notifier, conscience, distinction between consciences, and liberty question present in the source; no absent earth-and-fullness clause has been imported.

Ambiguities preserved

'A human' temptation in 10:13 retains humana without defining whether it means human in kind, measure, or occurrence; 'the outcome' retains the breadth of proventum while the purpose clause specifies endurance. 'What is another's' in 10:24 is made lucid as another's good but is not expanded into a rule. 'With gratitude' in 10:30 gives contextual force to cum gratia while preserving its verbal echo in gratias ago.

Clarity decisions

The 10:1–5 sentence remains visibly cumulative across five verse keys. Relative syntax clarifies the spiritual rock 'that followed them' without changing its agency. In 10:11 'as correction for us' gives in quos a clear antecedent. Repeated 'Nor' keeps the four prohibitions parallel. In 10:17 normal English order expresses one bread, many people, one body, and participation in the one bread without losing any quantity.

Corrections and reasons

Review replaced unidiomatic ‘Neither’ openings in 10:7–10 with the coordinate ‘Nor,’ preserving each neque and the prohibition sequence. It also revised 10:11 from a relative clause with an unclear English antecedent to ‘as correction for us, upon whom,’ so in quos unmistakably refers to the corrected people. These were clarity corrections only; all source propositions remained unchanged.

Canonical terminology

Figura is figure, spiritalis is spiritual, petra is rock, fornicari is commit fornication, cultura idolorum is worship of idols, communicatio is communion, participatio is participation, corpus is body, caro is flesh, dæmonia are demons, licere is be lawful, expedire is be expedient, ædificare is build up, conscientia is conscience, libertas is liberty, and gloria is glory. Every Dominus is plain Lord in this lane.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Imitation of Paul as he imitates Christ opens into the ordered head relations of Christ, man, woman, and God; prayer and prophecy are considered through veiling, hair, glory, creation, angels, and mutual dependence in the Lord. Paul then turns to assemblies that worsen divisions and shame the poor, transmits what he received from the Lord concerning the supper, and closes with self-proving, judgment, chastening, mutual waiting, and promised order.

Governing Latin

Caput, velato capite, imago, gloria, and the prepositions ex, propter, de, and per govern 11:3–12. Potestatem habere supra caput is rendered without an inserted noun at 11:10. Scissuras and hæreses remain distinguishable in 11:18–19. Accepi, tradidi, and tradebatur lead into tradetur in 11:23–24; novum testamentum, commemorationem, annuntiabitis, vel, reus, probet, judicium, and corpus Domini govern the supper and judgment sequence.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 11:10 says that a woman ought to have authority over her head because of the angels; it does not add ‘a sign of.’ Verse 11:24 retains ‘Take and eat’ and the future ‘this is my body, which shall be delivered for you,’ without importing ‘broken.’ Verse 11:25 reads ‘This cup is the new testament in my blood.’ Verse 11:27 preserves ‘or’ between eating the bread and drinking the cup, while guilt concerns both the Lord’s body and blood; 11:29 expressly names the Lord’s body.

Ambiguities preserved

Authority over the woman’s head in 11:10 is left as potestas, without identifying it as a sign, garment, person, or abstract privilege. ‘Head’ remains head throughout the relational and bodily wordplay. ‘No such custom’ in 11:16 does not invent which further custom Paul might have named. The elliptical ‘and likewise the cup’ in 11:25 inherits the taking from 11:23 without duplicating a governing verb across the intervening verse.

Clarity decisions

English supplies copulas in the compressed mutuality of 11:11–12 but preserves from and through. The nature question runs visibly across 11:14–15. ‘When you assemble in church’ keeps ecclesia as church without turning it into a building description. At 11:20 jam non is rendered ‘no longer.’ In 11:23–25 punctuation carries the receipt, handing over, bread, cup, sayings, and memorial across separate auditable verse keys.

Corrections and reasons

Review corrected 11:20 from ‘not now’ to ‘no longer,’ the clearer temporal force of jam non, and recast the stiff 11:21 draft as ‘goes ahead with eating his own supper,’ which preserves suam cœnam and the anticipatory force of præsumit. It rejected adding ‘sign of’ at 11:10, ‘broken’ at 11:24, ‘and’ in place of vel at 11:27, or an object after the notifier in 10:28, because none is present in the frozen Clementine rows.

Canonical terminology

Caput is head, corpus is body, sanguis is blood, velamen is veil or covering according to form, potestas is authority, ecclesia is church, hæresis is heresy, cœna is supper, testamentum is testament, commemoratio is commemoration, judicium is judgment, dijudicare is discern or judge according to object, corripere is chasten here, and Dominus is plain Lord.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Paul moves from ignorance about spiritual things and former submission to mute idols into the Spirit-given confession of Jesus as Lord, then through the Spirit/Lord/God pattern of graces, ministries, and operations. The many manifestations become one body: God places and tempers its members, excludes schism through mutual care, and orders ministries in the church before Paul points to a more excellent way.

Governing Latin

The English follows De spiritualibus broadly as "concerning spiritual things"; the parallel divisiones gratiarum, ministrationum, operationum as divisions of graces, ministries, and operations; and the repeated idem Spiritus, idem Dominus, idem Deus. Corpus, membra, potati sumus, opera tua, temperavit, schisma, and dividens singulis prout vult govern the body argument and preserve divine agency.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine wording remains visible in 12:21 as "I have no need of your works" for Opera tua non indigeo; in 12:27 as the compressed "members from a member" for membra de membro; and in 12:28 through the full ranked list, including powers, graces of healings, helps, governments, kinds of tongues, and interpretations of speeches. Spiritual things is not narrowed by an added "gifts."

Ambiguities preserved

Ad utilitatem in 12:7 remains simply "for benefit" without inventing a beneficiary. Membra de membro in 12:27 stays relationally open rather than being expanded into an unsupported explanation. The bodily euphemism pair inhonesta/honestatem is kept as "unseemly/seemliness," and no unexpressed relation is added to the ranked ministries.

Clarity decisions

The long distributions in 12:4–11 retain their verse-separated continuation through semicolons, while English word order makes the recurring giver and recipients immediately legible. The conditional body-member questions receive only the copulas English requires. The purpose clause at 12:25 remains visibly governed by God’s tempering and bestowal in 12:24.

Corrections and reasons

At 12:8, an initial causal "For" was removed and quidem restored as "indeed," avoiding an invented connector. At 12:26, "is glorified" was corrected to "glories" because gloriatur is deponent and gives the member its own action; the revision preserves the suffering/glory parallel without changing the shared response.

Canonical terminology

Spirit, Lord, and God remain distinct in the triad. Gratia is grace, charisma is charism, ministratio is ministry, operatio is operation, and virtus is power; they are not flattened into generic gifts. Corpus is body, membrum is member, schisma is schism, ecclesia is church, and both servus and liber remain servant and free. No Lord (YHWH) marker belongs in this lane.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

The more excellent way is charity: without it even angelic speech, complete knowledge, mountain-moving faith, total almsgiving, and bodily surrender profit nothing. Paul names charity’s patient and truthful actions, contrasts its permanence with prophecy, tongues, and knowledge, then moves from childhood and partial sight to face-to-face knowledge, ending with faith, hope, and charity.

Governing Latin

Caritas governs every occurrence as "charity." The concrete images æs sonans, cymbalum tinniens, montes transferam, and ut ardeam remain sounding brass, a tinkling cymbal, moving mountains, and "that I may burn." The paired verbs suffert/sustinet remain "bears/endures," while evacuabuntur, evacuabitur, and evacuavi retain the repeated image of emptying.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 13:3 the Clementine ut ardeam is translated "so that I may burn" rather than conformed to a variant about boasting. The predicate list keeps non agit perperam as "does not act perversely" and non est ambitiosa as "is not ambitious." The mirror remains "in an enigma," and the fourfold omnia remains four explicit repetitions of "all things."

Ambiguities preserved

The exact reach of what is emptied in prophecy and partial knowledge is not doctrinally expanded. Sapiebam and cogitabam are distinguished as "understood" and "reasoned" without inventing faculties beyond the Latin. Seeing through a mirror "in an enigma" retains the Vulgate’s opacity rather than explaining the enigma.

Clarity decisions

The unfinished charity predicate sequence at 13:4–7 remains one cumulative English construction across the four separately keyed verses. At 13:8 the three sive clauses are kept as three balanced alternatives; English supplies only the existential wording needed to make each alternative grammatical. At 13:11 English supplies only the repeated subject needed to distinguish speaking, understanding, and reasoning while retaining parvulus/vir as little child/man.

Corrections and reasons

At 13:12, an initial draft "For now we see" was corrected to "Now we see" because the Latin begins Videmus nunc without enim or nam; removing the causal prevents an invented logical relation while preserving the now/then contrast. Independent review corrected the broken English alternatives at 13:8 from "whether prophecies" / "whether tongues" / "whether knowledge" to "whether there are prophecies" / "whether there are tongues" / "whether there is knowledge"; the minimal existential supply preserves all three sive clauses, their number, and their future predicates.

Canonical terminology

Caritas is charity throughout and links chapters 8, 13, and 16; it is not collapsed into the verbal love of amare at 16:22. Scientia is knowledge, fides faith, spes hope, veritas truth, iniquitas iniquity, and prophetia prophecy. The distinct emptying vocabulary remains available for later canonical comparison without erasing context-specific senses.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

Paul commands pursuit of charity and desire for spiritual things, especially prophecy, because intelligible speech builds the church. Instruments, trumpet, voice, air, and barbarian imagery press the need for interpretation; spirit, mind, and sense must all remain distinct. The chapter then orders tongues and prophecy in assembly, grounds peace in God, gives the Clementine instruction concerning women, and closes with honor and order.

Governing Latin

Lingua is kept singular or plural exactly by row; spiritus, mens, sensus, vox, sermo, revelatio, scientia, prophetia, and doctrina remain spirit, mind, sense, voice, speech, revelation, knowledge, prophecy, and doctrine. Sine anima is concretely "without a soul," virtutem vocis is "power of the voice," and the repeated ædificare family remains edify/edification.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 14:4 Paul says the prophet edifies "the church of God." At 14:18 the Clementine singular omnium vestrum lingua is retained as "the tongue of all of you" rather than replaced by a comparative absent from the row. At 14:21 the full quotation ends with plain "the Lord," and 14:33 retains "as I teach in all the churches of the saints" in that verse rather than being repunctuated into the next instruction.

Ambiguities preserved

Idiota is rendered "the unlearned" or "unlearned person" rather than being doctrinally identified. The unusual "power of the voice" and zeal "for spirits" remain accountable to virtus and spirituum. At 14:38 ignorabitur stays passive as "he will be ignored," without specifying the unnamed agent.

Clarity decisions

At 14:7 the flute and harp actions are repeated in lucid English while the concrete lack of a soul remains. The assembly instruction in 14:27 restructures secundum duos ... per partes as two or at most three, each in turn, without adding speakers beyond the supplied number. At 14:34 "are to be subject" supplies the minimum English verb required by subditas esse.

Corrections and reasons

At 14:7 "Yet" was restored for Tamen. At 14:13 "should pray" was corrected to the jussive "let ... pray" for oret. At 14:33 an initially adverbial "also" was removed so sicut et introduces the comparison in the required Clementine clause without moving it across the boundary. At 14:34 "are to be subject" replaced a misleading bare infinitive whose English scope could have fallen under "not permitted." Independent review corrected the needlessly mechanical "but more that you may prophesy" at 14:1 to "but desire still more to prophesy" and "but more to prophesy" at 14:5 to "but I want you even more to prophesy"; both revisions supply only the governing verb required by lucid English and preserve magis, the actor, and prophecy's priority.

Canonical terminology

Charity remains caritas; tongue remains lingua with source number; spirit, mind, and sense remain distinct; speech remains sermo; word remains verbum; doctrine remains doctrina; power remains virtus; and church remains ecclesia. Edify/edification consistently represents the ædificare family, while dissensio is dissension rather than schism or faction.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Paul recalls the Gospel received, held, and preached: Christ died, was buried, rose, and was seen by the Clementine sequence of witnesses. A chain of resurrection conditionals gives way to Christ the firstfruits, the ordered end, the Son’s subjection, and God all in all. Paul then moves through baptism for the dead, danger, seed and bodies, Adam and Christ, and the last trumpet to victory and steadfast labor.

Governing Latin

Prædicare/prædicatio remain preach/preaching; inanis and vanus remain distinguishable as empty and vain. Resurgere/resurrectio govern rise/resurrection, primitiæ remains firstfruits, and the repeated subjicere family remains subject/subjected. Corruptio/incorruptio, mortale/immortalitas, corpus animale/corpus spiritale, anima vivens, and spiritus vivificans retain the resurrection argument’s concrete oppositions.

Vulgate-specific readings

The appearances retain Cephas and then "the eleven" at 15:5. At 15:23 the Clementine clause remains "those who are Christ’s, who believed at his coming." At 15:47 there is no imported divine title: "the second man is from heaven, heavenly." At 15:49 portemus is exhortative, "let us also bear," and 15:51 reads exactly, "we shall indeed all rise, but we shall not all be changed."

Ambiguities preserved

The baptism for the dead at 15:29 receives no explanation. The unexpressed agents and pronouns in 15:26–28 remain pronouns, including "him who subjected all things to himself," rather than receiving supplied identities. Secundum hominem at 15:32 is rendered "in human terms," and ad reverentiam at 15:34 is rendered toward reverence without importing a settled alternate formula.

Clarity decisions

The received-Gospel sentence remains continuous across 15:1–2, and the appearance list remains continuous through 15:8. At 15:26 the unfinished Cum autem dicat ends with a comma and governs the quoted proposition keyed at 15:27. Elliptical sowing-and-rising clauses receive only the pronouns and copulas required by English, while animal, soul, flesh, blood, seed, grain, brightness, and body remain concrete.

Corrections and reasons

Connectives were corrected at 15:8 (autem, "but"), 15:14 (autem, "but"), 15:18 (ergo, "therefore"), and 15:25 (autem, "but") to preserve the argument’s actual turns. At 15:28 "will be subject" became passive "will be subjected" for subjectus erit. At 15:29 "then" became "also" for et in the second question. At 15:37 "perhaps" became "for instance" for ut puta, removing invented uncertainty.

Canonical terminology

Resurrection is resurrectio; rise is resurgere; firstfruits is primitiæ; corruption/incorruption and mortal/immortality remain paired; animal body and spiritual body remain distinct; anima is soul; spiritus is spirit; virtus is power; potestas is authority; principatus is principality; victory is victoria; sting is stimulus; and the Lord titles Jesus plainly without a YHWH marker.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

Paul turns from resurrection to the collection for the saints, its weekly setting aside, approved bearers, and Jerusalem. His Macedonia–Corinth–Ephesus itinerary includes a great evident door and many adversaries; instructions concerning Timothy and Apollo lead into watchfulness, strength, and charity. The house of Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, Asian greetings, the domestic church, anathema, Maran Atha, grace, and Paul’s charity close the letter.

Governing Latin

Collectæ is collections, sancti saints, gratia at 16:3 is the Corinthians’ concrete "grace," and per unam sabbati is the first day of the week. Ostium ... magnum et evidens remains a great and evident opened door. Viriliter agite is "act manfully," confortamini is passive "be strengthened," ministerium is ministry, and caritas remains charity.

Vulgate-specific readings

Apollo is retained in the Vulgate form, and 16:12 keeps the subjectless "there was no will for him to come now." The source-supplied house names Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus together and says they appointed themselves to ministry. At 16:19 domestica sua ecclesia remains "their domestic church," followed by the Clementine addition "with whom I also lodge." Maran Atha remains untranslated.

Ambiguities preserved

At 16:2 quod ei bene placuerit remains "whatever pleases him" rather than being forced into a prosperity formula. Approval "by letters" at 16:3 does not decide the letters’ author. The will in 16:12 remains grammatically unnamed; what was lacking "on your part" in 16:17 is not expanded; and the antecedent of "with whom I also lodge" in 16:19 is not narrowed beyond the Latin.

Clarity decisions

Apud se at 16:2 is rendered "privately" rather than assigned an unnecessary location, and the delayed collection clause keeps Latin tunc as "then, when I come." The beseeching begun at 16:15 remains open through an em dash and receives its governing that-clause at 16:16. The greeting fragment at 16:21 receives the minimum copula needed for English: "The greeting is Paul’s, by my own hand."

Corrections and reasons

At 16:2 "at home" was corrected to "privately" for apud se, avoiding a fixed location, and "only when" became "then, when" for tunc. Quod si and autem were restored as "but" at 16:4 and 16:6. At 16:10 "also" was restored for et in sicut et ego. At 16:17 "lacking from you" became "lacking on your part" for the dative vobis, avoiding a false directional claim. At 16:21 source-order English was reordered so genitive Pauli is plainly possessive and ablative mea manu plainly instrumental. Independent review corrected the governing-Latin typo "ministrium" to source-exact "ministerium" for 16:15.

Canonical terminology

Saints remains sancti; church remains ecclesia; grace remains gratia even for the collection at 16:3; ministry remains ministerium; charity remains caritas, while amat at 16:22 is the verb love; spirit remains spiritus; brothers remains fratres; holy kiss remains osculum sanctum; anathema and Maran Atha remain concrete and untranslated; Jesus’s title remains plain Lord.

2 Corinthians — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from apostolic greeting into a blessing of the Father of mercies, then lets consolation and suffering answer one another through a long communal syntax. Paul discloses the weight of the Asian tribulation and the death-answer within the apostles so that confidence rests in the God who raises the dead. Conscience, sincerity, travel intention, and the unbroken Yes of God's Son then lead to God's establishing, anointing, sealing, and giving the Spirit's pledge. The closing appeal makes Paul's postponed coming an act of sparing charity rather than lordship over Corinthian faith.

Governing Latin

The English is governed by the distinct but interwoven consolatio/consolari and exhortatio/exhortari families in 1:3–7; the three complete sive branches of 1:6; responsum mortis in 1:9; the perfect-present-future rescue sequence eripuit, eruit, eripiet in 1:10; and the repeated multorum/per multos agency in 1:11. In 1:17–20, Est, Non, and Amen remain visible as Paul's formal verbal sequence; at 1:18, sermo noster remains the subject and in illo remains in him. Confirmat, unxit, signavit, and dedit retain God as the cumulative agent in 1:21–22.

Vulgate-specific readings

The text retains simplicity of heart and the sincerity of God at 1:12, second grace at 1:15, and through him is Amen to God unto our glory at 1:20. It does not replace nostra with a familiar alternative, omit the third sive clause in 1:6, or reduce secundam gratiam to an explanatory statement about a second visit. The Son is preached among the Corinthians through Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy exactly as the Clementine row names them.

Ambiguities preserved

At 1:6, the relative clause about working patient endurance remains attached without falsely choosing between every possible antecedent in the paired exhortation-and-salvation phrase. The answer of death in 1:9 remains concrete rather than being explained as a legal sentence or subjective feeling. The gift that is in us and the many persons of 1:11 retain their compressed relations. At 1:18, in him preserves the source pronoun without deciding beyond the Latin whether its immediate focus is faithful God or Christ named in the next verse. At 1:23, came no farther to Corinth preserves the temporal and directional openness of ultra better than a falsely precise itinerary claim.

Clarity decisions

The 1:3–4 relative clause is carried across its verse boundary without repeating God as a new subject. Verse 6 uses semicolons to make all three alternatives audible while verse 7 completes their purpose. In 1:18, English keeps our word as the grammatical subject and places in him after the Yes-and-No predicate, retaining in illo without pretending the pronoun modifies sermo. Verses 19–20 then continue the in-him sequence explicitly in Christ. The long 1:23 sentence uses a dash to distinguish Paul's motive from his denial of lordship while preserving both clauses in one verse.

Corrections and reasons

The read-aloud and source audit differentiated eripuit from eruit in 1:10 as rescued and delivers while retaining the final future rescue; this prevented the Latin's time movement from becoming three undifferentiated past acts. Verse 1:11 was reordered to keep both from many persons and through many while making the thanksgiving agency intelligible. Independent review corrected 1:18 from in our word that was among you there is no Yes and No to our word, which was among you, is not Yes and No in him because sermo noster is the subject and in illo must remain expressed rather than being relocated. The audit retained our glory in 1:20, restored every named minister in 1:19, and rejected a more definite rendering of ultra in 1:23 because each alternative would have exceeded the source.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; Christological Dominus in 1:2, 1:3, and 1:14 is plain Lord and receives no covenant-name parenthetical. Misericordiæ is mercies, anima is soul, Spiritus is Spirit, gratia is grace, donatio is gift, sapientia carnalis is fleshly wisdom, and caritas is reserved for charity in later chapters. Consolation and exhortation remain separate canonical English families, while gloria remains glory even where boasting could be contextually inferred.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Paul first explains the sorrowful letter as an act of abundant charity, then turns the community from rebuke toward forgiveness and consolation so that grief does not swallow the offender. His own forgiveness is exercised in Christ's person so that Satan does not circumvent them. The narrative briefly opens a door at Troas yet moves to Macedonia because Titus is absent. It then rises into the severe triumph image: God triumphs over the apostles in Christ and diffuses through them an aroma that becomes death to some and life to others, ending with speech from God, before God, in Christ.

Governing Latin

The repeated tristitia/contristare language and the matching joy verbs control 2:1–5. Donetis and consolemini in 2:7 require two coordinated acts toward the unnamed person; confirmetis ... caritatem in 2:8 makes restored charity public and deliberate. Experimentum in 2:9 remains proof rather than generic experience, persona Christi in 2:10 remains concrete, and cogitationes in 2:11 remains thoughts. In 2:14–16, triumphat nos preserves God's transitive action and odor, bonus odor, mortis in mortem, and vitæ in vitam preserve the entire aroma chain.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text keeps in the person of Christ at 2:10, a door opened in the Lord at 2:12, and God always triumphing over us at 2:14. It does not turn Paul into the triumphant victor. At 2:17, adulterantes verbum Dei remains adulterating the word of God rather than being replaced by a commercial metaphor from another textual form. The second sed is retained in the closing sincerity clause rather than silently normalized away.

Ambiguities preserved

The offender remains unnamed, and 2:5's in part is not expanded into an accusation against a particular group. Persona in 2:10 remains person rather than being narrowed to presence, sight, authority, or representation. The triumph image at 2:14 is allowed its captive and victorious severity without an added historical explanation. The good aroma belongs to Christ, is directed to God, and operates among two groups; the English does not settle theological implications beyond those relations.

Clarity decisions

At 2:7, the implied offender is supplied as him after both forgive and console because contemporary English requires an object; no new identity is added. Verse 2:10 repeats the forgiving verb in English so the elliptical cui ... et ego can be understood while keeping Paul's conditional if I have forgiven anything. The unfinished Troas clause in 2:12 carries directly into 2:13. Colons and semicolons preserve the two aroma outcomes in 2:15–16 before the fitness question closes the construction.

Corrections and reasons

The fidelity audit kept charity, not a generic emotional synonym, in 2:4 and 2:8. It corrected the implied objects of 2:7 for grammatical clarity while verifying that both commands still target the same unnamed person. It retained triumphs over us in 2:14 after rejecting wording that could make the apostles God's co-victors, and retained adulterating in 2:17 after rejecting an imported trade image. Speaker, place, and movement were rechecked at 2:12–13 so the open door, Titus's absence, farewell, and Macedonia sequence all remain present.

Canonical terminology

Caritas is charity; consolari is console; tristitia is sorrow or grief according to its clause; objurgatio is rebuke; experimentum is proof; persona remains person where its semantic openness matters. Satan is named without euphemism. Evangelium is Gospel, verbum is word, and sinceritas is sincerity. Dominus at 2:12 remains plain Lord because the context is Christological and precedes the book's covenant-name marker.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The Corinthians become Christ's living letter, ministered by apostles and written by the Spirit of the living God upon fleshly tablets of the heart. All apostolic sufficiency comes from God, who makes ministers of a new testament. Paul then compares the administration of death and condemnation with the Spirit and the ministry of justice, pressing glory against surpassing glory and what is made void against what remains. Moses's veil moves from face to reading to heart; turning to the Lord removes it, and the unveiled community is transformed into the same image from brightness to brightness by the Spirit of the Lord.

Governing Latin

Epistola, atramentum, tabulæ, littera, Spiritus, and cor sustain the letter image in 3:1–6. The English distinguishes ministratio as administration from ministerium as ministry in 3:7–9, and preserves testamentum as testament. Gloria, claruit, excellentem gloriam, per gloriam, and in gloria are not flattened. Every evacuare form remains visible in 3:7, 3:11, 3:13, and 3:14. The masculine singular conversus fuerit at 3:16 is expressed personally without naming its antecedent. Velamen, facies, sensus, cor, speculantes, imago, and claritas carry the bodily and visual sequence through 3:18.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation retains fleshly tablets of the heart at 3:3, not a smoother adjective from another textual form; new testament at 3:6, not an imported different Latin covenant noun; administration of condemnation and ministry of justice at 3:9; and the parenthetical because it is made void in Christ at its Clementine position in 3:14. It keeps the repeated made-void vocabulary rather than assigning the familiar word fading everywhere. Lord (YHWH) appears exactly once at 3:16 and nowhere else in the lane.

Ambiguities preserved

At 3:7, the relative feminine quæ is made explicitly to concern the glory of Moses's countenance. At 3:13, the neuter quod remains that which is made void rather than being supplied with an absent noun. The antecedent of masculine singular conversus fuerit in 3:16 is not named by the Latin; he expresses the encoded person and number while leaving the contextual referent unresolved. Speculantes in 3:18 is rendered beholding while the editorial records its possible contemplative or mirror resonance; tamquam a Domini Spiritu remains the compressed agency as by the Spirit of the Lord.

Clarity decisions

The carried subject you from 3:2 governs made manifest in 3:3, avoiding an invented new actor. Verses 3:4–6 remain one confidence-sufficiency-ministry chain. In 3:7, a glory is repeated in apposition solely to make the Latin antecedent audible in English. Verse 3:13 retains its difficult at that which is made void rather than manufacturing an absent end or goal. At 3:16, he supplies only the grammatically encoded masculine singular subject of conversus fuerit; it does not identify that subject, while has turned and will be taken away preserve the completed turning and future removal.

Corrections and reasons

The source audit revised 3:7 from an English relative that could mistakenly attach to countenance into a repeated-glory apposition, ensuring quæ agrees semantically with gloria. It standardized ministratio as administration and ministerium as ministry across 3:7–9, preventing two distinct Latin nouns from disappearing. It retained per glory in 3:11 and the parenthetical force of 3:14 after rejecting smoother inherited formulas. Independent review corrected 3:16 from when there is a turning to when he has turned because conversus fuerit is masculine singular and personal, while the unnamed antecedent remains unresolved. A lane-wide title check placed the sole covenant-name parenthetical at 3:16 and confirmed plain Lord at 3:17–18.

Canonical terminology

Testamentum is testament; justitia is justice; damnatio is condemnation; littera is letter; Spiritus is Spirit; velamen is veil; libertas is liberty; gloria is glory; claritas is brightness. Ministratio is represented by administration where contrasted with ministerium, which is ministry. The first qualifying covenant-name Dominus is Lord (YHWH) at 3:16; all subsequent divine Dominus forms in the book are plain Lord.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Because the apostles have this administration by received mercy, they do not fail: shame and cunning are renounced, truth is manifested, and the Gospel's veiling is located among those who perish under the blinding god of this age. God shines in apostolic hearts through the face of Christ Jesus, yet the treasure remains in earthen vessels so the sublimity is of God's power rather than from the apostles. A sequence of embodied reversals carries Jesus's mortification and life, death in the apostles and life in the Corinthians. Faith speaks toward resurrection, grace abounds toward God's glory, and present light tribulation opens into an immeasurable, sublime, eternal weight of glory fixed on unseen eternal things.

Governing Latin

Ideo and non deficimus bind 4:1 to chapter 3 and recur at 4:16. Occulta dedecoris, astutia, adulterantes, manifestatio veritatis, and conscientia govern the ethical contrast in 4:2. The repeated opertum and the illuminationem/illuxit pair create the veil-and-light movement in 4:3–6. Thesaurus and vasa fictilia remain treasure and earthen vessels; sublimitas virtutis Dei preserves the height of God's power. The antitheses in 4:8–9, mortificatio/corpus/corpora/caro in 4:10–11, operatur in 4:12 and 4:17, and the visible/invisible temporal/eternal pairs remain deliberate repetitions.

Vulgate-specific readings

The text preserves the god of this age at 4:4, Jesus Christ our Lord and ourselves as your servants through Jesus at 4:5, and adulterating the word of God at 4:2. It retains God's brightness in the face of Christ Jesus at 4:6, the sublimity as being of God's power at 4:7, mortification of Jesus at 4:10, and establish us with you for constituet vobiscum at 4:14. No imported presentation formula replaces constituet, and no smoother familiar phrase displaces the height-weight construction of 4:17.

Ambiguities preserved

The identity implied by the god of this age is not supplied by name. The causal or purposive force of ut non fulgeat in 4:4 remains expressed without adding a theory of unbelief. Sublimitas in 4:7 remains sublimity rather than being reduced to a generic adjective. Mortificatio in 4:10 remains mortification, allowing its active dying/death resonance. In 4:17, the English preserves what is present, momentary, and light in tribulation and the exceptional supra modum in sublimitate instead of selecting a single flattened comparison.

Clarity decisions

The relative who is the image of God is placed directly after Christ in 4:4 so its subject cannot be mistaken for glory. The elliptical second half of 4:5 is marked with however, preserving the contrast without inventing another finite verb. At 4:7, the compact predicate relation remains the sublimity being of God's power, while the separate ex nobis is heard as and not from us. Verse 4:10 keeps singular our body before plural our bodies; verse 4:16 uses outward human being and the inward to retain homo while avoiding an abstract soul/body explanation. Dashes in 4:17 make the above-measure and sublimity modifiers audible without changing their force.

Corrections and reasons

The read-aloud audit adjusted 4:4's relative placement so Christ, not Gospel or glory, is unmistakably God's image. It retained through Jesus at 4:5 after rejecting an added motive phrase, and retained establish at 4:14 after rejecting an imported presentation verb. Independent review corrected 4:7 from the sublimity of the power may belong to God and not come from us to the sublimity may be of God's power, and not from us because virtutis Dei is a single genitive relation and ex nobis is the separate source contrast. The paired negatives in 4:8–9 were checked individually so constriction, destitution, abandonment, and destruction remain distinct. The final cadence of 4:17–18 was punctuated to preserve the Latin's extreme height and weight while leaving the visible/invisible conclusion immediately intelligible.

Canonical terminology

Administratio is administration, misericordia is mercy, veritas is truth, conscientia is conscience, Evangelium is Gospel, and verbum is word. Virtus here is power, corpus is body, caro is flesh, and Spiritus remains Spirit where divine. Claritas is brightness and gloria is glory, preserving their distinction. Temporal things are temporal and unseen things eternal; no explanatory doctrinal vocabulary is added to the reader text.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from groaning within an earthly habitation toward the eternal house from God, from bodily pilgrimage toward courageous desire to be present with the Lord, and from Christ’s tribunal toward a life pressed by Christ’s charity. It then turns through knowledge no longer governed by flesh into the new-creature declaration and closes with God’s sustained work of reconciliation, the apostolic embassy, and God’s justice in Christ.

Governing Latin

The English keeps the architectural and clothing sequence of domus, habitatio, ædificatio, tabernaculum, superindui, expoliari, and supervestiri instead of reducing it to an abstract afterlife statement. Peregrinamur is carried as being pilgrims, tribunal remains tribunal, and reconciliavit/reconciliationis/reconcilians/reconciliationis remains a fourfold reconciliation chain. The compressed mente excedimus is rendered idiomatically as ‘beside ourselves,’ while Caritas Christi remains ‘the charity of Christ.’

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 5:17 retains the Clementine omnia in ‘all things have become new’ and keeps the new-creature clause visibly elliptical. Verse 5:19 reads ‘God was in Christ’ and retains offenses rather than importing a different judicial noun. Verse 5:20 preserves legatione as service as ambassadors, and 5:21 renders justitia Dei as ‘the justice of God.’ Every Dominus in 5:6–11 is plain ‘Lord,’ because the book’s sole covenant-name marker is fixed at 3:16.

Ambiguities preserved

‘The charity of Christ’ leaves the Latin genitive open to Christ’s charity and charity directed toward Christ. The unqualified ‘absent or present’ in 5:9 does not add an object and therefore preserves the shifting body/Lord reference of 5:6–9. ‘Beside ourselves’ records the idiomatic force of mente excedimus without supplying a cause, and the punctuation of 5:17 does not add an explicit copula or pronoun to Si qua ergo in Christo nova creatura.

Clarity decisions

The suspended Audentes of 5:6 and the parenthesis of 5:7 are linked with paired em dashes before the finite audemus in 5:8, preserving both courage expressions. In 5:10 ‘each person’ and repeated ‘each’ make unusquisque and its accountability legible without changing number. In 5:20 ‘serve as ambassadors’ gives natural English to legatione fungimur while retaining embassy rather than collapsing it into ministry.

Corrections and reasons

Review restored ‘of this habitation’ in 5:1 so hujus was not generalized away, retained ‘clothed over’ rather than merely ‘clothed’ in 5:2 and 5:4 so the super- prefix remained visible, and revised a fully supplied 5:17 predicate into the final elliptical dash construction so the Clementine syntax and omnia were not normalized. The final review also kept ‘offenses’ in 5:19 distinct from justice and tribunal vocabulary.

Canonical terminology

For this book, domus is house, habitatio habitation, ædificatio building, tabernaculum tabernacle, and the super-clothing verbs are ‘clothed over.’ Pignus is pledge; caro is flesh; corpus is body; tribunal is tribunal; caritas is charity; ministerium is ministry; verbum is word; legatio is represented by ambassadors; delictum is offense; and justitia is justice. Later Dominus remains plain Lord after 3:16’s unique marker.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Paul’s assisting exhortation opens into the acceptable time and day of salvation, then into one long presentation of God’s ministers through endurance, suffering, integrity, divine power, reputation, and paradox. The opened mouth and enlarged heart lead to a reciprocal appeal, after which five incompatible pairings ground the command to separate. The chapter ends inside God’s composite promise to dwell among his people, receive them, and be Father to sons and daughters.

Governing Latin

Adjuvantes is left without an invented partner as ‘as helpers.’ Verses 6:3–10 preserve the governing dantes/exhibeamus construction and the repeated in, per, ut, sicut, quasi, and tamquam patterns across every list item. Os, cor, angustia, and viscera retain the bodily appeal, while participatio, societas, conventio, pars, and consensus receive distinct English relations. The divine speech carries inhabitabo in illis, inambulabo inter eos, filios et filias, and Dominus omnipotens without interruption.

Vulgate-specific readings

The accepted-time quotation keeps both first-person divine verbs and distinguishes Tempore accepto from tempus acceptabile. The 6:16–18 Clementine composite retains dwelling ‘in them,’ walking ‘among them,’ both sons and daughters, and ‘the Lord Almighty’; no clause from a parallel form is added. The source editor’s square brackets are treated as editorial span markers and are not printed as inspired words. Both occurrences of Dominus remain plain ‘Lord.’

Ambiguities preserved

The participle Adjuvantes does not identify God or another human as the unstated partner. The rhetorical comparatives in 6:8–10 remain ‘as’ or ‘as though’ according to ut, sicut, quasi, and tamquam, rather than being converted into flat assertions. Eamdem remunerationem remains ‘the same recompense’ without an explanatory paraphrase, and the living-temple declaration stays the stated ground of the quotation without importing a location or audience.

Clarity decisions

A colon after ‘ministers of God’ makes exhibeamus the governor of the uninterrupted 6:4–10 catalogue; semicolons let the long sentence be read aloud without losing any preposition or contrast. Suavitas is kept as the concrete ‘sweetness,’ and viscera as ‘bowels,’ because a smoother abstraction would erase the book’s embodied diction. The five questions use participation, fellowship, agreement, part, and consent to keep the Latin distinctions audible.

Corrections and reasons

Review changed a prospective finite paraphrase of Adjuvantes to ‘as helpers’ so no collaborating agent was invented, restored the differing comparison markers in 6:8–10, and separated ‘word of truth,’ ‘power of God,’ and ‘weapons of justice’ so their noun families did not collapse. The quotation was re-punctuated as one speech from 6:16 through 6:18 and the source brackets were removed, preventing a false speaker break.

Canonical terminology

Gratia is grace; ministerium is ministry; virtus is power; justitia is justice; iniquitas is iniquity; caritas is charity; verbum is word; Spiritus Sanctus is Holy Spirit; viscera is bowels; and templum is temple. Participatio, societas, conventio, pars, and consensus remain participation, fellowship, agreement, part, and consent respectively. Dominus and Dominus omnipotens are Lord and Lord Almighty, with no second YHWH marker.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

Because of the promises just spoken, the beloved are called to cleanse flesh and spirit and perfect sanctification. Paul’s abrupt appeal to receive the apostles opens into confidence, tribulation, and God’s consolation through Titus. The letter’s grief is traced carefully into repentance and stable salvation, then into seven effects of Godward sorrow; the chapter closes with mutual consolation, Titus’s refreshed spirit and bodily affection, and Paul’s restored confidence in the Corinthians.

Governing Latin

Has promissiones explicitly reaches back across the chapter boundary. The threefold neminem remains harmed, corrupted, and circumvented; commoriendum and convivendum keep the paired ‘die together/live together’ force. Consolatur/consolatus/consolatione is repeated with its nested agents, while contristare, tristitia, pœnitentia, and sollicitudo preserve the sorrow-to-repentance logic. The compressed pœnitentiam in salutem stabilem is rendered ‘repentance into a stable salvation,’ with stabilem attached to salutem.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 7:10 retains the Clementine adjective stabilem and does not add any clause about regret. Verse 7:12 reads ‘our solicitude, which we have for you,’ not a reversed-pronoun reading, and coram Deo is carried at the start of 7:13 with that solicitude. Titus’s spirit is refreshed ‘by all of you,’ and 7:15 retains viscera rather than replacing the source’s bodily image with an abstract affection.

Ambiguities preserved

Capite nos remains the abrupt ‘Receive us’ without explaining what kind of reception is intended. ‘Toward God’ in 7:9 preserves ad Deum and remains distinct from ‘according to God’ in 7:10–11. The temporal and concessive force of etsi pœniteret is represented as ‘even if I had regretted it,’ while the one-hour grief remains parenthetical. In 7:15 the direction of Titus’s bowels is retained without deciding how literally readers should construe the idiom.

Clarity decisions

Verse 7:8 ends with an em-dash so ‘now I rejoice’ in 7:9 visibly completes the layered sentence. The unusual repeated sed in 7:11 is retained as repeated ‘but,’ keeping all seven effects—solicitude, defense, indignation, fear, desire, zeal, and vengeance—rather than smoothing them into a generic list. Verse 7:12 deliberately lacks closing punctuation so coram Deo in 7:13 remains with the manifest solicitude before the consolation result begins.

Corrections and reasons

Review corrected a possible ‘worldly sorrow’ normalization to ‘the sorrow of the age’ so sæculi stayed visible, restored stabilem to salvation in 7:10, and restored ‘our solicitude … for you’ at 7:12. It also retained the cross-verse placement of ‘before God’ and replaced an abstract affection at 7:15 with ‘bowels,’ preventing both an imported reading and loss of the concrete image.

Canonical terminology

Promissio is promise; caro is flesh; spiritus is spirit; sanctificatio is sanctification; condemnatio is condemnation; fiducia is confidence; gloriatio is boasting; consolatio is consolation; tribulatio is tribulation; pœnitentia is repentance; sollicitudo is solicitude; epistola is letter; and viscera is bowels. These remain distinct from exhortation, joy, fear, and confidence expressed by other Latin families.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

God’s grace in the Macedonian churches appears through tested tribulation, abundant joy, deepest poverty, and willing participation beyond ability. Titus is asked to complete the same grace in Corinth, where faith, speech, knowledge, solicitude, and charity are to abound. Counsel then moves from willing to deed, from present abundance to equality, and from the much/little quotation into a carefully accountable administration involving Titus and two unnamed brothers before the churches.

Governing Latin

Gratia remains grace throughout rather than being mechanically converted into money; experimentum is testing, virtus is ability here, simplicitas is simplicity, and communicatio is communion. The will/readiness sequence retains voluntarii, voluntas, promptus animus, and perficere, while abundantia, inopia, supplementum, and æqualitas keep the economic logic. The travel section preserves ordinatus, comes peregrinationis, ministratur, destinatam voluntatem, and plenitudo together with the two brothers’ separate appositions.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 8:7 preserves the Clementine ‘your charity toward us,’ not the reversed direction found in another reading. Verse 8:15 keeps both balanced negatives and the source verbs ‘did not abound’ and ‘did not diminish’ without adding a wilderness explanation. Verse 8:19 retains ‘our destined will,’ 8:20 retains the administered ‘fullness,’ and 8:21 says ‘before God,’ not ‘before the Lord.’ Every Dominus in 8:5, 8:9, and 8:19 remains plain Lord.

Ambiguities preserved

Gratia is not prematurely identified with the collection where the Latin can still denote divine grace or favor. ‘Good quality’ in 8:8 carries ingenium bonum without deciding between disposition and demonstrated genuineness. ‘Our destined will’ preserves the compressed destinatam voluntatem nostram instead of supplying its unstated object, and the elliptical sive … sive credentials in 8:23 remain visibly appositional rather than receiving an invented question.

Clarity decisions

Verse 8:2 separates the two Latin assertions: joy’s abundance was present in testing, and deepest poverty abounded into riches of simplicity. In 8:11 the parallel genitives are expressed as ‘readiness of will’ and ‘completion from what you have’; the generic ‘one’ in 8:12 prevents the will itself from being mistaken for the possessor. The unnamed brother in 8:18 is called a traveling companion in 8:19, and 8:22–24 retains singular brother, plural brothers, Titus’s separate role, and the demonstrative command before the face of the churches.

Corrections and reasons

Review restored ‘simplicity’ in 8:2 in place of an interpretive economic synonym, changed generic strength to ‘ability’ in 8:3 so virtus fit the human capacity contrast, and corrected the direction of charity in 8:7 to ‘your charity toward us.’ It also restored God at 8:21, preserved two distinct unnamed brothers in 8:18 and 8:22, and kept ‘glory’ rather than substituting boasting where 8:24 reads gloria.

Canonical terminology

Gratia is grace; communicatio is communion; ministerium is ministry; virtus is ability in the capacity context; sermo is speech; scientia is knowledge; caritas is charity; inopia is need; abundantia is abundance; supplementum is supplement; æqualitas is equality; Evangelium is Gospel; ministrare is administer; plenitudo is fullness; and Apostoli ecclesiarum is apostles of the churches. Deus remains God at 8:21.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

Paul begins from the superfluity of writing about the ministry because Achaia’s ready mind is already known, yet sends the brothers so the boast and promised blessing will not be emptied by unpreparedness. The prepared blessing becomes the governing sowing image: sparing seed yields sparingly, sowing in blessings yields from blessings, and God supplies grace, sufficiency, seed, bread, and the growths of justice. Ministry then produces thanksgiving in the Lord, glory to God, communion, prayer, longing, and final thanks for God’s unspeakable gift.

Governing Latin

Promptus animus, parata, imparatos, præparent, and paratam keep the readiness repetition, while benedictio is blessing on both sides of the preparation and sowing image. Parce seminat/parce metet and in benedictionibus/de benedictionibus retain their exact correspondences. Omnem, omnibus, semper, omnem, and omne remain fully represented in 9:8; administrat, præstabit, multiplicabit, and augebit preserve the provider’s present identity and three future actions; justitia and simplicitas remain justice and simplicity.

Vulgate-specific readings

The difficult in hac substantia at 9:4 remains ‘in this substance’ rather than being silently replaced by a familiar explanatory noun. Verses 9:5–6 keep benedictio as ‘blessing,’ avaritia as ‘avarice,’ and sowing ‘in blessings’ with reaping ‘from blessings.’ Verse 9:9 retains the masculine subject, the poor, and justice ‘into the age of the age’; 9:12 retains thanksgivings ‘in the Lord’; and 9:15 keeps donum as God’s unspeakable gift.

Ambiguities preserved

‘This substance’ leaves substantia semantically compressed and does not decide whether its immediate force is confidence, ground, or the undertaking itself. Verse 9:7 retains the source’s verbal ellipsis—‘Each one, according as he has determined’—instead of importing a finite mood. The dense participial and prepositional chain in 9:12–14 keeps the relation among ministry, proof, glorifying, confession, communion, and prayer without adding a doctrinal conclusion or an unstated recipient.

Clarity decisions

‘Beyond necessity’ makes ex abundanti intelligible in 9:1 without changing Paul’s claim into ignorance or refusal. Verse 9:5 uses a colon to distinguish the promised blessing’s preparation from its blessing/avarice manner, and 9:8–11 uses commas to carry one sufficiency-and-seed purpose chain across verse keys. In 9:13 the source-evidenced plural ‘they’ makes the plural glorificantes point back to the saints without adding a new actor. ‘Growths of the fruits’ keeps both plural incrementa and plural frugum, while ‘bread for eating’ preserves ad manducandum.

Corrections and reasons

Review replaced a generic ‘gift’ in 9:5–6 with repeated ‘blessing,’ restored the in/from prepositions of sowing and reaping, and reinstated every universal in 9:8. It corrected a smoother ‘righteousness’ at 9:9–10 to binding ‘justice,’ retained future force for furnish/multiply/increase in 9:10, and restored ‘in the Lord’ at 9:12 rather than importing a different divine noun.

Canonical terminology

Ministerium is ministry; benedictio is blessing; avaritia is avarice; gratia is grace; sufficientia is sufficiency; justitia is justice; simplicitas is simplicity; communicatio is communion; officium is service; administrare is provide/administer according to object; Evangelium is Gospel; and donum is gift. Dominus at 9:12 is plain Lord after the unique 3:16 marker, while Deus remains God throughout the chapter.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

Paul moves from a personal appeal through Christ’s meekness and modesty (10:1–2) into the sustained warfare construction of 10:3–6, then tests what is seen face-to-face, defends the Lord-given authority meant for building, answers the hostile judgment of his letters and presence, and closes with God’s measured rule: Corinth, regions beyond, glory in the Lord, and commendation by God rather than self-commendation (10:7–18).

Governing Latin

The English is governed by in carne / non secundum carnem (10:3), arma militiæ … potentia Deo (10:4), the coordinated participles consilia destruentes, redigentes, and in promptu habentes (10:4–6), Quæ secundum faciem sunt, videte (10:7), ædificationem / destructionem (10:8), the opponents’ inquiunt (10:10), the full reflexive sequence ipsi in nobis nosmetipsos metientes … nobis (10:12), and mensura / regula / mensus / pertingendi (10:13–16).

Vulgate-specific readings

At 10:4 the weapons remain ‘powerful before God,’ retaining the explicit Deo relation rather than converting it into an adjective; 10:12 retains the Clementine self-measuring and self-comparing clause without adding any judgment about wisdom; and 10:18 says ‘the one whom God commends’ because the supplied row reads Deus, while 10:17 keeps plain ‘Lord’ after the book’s sole covenant-name marker at 3:16.

Ambiguities preserved

‘Look at what is before your face’ keeps Quæ secundum faciem sunt, videte as an imperative while leaving its spatial and outward-appearance force available. ‘Powerful before God’ preserves the difficult dative Deo without claiming an unexpressed mechanism of power. The deliberately incomplete-feeling reflexive turn at 10:12 remains ‘we ourselves, measuring ourselves within ourselves and comparing ourselves with ourselves,’ and ‘rule’ remains one sustained but semantically compressed image through 10:13–16.

Clarity decisions

At 10:4 ‘as we destroy’ supplies the English subject already implicit in the masculine plural participle and allows 10:5–6 to continue with ‘and … lead’ and ‘and … stand ready’ without making the weapons the acting subject. The 10:9 dash opens directly into the opponents’ quoted assessment at 10:10, and 10:11 then resumes Paul’s answer. At 10:13 the appositional ‘a measure reaching even as far as you’ makes mensuram pertingendi intelligible while preserving both measure nouns.

Corrections and reasons

Review changed 10:4 ‘—destroying counsels’ to ‘as we destroy counsels’ so the masculine apostolic agent, not the neuter weapons, governs the warfare actions; independent review then changed 10:5 ‘and leading every intellect’ to ‘and lead every intellect’ and 10:6 ‘and standing ready’ to ‘and stand ready’ because the finite ‘as we destroy’ requires parallel finite verbs across consilia destruentes, redigentes, and in promptu habentes. Review also changed 10:12 ‘insert or compare ourselves among’ to ‘insert ourselves among or compare ourselves with’ to preserve each verb’s distinct complement, and changed 10:15 ‘magnified abundantly among you’ to ‘magnified in you … into abundance’ to restore both in vobis and in abundantiam. Each correction was rechecked across both adjacent boundaries.

Canonical terminology

In this chapter caro / carnalia are ‘flesh’ / ‘carnal’; potentia in 10:4 is ‘powerful,’ while potestas in 10:8 is ‘authority’; ædificatio and destructio are ‘building’ and ‘destruction’; regula is consistently ‘rule’ throughout 10:13–16; gloriari is ‘boast’ where Paul describes his own claim and ‘glory’ in the 10:17 quotation; Dominus is plain ‘Lord,’ and Deus remains ‘God,’ decisively at 10:18.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Paul asks the Corinthians to bear a little foolishness, speaks with God’s jealousy for the virgin betrothed to Christ, and warns against another Christ, spirit, or Gospel (11:1–4). He contrasts his speech and knowledge, recounts his charge-free ministry and his plundering of other churches, exposes false apostles and Satanic transformation, then enters the extended foolish boast (11:5–21). Identity claims rise into the exact catalogue of labors, prisons, blows, deaths, dangers, deprivation, and care for the churches, before the chapter ends with God as witness and the concrete escape from Damascus (11:22–33).

Governing Latin

Key controls are Dei æmulatione, uni viro, and virginem castam (11:2); sensus … excidant a simplicitate (11:3); alium Christum / alium spiritum / aliud Evangelium and recte pateremini (11:4); magnis Apostolis (11:5); Alias ecclesias expoliavi and stipendium (11:8); the repeated occasio (11:12) and transfigurare family (11:13–15); substantia gloriæ (11:17); the five si quis abuses (11:20); ut minus sapiens dico and plus ego (11:23); the full repeated periculis and in catalogue (11:24–28); and sporta … per murum (11:33).

Vulgate-specific readings

The warning in 11:4 is ‘another Christ,’ not a substituted divine name, and 11:3 contains only ‘simplicity’ without an imported second quality. Clementine magnis Apostolis is rendered ‘the great Apostles’ at 11:5 and is not conflated with ‘apostles above measure’ at 12:11. Expoliavi remains the severe ‘I plundered other churches’ at 11:8; 11:23 preserves ‘I speak as one less wise’; and ministers who only transform themselves ‘as though ministers of justice’ do not become what they imitate.

Ambiguities preserved

‘You would bear it well’ keeps the compressed and ironic recte pateremini without specifying whether the immediate object is the preacher, proclamation, or whole alternative. ‘This substance of glory’ retains substantia gloriæ rather than silently selecting confidence, ground, or entitlement. ‘The official of King Aretas’s nation’ preserves præpositus gentis and the political relation without imposing a more specific modern office.

Clarity decisions

The three alternatives in 11:4 retain parallel verbs and objects in one conditional sentence. Parentheses and dashes in 11:16–23 keep Paul’s repeated shifts into and out of the foolish-boast voice audible. The prepositional catalogue remains distributed verse by verse from 11:23 through 11:28, with semicolons and commas carrying the sentence without merging keys; 11:32–33 likewise keeps the guarding purpose and escape action connected.

Corrections and reasons

Review changed 11:4 ‘you would rightly bear it’ to ‘you would bear it well’ so recte retains adverbial force without falsely declaring the alternative morally right; and changed 11:5 ‘have been in no way less’ to ‘have done nothing less’ to restore fecisse while retaining the comparison with magnis Apostolis. Both changes were reread within their continuing arguments and did not alter any verse key.

Canonical terminology

Magni Apostoli are ‘great Apostles,’ reserved distinctly from supra modum Apostoli in 12:11. Justitia is ‘justice’ at 11:15; infirmitas is ‘infirmity’ throughout the boast; sermo is ‘speech’ and scientia ‘knowledge’ at 11:6; diligere is the verb ‘love’ at 11:11 and therefore is not flattened into the book’s noun ‘charity’; semen remains the concrete ‘seed’ at 11:22; and every later Dominus remains plain ‘Lord.’

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

The compelled boast turns to visions and revelations of the Lord while twice refusing to identify the bodily mode known only to God (12:1–4). Paul distinguishes boasting for such a man from boasting in his own infirmities, then moves through the revelation danger, the thorn of flesh and angel of Satan, the threefold request, the Lord’s sufficient-grace reply, and Christ’s indwelling power (12:5–10). He next names the signs of apostleship, ironically asks forgiveness for not burdening Corinth, declares his third readiness to come and his willingness to spend himself for their souls, answers the charge of guile through Titus and the brother, and closes with fear of factional and sexual disorders (12:11–21).

Governing Latin

The repeated sive in corpore / sive extra corpus nescio, Deus scit and raptum govern 12:2–4; stimulus carnis meæ, angelus Satanæ, qui me colaphizet and masculine discederet govern 12:7–8; the Lord’s Sufficit tibi gratia mea, virtus in infirmitate perficitur and Paul’s Libenter igitur gloriabor … ut inhabitet in me virtus Christi govern 12:9; supra modum Apostoli and nihil sum control 12:11; libentissime, impendam / super impendar, and animabus control 12:15; Sed esto … astutus … dolo frames 12:16; and the full disorder and unrepented-sin lists govern 12:20–21.

Vulgate-specific readings

The rows do not identify the man in Christ more explicitly, merge the two God-knows statements, or duplicate the elevation-prevention clause. Stimulus carnis is ‘a thorn of my flesh’ and angelus Satanæ ‘an angel of Satan’ without a medical diagnosis; colaphizet retains its concrete blows as ‘strike me with fists,’ and the departure referent in 12:8 remains masculine as ‘he.’ At 12:9 Libenter is ‘gladly,’ distinct from superlative libentissime, ‘most gladly,’ at 12:15; Christ’s power ‘may dwell in me,’ preserving inhabitet rather than importing a resting-upon image. Supra modum Apostoli is ‘apostles above measure,’ distinct from the great Apostles of 11:5.

Ambiguities preserved

The body/outside-body mode remains unknown in both statements, with knowledge assigned only to God. The apposition ‘a thorn of my flesh, an angel of Satan’ preserves the stimulus/messenger relation, while masculine ‘he’ in 12:8 does not invent a diagnosis. The quoted ironic charge in 12:16 marks the cunning-and-guile words as the position Paul immediately tests with three questions rather than as an unqualified confession.

Clarity decisions

Verse 12:2 uses dashes to hold both repeated ignorance clauses and ‘God knows’ inside the description of the man; 12:3 remains syntactically open for 12:4’s ‘that he was caught up.’ In 12:6 the parallel ‘what he sees … or what he hears’ supplies only the minimal repeated English relative. At 12:7 ‘strike me with fists’ keeps the concrete blow immediately intelligible and avoids the competing banquet pronunciation of ‘buffet.’ Direct quotation ends after the Lord’s two clauses in 12:9, where ‘Therefore’ clearly returns the speaker to Paul. The long fears in 12:20–21 retain semicolons so every listed disorder and the final mourning clause remain under Timeo.

Corrections and reasons

Review changed 12:6 ‘what he sees in me or hears anything from me’ to the grammatical parallel ‘what he sees in me or what he hears from me,’ preserving the single scope of supra. Translation review had changed 12:7 ‘who should strike me’ to ‘who should buffet me’; independent review changed that to ‘who should strike me with fists’ so colaphizet retains concrete bodily force in immediately intelligible contemporary English without changing masculine qui or diagnosing the thorn. Independent review also changed 12:9 ‘most gladly boast’ to ‘gladly boast’ because positive Libenter must remain distinct from superlative libentissime at 12:15. Review changed 12:15 ‘be spent’ to ‘be utterly spent’ so super impendar is not weakened. The quoted form of 12:16 was retained after boundary review because it best signals the anticipated sarcastic charge tested in 12:17–18.

Canonical terminology

Virtus is consistently ‘power’ at 12:9 and virtutes ‘powers’ at 12:12; potentia remains distinct elsewhere in the book. Infirmitas is ‘infirmity,’ necessitas ‘necessity,’ angustia ‘strait,’ and anima ‘soul.’ Stimulus is ‘thorn,’ angelus ‘angel,’ and Satanas ‘Satan.’ Ædificatio remains concrete ‘building.’ Dominus is plain ‘Lord’ in 12:1 and 12:8–9 after the sole 3:16 marker.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

The third coming opens under the two-or-three-witness saying and Paul’s renewed warning that he will not spare (13:1–2). The Corinthians’ request for proof leads through Christ speaking in Paul, Christ’s weakness and God’s power, and God’s power in the Corinthians (13:3–4). Paul commands self-testing and self-proving, contrasts approved and reprobate appearances with doing good and serving truth, rejoices in apostolic weakness and Corinthian power, and prays for their completion (13:5–9). Authority for building governs the absent letter, then five distinct closing imperatives, mutual greeting, and the threefold blessing complete the book at the frozen key 13:13 (13:10–13).

Governing Latin

The exact witness line in ore duorum vel trium testium stabit omne verbum governs 13:1; Prædixi, et prædico, ut præsens, et nunc absens governs the warning at 13:2; experimentum and in vobis frame 13:3–4; vosmetipsos / ipsi vos, reprobi / probati, and veritatem govern 13:5–8; consummationem governs 13:9; potestas … in ædificationem, et non in destructionem governs 13:10; and gaudete, perfecti estote, exhortamini, idem sapite, pacem habete lead to gratia, caritas, and communicatio in 13:11–13.

Vulgate-specific readings

God’s power remains explicitly ‘in you’ at 13:4, preserving in vobis rather than a directional substitute. Consummatio is rendered ‘completion’ at 13:9 without importing a particular mode of restoration. The blessing remains at the frozen Clementine key 13:13 and preserves ‘the charity of God,’ ‘the communion of the Holy Spirit,’ ‘all of you,’ and Amen. Dominus at 13:10 and 13:13 is plain ‘Lord.’

Ambiguities preserved

At 13:7 ‘while we may be as reprobates’ preserves the difficult contrast between the Corinthians’ good action and the apostles’ possible appearance without turning appearance into an actual verdict. ‘Completion’ at 13:9 keeps consummatio broad enough to include completion or perfecting without adding the content of the prayer. ‘Be made complete’ and ‘be exhorted’ at 13:11 keep the passive or receptive force available rather than recasting both as unrelated active advice.

Clarity decisions

Verse 13:2 restructures the Latin order as ‘now while absent I warn as though present’ so past warning, present warning, current absence, and present-like force are all immediately intelligible. At 13:3 an em dash identifies Christus as the one speaking in Paul without changing the relative clauses. Verse 13:4 repeats ‘from the power of God’ and ends ‘in you’ so neither agency nor the Clementine location disappears. Semicolons at 13:11 preserve five distinct imperatives before the promised presence of God.

Corrections and reasons

Review changed 13:9 ‘we rejoice when we are weak’ to ‘we rejoice because we are weak’ to restore causal quoniam rather than convert it into a temporal relation. The final review retained ‘completion’ for consummationem because it is direct, dignified, and less interpretively narrow than ‘restoration’; every 13:11 imperative and every member of the 13:13 blessing was then rechecked aloud.

Canonical terminology

Experimentum is ‘proof,’ probare ‘prove,’ probatus ‘approved,’ and reprobus ‘reprobate,’ preserving the judicial-testing family. Virtus Dei is ‘the power of God,’ potens ‘powerful,’ and potestas ‘authority.’ Veritas remains ‘truth’; consummatio is ‘completion’; ædificatio / destructio are ‘building’ / ‘destruction’; dilectio is ‘love’ at 13:11, distinct from caritas as ‘charity’ at 13:13; and communicatio Sancti Spiritus is ‘the communion of the Holy Spirit.’

Galatians — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Paul's greeting establishes that his apostleship comes neither from men nor through a man, but through Jesus Christ and God the Father, and it carries Christ's self-giving into rescue from the present evil age and glory to God. Astonishment then replaces greeting: the Galatians are being moved from their caller toward an other Gospel that is not another, and the twice-spoken anathema guards what was received. Paul contrasts pleasing men with being Christ's servant, grounds his Gospel in revelation rather than human reception or learning, and recounts his former violence and advancement in Judaism. The chapter closes with God's gracious call, the Son revealed in Paul, an immediate Arabia–Damascus–Jerusalem sequence, and Judean churches glorifying God in the former persecutor.

Governing Latin

The salutation is governed by plural non ab hominibus against singular neque per hominem, the coordinated agents per Jesum Christum et Deum Patrem, and the Father's qui suscitavit eum. Dedit semetipsum and ut eriperet preserve Christ's gift and rescuing purpose. Aliud Evangelium / quod non est aliud remains visibly other/not another, while Evangelium and evangelizare recur through 1:6–12 and 1:23. The identical anathema sit closes both 1:8 and 1:9. Conversationem is conduct; supra modum and expugnabam retain the excess and attacking force of Paul's former life. Placuit ei leaves its subject unstated, Filium suum in me keeps the inward preposition, and non acquievi carni et sanguini remains a direct yielding relation without an added consultation noun.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text retains the present evil age, the troubling other/not-another Gospel, and the repeated verb evangelize rather than replacing the cognate family with varied preaching language. It keeps the Gospel evangelized by Paul as not according to a human and received neither from a human nor learned, but through revelation of Jesus Christ. At 1:16 the Son is revealed in Paul and Paul does not yield to flesh and blood; no outside preposition or consultation concept is imported. The text names Peter at 1:18, reserves Cephas for chapter 2, calls James the brother of the plain Lord, keeps unknown by face at 1:22, and ends with the churches glorifying God in Paul.

Ambiguities preserved

The subject encoded only by ei in 1:15 is not named. Revelation of Jesus Christ keeps the Latin genitive open rather than converting it into an explicit from or about relation. Son revealed in me is left in its source form without explaining the manner of revelation, and flesh and blood remains a concrete pair without naming a supposed human consultation process. At 1:19, none other of the apostles, except James preserves the exception in the same construction and the editorial does not decide whether the grammar classifies James among the apostles. Turn the Gospel in 1:7 retains convertere without specifying a particular method of alteration.

Clarity decisions

Verses 1:1–2 form one salutation, using a dash after the Father's raising action so all senders and recipients remain audible. Verses 1:3–5 likewise preserve one grace, self-giving, rescue, will, and glory chain across the verse divisions. A dash carries another Gospel into which is not another at 1:6–7, and the identical anathema cadence is retained at 1:8–9. In 1:11 the passive Gospel evangelized by me becomes the subject of is not according to a human, avoiding a detached English relative. The unstated subject and both purpose clauses carry from 1:15 into 1:16; the subsequent travel stages are separated cleanly without inventing consultation or authorization.

Corrections and reasons

Source review removed the draft demonstrative in this present evil age, yielding the present evil age because præsenti supplies presence but no separate hoc; this prevented a needless addition. The review kept church lowercase as a common institutional noun rather than treating source capitalization as an inspired title. It selected kindred for genere meo at 1:14 instead of a modern biological or political explanation, retained the passive is being moved at 1:6 rather than making the Galatians sole agents, and kept Peter at 1:18 after rejecting premature harmonization with Cephas in chapter 2. Read-aloud review preserved repeated evangelize and the two identical anathema judgments because stylistic variation would erase the argument's deliberate recurrence.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; the Christological Dominus at 1:3 and the personal title at 1:19 are plain Lord, with no covenant-name parenthetical. Gratia is grace, Evangelium is Gospel, and evangelizare is evangelize wherever lucid English permits. Fides is faith, caro is flesh, sanguis is blood, and servus is servant. Ecclesia is church, gentes is Gentiles, and Judaism, Jerusalem, Arabia, Damascus, Syria, Cilicia, Judea, Galatia, Peter, and James retain stable forms. Anathema remains anathema rather than a softened judgment term.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Fourteen years later Paul ascends according to revelation, confers about his Gentile Gospel, and distinguishes his present running from what he may already have run in vain. Titus's uncircumcised freedom stands amid the unfinished pressure of secretly introduced false brothers, yet the Gospel's truth remains. Those who seemed to be something add nothing; instead, they recognize the entrusted missions, God's corresponding work in Peter and Paul, and the grace given to Paul, then extend right hands of fellowship with the poor remembered. The movement turns sharply at Antioch: Cephas is resisted to his face for withdrawing from Gentiles, and Paul's public address continues from Jewish and Gentile conduct through justification, crucifixion with Christ, Christ's life in Paul, grace, justice, and Christ's death.

Governing Latin

Secundum revelationem governs the ascent, while currerem / cucurrissem distinguishes a course possibly still being run from one already completed. Subintroductos and subintroierunt are repeated as brought in secretly and came in secretly, and libertatem / servitutem keeps liberty opposed to servitude. Quales aliquando fuerint and Deus personam hominis non accipit preserve the parenthesis and face imagery. Creditum est mihi keeps the Gospel's entrusting passive; Evangelium præputii and circumcisionis retain foreskin and circumcision. Operatus est repeats the same working in Peter and Paul, and dextras ... societatis remains right hands of fellowship. Simulatio is repeated as pretense, while gentiliter, judaice, and judaizare remain a linked Gentile/Jew/Judaize family. Fidem Jesu Christi, fide Christi, and fide Filii Dei remain genitives, distinct from in Christo Jesu credimus.

Vulgate-specific readings

Titus is also taken along and is not compelled to be circumcised. The fragment but because of false brothers is not repaired with an invented governing clause, and refusing subjection even for an hour remains explicit. The Gospel of the foreskin is entrusted to Paul, just as that of circumcision to Peter; foreskin is not replaced by an abstract people-group label. God does not accept the face of a human, and those who seemed to be something contribute nothing. Peter at 2:7 gives way to Cephas at 2:9–14 exactly where the source changes. The translation keeps faith of Jesus Christ, faith of Christ, and faith of the Son of God, but separately says we believe in Christ Jesus. No flesh, justice, and Christ dying in vain preserve the Clementine forms.

Ambiguities preserved

Those who seemed to be something are never identified beyond the source, and what sort they once were remains immaterial to Paul. The subject of he who worked in Peter and Paul is not explicitly named in the reader text. The mission direction in 2:9 is elliptical in Latin; English supplies should go only to make the paired Gentile/circumcision directions grammatical, without adding a place or office. Paul's direct speech begins at 2:14 and receives no quotation marks or asserted closing point. The three faith genitives remain of rather than being interpreted uniformly as faith in. What I now live in the flesh preserves the compressed quod relation, and gratis in 2:21 is rendered in vain because the conditional argument concerns a needless death, not a freely given one.

Clarity decisions

Verses 2:3–5 retain a semicolon and the lowercase fragment but because so the pressure of sed propter remains audible without merging source keys. Verses 2:7–9 use paired dashes to hold the entrusted Gospel, repeated divine working, recognized grace, named columns, and right hands within one syntax unit. At 2:9, should go makes the source's directional ellipsis intelligible while retaining we among the Gentiles and they among the circumcision. Verse 2:15 ends with a comma so its nominal We, Jews by nature continues into knowing and the three justification propositions in 2:16. From 2:14 through 2:21, the absence of quotation marks preserves the source's unclosed public address and keeps Paul as speaker.

Corrections and reasons

The source audit corrected a man's face to the face of a human at 2:6 so homo remains human while the concrete face image is not lost. Verse 2:13 was corrected from was led to was led away, restoring the directional force of duceretur into the repeated pretense. Review retained the awkward but necessary brought in secretly / came in secretly recurrence at 2:4 and rejected stylistic variation that would hide the subintroductos/subintroierunt pair. It corrected every flesh will not be justified to no flesh will be justified in 2:16, eliminating an English scope ambiguity while preserving the universal negation and future passive of non justificabitur omnis caro; it also rejected three faith in substitutions because the Latin uses explicit in only with credimus. Read-aloud review kept the 2:15 fragment attached to 2:16 and the 2:19–20 I/Christ reversals without adding a new speaker or closing quotation.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; no Lord title occurs in chapter 2 and no covenant-name marker appears anywhere in the lane. Evangelium is Gospel, evangelize remains the cognate verb, veritas is truth, gratia is grace, fides is faith, and credere in is believe in. Lex is law, opera is works, justificare is justify, and justitia is justice. Libertas is liberty, servitus is servitude, præputium is foreskin, and circumcisio is circumcision. Judaei are Jews, gentes are Gentiles, judaizare is Judaize, and simulatio is pretense. Peter and Cephas remain distinct source forms; Barnabas, Titus, James, John, Jerusalem, Antioch, and the poor remain exact.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter opens with a direct rebuke and two paired questions about receiving the Spirit, then turns through Abraham’s belief and blessing into the law’s curse and Christ’s redemption. The argument narrows from promises to the singular seed, sets the later law beside the confirmed testament, and passes through angels and a mediator into Scripture’s enclosure of all things under sin. Faith then comes and is revealed; the pedagogue yields to sonship, baptism clothes the hearers with Christ, and all three human distinctions close in one-in-Christ identity, Abraham’s seed, and inheritance according to promise.

Governing Latin

Insensati in 3:1 is ‘senseless,’ distinct from stulti as ‘foolish’ in 3:3. The paired ex operibus legis / ex auditu fidei questions retain ‘from works of the law’ and ‘from the hearing of faith,’ while consummemini remains passive and virtutes remains concrete ‘powers.’ Credidit, fides, and credentibus remain believe/faith forms; maledictum is curse throughout; lignum is wood; justitia is justice; semen remains seed in both singular and plural argument; and testamentum remains testament. The three Latin promise nouns converge in English as promise language, with their distinct forms documented rather than silently treated as one Latin word.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 3:1 retains both ‘not to obey the truth’ and Christ ‘crucified in you.’ Verse 3:4 says ‘suffered’ and repeats ‘without cause,’ while 3:5 keeps powers rather than importing miracles. Verse 3:13 presents Christ as made a curse and the hanging place as wood. Verses 3:15 and 3:17 use testament, not covenant; 3:19 leaves the subject of ‘he had promised’ unnamed and keeps angels ‘in the hand of a mediator’; 3:22 retains ‘the faith of Jesus Christ’; and 3:28 keeps male/female, the threefold ‘there is no,’ and singular ‘one.’ No covenant-name parenthetical is introduced.

Ambiguities preserved

‘Such things’ in 3:4 does not decide whether tanta emphasizes quantity, magnitude, or the whole course of suffering. ‘The hearing of faith’ leaves the genitive relation in auditu fidei open, and ‘believing Abraham’ carries fideli without separating belief from faithfulness more sharply than the context does. In 3:19 ‘to whom he had promised’ preserves the unstated subject, while 3:20 remains the compressed statement that a mediator is not ‘of one.’ The genitive in ‘the faith of Jesus Christ’ is not converted into an explicit faith-in construction, and ‘in Christ’ remains the stated relation of the pedagogue in 3:24.

Clarity decisions

The elliptical question in 3:5 supplies only the English carrier ‘does he do so,’ leaving the giver’s identity and the two source alternatives intact. Verse 3:17 moves ‘the law’ before its relative clause so readers can hear that the law made 430 years later does not void the God-confirmed testament or empty the promise. In 3:19 one finite ‘was’ carries both the placement and angelic arrangement of the law without naming the promiser or mediator. ‘Enclosed unto that faith’ in 3:23 preserves the directional force and the future revelation instead of explaining the enclosure doctrinally.

Corrections and reasons

Review separated ‘senseless’ in 3:1 from ‘foolish’ in 3:3, preventing one Latin distinction from disappearing. It restored suffering and both ‘without cause’ clauses in 3:4, replaced an interpretive ‘miracles’ with ‘powers’ in 3:5, and restored wood in 3:13. Covenant language was removed from 3:15 and 3:17 in favor of testament; the 430-year sentence was restructured so the later law, confirmed testament, and emptied promise could not exchange roles. The final genitive review restored ‘faith of Jesus Christ’ in 3:22 and the number review restored singular ‘one’ in 3:28.

Canonical terminology

For Galatians, Deus is God; justitia is justice; lex is law; opera are works; fides is faith and credere is believe; Spiritus is Spirit; caro is flesh; semen is seed; maledictum is curse; lignum is wood; testamentum is testament; promissio, repromissio, and pollicitatio remain promise language; pædagogus is pedagogue; filii are sons; and hæredes are heirs. The faith genitives remain ‘faith of’ constructions, distinct from the explicit relative ‘faith, which is in Christ Jesus.’

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The minor heir begins indistinguishable from a servant under tutors and administrators, but the fullness of time brings God's Son, redemption, adoption of sons, the Spirit's cry, and the singular movement from servant to son to heir. Paul then contrasts former service to non-gods with renewed service to weak elements, recalls the Galatians' reception of him through bodily infirmity, and moves through wounded truth-speaking, zealous pursuit, maternal labor, and perplexity. The closing law argument sets slavewoman against freewoman, flesh against promise and spirit, and two testaments against each other before ending with expulsion, inheritance, and the freedom by which Christ freed us.

Governing Latin

The human dominus of 4:1 is 'owner,' while tutoribus and actoribus remain distinct as tutors and administrators. Repeated factum in 4:4 is repeated 'made,' and both purpose clauses of 4:5 remain audible. Perfect active cognoveritis, perfect passive cogniti sitis, and present convertimini govern the temporal and agency sequence at 4:9. Servire, servus, servitus, libera, libertate, and liberavit sustain the serving/servant/servitude/free/freedom/freed argument. The 4:13 object tentationem vestram in carne mea remains 'your trial in my flesh' across the verse break, and æmulantur / æmulemini / æmulamini is kept visibly cognate through 'zealously pursue.' Locative in monte Sina is 'on Mount Sinai' at 4:24; ancilla/libera remains slavewoman/freewoman, and testamenta remains testaments.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 4:4 says the Son was 'made from a woman, made under the law,' and 4:5 retains adoption 'of sons.' The Spirit of the Son cries as one grammatical subject in 4:6, and 4:7 retains the singular third-person servant/son/heir progression. Verse 4:9 preserves 'have come to know God—or rather, have been known by God' and the ongoing 'are you turning again.' Verses 4:13–14 keep 'your trial in my flesh' as the object the Galatians did not spurn or reject, without a diagnosis. Verse 4:21 asks whether they have read the law; 4:24 names two testaments and locates one 'on Mount Sinai' rather than importing an origin preposition; all the content of the source-editor span in 4:27 is translated while its enclosing glyphs are omitted; and the Christ-freed freedom clause remains wholly in 4:31.

Ambiguities preserved

The singular 'he' in 4:7 follows the third-person servant/son/heir grammar without deciding whether Paul has shifted to one representative heir or speaks distributively of each hearer. 'Your trial in my flesh' preserves both the possessive relation and bodily location without identifying an illness. The repeated 'zealously pursue' leaves the precise mixture of courtship, rivalry, and zeal in æmulari open. 'I am confounded in you' does not invent a reason for confundor, and the allegorical correspondences among Hagar, Sinai, present Jerusalem, and servitude are stated in the source's sequence without adding a theological map.

Clarity decisions

Verse 4:9 uses paired dashes around 'or rather, have been known by God' so perfect passive divine agency cannot be mistaken for a second human achievement; "have come to know" gives the active perfect lucid English, while "are you turning" preserves the ongoing present. The unfinished 4:13 object is carried with a final dash into the finite verbs of 4:14. In 4:19 'laboring to bear' makes the maternal force of parturio intelligible without replacing birth imagery with generic concern, and the dash into 4:20 preserves the emotional continuation. Verse 4:25 uses a semicolon and feminine 'she' to make present Jerusalem's service with her children audible after Sinai's joining relation.

Corrections and reasons

Review changed the human title in 4:1 from a divine-sounding form to ‘owner,’ distinguished tutors from administrators in 4:2, and restored both occurrences of ‘made’ in 4:4. Independent review changed 4:9 from present ‘know / are known / do ... turn’ to ‘have come to know / have been known / are ... turning,’ restoring perfect active, perfect passive, and present-progressive force; it also changed 4:24 ‘from Mount Sinai’ to ‘on Mount Sinai’ because Latin in with the ablative is locative here. Review joined 4:13 to 4:14 so the Galatians’ trial in Paul’s flesh was not dropped or replaced, harmonized all three æmulari forms as ‘zealously pursue,’ retained ‘little sons’ in 4:19, and restored the reading verb in 4:21. Testament replaced covenant in 4:24, every proposition of 4:27 was retained while only the source-editor delimiters were removed, and a boundary review fixed the freedom/freed clause in 4:31 so none of it could migrate into chapter 5.

Canonical terminology

In this argument, human dominus is owner; servire is serve; servus is servant; servitus is servitude; libera is freewoman or free according to syntax; libertas is freedom; and liberare is free. Filius remains son, filioli little sons, adoptio filiorum adoption of sons, and hæres heir. Elementa are elements, Spiritus Filii is Spirit of the Son, caro is flesh, spiritus is spirit, ancilla is slavewoman, testamenta is testaments, Jerusalem and Sinai retain their supplied names, and repromissio remains promise language. No covenant-name marker occurs in these chapters.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter opens with the command to stand outside the yoke of servitude, then follows the consequences of circumcision through debt to the entire law, emptying from Christ, hope of justice, and faith working through charity (5:1–6). Paul turns from the Galatians’ interrupted running to the corrupting persuasion and the scandal of the cross (5:7–12), recalls their call into liberty, and sets flesh against Spirit in desire and conduct (5:13–18). The manifest works of flesh and the singular fruit of the Spirit are then named without abbreviation, before crucified flesh, life and walking by the Spirit, and the rejection of vain glory close the movement (5:19–26).

Governing Latin

The English is governed by the bare imperatives State and nolite and passive jugo servitutis contineri at 5:1; the difficult Evacuati estis a Christo, a gratia excidistis, and spem justitiæ at 5:4–5; valet / operatur at 5:6; corrumpit and the repeated evacuatum at 5:9–11; bodily abscindantur at 5:12; libertatem / occasionem carnis / per caritatem Spiritus at 5:13; the mutual adversus construction and result clause ut non ... faciatis at 5:17; and the exact plural catalogues around singular Fructus ... Spiritus est at 5:19–23.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 5:1 contains only ‘Stand, and do not be held again by a yoke of servitude’ because the Clementine lane places the Christ-freed liberty clause at 4:31. The English retains ‘corrupts the whole mass’ at 5:9, plain ‘in the Lord’ at 5:10, the emptied scandal of the cross at 5:11, and the unsoftened cutting of abscindantur at 5:12. At 5:13 the Clementine-specific Spiritus remains explicit as ‘through the charity of the Spirit.’ Verses 5:19–23 preserve every named work and every one of the twelve fruit items, including homicides, modesty, continence, and chastity; non consequentur is ‘will not attain,’ not an imported inheritance verb.

Ambiguities preserved

‘Emptied from Christ’ keeps the severe and unusual Evacuati ... a Christo relation instead of silently choosing a smoother theological explanation. At 5:12 ‘might even be cut off’ preserves the passive bodily verb without adding a reflexive object or defining the extent of the cutting. ‘Sorceries’ represents veneficia in the vice catalogue without expanding it into a diagnosis or narrative, while ‘faith’ at 5:23 leaves the fides family available to its faith and fidelity resonance. The English does not define the referent of ‘the one who troubles you’ or of plain ‘Lord’ at 5:10 beyond the Latin.

Clarity decisions

At 5:2 dico vobis quoniam is recast as ‘I … tell you that’ so the condition and consequence are immediately audible. In 5:7 the negative infinitive non obedire is expressed by the idiomatic complement ‘hindered … from obeying’; adding ‘not’ after ‘from’ would reverse the source. Verse 5:10 repeats the indefinite troublemaker as ‘the one who troubles you … whoever he is’ to retain both clauses without a dangling relative. Quotation marks after the source colon at 5:14 delimit the cited love command. The purpose-result force of 5:17 is made explicit as ‘so that you do not do whatever you wish.’ Commas at 5:19–23 carry both catalogues across independently numbered verse lines, and the sentence closes only where the Latin closes it.

Corrections and reasons

Self-audit added quotation marks after the source colon at 5:14 so the one-word law citation is unmistakably delimited without adding a speaker. It also changed 5:23 ‘gentleness’ to ‘meekness’ so mansuetudo remains distinct from lenitas, ‘gentleness,’ at 6:1 under the no-flattening rule. Review rejected smoother substitutions for ‘emptied from Christ,’ generic exclusion for ‘cut off,’ omission of ‘of the Spirit’ at 5:13, and an inheritance verb at 5:21, because each would erase a difficult or Clementine-specific feature. The catalogue was recounted against the Latin after these changes: all seventeen specifically named works plus ‘things like these,’ and all twelve fruit items, are present once and in source order.

Canonical terminology

Libertas is ‘liberty’ and servitus ‘servitude’; lex is ‘law,’ justitia ‘justice,’ judicium ‘judgment,’ gratia ‘grace,’ caro ‘flesh,’ and Spiritus/spiritus is ‘Spirit’ where the divine contrast governs. Circumcisio and præputium remain ‘circumcision’ and ‘foreskin.’ Caritas is consistently ‘charity’ at 5:6, 5:13, and 5:22, while Diliges is the verb ‘love’ at 5:14. Mansuetudo is ‘meekness’ at 5:23 and remains distinct from lenitas, ‘gentleness,’ at 6:1. Fructus remains singular ‘fruit,’ and Dominus remains plain ‘Lord’ without a covenant-name parenthetical.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

Paul moves from gentle instruction of a person overtaken in an offense to mutual burdens, self-testing, and each person’s own burden (6:1–5). Catechesis and shared good things open the sowing-and-reaping sequence, which contrasts flesh and corruption with spirit and eternal life and urges unfailing good toward all, especially the household of faith (6:6–10). Paul then draws attention to his own handwriting, exposes flesh-pleasing circumcision pressure, and turns from others’ glorying in the Galatians’ flesh to glorying only in Christ’s cross (6:11–14). New creation, peace and mercy, the Israel of God, bodily stigmas, and grace with the readers’ spirit complete the letter (6:15–18).

Governing Latin

The deliberate shift from plural vos and instruite to singular considerans teipsum and tu governs 6:1. Plural onera with present portate at 6:2 is distinguished from singular onus with future portabit at 6:5. The catechizatur / catechizat pair, communicet, and in omnibus bonis govern 6:6; seminaverit / seminat / metet and deficiamus / non deficientes govern 6:8–9. Qualibus litteris, perfect scripsi, and mea manu control 6:11; repeated circumcidi and glorientur lead into absit gloriari at 6:12–14; masculine per quem, repeated super, stigmata … in corpore, and singular spiritu vestro govern 6:14–18.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 6:1 retains instruite as ‘instruct’ rather than importing a different restorative verb, and 6:6 keeps the catechize cognates visible. At 6:11 ‘what kind of letters’ leaves qualibus open and adds no claim that the letters were large; ‘I have written’ preserves the perfect scripsi. In 6:14 ‘through whom’ follows masculine per quem back to Jesus Christ rather than feminine crux. Verse 6:16 repeats ‘upon’ and leaves ‘the Israel of God’ undefined. The Christological Lord titles at 6:14, 6:17, and 6:18 are plain ‘Lord,’ and the final blessing addresses the readers’ singular collective spirit.

Ambiguities preserved

‘What kind of letters’ at 6:11 does not decide whether litteris emphasizes letter-forms or the written communication. The future-perfect force of secuti fuerint remains visible in ‘all who will have followed,’ without deciding the identity or limits of that group. The elliptic ‘peace upon them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God’ retains the repeated super and does not define whether the final phrase is appositional, additional, or otherwise related. Lowercase ‘spirit’ at 6:8 preserves the source’s contrastive spiritual sphere without inserting an explicit Holy-Spirit title absent from the row.

Clarity decisions

Verse 6:1 keeps the plural-to-singular shift audible by moving from ‘you who are spiritual’ to ‘considering yourself, lest you too be tempted.’ At 6:6 the two cognate verbs are placed on either side of the sharing relation so teacher, learner, word, and good things remain clear. The participle non deficientes at 6:9 is rendered conditionally as ‘if we do not fail’ to produce lucid English while preserving the repeated fail/fail family. An em dash at 6:12 isolates emphatic hi, ‘these,’ without changing the compellers or the persecution-avoidance purpose.

Corrections and reasons

Self-audit changed 6:9 from ‘And let us not fail … in its proper time’ to ‘But let us not fail … in its own time,’ restoring adversative autem and the reflexive force of tempore suo. It also restored initial ‘For’ at 6:12 so enim visibly connects the flesh-pleasing motive to Paul’s handwriting warning. Both corrections were rechecked against their Latin rows, adjacent verse boundaries, terminology, and read-aloud cadence.

Canonical terminology

Delictum is ‘offense,’ lenitas ‘gentleness,’ and instruere ‘instruct.’ Onera/onus remain ‘burdens/burden’ with their source number and tense distinctions. Catechizari/catechizare remain ‘be catechized/catechize’; seminare and metere are ‘sow’ and ‘reap’ throughout. Foreskin, flesh, corruption, eternal life, household of faith, cross, new creation, rule, mercy, Israel of God, body, stigmas, and grace remain concrete. Gloriari is ‘glory,’ preserving the 6:13–14 repetition, and every Dominus is plain ‘Lord.’

Ephesians — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Paul's greeting opens into a sustained blessing of the God and Father of the Lord Jesus Christ. Blessing, election, predestination, adoption of sons, grace, blood-redemption, the sacrament of God's will, restoration in Christ, calling by lot, and the Holy Spirit's pledge form one widening movement from before the world's foundation toward the fullness of times. Paul's report of faith and love then becomes prayer: a spirit of wisdom, enlightened heart-eyes, hope, inheritance, and divine power culminate in Christ raised, seated above every rule, and given as head over every church, whose body and fullness close the chapter.

Governing Latin

The blessing chain is governed by repeated in Christo, in ipso, and in quo, with God as the blessing, choosing, predestining, gracing, revealing, working, raising, subjecting, and giving agent. Gratia / gratificavit remains grace / graced; sacramentum is sacrament; dispensatio is dispensation; instaurare is restore; sorte vocati is called by lot; and ante speravimus is hoped beforehand. Spiritu promissionis Sancto remains the Holy Spirit of promise, while lowercase spiritum sapientiæ et revelationis is a spirit of wisdom and revelation. Operatio, potentia, and virtus remain operation, might, and power. The elided sæculo in sed etiam in futuro is restored as future age, and passive adimpletur governs the final 'is filled.'

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader retains all saints at Ephesus, the beloved Son at 1:6, the sacrament rather than mystery at 1:9, calling by lot at 1:11, and the pledge unto the redemption of acquisition at 1:14. It keeps the eyes of the heart, every principality, authority, power, and dominion, this age and the future age, Christ as head over every church, and the Clementine passive 'him who is filled all in all.' Every Lord reference is an explicit or Christ-governed title and therefore remains plain Lord without a covenant-name parenthetical.

Ambiguities preserved

The greeting does not decide whether saints and faithful form one appositional group or two coordinated descriptions. The referent of in ipsum at 1:5 and of eo at 1:9 is not named beyond the pronoun. Repeated in quo at 1:13 is not converted into an explicit reference to the Gospel rather than Christ. Acquisitionis at 1:14 remains the difficult acquisition genitive. The antecedent of quam operatus est remains open within the operation-might-power complex, and the final passive fullness is retained without explaining how the one referred to is filled all in all.

Clarity decisions

Commas and semicolons carry the blessing from 1:3 through 1:14 while each verse remains independently keyed. 'With the eyes of your heart enlightened' makes the accusative participial construction audible without turning it into a new finite divine action. 'Which he worked in Christ' preserves the open feminine antecedent while keeping God as agent of raising and seating. Lists use repeated conjunctions where they preserve the cumulative force without making the English unpronounceable.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review changed 'favored us' to 'graced us' at 1:6 so the gratia / gratificavit cognate remains visible, and changed 'mystery' to 'sacrament' at 1:9 so sacramentum is not collapsed into the separate mysterium family. It restored 'called by lot' at 1:11 after rejecting a generic chosen rendering, retained lowercase 'a spirit' at 1:17 rather than automatically identifying the Holy Spirit, and replaced an active 'who fills all in all' with the source-required passive 'who is filled all in all' at 1:23. Independent review changed 'in the future' to 'in the future age' at 1:21 because futuro elliptically repeats sæculo from the contrasted first clause; restoring age preserves the complete temporal pair.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; every Dominus in the chapter is a plain Christological Lord. Gratia is grace, gratificare is grace as a verb, caritas is charity, dilectio is love, veritas is truth, Evangelium is Gospel, sacramentum is sacrament, dispensatio is dispensation, pignus is pledge, hæreditas is inheritance, and sæculum is age in the 1:21 temporal pair. In cælestibus is in heavenly places. Principatus, potestas, virtus, and dominatio are principality, authority, power, and dominion. Ecclesia is church, corpus body, caput head, and spiritum at 1:17 remains lowercase while the Holy Spirit of promise is capitalized.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter begins in suspension with the readers dead in offenses and sins and walking under the age, prince, spirit, desires, and wrath of their former life. God then enters as the rich-in-mercy subject who loves, makes alive together, raises together, and seats together in Christ, so that coming ages may display grace. Salvation by grace through faith turns into God's workmanship walking in prepared good works. The Gentiles' former distance from Christ, Israel, testaments, promise, and God gives way to nearness in Christ's blood. Christ himself becomes peace: wall and enmities are dissolved, law emptied, two created as one new man, both reconciled through the cross, and peace evangelized. Access to the Father closes in a building movement from citizens and household to foundation, cornerstone, temple, and habitation in the Spirit.

Governing Latin

Et vos remains a suspended accusative from 2:1 until inclusive nos receives the finite convivificavit at 2:5. Repeated in quibus moves from offenses and sins toward the sons of distrust without losing the echo. Misericordia is mercy; nimia caritas is exceeding charity; dilexit is loved; and the con- verbs remain made alive together, raised together, and made to sit together. Gratia estis salvati repeats exactly at 2:5 and 2:8, but 2:5 uniquely retains cujus as 'by whose grace.' In operibus bonis and in illis remain in good works and in them. Utraque, duos, and ambos progress from neuter both to the two and masculine both; solvens, evacuans, and interficiens remain dissolving, emptying, and slaying.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader leaves 2:1 unfinished and does not import a finite 'made you alive.' It keeps the prince of the power of this air, the operating spirit, sons of distrust, and sons of wrath without identifying the prince. It retains 'by whose grace you are saved,' creation in good works, foreskin, plural testaments, the singular hope of the promise, and being without God. The wall is the middle wall of the enclosure; law is emptied in decrees; enmities are slain in Christ himself; and Christ evangelizes peace. Every constructed building grows into a holy temple in the plain Christological Lord.

Ambiguities preserved

The repeated in quibus may move from offenses and sins to the sons of distrust, so the English uses 'in which' and then 'among whom' while documenting the echo. The spirit associated with the prince is not named or doctrinally identified. Neuter hoc at 2:8 remains 'this,' without being assigned solely to grace or faith. Conversatio Israël is rendered contextually as commonwealth because the clause concerns corporate belonging rather than personal conduct, while the editorial records the departure. Decretis remains the compact 'in decrees,' and the precise apposition among wall, enclosure, enmities, and flesh is not expanded. Cives sanctorum becomes citizens with the saints for lucid social English without changing their shared civic status.

Clarity decisions

Lowercase openings and trailing punctuation carry the suspended 2:1-7 construction without duplicating God's subject or prematurely completing 'you.' The parenthesis at 2:5 keeps the relative grace statement distinct from the main co-enlivening verb. At 2:11-12, a colon preserves the unusual remember-that / because sequence. Verses 2:14-16 use participles and purpose clauses to hold peace, wall, law, one new man, reconciliation, cross, and slain enmities together. Verses 2:19-22 preserve one continuous household-and-building movement with repeated 'in whom.'

Corrections and reasons

Draft review removed an invented 'he made you alive' from 2:1 so the suspended accusative survives until the inclusive action at 2:5. It replaced 'sons of disobedience' with 'sons of distrust' for diffidentiæ, restored the relative 'by whose grace' at 2:5, and changed 'created for good works' to 'created in good works' at 2:10. 'Covenants' was rejected for plural testamentorum in favor of testaments. 'Destroyed the hostility' was revised to 'slaying the enmities in himself' so plural inimicitias, violent interficiens, and the reflexive relation all remain.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God, misericordia mercy, caritas charity, diligere love, gratia grace, fides faith, donum gift, opera works, and gloriari glory. Delictum is offense, peccatum sin, caro flesh, diffidentia distrust, and ira wrath. Præputium is foreskin, circumcisio circumcision, testamenta testaments, promissio promise, sanguis blood, and crux cross. The building family remains foundation, cornerstone, building, build together, temple, and habitation. Spirit is capitalized for the one Spirit of access and God's habitation; the operating spirit at 2:2 remains lowercase. Dominus at 2:21 is plain Lord because Christ Jesus is its governing referent.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Paul opens with an unfinished statement about his imprisonment for the Gentiles, enters a disclosure about the revealed sacrament and his Gospel ministry, then restarts his opening phrase as a prayer to the Father. The prayer moves from strengthening through the Spirit and Christ dwelling in hearts to charity, comprehension, knowledge, and God's fullness, and closes with glory in the church and in Christ Jesus.

Governing Latin

The repeated Hujus rei gratia governs both the suspended 3:1 fragment and the finite restart at 3:14. Si tamen, dispensatio, sacramentum, mysterium, the three co-compounds of 3:6, factus sum, investigabiles, praefinitio saeculorum, per fidem ejus, paternitas, in interiorem hominem, the rooted and founded participles, and the suspended Ei ... ipsi gloria construction determine the English syntax and terms.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader retains sacrament at 3:3 and 3:9 but mystery at 3:4; sons of men; all enlightened; the sacrament hidden from the ages in God who created all things; foreordination of the ages; through his faith; every fatherhood; objectless width, length, height, and depth; charity surpassing knowledge; and the singular age of ages.

Ambiguities preserved

The relative in 3:2 remains attached to the dispensation-of-grace phrase, in you is not converted into an explicit purpose, the Spirit relations retain their Latin prepositions, the four dimensions gain no supplied object, his faith remains genitival, and the singular which is your glory is not regularized to the plural tribulations. The relation of strengthening into the inner man remains directional rather than explained.

Clarity decisions

A comma leaves 3:1 visibly unfinished. Lowercase continuation at 3:2 shows the intervening disclosure, while 3:14 begins a new finite sentence. Content clauses make the 3:5-6 definition readable without adding a proposition; 3:17 supplies an English that-clause for the dependent Christ-dwelling infinitive; and the dative doxology is visibly carried from 3:20 into 3:21.

Corrections and reasons

During drafting, 3:1 was kept as a fragment instead of receiving a verb from 3:14; this prevents an invented long-range completion. Provisional mystery language at 3:3 and 3:9 was corrected to sacrament to preserve the source distinction from 3:4. The 3:12 faith-in interpretation was rejected for his faith, family was rejected for fatherhood at 3:15, and an explanatory object was removed from the dimensions at 3:18. Whole-book review corrected an editorial miscount from three dimensions to four, agreeing with the unchanged width, length, height, and depth reader text.

Canonical terminology

God, plain Lord, Spirit, church, Gospel, grace, dispensation, sacrament, mystery, faith, charity, power, operation, foreordination, fatherhood, inner man, saints, apostles, prophets, Gentiles, body, fullness, and age remain the chapter's governing forms. Hujus rei gratia is for this reason rather than theological grace, and no Lord occurrence receives a covenant-name parenthetical.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Paul turns from the doxology to a worthy walk in one Spirit, Lord, faith, baptism, God, and Father. Christ's measured gifts lead through ascent and descent to ministries, the completion of the saints, and the body's growth. Paul contrasts Gentile darkness with learning Christ and putting on the new man, then gives concrete commands governing truth, anger, theft, speech, the Holy Spirit, malice, mercy, and forgiveness.

Governing Latin

The calling and called cognate, the three Unum/Unus/Una declarations, Christ's gift, the unnamed dicit, captivam duxit captivitatem, descendit primum, completion and edification language, aetatis, Veritatem facientes, the whole body as subject of facit, desperantes, the 4:20-22 learned-Christ infinitive chain, lowercase spiritu mentis, justitia, the imperatives at 4:26, qui furabatur, aedificationem fidei, and donantes/donavit govern the final wording.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader retains in us all; captivity led captive; Christ also descending first into the lower parts of the earth; completion rather than equipping; the age of Christ's fullness; doing the truth in charity; the body making its own growth; Gentiles having despaired; learning Christ and hearing him; justice and holiness of truth; the former thief; edification of faith; and grace given to hearers.

Ambiguities preserved

The gift of Christ is not forced to mean only giver or gift, the lower parts of the earth receive no doctrinal geography, pastors and teachers are not declared either identical or separate personnel, meeting into unity receives no invented object, desires and circumvention of error retain their genitives, and God in Christ forgiving remains in the source relation. Human spirit at 4:23 remains distinct from the Holy Spirit.

Clarity decisions

The three one-statements remain separately punctuated. Curly quotation marks delimit only the ascent, captivity, and gifts saying after the impersonal it says at 4:8. English role markers make the people Christ gave readable without changing the catalogue. The carried ministry construction remains open through 4:14, the head-body relative remains open through 4:16, and 4:20-22 remains a single learned-and-taught construction. A full stop after 4:27 prevents the generic former thief from being attached to the devil.

Corrections and reasons

During drafting, an interpretive speaker name was excluded from 4:8 because dicit supplies none; quotation marks were then added around only the saying because the source colon explicitly presents direct speech and the marks clarify its boundary without naming a speaker. Whole-book review changed he says to impersonal it says so the identical unnamed dicit formula agrees with 5:14, and normalized this quotation's typography to the book's curly marks without changing its boundary. Equipping was corrected to completion at 4:12, stature to age at 4:13, speaking truth to doing the truth at 4:15, and callousness to having despaired at 4:19. Christ was removed as the finite growth-agent at 4:16 so the whole body remains the subject. The thief boundary was separated at 4:27-28, and need-based speech language was corrected to edification of faith and grace at 4:29.

Canonical terminology

God, plain Lord, Spirit, Holy Spirit, lowercase spirit, faith, charity, grace, truth, justice, church, body, head, members, calling, unity, gift, completion, ministry, edification, old man, new man, sense, understanding, mind, mercy, and forgiveness remain distinct. All Lord occurrences are Christological and the covenant-name parenthetical count is zero.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from imitating God and walking in Christ's self-giving love into a guarded life of holiness and light. It then unfolds life filled with the Holy Spirit through speech, song, thanksgiving, and mutual subjection, before applying Christ-and-church imagery to wives and husbands and closing with the great sacrament, the husband's love, and the wife's fear.

Governing Latin

The linked imperatives Estote and ambulate carry 5:1 into 5:2. The Clementine phrase fructus lucis governs 5:9. At 5:18-21, implemini is unfolded by loquentes, cantantes, psallentes, gratias agentes, and subjecti, so the English preserves one continuous Spirit-filling construction. The two purpose clauses introduced by ut in 5:26-27 retain Christ's sanctifying and presenting actions, while de carne ejus et de ossibus ejus in 5:30 keeps the full bodily repetition.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text retains fruit of light at 5:9, Holy Spirit at 5:18, word of life at 5:26, from his flesh and from his bones at 5:30, sacrament rather than mystery at 5:32, and the wife's fear rather than a softened substitute at 5:33. Oblation and sacrifice remain distinct at 5:2, together with the concrete odor of sweetness.

Ambiguities preserved

The subject of dicit in 5:14 remains unidentified through the impersonal wording it says. The compressed ipse, salvator corporis ejus at 5:23 remains he, the savior of his body rather than receiving an explanatory identity or relation. In Christ and in the church at 5:32 is left without an added doctrinal explanation.

Clarity decisions

At 5:5, whose avarice makes the neuter quod's conceptual reference grammatical in English without changing servitude to idols. At 5:12, the Latin's impersonal turpe est is led by it is shameful, allowing quæ to remain the things done in secret rather than turning those things into a plural grammatical subject. At 5:24, are subject supplies the predicate required by English from the Latin comparison. At 5:29, nourishes and cherishes is repeated for the elliptical Christ-and-church comparison so the action remains immediately intelligible.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 5:2 from into an odor to for an odor, preventing an unintended claim that the offering transformed into an odor. It changed 5:5 from which is servitude to idols to whose avarice is servitude to idols, preventing the person from being equated grammatically with an abstract servitude. It restored Latin's visible plural-to-singular movement at 5:13 by changing the first everything to all things. It added also and own at 5:33 to retain et vos and the distributive suam/suum relationship. Independent review changed 5:12 from the things being a plural subject that are shameful to the source's impersonal it is shameful to speak of them, restoring turpe est and improving first-hearing grammar. A proposed normalization of 5:20 to God the Father was rejected; God and Father keeps both coordinated dative titles in Deo et Patri and does not silently delete et.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; divine and Christological Dominus is plain Lord, with no Lord (YHWH) parenthetical in Ephesians. Justitia is justice, ecclesia is church, sacramentum is sacrament, and the dilectio/diligere family uses love. Sons, wives, husbands, body, flesh, and bones remain concrete and sexed where the Latin supplies them.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The household instruction continues across the chapter boundary with children and fathers, then servants and human masters under the one heavenly Lord. The chapter turns to strengthening, God's armor, wrestling, repeated standing, and all-embracing prayer; it then narrows to Paul's Gospel embassy in a chain, Tychicus's commission, and a closing gift of peace, charity with faith, and grace in incorruption.

Governing Latin

Mandatum primum in promissione controls the unaltered first commandment in promise at 6:2. Human dominis/domini at 6:5 and 6:9 are distinguished from the divine Dominus. The passive confortamini becomes be strengthened, potentia is might, virtus is power, and the stare/State sequence is retained at 6:11, 6:13, and 6:14. In omnibus perfecti at 6:13 and in omnibus sumentes at 6:16 remain distinct phrases. Cum fiducia at 6:19 is with boldness, preserving the book's distinction from confidentia as confidence at 3:12, while the participles through the prayer chain keep the armor, vigilance, speech, mystery, and embassy connected.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation retains first commandment in promise at 6:2, masters according to the flesh and service from the soul at 6:5-6, acceptance of persons at 6:9, spiritual things of wickedness in heavenly places at 6:12, perfected in all things at 6:13, and in all things at 6:16. It adds neither belt nor shoes at 6:14-15, retains speech given with boldness at 6:19, preserves one singular chain at 6:20, and closes in incorruption at 6:24.

Ambiguities preserved

Lowercase spirit and the pronoun it in 6:18 preserve the openness of in spiritu and in ipso without forcing a divine or merely human identification. At 6:20, for which and in it retain the grammatical openness of pro quo and in ipso to the mystery or Gospel rather than introducing an unexpressed personal referent.

Clarity decisions

Masters according to the flesh at 6:5 identifies dominis carnalibus as human household masters while leaving Christ as the comparison. The English keeps the concrete phrases serving to the eye and pleasers of humans at 6:6. In 6:17, the compact parenthesis which is the word of God preserves the source's identification without expanding it. At 6:20, dare to speak as I ought joins audeam directly to loqui in lucid English while for which and in it leave both pro quo and in ipso open; perform an embassy keeps the official legation image rather than replacing it with a generic imprisonment statement.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 6:5 from as Christ to as to Christ so the dative Christo and the direction of service are clear. It changed 6:6 from as if pleasing humans to as pleasers of humans, restoring the concrete participial description rather than suggesting a hypothetical result. It shortened 6:8 from whether he is servant or free to whether servant or free, removing an unnecessary supplied clause while preserving both social states. Independent review changed 6:10 from power of his might to might of his power so identical potentia virtutis agrees with Ephesians 1:19 and does not reverse the book's established mapping. It changed 6:20 from may dare, as I ought to speak to may dare to speak as I ought, attaching audeam directly to the expressed loqui while preserving the manner clause. Whole-book review changed with confidence to with boldness at 6:19 so fiducia remains distinct from confidentia, matching the established boldness/confidence pair at 3:12.

Canonical terminology

Human dominus is master at 6:5 and 6:9; every divine or Christological Dominus remains plain Lord, and Ephesians contains zero Lord (YHWH) forms. Deus is God, justitia is justice, caritas is charity, mysterium is mystery, evangelium is Gospel, potentia is might, virtus is power, fiducia is boldness, confidentia is confidence, and in caelestibus is in heavenly places. Armor, shield, missiles, helmet, sword, wrestling, and chain remain concrete recurring images.

Philippians — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Paul and Timothy greet all the saints at Philippi with their bishops and deacons, but Paul then becomes the sustained singular voice. His remembrance becomes joyful petition for their communion in Christ's Gospel and confidence in the work God will perfect. Heart, bonds, Gospel defense, and the bowels of Jesus Christ lead into prayer for charity, knowledge, every sense, and the fruit of justice. Paul's bonds have advanced the Gospel: Christ is preached from opposed motives, yet Paul rejoices and expects salvation, boldness, and Christ magnified in his body through life or death. Pressed between being dissolved with Christ and remaining for the readers, he chooses their progress and joy of faith, then commands conduct worthy of the Gospel: one spirit, one soul, common labor, fearlessness, and the same Christ-given struggle.

Governing Latin

The 1:3-5 thanksgiving is one construction governed by Gratias ago, with semper, cunctis, omnibus, cum gaudio, and super communicatione retaining its all-and-joy scope. Perficiet preserves the perfection of the good work. At 1:7 sicut and hoc sentire continue Paul's confidence, while habeam governs the heart relation and the compressed socios gaudii mei omnes vos esse. Visceribus remains bowels; caritas is charity; scientia and omni sensu remain knowledge and every sense; and singular fructu justitiae is fruit of justice. The prison sequence keeps vincula, praetorium, confidentes, abundantius, and verbum Dei distinct. Subministratio is ministration, fiducia boldness, corpus body, and per vitam / per mortem through life / through death. Coarctor, dissolvi, multo magis melius, conversamini, uno spiritu, unanimes, collaborantes, causa, donatum, and certamen govern the final movement.

Vulgate-specific readings

The chapter keeps companions of Paul's joy at 1:7 rather than importing a grace-sharing formula, and preserves Jesus Christ's concrete bowels at 1:8. It retains knowledge and every sense, the singular fruit of justice, the things around Paul, and the entire praetorium without naming a palace, guard, court, or other institution. The Clementine motive order remains: charity and Gospel defense at 1:16, contention and pressure on Paul's bonds at 1:17. At 1:18 Christ is announced through pretext or truth, making the contextual contrast in per occasionem / per veritatem intelligible. The Spirit is specifically the Spirit of Jesus Christ; Christ is magnified in Paul's body; being dissolved with Christ is far, far better; and the closing appeal retains both Gospel occurrences, one lowercase spirit, one-souled, collaborating, cause of destruction and salvation, and both believing and suffering as given.

Ambiguities preserved

The exact character of communion in the Gospel at 1:5 is not reduced to money, preaching, or sentiment. At 1:7 the compact relation among Paul's heart, bonds, Gospel defense and confirmation, and all the readers as companions of his joy is made grammatical without changing its companions-of-joy predicate. Praetorium is transliterated so the Latin does not decide a modern institution or precise location. Pretext at 1:18 conveys occasio in direct contrast with truth but does not invent the particular false claim or add a motive beyond the preceding contention, and this at 1:19 retains its prior-discourse scope. The compressed conditional and demonstrative at 1:22 remain compressed, while 1:23's comparison retains intensity without supplying its elided proposition. At 1:28 which and this remain open rather than being assigned a single antecedent; one spirit at 1:27 stays lowercase and doctrinally unexpanded.

Clarity decisions

Commas carry the single thanksgiving through 1:3-5 and confidence through 1:6-7 without converting verse fragments into independent claims. At 1:7 English repeats because and supplies finite are for the second coordinated relation so the compact accusative-infinitive becomes audible while heart, bonds, defense, confirmation, all the readers, and companions of joy remain exact. The 1:9-11 purpose clauses are carried with a colon, comma, and semicolon so charity's abundance reaches testing, sincerity, nonoffense, and fruit. The 1:12-14 result construction preserves the bonds as subject and cause and uses would dare for the imperfect result verb. Verses 1:15-17 use colon and fragment continuity to keep the alternating groups and Clementine order. At 1:27 the present/absent parenthesis is placed inside the so-that clause, leaving stand as the main result; 1:28-30 remain one carried explanation of fearlessness, divine giving, and shared struggle.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review replaced a generic partnership at 1:5 with communion so communicatio remains distinct from collaboration and ministration. It changed a first-pass grace-sharing reading at 1:7 to companions of my joy because the frozen Clementine source is socios gaudii mei, then repeated because so the heart relation and the bonds-defense-confirmation relation remain distinct without losing the all-you accusative-infinitive. It restored bowels at 1:8 instead of an abstract affection, replaced an institutional explanation of praetorium with the source term itself, and changed dared to would dare at 1:14 so the imperfect auderent remains inside the ita ut result while vinculis meis stays the cause of confidence. It kept the supplied 1:16-17 motive order rather than familiar reordering and capitalized Spirit only where Spiritus Jesu Christi identifies the divine referent. It replaced a flattened better at 1:23 with far, far better to preserve multo magis melius, kept gratulatio as rejoicing rather than gaudium's joy or grace, restored one-souled and collaborating at 1:27, and removed an inferred antecedent at 1:28 so both relative pronouns remain open. Independent review restored but at 1:18 because sed retains the contrast between present and future rejoicing, and changed now hear at 1:30 to have now heard because audistis is perfect. Whole-book review changed occasion to pretext at 1:18 because the direct contrast with veritatem and the preceding insincere proclamation make the contextual sense clear without inventing a particular pretense. It also removed both before saw: English coordination already preserves the paired completed reports, while you both could falsely limit the plural congregation to two addressees.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God, and the two Dominus occurrences are explicit or Christ-governed Lord with no YHWH parenthetical. Gratia is grace, gratias ago is give thanks, donatum is has been given, caritas is charity, justum is just, justitia is justice, Evangelium is Gospel, and verbum Dei is word of God. Communicatio is communion, subministratio ministration, and collaborare collaborate; gaudium is joy and gratulatio rejoicing. Vincula is bonds, praetorium praetorium, occasio is contextually pretext against truth, pressura is pressure, corpus body, caro flesh, viscera bowels, lucrum gain, opus work, and certamen struggle. Confidere is be confident while fiducia is boldness. Spiritus Jesu Christi is capitalized Spirit; uno spiritu remains lowercase spirit. Conversari is conduct oneself here, unanimes is one-souled, salus is salvation, and perditio is destruction.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Paul's fourfold conditional appeal moves into shared charity, one-souled humility, and attention to others. Christ's form of God, self-emptying, servant form, human likeness and bearing, obedience, cross-death, exaltation, and glory establish the pattern for the readers' obedient work. Paul then turns from salvation worked under God's action to his own sacrifice, Timothy's tested service, and Epaphroditus's near-death service, closing with joy and honor.

Governing Latin

The four Si clauses remain open until implete; idem, eamdem, unanimes, and idipsum preserve the same-and-one sequence. Hoc ... in vobis, quod et in Christo Jesu governs the Christ passage, while forma Dei, rapinam, semetipsum exinanivit, forma servi, similitudo, habitus, the doubled mortem, and the purpose clauses through 2:11 determine its texture. Operamini and operatur keep human work beside God's action; immolor, sacrificium, obsequium, experimentum, vestrum ... apostolum, and tradens animam suam govern the coworkers section.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader retains bowels of compassion; charity; one-souled; robbery without a supplied theory; form of God and form of servant distinct from likeness and bearing; beings below rather than a punitive hell; and the Lord Jesus Christ is in the glory of God the Father. It also keeps hesitations, the singular crooked and perverse nation followed by among whom, lights in the world, the word of life held, Paul sacrificed rather than poured out, the paired rejoice and rejoice together, your apostle, minister of my necessity, and Epaphroditus delivering his soul.

Ambiguities preserved

Lowercase fellowship of spirit does not decide whether spirit is human, communal, or explicitly divine. Being equal to God is not assigned a theory of seizure or retention beyond rapinam, and pro bona voluntate remains for good will without an invented possessive. The difficult shift from singular nationis to plural inter quos remains visible as nation and among whom; holding does not expand continentes into proclamation; and what was lacking from the readers is not turned into a moral accusation.

Clarity decisions

The first English there is carries across all four if clauses before the command in 2:2. Doing is supplied at 2:3 to make the elliptical prohibition grammatical, while the participles continue through 2:4; the things belonging to others gives `ea quæ aliorum` complete contemporary English without adding an also. At 2:5 disposition gives sentite a lucid English object while retaining this, which, and both in-relations without specifying the disposition's content. Bearing gives habitu its outward-condition sense without the modern routine or clothing senses of habit and remains distinct from form and likeness. Lowercase continuations at 2:10, 2:15, 2:16, 2:26, and 2:30 preserve open syntax across verse boundaries; purpose and causal connectors remain audible rather than becoming detached verse statements.

Corrections and reasons

Draft refinement removed an added also from 2:4 because the Latin contrasts one's own things directly with those of others, and replaced the emotionally narrow feel this at 2:5 with have this disposition while preserving the `Hoc ... quod` ellipsis. Whole-book review recast the dangling possessive those that are others' as the things belonging to others, preserving `ea quæ aliorum` while making the contrast immediately grammatical. A proposed grasping explanation at 2:6 was rejected in favor of robbery, and a generic appearance was not allowed to collapse forma, similitudo, and habitus. Whole-book review changed in habit found to found in bearing at 2:7 because modern habit falsely suggests routine or clothing, while bearing conveys outward condition and keeps all three Latin nouns distinct. The familiar to-the-glory wording at 2:11 was corrected to is in the glory; own was rejected after your at 2:12 because vestram has no added intensifier; and his was excluded from good will at 2:13. Poured-out language was rejected for sacrificed at 2:17, and congratulate was refined to rejoice together with at 2:17-18 so the shared action remains without modern achievement-praise. Messenger was rejected for your apostle at 2:25, and risked his life was replaced by the concrete delivering his soul at 2:30.

Canonical terminology

Charity renders caritas; one-souled renders both unanimes and unanimem in this chapter; form, likeness, and bearing remain distinct; salvation is worked by the readers while God works willing and accomplishing; murmurings and hesitations remain plural; rejoice and rejoice together keep gaudere and congratulari distinct; sacrifice, service, proof, Gospel, apostle, necessity, soul, and honor remain separate. Lord is plain and Christological, spirit stays lowercase at 2:1, and no covenant-name parenthetical is used.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter opens with rejoicing and a threefold warning, then sets true circumcision against confidence in flesh. Paul orders his inherited credentials, declares every gain loss and dung for Christ, and pursues knowledge, resurrection, and the prize without claiming completion. The close turns from shared pattern and weeping warning to the common life in the heavens and Christ's re-forming of the body of humility.

Governing Latin

The deliberate pair concisionem/circumcisio governs 3:2-3, while fiduciam at 3:3 is kept distinct from confidentiam/confidere at 3:4. The repeated gain-and-loss network lucra, detrimenta, detrimentum, and lucrifaciam controls 3:7-8. At 3:12-14, comprehendam/comprehensus/comprehendisse remains one English take-hold family, Unum autem is left suspended, and the forgetting and extending participles receive persequor only in 3:14. Perfectus/perfecti remains visible across 3:12 and 3:15; sapitis remains in the mind family; the complete idem/eadem same-mind and same-rule clause remains; and confusio is contextual shame rather than modern bewilderment.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader retains concision beside circumcision, concrete dung, justice from faith of Christ Jesus rather than an imported faith-in phrase, the resurrection from the dead, and both halves of the Clementine same-rule clause. It also retains another-mind wording for sapitis, shame for confusio, the body of our humility, the body of his glory, the operation of Christ, and the plural heavens. Common life represents conversatio without importing an institutional noun as though only one nuance were possible.

Ambiguities preserved

At 3:11, if in some way keeps the uncertainty attached to manner. At 3:12, received receives no supplied object, that in which leaves in quo open, and Christ Jesus remains the agent who took hold of Paul. At 3:13, But one thing preserves the suspended phrase rather than inventing its missing predicate. At 3:20, common life leaves conversatio open to associated life, conduct, and citizenship rather than falsely fixing one modern category.

Clarity decisions

At 3:4, I have more supplies only the confidence already stated in the comparison. At 3:18, declared ... to be gives dico its accusative predicate in lucid English, while the source's parenthesis retains Paul's present declaration and weeping voice. At 3:19, lowercase god and the possessive their make the belly, not God, the false referent; shame makes confusio's dishonor clear instead of suggesting mental bewilderment. At 3:21, to be conformed marks configuratum as the result of Christ's future reforming rather than implying that the body is already conformed.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 3:8 from Indeed to Nevertheless to preserve the adversative force of Verumtamen. It changed 3:13 from and extending to but extending so vero's contrast with forgetting remains visible. It changed 3:18 from walk as enemies to many walk whom Paul declares to be enemies, restoring quos ... dico inimicos as a speech predicate rather than a manner of walking. It changed 3:21 from an ambiguous comma before conformed to to be conformed, making configuratum the result of Christ's future reforming. Whole-book review changed comprehend/comprehended/comprehended to take hold of/was taken hold of/have taken hold so the repeated comprehendere family conveys capture or attainment rather than suggesting that Christ intellectually understood Paul; that in which still gives only minimal English support for open in quo. It changed perceive anything otherwise to in anything be of another mind so sapitis remains visibly linked to sapere's mind-family, and changed confusion to shame because confusio denotes dishonor here and modern confusion falsely suggests bewilderment. A familiar faith in Christ Jesus was rejected at 3:9 because the supplied genitive is fide ... Christi Jesu; citizenship alone was rejected at 3:20 because conversatio retains a wider common-life range.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God, except that the belly is lower-case god in 3:19; every Dominus is plain Lord with no YHWH parenthetical. Lowercase spirit is retained at 3:3. Justitia is justice, faith remains distinct from reliance and confidence, sapere remains a mind-family, confusio is shame here, and gain, losses, dung, pattern, cross, common life, heavens, body, humility, glory, and operation remain concrete and recurring source terms.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Because Christ can subject all things, the chapter begins by calling the dearest brothers to stand, two named women to one mind, and an unnamed genuine companion to help Gospel laborers. Rejoicing, modesty, prayer, peace, disciplined thought, and practiced action lead into Paul's reflourishing joy, learned sufficiency, and strength. The final movement receives the Philippians' gifts in accounting language and as fragrant sacrifice, then closes with every desire, doxology, greetings, and grace.

Governing Latin

Itaque carries 3:21 directly into 4:1. Rogo and deprecor remain separate appeals at 4:2, and singular te, germane compar governs the unnamed companion at 4:3. At 4:7, omnem sensum remains every sense and intelligentias remains plural understandings. The six repeated quæcumque and two siqua clauses shape 4:8, including laus disciplinæ. Refloruistis and the two sentire forms govern 4:10, while passive institutus sum remains inside the 4:12 parenthesis and satiari remains sated rather than collapsing into later repletus sum. Ratio governs the accounts at 4:15 and 4:17, and datum remains distinct from fructum and the accepted sacrifice at 4:17-18.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader retains genuine companion without a name, every sense and plural understandings, praise of discipline, reflourished, occupied without an invented cause, passively initiated in all things, and sated against hunger. It adds no Christ to the unnamed him of 4:13. The account of giving and receiving, once and twice, for my use, fruit in your account, odor of sweetness, accepted sacrifice, and every desire preserve the Clementine financial and sacrificial wording.

Ambiguities preserved

The identity of the genuine companion at 4:3 remains unstated, while whose names leaves quorum's scope open across the women, Clement, and the other helpers. The Lord is near at 4:5 receives no added identification. At 4:10, occupied receives neither an object nor an invented missed opportunity. Him at 4:13 remains unnamed, and every desire at 4:19 is not normalized to material need.

Clarity decisions

At 4:3, those women makes the feminine illas/quæ visible in English without naming them beyond the source. At 4:10, concern and concerned retain the repeated relational disposition of sentire pro me while reflourished keeps the concrete renewal image. At 4:11, circumstances supplies lucid support for the compressed in quibus sum. Initiated retains the marked passive institutus sum as experiential schooling, not a secret rite, while sated gives satiari clear satiety force against hunger and remains distinct from filled for repletus sum. At 4:18, having received unfolds the ablative acceptis while keeping Epaphroditus, the sent things, odor, sacrifice, and God in their source relations. At 4:22, the brothers who are with me is kept as one subject so punctuation does not invent another greeting group.

Corrections and reasons

Self-review changed 4:3 from the colloquial Yes to Indeed so Etiam is retained without inventing a spoken affirmation. It changed 4:10 from thought/thinking to concern/concerned so pro me reads as a relational disposition while the two sentire forms remain visibly paired. It changed 4:11 from as though because of lack to as though it were because of lack, improving first-hearing grammar while preserving the stated cause. Whole-book review retained initiated for passive institutus sum but documented its experiential, non-ritual sense; it changed filled to sated for satiari so the hunger contrast remains exact and the term does not collapse into repletus sum at 4:18. It changed the second seek at 4:17 to look for so quæro and requiro are not needlessly flattened. Adding Christ at 4:13 was rejected because eo supplies only an unnamed pronoun; changing every desire to every need at 4:19 was rejected because desiderium, not penuria or necessitas, governs the clause.

Canonical terminology

Every divine or Christological Dominus is plain Lord; Deus is God, and 4:5 receives no YHWH expansion. Evangelium is Gospel, spirit remains lower-case at 4:23, modestia is modesty, sensus is sense, intelligentia is understanding, and disciplina is discipline. Initiated, sated, filled, gift, fruit, account, use, abundance, lack, desire, odor, and sacrifice remain distinct; rejoicing, reflourishing, and dearest language preserve their own source families.

Colossians — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Paul and Timothy's address runs across 1:1-2, and 1:3 moves from grace and peace into sustained plural thanksgiving and prayer. Hearing of faith and love leads through the hope stored in the heavens to the Gospel's arrival, fruit, and growth; prayer then asks for recognition, worthy walking, fruit, strength, patience, joy, and thanksgiving. The Father rescues and transfers, and the chapter centers on the Son as image, firstborn, creator, prior one, head, beginning, bearer of primacy and fullness, and the one through whom reconciliation and peace proceed. The readers' former alienation gives way to conditional steadfastness, after which Paul names his joy in suffering, his ministry of God's word, the mystery now manifested, this sacrament among the nations, the repeated work toward every person, and his labor under divine operation.

Governing Latin

The thanksgiving-prayer chain is governed by `audientes`, `propter spem`, successive relatives, and the carried participles from 1:3 through 1:8; 1:9-12 continues with `ut impleamini`, `ut ambuletis`, and further participles rather than independent exhortations. The distinct mental terms govern recognition (`agnitio`), wisdom (`sapientia`), spiritual understanding (`intellectus spiritalis`), and knowledge (`scientia`). At 1:16 the exact sequence is `in ipso ... per ipsum et in ipso`; at 1:20 it is `per eum ... in ipsum`, so the English keeps in, through, in, then through and into. The impersonal-looking `complacuit ... inhabitare ... reconciliare` chain does not name the pleased or reconciling agent, while `pacificans` retains active peace-making. The difficult `ea quae desunt passionum Christi` remains what is lacking of Christ's sufferings, and the three occurrences of `omnem hominem` remain the same singular phrase every person.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine `per sanguinem ejus` at 1:14 is present as through his blood and is not omitted. The kingdom belongs to the Son of the Father's love, the firstborn is of every creature, and 1:16 preserves creation in him, through him, and in him. Reconciliation at 1:20 is through him and into him, not a substituted prepositional sequence. The genitive `corporis Ecclesiae` remains the body of the Church, and `in universa creatura` remains preached in every creature under heaven. Most visibly, `mysterium` at 1:26 is mystery while `sacramenti hujus` at 1:27 is this sacrament; the Clementine alternation is not normalized.

Ambiguities preserved

Lowercase spirit at 1:8 leaves `in spiritu` open without inserting a divine title. At 1:19-20 the English supplies no Father, Son, fullness, or other subject for the unexpressed agent behind what was pleasing and the active reconciliation; the carried infinitive construction remains deliberately marked. At 1:21, enemies in mind in evil works preserves two `in` relations without converting either into an invented cause. At 1:24 no explanation defines why anything is lacking of Christ's sufferings or how Paul's flesh relates doctrinally to that lack. At 1:27 the compressed Christ-in-you and hope-of-glory apposition remains compressed, and at 1:29 in this leaves the scope of `in quo` broad while his is not expanded into a named antecedent.

Clarity decisions

The colon after 1:1 and lowercase continuation at 1:2 keep the address intact, while 1:3 uses a full stop between greeting and thanksgiving without losing either clause. At 1:6 the supplied auxiliary in 'just as it does in you' makes the Latin ellipsis grammatical while keeping fruit and growth as the repeated actions. At 1:10 pleasing in all things leaves the pleasing object unexpressed, as `per omnia placentes` does, while the context still follows worthily of God. At 1:12 part of the saints' lot keeps `partem` and genitive `sortis sanctorum` distinct without replacing the concrete lot with an inheritance gloss. `Condita sunt` is rendered were brought into being and `creata sunt` were created so the two Latin verbs do not disappear into one English token. A semicolon at 1:18 prevents he from being mistaken as a relative of Church. The colon at 1:19 carries the unnamed pleasing construction into the infinitive at 1:20 without adding an agent. Every person renders singular `omnem hominem` idiomatically and repeats it all three times; in this at 1:29 avoids forcing `in quo` to name either Christ alone or the preceding purpose alone.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review changed 'God and Father' at 1:3 to 'the God and Father' so one coordinated referent remains clear without deleting `et`; it changed 'having heard' to 'hearing' at 1:4 to restore the present participle `audientes`. It also changed 'pleasing him in all things' at 1:10 to 'pleasing in all things' because `per omnia placentes` leaves its object unexpressed and `Deo` already stands in the worthily-of-God phrase. Independent review changed 'a part in the lot of the saints' at 1:12 to 'a part of the saints' lot' because `sortis sanctorum` is a genitive chain governed by `partem`, not a second in-relation. A collapsed power/power draft at 1:11 was separated as power for `virtus` and might for `potentia`; a repeated created/created draft at 1:16 became brought into being for `condita sunt` and created for `creata sunt`. The 1:18 draft was corrected from an appositional body/Church relation to body of the Church because the source is genitive `corporis Ecclesiae`. At 1:20 into him was restored for `in ipsum`; at 1:24 a softened remainder was rejected in favor of what is lacking of Christ's sufferings; and at 1:28 generic plural people was corrected to three exact occurrences of every person. Rejected imports include omitting the blood phrase, replacing the Son of his love with an explanatory title, inserting the Father at 1:19, changing into him to to him, changing preached in every creature to a different direction, normalizing sacrament to mystery, explaining away Christ's sufferings, capitalizing spirit at 1:8, or varying the three `omnem hominem` phrases.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` is God; the Christological `Dominus` at 1:3 is the Lord, with no YHWH parenthetical. `Dilectio` and `dilectionis` remain love, `gratia` is grace, and `gratias` is give thanks. `Agnitio` is recognition, `scientia` knowledge, `intellectus` understanding, and `sapientia` wisdom. `Mysterium` is mystery and `sacramentum` sacrament. `Evangelium` is Gospel, `Ecclesia` Church, `minister` minister, and `conservus` fellow servant. `Virtus` is power in 1:11 and 1:29, `potentia` is might, and the named `potestates` are powers. Fullness language remains visible in filled, fullness, and fulfill, while blood, cross, body, flesh, sufferings, lot, light, darkness, kingdom, head, and firstborn remain concrete canonical images.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Paul discloses his solicitude for unseen believers so that comfort, charity, understanding, and recognition may reach the mystery whose treasures are hidden. He turns from warning against lofty words to joy in the readers' order and firmament, then commands a rooted, built-upon, confirmed walk in the Christ they received. The warning deepens from human philosophy to the bodily fullness of divinity in Christ, the readers' filling in him, circumcision, baptismal co-burial, resurrection, forgiveness, the erased handwriting nailed to the cross, and God's open triumph. The closing movement refuses judgment over food and sacred times, contrasts shadow with Christ's body, exposes the fleshly seducer who does not hold the head, and asks why those dead with Christ still decree by human ordinances before ending in the deliberately compressed appraisal of 2:23.

Governing Latin

`sollicitudinem`, `instructi in caritate`, `plenitudinis intellectus`, `agnitionem`, and `mysterii Dei Patris et Christi Jesu` govern 2:1-3 while keeping solicitude, charity, fullness, understanding, recognition, and mystery distinct. `sublimitate sermonum`, the body/spirit contrast, `ordinem`, and binding `firmamentum` govern 2:4-5. The walking command carries the participles `radicati`, `superædificati`, `confirmati`, and `abundantes`; `plenitudo divinitatis corporaliter` and `repleti` preserve two related fullness expressions with different subjects. `circumcisione non manu facta`, `expoliatione corporis carnis`, `consepulti`, `resurrexistis`, `fidem operationis Dei`, `convivificavit`, `chirographum decreti`, `affigens illud cruci`, and `in semetipso` govern the bodily and cross sequence. The final warnings are controlled by repeated `non`, the singular `neomeniæ`, plural `sabbatorum`, `nexus et conjunctiones`, `decernitis`, the three prohibitions, and both purpose phrases in the compressed final verse.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader retains the mystery of God the Father and Christ Jesus, not a shortened or merged mystery; firmament for `firmamentum`; built upon him for `superædificati in ipso`; all fullness of divinity dwelling bodily; and the readers filled in Christ. It keeps faith of the operation of God rather than changing the genitive into faith in an object, the handwriting of the decree against us, its removal from the midst and nailing to the cross, and the public triumph over the principalities and powers in himself. Feast-day part, new moon, and sabbaths remain singular or plural as supplied. At 2:18 the seducer walks in things he has not seen because Clementine `non` is present. The head supplies the whole body through bonds and joints, and the body grows into God's increase. The last verse retains appearance of wisdom, superstition, humility, not for sparing the body, honor, and satisfaction of flesh without replacing the source with a smoother inherited conclusion.

Ambiguities preserved

The relative wording in 2:3 does not repeat or expand an antecedent, and 2:5 retains the unusual demonstrative-genitive relation as the firmament of 'that faith of yours which is in Christ.' The verbless contrast `corpus autem Christi` remains 'but the body of Christ' rather than deciding whether an omitted copula should stress identity, possession, or substance. At 2:18 bare 'willing in humility and the religion of angels' preserves `volens in humilitate, et religione angelorum` without supplying what is willed or deciding the full attachment of willing, humility, or the angels' genitive, while 'things he has not seen' preserves the negation exactly. At 2:22 'all of which' does not overdefine the relative's scope. At 2:23 `rationem ... sapientiæ` is rendered as an appearance of wisdom, but the final `non in honore aliquo ad saturitatem carnis` remains syntactically compressed: the English does not decide whether honor attaches to bodily severity, fleshly satisfaction, value, means, purpose, or result beyond the Latin prepositions and negation.

Clarity decisions

At 2:2 the masculine plural `instructi` is expressed as 'while they are instructed' so it refers to the people rather than falsely agreeing with the neuter hearts; the purpose sentence and its two `in` movements remain intact. At 2:5 Latin hyperbaton becomes 'the firmament of that faith of yours which is in Christ,' preserving `ejus ... fidei vestræ` without leaving a misleading English pronoun. At 2:7 'built upon him' gives the compound construction force of `superædificati` lucid English and renders `in ipso` idiomatically as the personal foundation; 'built up' could mean mere strengthening, while 'superbuilt in him' would be needlessly technical. At 2:13 fronted object `vos` is placed after 'he made' in the finite English clause so God remains unmistakably the agent and the readers remain the object after the intervening when-clause. Verse 2:14 places the postposed `chirographum decreti` after its erasing action, repeats both against-us relations, and gives `ipsum` the force 'that very thing.' At 2:18 the bare participle 'willing in' deliberately preserves meaningful strangeness rather than supplying an absent desired object. The colon in 2:20 carries the question into the quoted threefold ordinance in 2:21, while lowercase openings and terminal colons retain the long participial and relative constructions across verse boundaries.

Corrections and reasons

Focused review retained 2:5 as 'the firmament of that faith of yours which is in Christ': smoother firmness and steadfastness lose binding `firmamentum`, while the selected wording makes `ejus ... fidei vestræ` intelligible. An early 2:7 'built upon in him' draft became 'built up in him' to avoid an incomplete English upon; reciprocal independent review required 'built upon him' because built up can mean mere strengthening, while built upon preserves the compound `superædificati`, renders `in ipso` idiomatically, and follows the established JNV construction family. The reviewer rejected 'superbuilt in him' as morphologically exact but needlessly technical for the reader. At 2:18 'desiring to do so' was corrected to bare 'willing in humility and the religion of angels' because `volens` has no expressed object and the supplied anaphor over-resolved what is willed. Read-aloud review recast the fronted object at 2:13 as 'he made you alive together with him'; the earlier long separation between `vos` and `convivificavit` was grammatically possible but obscured God as agent and the readers as object, while the revision preserves both. Whole-book lemma review then changed abstract 'uncircumcision of your flesh' to concrete 'foreskin of your flesh': 2:13 has `præputio carnis vestræ`, the same body noun `præputium` retained at 3:11, and no contextual cause warrants losing the repeated image. Self-audit restored 'and he took' at 2:14 because `et ipsum tulit` coordinates a finite act with the surrounding participles; omitting `et` weakened the source's sequence. The 2:20 comma was restored to the source's colon, and 2:21 was marked as the quoted ordinance that supplies the content of `decernitis`. Persuasive speech was rejected for 2:4 because `sublimitate sermonum` supplies loftiness of words without a persuasion adjective. 'Elemental spirits' was rejected for `elementa mundi`; 'divine nature' and an abstract doctrinal gloss were rejected for `plenitudo divinitatis corporaliter`; and 'faith in God's power' was rejected because 2:12 has the genitive `fidem operationis Dei`. Debt, legal-charge, and canceled-document paraphrases were rejected for `chirographum decreti`, `tulit de medio`, and `affigens`, which remain handwriting, decree, removal from the midst, and nailing. A triumph in the cross or in it was rejected because 2:15 says `in semetipso`, in himself. A generic holy-day paraphrase was rejected because 2:16 separately supplies a feast-day part, new moon, and sabbaths. Removing the negative or saying the seducer walks in visions was rejected because 2:18 has `quæ non vidit`; worship was rejected for the distinct noun `religione`; and mind was not allowed to erase `sensu`. Ligaments and an abstract support system were rejected for `nexus et conjunctiones`, which remain bonds and joints. Submit-to-regulations language was rejected for direct `decernitis`, and a doctrinally completed paraphrase of 2:23 was rejected because its two negatives and its honor-to-satisfaction relation remain genuinely compressed.

Canonical terminology

God renders `Deus`; the only `Dominum` is the Christological Lord in 'Jesus Christ the Lord,' with no covenant-name parenthetical or all-capital title. Charity renders `caritas`; mystery renders `mysterium`; wisdom, knowledge, understanding, recognition, and sense remain distinct for `sapientia`, `scientia`, `intellectus`, `agnitio`, and `sensus`. Fullness renders `plenitudo`, filled renders `repleti`, divinity renders `divinitas`, and bodily renders `corporaliter`. Firmament is fixed for `firmamentum`; built upon for the `superædificare` family; operation for `operatio`; handwriting for `chirographum`; decree for `decretum/decernere`; foreskin for concrete `præputium`; and thanksgiving remains distinct from grace. Circumcision, baptism, body, flesh, head, cross, bonds, joints, shadow, and human commandments and doctrines remain concrete. New moon stays singular, sabbaths plural, and 'religion of angels' does not become an explanatory worship phrase.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The exhortation rises with the readers' co-resurrection: they seek and mind the things above because their life is hidden with Christ in God and Christ himself will appear as their life. It then descends deliberately to earthly members, naming what must be put to death and laid aside before moving through the stripping of the old person and the putting on of the new. God's elect, holy, beloved people put on bowels of mercy and the other virtues under charity, Christ's exulting peace, and Christ's abundant word. The movement enters the household without changing Lordship: wives, husbands, children, fathers, and servants receive direct commands, and work from the soul is brought under the Lord Christ, recompense, and God's refusal of acceptance of persons.

Governing Latin

The English is governed by the repeated `quae sursum sunt` in 3:1-2; the apposition `Christus ... vita vestra` in 3:4; the bodily and clothing sequence `membra`, `deponite`, `expoliantes`, and `induentes` in 3:5, 8-10, and 12; `simulacrorum servitus` and `filii incredulitatis` in 3:5-6; `viscera misericordiae` in 3:12; `caritas ... vinculum perfectionis` and `pax Christi exsultet` in 3:14-15; and `in gratia cantantes` in 3:16. The household sequence is controlled by `dominis carnalibus`, `ad oculum servientes`, `ex animo`, `retributionem haereditatis`, `Domino Christo servite`, and `personarum acceptio` in 3:22-25.

Vulgate-specific readings

Christ appears as the readers' life at 3:4. Avarice remains the service of idols rather than an abstract normalization, God's wrath comes upon sons of unbelief, mercy retains its concrete bowels, and Christ's peace is allowed to exult rather than being assigned a different governing action. The songs are sung in grace, not silently changed to gratitude. `Praeputium` remains foreskin and thus preserves the same bodily lexical family as `praeputio carnis vestrae` at 2:13; children can become small-souled; servants obey masters according to the flesh, not serving to the eye as pleasers of humans; the promised return is the recompense of inheritance; and the imperative names the Lord Christ directly.

Ambiguities preserved

The Creator in 3:10 is not supplied with a name absent from the clause, and the masculine pronoun remains attached to the new person without an explanatory doctrine. The comma setting around `in omni sapientia` in 3:16 leaves its reach across abundant indwelling and mutual teaching no narrower than the Latin. The reciprocal English for the plural reflexives in 3:13 and 3:16 expresses the mutual action without inventing individual objects. The compact ending `omnia, et in omnibus Christus` remains all things, and in all, Christ; it is not expanded into a theory of what all or all persons must denote.

Clarity decisions

Participles in 3:9-10 and 3:12-13 remain visibly dependent on their governing commands while English punctuation keeps every verse auditable. `Donantes vobismetipsis` and `commonentes vosmetipsos` are rendered reciprocally as forgiving and admonishing one another, consistent with the plural mutual setting and nearby `invicem`. At 3:17 the missing finite action is supplied as do all things, while the source's Everything/whatever/all-things repetition and the movement from word to deed remain visible; `Deo et Patri` is expressed as God the Father so English does not suggest two recipients. Household possessives are supplied only where English requires the stated wife-husband and child-parent relations.

Corrections and reasons

Self-audit changed 3:8 from put away to lay aside so `deponite` continues the garment movement into stripping and putting on; changed 3:13 from a complaint against another to a complaint against anyone so both `quis` and `aliquem` retain their indefinite scope; and changed 3:25 from receive to receive back so the retributive force of `recipiet` is lucid while `id quod inique gessit` remains what the wrongdoer has unjustly done. Independent review changed 3:3 from 'you are dead' to 'you have died' because `Mortui ... estis` is perfect and the identical form at 2:20 is likewise an accomplished death with Christ; the correction restores tense and whole-book repetition while leaving the present hidden life distinct. Cross-canon review changed 3:22 from 'fleshly masters ... not with eye-service as human pleasers' to 'masters according to the flesh ... not serving to the eye, as pleasers of humans.' Colossians repeats Ephesians 6:5-6 exactly at `dominis carnalibus ... non ad oculum servientes, quasi hominibus placentes`; the harmonized wording preserves the according-to relation and verbal participle, prevents 'fleshly' from implying moral character, and retains all things, simplicity of heart, and fearing God. Rejected normalizations include idolatry for service of idols, disobedience for unbelief, rule for exult, gratitude for grace in 3:16, heart for `animus` in 3:23, reward from inheritance for recompense of inheritance, and a softened paraphrase for acceptance of persons.

Canonical terminology

God remains God. Christological `Dominus` is the plain Lord with no YHWH parenthetical, while plural masters according to the flesh remain human. `Caritas` is charity, distinct from `diligere` as love and from grace or thanksgiving; grace in song remains grace, while `gratias agentes` is giving thanks and `grati estote` is being grateful. The old and new `homo` are old and new person, bodily members and bowels remain concrete, and the `praeputium` family remains foreskin across 2:13 and 3:11 unless later syntax requires a recorded change. `Servi` are servants; `ad oculum servientes` remains serving to the eye and `hominibus placentes` remains pleasers of humans; `animus` retains soul in the command to work from the soul; and imperative `Domino Christo servite` remains Serve the Lord Christ.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter first completes the household address by turning from servants to human masters under a Lord in heaven. It then presses into persevering, watchful prayer for an opened door of speech, the mystery of Christ, and Paul's bonds, before directing wise conduct and grace-seasoned speech toward outsiders. The personal closing moves through Tychicus and Onesimus as bearers of information, the greetings and labors of named coworkers, the Laodicean brothers, Nympha and her house church, the two-letter reading command, Archippus's ministry, and finally Paul's own hand, chains, grace, and Amen.

Governing Latin

The servant-master continuation is fixed by `Domini ... servis praestate` and the singular `Dominum ... in caelo` at 4:1. Prayer and witness are shaped by `orationi instate`, `ostium sermonis`, `mysterium Christi`, `vinctus sum`, `tempus redimentes`, and `sermo ... in gratia sale ... conditus` in 4:2-6. Information direction depends on `nota faciet ... quae circa me`, then `ut cognoscat quae circa vos sunt`, followed by plural `nota facient` in 4:7-9. The close is governed by `consobrinus`, plural `qui sunt ex circumcisione`, `sollicitus ... in orationibus`, `pleni in omni voluntate Dei`, feminine `Nympham`, `domo ejus`, `quae Laodicensium est`, `ministerium ... impleas`, `mea manu Pauli`, and `vinculorum meorum`.

Vulgate-specific readings

Human masters provide servants what is just and equitable while themselves having a singular Lord in heaven. Paul asks for a door of speech and is bound because of Christ's mystery; time is redeemed and speech remains in grace while seasoned with salt. Tychicus is sent so that he may know the things around the readers, not so that they may learn Paul's state from him alone, although he and Onesimus do make known what is done there. Jesus is called Justus, the named circumcision group alone are Paul's kingdom helpers, Epaphras seeks that the readers stand full in every will of God, Nympha is feminine and the church is in her house, and the other letter remains the one that is of the Laodiceans.

Ambiguities preserved

`Consobrinus` is left at the non-overprecise kinsman rather than assigning a narrower family relation. The plural relative and demonstrative in 4:11 remain attached to the greeting group without adding identities or extending the claim beyond the source. `Sollicitus` retains anxious concern in prayer without importing an unsupplied manner of struggle. Most consequentially, `quae Laodicensium est` is the letter that is of the Laodiceans: the English does not decide whether of marks origin, possession, destination, or another association. The Lord in heaven is not given an identity gloss beyond the singular title.

Clarity decisions

The relative `quem misi` at 4:8 is recast as I sent him, and the following `cum Onesimo` continues as along with Onesimus; this preserves both the singular sending and the plural announcement while keeping the information directions exact. English agreement makes Aristarchus and Mark's greeting and Luke and Demas's greeting lucid without changing the named subjects; after the intervening command about Mark, 4:11 explicitly carries the governing greeting verb into Jesus also greets you. `Facite ut ... legatur` becomes see that it is read, while emphatic `vos legatis` remains you are to read. `Vide ministerium ... ut illud impleas` is kept as see to the ministry ... that you may fulfill it, and the compressed signature is ordered as the greeting of Paul, by my own hand.

Corrections and reasons

Self-audit changed the opening of 4:11 from a grammatically suspended and Jesus to Jesus also greets you, carrying the source's governing `Salutat vos` across the intervening conditional about Mark and representing coordinating `et` with also; the named greeter and proposition remain in 4:11. The audit also rejected imported alternatives: reversing 4:8 so Tychicus would learn nothing about the readers; replacing things around me or things around you with explanatory news; specifying `consobrinus` as a precise cousin relation; changing anxious prayer into an unsupplied wrestling image; making Nympha male; rewriting the letter of the Laodiceans as necessarily from Laodicea; reducing Archippus's received ministry to a generic task; and softening Paul's bonds or removing the own-hand signature.

Canonical terminology

Plural `Domini` at 4:1 are masters and `servis` are servants; singular heavenly `Dominum` is Lord, maintaining the human-divine contrast without a YHWH gloss. `Oratio` is prayer, `gratiarum actio` thanksgiving, `mysterium` mystery, `sermo` speech, `minister` minister, and `conservus` fellow servant. Tychicus and Onesimus remain dearest, Luke remains the dearest physician, `consobrinus` is kinsman, the church and letter vocabulary stays concrete, `ministerium` is ministry, `vincula` are chains, and closing `gratia` remains grace.

First Thessalonians — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from the threefold address and uninterrupted thanksgiving through election known by the Gospel's powerful arrival, then from exemplary reception and sounded-abroad witness to conversion, service, and expectation of Jesus from the heavens.

Governing Latin

The participles `memoriam vestri facientes`, `memores`, and `scientes` carry 1:2–4 as one thanksgiving movement; `ita ut` marks result, passive `diffamatus est` fixes the Lord's speech as what sounded abroad, and perfect `eripuit` fixes rescue as accomplished.

Vulgate-specific readings

The English retains `in plenitudine multa` as “in much fullness,” `sermo Domini` as “the speech of the Lord,” faith governed by `profecta est` as “went forth,” and `de cælis` as the plural “from the heavens.”

Ambiguities preserved

In `sustinentiæ spei Domini nostri Jesu Christi`, “hope in our Lord Jesus Christ” keeps the hope's relation to the Lord without turning it into an added timetable; “what sort of entry” likewise preserves the qualitative force of `qualem introitum`.

Clarity decisions

The open punctuation of 1:2–4 preserves the participial chain. At 1:10, appositional `Jesum` is placed directly after the Son while `quem suscitavit a mortuis` remains parenthetical and names God as resurrection agent.

Corrections and reasons

The draft separated `laboris, et caritatis` into “labor, and charity” rather than importing a fused familiar phrase; it restored the passive agency of `diffamatus est` at 1:8 and corrected “will rescue” to the completed “rescued” required by `eripuit`.

Canonical terminology

`Deus`, `Dominus`, and `Spiritus Sanctus` are God, Lord, and Holy Spirit; `caritas` is charity. `Evangelium`, `sermo`, and `verbum` remain Gospel, speech, and word, and no YHWH expansion is supplied.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter advances from a tested, nonempty proclamation through the senders' refusal of deceit, greed, and human glory; parental tenderness and labor lead into thanksgiving for God's working, shared persecution, desolation in absence, blocked return, and the readers as glory and joy.

Governing Latin

Passive `ut crederetur nobis Evangelium` governs the entrustment at 2:4; `parvuli` and `nutrix ... filios suos` govern the paired child-and-nurse image; the construction opened by `unumquemque` in 2:11 culminates in `testificati sumus` at 2:12; masculine `qui operatur` names God as the working agent at 2:13.

Vulgate-specific readings

The text retains `in multa sollicitudine` as “in much solicitude,” `parvuli` as “little ones,” `verbum auditus Dei` as “the word of the hearing of God,” `ad tempus horæ` as “for the time of an hour,” and `et semel, et iterum` as “once and again.”

Ambiguities preserved

The repeated `ut` at 2:16 remains two “so that” clauses while their grammar stays distinct: feminine `salvæ` makes the nations the saved subject, and `impleant` returns to the persecuting forbidders. Only `usque in finem` remains open as “unto the end,” without defining that end beyond the Latin.

Clarity decisions

Verses 2:11–12 remain one suspended sentence, with each one and the father comparison awaiting the governing verbs. At 2:10, bare dative `vobis` is made relational as conduct toward the believers; at 2:13, “God's word—God, who works” preserves God as agent of masculine `qui operatur`; and 2:16 names nations and persecutors to prevent an English pronoun from transferring agency.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review retained `parvuli` as little ones, passive Gospel entrustment at 2:4, `animas nostras` as our own souls, God as agent of `qui operatur`, and plural us after “I indeed, Paul.” Independent review then changed local “among you” to relational “toward you” for bare dative `vobis` at 2:10, separated nations from persecutors across the two `ut` clauses at 2:16, and rendered `desolati a vobis` as “bereft of you” so the readers do not appear to cause the separation.

Canonical terminology

`Evangelium Dei` is God's Gospel, while `sermo`, `verbum`, and `verbum auditus Dei` remain speech, word, and word of the hearing of God. `anima` is soul, `adventus` is advent, `contribulibus` is rendered compatriots, and every divine title remains plain Lord without YHWH.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from separation and Timothy's mission (`remanere Athenis, solis`; `misimus Timotheum`) through consolation in tested faith (`consolati sumus ... per fidem vestram`) to prayer for abounding charity and hearts confirmed in holiness at Christ's advent (`multiplicet ... caritatem`; `in adventu Domini nostri Jesu Christi`).

Governing Latin

`Propter quod non sustinentes amplius` preserves the opening causal pressure; the 3:9-10 unit is one question governed by `Quam enim gratiarum actionem possumus Deo retribuere` and extended by `nocte ac die abundantius orantes`; singular `dirigat` governs the coordinated divine naming in 3:11.

Vulgate-specific readings

`ministrum Dei in Evangelio Christi` remains 'minister of God in the Gospel of Christ'; `in hoc positi sumus` retains being placed for this; and `compleamus ea quæ desunt fidei vestræ` remains completing what is lacking in the readers' faith.

Ambiguities preserved

The ellipsis in `quemadmodum et nos in vobis` is carried as 'just as we also do toward you' without supplying a narrower action, while `cum omnibus sanctis ejus` remains 'with all his saints' without assigning their origin or role.

Clarity decisions

The participial opening `veniente Timotheo ad nos a vobis, et annuntiante` is rendered as 'upon Timothy's coming ... and announcing' so that its governing consolation remains in 3:7; `ea quæ desunt fidei vestræ` is clarified as 'what is lacking in your faith' without changing the object of `compleamus`.

Corrections and reasons

The imperfect `prædicebamus` was restored as 'kept telling' rather than flattened into one prediction; an initial tendency to absorb 3:5 into the surrounding plural voice was corrected to 'I ... sent' because `ego ... misi` is explicit singular, and the 3:9-10 question was not split because its question mark closes only after `fidei vestræ ?`.

Canonical terminology

`fidem` is 'faith,' `caritatem` is 'charity,' `tribulationibus` and `tribulationes` are 'tribulations,' `Dominus` is plain 'Lord,' and `adventu` is 'advent'; `annuntiante` remains announcement language, distinct from `Evangelio` as 'Gospel.'

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Beginning with the transition `De cetero ergo`, the chapter moves from sanctification and honorable conduct (`sanctificatio vestra`; `honeste ambuletis`) through charity among brothers (`caritate ... fraternitatis`) to the sleepers, the Lord's descent, the rising dead, and mutual consolation (`consolamini invicem`).

Governing Latin

The repeated purposes `ut abstineatis`, `ut sciat`, and `et ne quis` govern 4:3-6; the descent sequence is fixed by `in jussu, et in voce archangeli, et in tuba Dei`, followed by `descendet`, `resurgent primi`, and passive `rapiemur`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The English retains `vas suum possidere` as possessing 'his own vessel,' `in negotio fratrem suum` as the brother 'in the matter,' `dedit Spiritum suum Sanctum in nobis` as giving his Holy Spirit 'in us,' and `dormierunt per Jesum` as sleeping 'through Jesus.'

Ambiguities preserved

Neither the referent of `vas suum` nor the scope of `in negotio` is explained; `nullius aliquid desideretis` remains 'desire nothing of anyone,' and `per Jesum` plus `cum eo` in 4:14 is left in the source's compact relational form.

Clarity decisions

`De caritate autem fraternitatis` is kept as 'the charity of brotherhood' to distinguish `caritate` from `diligatis`; the three aims `quieti sitis`, `vestrum negotium agatis`, and `operemini manibus vestris` are coordinated in lucid English, and 4:14 remains one bounded proposition with `Deus` as subject of `adducet`.

Corrections and reasons

The result force of `ut abundetis magis` was made explicit as 'so that,' and singular `dederim` corrected 4:2 to 'commands I gave'; active `vos a Deo didicistis` remains 'you ... learned from God' rather than 'God taught,' while 4:14 retains both `Si enim credimus` and God as agent of `adducet`, rejecting either a voice change or an agent-only truncation.

Canonical terminology

`sanctificatio` and `sanctificationem` are 'sanctification,' `fornicatione` is 'fornication,' `caritate` is 'charity,' `diligatis` is 'love,' `dormientibus` and `dormierunt` keep sleep language, `verbo Domini` is 'word of the Lord,' and `verbis istis` is 'these words.'

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from `temporibus ... et momentis`, about which the brothers need no writing, and their careful knowledge that the day of the Lord comes like a thief, through light, wakefulness, armor, wrath, and salvation, into mutual edification, communal discipline, terse commands, comprehensive sanctification, public reading, and grace.

Governing Latin

The English preserves the anonymous future `cum enim dixerint`, the exhortatory sequence `non dormiamus ... vigilemus, et sobrii simus`, the participial `induti`, the carried reason `quoniam`, the relative `qui mortuus est`, and the singular passive `servetur` after the coordinated spirit, soul, and body.

Vulgate-specific readings

Distinctive forms remain audible: `Pax et securitas`, pain upon one `in utero habenti`, `acquisitionem salutis`, the small-souled `pusillanimes`, `specie mala` as every evil form, `per omnia` as comprehensive sanctification, and the solemn reading to `omnibus sanctis fratribus`.

Ambiguities preserved

The alternatives `sive vigilemus, sive dormiamus` remain watch or sleep without deciding whether the sleep is bodily or figurative; `specie mala` remains every evil form, with `mala` modifying `specie` and form not narrowed to merely visual appearance; and `integer spiritus vester, et anima, et corpus` retains its marked coordination under one singular preservation verb.

Clarity decisions

The comparison `sicut dolor in utero habenti` becomes pain upon one who carries in the womb without inventing a named woman or child. In 5:23, `per omnia` becomes in every respect rather than a misleading instrumental through all things, while whole remains attached to spirit and the single may be preserved governs the entire coordination.

Corrections and reasons

Independent Latin review corrected 5:22 from every appearance of evil to every evil form because, in `ab omni specie mala`, ablative `mala` modifies `specie`; this keeps the form itself evil and avoids recasting the adjective as an unsupplied genitive relation.

Canonical terminology

Lord remains plain Lord with no YHWH addition; `fidei et caritatis` is faith and charity, `spem salutis` is hope of salvation, wrath remains distinct from salvation's acquisition, Spirit at 5:19 is divine while `spiritus vester` at 5:23 is lowercase human spirit, and grace, thanksgiving, joy, prophecy, holiness, advent, brothers, and holy kiss retain their separate source terms.

Second Thessalonians — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The address and blessing give way to obligatory thanksgiving for faith that grows beyond measure and reciprocal charity that abounds. The writers then boast of endurance under persecution before one long judgment sentence sets tribulation against rest, divine recompense against fire and penalties, and the Lord's revelation against his coming to be glorified in the saints. The chapter closes in prayer that calling, goodness, faith's work, and reciprocal glorification may stand under divine grace.

Governing Latin

`supercrescit` and `abundat caritas uniuscujusque vestrum in invicem` govern the intensified, individual, reciprocal language of 1:3. The sentence from `Si tamen justum est` through `cum venerit` retains its linked recompense and revelation. Its controlling forms include `dantis vindictam`, `pœnas dabunt`, `glorificari`, `admirabilis fieri`, `dignetur`, and `clarificetur`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation keeps `tribulationem ... qui vos tribulant` as the repeated term tribulation in 1:6, `in flamma ignis dantis vindictam` as a fire-flame giving vengeance to the two named groups, and `pœnas ... æternas` as eternal penalties, not an adjective transferred to `interitu`. Internal Clementine Isaias 30:30, `flamma ignis devorantis`, confirms the same local genitive construction: `dantis` is controlled by adjacent `ignis`, not transferred backward to the revealed Lord Jesus. The chapter also keeps `glorificari` and `admirabilis fieri` as passive forms, to be glorified and to become admirable, and it does not replace the plain `Dominus` with YHWH.

Ambiguities preserved

`super vos` in `creditum est testimonium nostrum super vos` is rendered as concerning you, retaining a relation to the Thessalonians without adding a recipient or a fuller explanation absent from the phrase. `in interitu` remains in destruction, rather than defining the mode of penalty beyond the Latin. The elliptical recompense construction across 1:6–7 is retained by allowing the single infinitive `retribuere` to govern both tribulation to the troublers and rest to the troubled readers, without inserting an independent new governing verb.

Clarity decisions

The Latin sentence is made readable by carrying 1:6's governing infinitive into the elliptical second arm in 1:7: and to you who are troubled, rest. In 1:5, worthy of the kingdom gives clear English to the relation between `digni habeamini` and `in regno Dei`, while `pro quo` continues to refer to that kingdom. At 1:8, repeating to those before the second relative group keeps both dative recipient relations clear while fire remains the participial agent. At 1:9, all of whom makes plural `qui` resume those groups rather than the immediately preceding singular Jesus Christ while retaining the subordinate construction. In 1:11, `In quo` becomes With this in view so the prayer's backward reference is clear without deciding a single antecedent. `vocatione sua` is expressed as being deemed worthy of his calling, and the separated reciprocal clauses of 1:12 are made explicit as the name glorified in the readers and the readers in him.

Corrections and reasons

Initial self-audit made seven corrections: it strengthened grows to grows exceedingly for `supercrescit`; restored the distributive reciprocal charity of `uniuscujusque ... in invicem`; restored repeated tribulation in 1:6; preserved perfect `noverunt`; attached eternal `æternas` to penalties; restored the passive purpose forms in 1:10; and restored the reciprocal second subject in 1:12. Independent review then changed worthy in the kingdom to worthy of the kingdom for a clear English worthiness relation in 1:5, changed who endure tribulation to who are troubled to preserve passive `tribulamini` in 1:7, and corrected the editorial account of 1:6–7 from parallel infinitives to the single governing infinitive `retribuere`. A final lexical-family audit changed tribulations that you endure to tribulations that you sustain in 1:4, preserving the distinction between noun `patientia` and verb `sustinetis`. Whole-book adversarial review changed 1:9 from who to all of whom so plural `qui` unmistakably resumes the punished groups rather than singular Jesus Christ. Its proposal to make Jesus the giver at 1:8 was rejected after an internal-Vulgate control: Isaias 30:30 uses the exact `flamma ignis` plus genitive-participle construction, `flamma ignis devorantis`, proving adjacent `ignis` controls the participle. The final 1:8 therefore retains fire giving vengeance and repeats to those to distinguish the two recipient clauses without changing agency.

Canonical terminology

`Deus` is God and `Dominus` is Lord; divine Lord remains plain Lord in accordance with this chapter's instruction. `ecclesia` is church, `gratia` grace, `pax` peace, `fides` faith, `caritas` charity, `patientia` is endurance while `sustinetis` is sustain, `tribulatio` is tribulation, `judicium` judgment, `Evangelium` Gospel, `vocatione` calling, and `gloria`/`clarificetur` are glory/glorified. `virtus` is power, including the angels of his power and faith's work in power.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter begins with an appeal by the Lord Jesus Christ's advent and the readers' gathering to him (`per adventum ... et nostræ congregationis in ipsum`), warns against deceptive claims about the day of the Lord, then follows the mystery of iniquity and the lawless one's exposure and destruction. It closes by contrasting the perishing with brothers chosen for salvation, called through the Gospel, instructed to hold traditions, and commended to the singularly worded consolation and confirmation of the Lord Jesus Christ and God the Father.

Governing Latin

The appeal in 2:1 is governed by `per adventum ... et nostræ congregationis in ipsum`; 2:2 retains the three negatively excluded media, `neque per spiritum ... neque per sermonem ... neque per epistolam tamquam per nos missam`, followed by the distinct comparison `quasi instet`. The alternation `quid detineat` / `qui tenet` in 2:6-7, the unresolved becoming in `donec de medio fiat`, `illustratione adventus sui` in 2:8, the paired purpose clauses in 2:11-12, and singular `dilexit`, `dedit`, `exhortetur`, and `confirmet` in 2:16-17 direct the English.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation retains `homo peccati filius perditionis` as 'the man of sin, the son of perdition'; `in templo Dei` as 'in the temple of God'; `spiritu oris sui` as 'the breath of his mouth'; `illustratione adventus sui` as 'the illumination of his advent'; `primitias in salutem` as 'firstfruits for salvation'; and `in acquisitionem gloriæ` as 'for the acquisition of the glory.'

Ambiguities preserved

No identity is supplied for neuter `quid detineat`, masculine `qui tenet`, or the one who comes to be out of the midst; what restrains, the one who now holds, and `donec de medio fiat` retain their grammatical distinction without an invented taker, mechanism, or doctrinal identity. The incomplete conditional movement after `nisi venerit discessio ... et revelatus fuerit` is not supplied with an invented apodosis. `In qua` remains in which, without choosing among possible antecedents, and `spiritus` in `sanctificatione spiritus` stays lowercase spirit because the Latin form itself does not settle the referent.

Clarity decisions

`Per adventum` is rendered by the advent so the appeal retains the Latin's direct by/through relation while both coordinated objects and `in ipsum` remain to him. In 2:2, `terreamini` keeps its fear intensity as be terrified; repeated `neque` is rendered neither ... nor ... nor, `sermonem` is speech, and `tamquam per nos missam` is a letter as though sent through us, preserving the distinct oral and written media and the claimed rather than asserted transmission; the separate `quasi` remains a second as though. At 2:7, comes to be out of the midst preserves both the becoming force of `fiat` and the spatial pressure of `de medio` without an external remover. The em dash in 2:8 rebuilds `quem ... eum` as grammatical English while keeping the Lord Jesus as agent of both actions; 2:9 then names the advent of that lawless one so Satan's operation cannot be misheard as governing Christ's advent. At 2:17, `sermone bono` remains good speech, audibly preserving the same `sermo` family. The source's verse-spanning relative clause is retained across 2:3-4; the reader text does not name an identity, location, sequence, or doctrine beyond the Latin. `Omni virtute, et signis, et prodigiis mendacibus` is carried as all power and signs and lying wonders without transferring lying to the other nouns.

Corrections and reasons

During self-audit and subsequent independent review, 2:2 first changed from as if coming from us to as sent through us, then the full channel sequence was corrected from whether through a spirit, or through a word, or through a letter as sent through us to neither through a spirit, nor through speech, nor through a letter as though sent through us. This restores repeated `neque`, binding `sermonem` as speech, and the comparative force of `tamquam`. Further self-audit corrections changed 2:4 from exalts himself to is exalted for passive `extollitur`; 2:7 from taken out of the way to taken from the midst for `de medio fiat`; 2:8 from splendor to illumination for `illustratione`; 2:9-10 from every power and every deception to all power and all deception for repeated comprehensive `omni`; 2:13 from from the beginning to as firstfruits for `primitias`; and 2:14 from to obtain glory to for the acquisition of the glory for `in acquisitionem gloriæ`. A stricter target review then changed 2:1 from concerning the advent to by the advent to restore `per` as the appeal relation, 2:2 from be alarmed to be terrified to preserve the fear intensity of `terreamini`, and 2:17 from good work and word to good work and speech to preserve `sermo` as speech. Whole-book adversarial review superseded the intermediate 2:7 wording with comes to be out of the midst because `fiat` expresses becoming without an external taker; rebuilt 2:8 to remove the ungrammatical whom ... destroy him resumption; and made 2:9's subject the advent of that lawless one so Satanic operation cannot attach to Christ's advent. These corrections remove imported readings, altered voice, interpretive expansion, or loss of the Latin's grammar and concrete nouns.

Canonical terminology

`Dominus` is plain 'Lord' as required here; `adventus` is 'advent'; `iniquitas` is 'iniquity'; `caritas` is 'charity'; `veritas` is 'truth'; `Evangelium` is 'Gospel'; `traditiones` is 'traditions'; `consolatio` is 'consolation'; `gratia` is 'grace'; and `sermo` is 'speech,' kept distinct from a written `epistola`. `Operatio` is 'operation' in both Satan's operation and God's operation of error.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The closing chapter moves from prayer that God's speech may run and be glorified to deliverance, God's faithful confirmation and protection, confidence in obedience, and hearts directed into `caritate Dei` and `patientia Christi`. It then gives disciplined communal instruction about brothers walking `inordinate`, the senders' laboring example, refusal to work, restless busybody activity, charge joined to beseeching, correction without enmity, and concludes with the Lord of peace, Paul's hand-written sign, and grace.

Governing Latin

The English follows the paired purposes of 3:1–2, `ut sermo Dei currat, et clarificetur` and `et ut liberemur`; the completed `quæ præcepimus` followed by the present–future pair `facitis, et facietis`; the contrasting forms `inordinate`, `non inquieti`, and `inquiete`; and present `denuntiamus` beside the repeated-past imperfect `denuntiabamus`. It keeps the conditional refusal and jussive of `si quis non vult operari, nec manducet`, the purpose `ut confundatur`, the two occurrences of `Dominus` in 3:16, and the compressed personal signature `mea manu Pauli ... ita scribo`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader text retains the speech of God running and being glorified `sicut et apud vos`, freedom from `importunis ... malis hominibus`, the statement `non enim omnium est fides`, God's future `confirmabit` as confirm, the third-person-plural source form `quam acceperunt a nobis` after singular `omni fratre`, bread not eaten `gratis`, and the quiet working by which people eat `suum panem`. It also leaves the senders as giving themselves as a `formam`, a model, rather than assigning their joint action to Paul alone or importing another formulation.

Ambiguities preserved

In 3:3, `a malo` is rendered from evil, without deciding between evil generally and the evil one. In 3:5, charity of God and patience of Christ retain the Latin genitives without deciding whether God and Christ are subjects, objects, sources, or patterns of the nouns. In 3:6, they received preserves the surprising plural of `acceperunt`; in 3:11, acting as busybodies retains the negatively colored but not occupationally specified manner of `curiose agentes` without inventing plural object-things; and in 3:14, ashamed leaves the exact force of `confundatur` open without adding a social mechanism.

Clarity decisions

The open construction is carried across the verse boundary by ending 3:1 with a semicolon and beginning 3:2 with and that. `De cetero` becomes For the rest, `in nomine` becomes in the name of, and `per epistolam` becomes through the letter, preserving `per` while attaching the phrase to our word rather than to the recipient's manner of obeying. The shared `non ... neque` construction of 3:7-8 is made audible with a comma and nor. At 3:11, acting as busybodies translates adverbial `curiose agentes` without creating curiosities as objects; at 3:12, charge those and beseech them supplies the English objects required by the two distinct source verbs while retaining their single plural subject and Lord-governed setting. Regard at 3:15 expresses `existimare` naturally without weakening rebuke. The Latin participles are made readable as walking disorderly, working night and day, and, in 3:12, working in quietness. The compact 3:17 signature becomes The greeting in my own hand—Paul's: this is the sign in every letter; so I write, preserving its abrupt personal form while making its sign explicit.

Corrections and reasons

Initial self-audit corrected 3:1 from may advance to may run for currat, 3:11 from doing nothing, but being busy to doing no work, but busying themselves with curiosities for nihil operantes, sed curiose agentes, and 3:15 from correct him to rebuke him for corripite. Independent-review adjudication then corrected 3:4 to what we have commanded for perfect præcepimus, 3:10 to repeatedly gave you this charge for imperfect denuntiabamus, 3:14 to our word through the letter for clearer and more direct per epistolam, and the governing-Latin description from future doublet to the present–future pair after the completed command. A stricter target-family re-review further corrected 3:1 from word of God to speech of God so sermo remains distinct from 3:14 verbo, 3:3 from strengthen to confirm so confirmabit remains audible with 2:17 confirmet, and 3:12 from exhort to beseech so obsecramus remains distinct from the exhort family. Whole-book review corrected the editorial's assignment of 3:9 to Paul alone by naming the plural senders and their reflexive plural giving of themselves. Adversarial review then changed 3:11 from busying themselves with curiosities to acting as busybodies because curiose is adverbial and supplies no plural objects; repaired the missing English object at 3:12 as charge those ... beseech them; joined 3:7-8 with comma and nor to retain non ... neque; and refined 3:15 from consider to regard. The recommendation to delete be from 3:18 was rejected: grammatical English requires the optative copula in this blessing, and sealed First Thessalonians 5:28 already renders the same verb-less nominal grace formula, Gratia ... vobiscum, with be. Supplying that copula expresses the Latin blessing grammatically without adding a new proposition.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God and every Dominus is plain Lord, with no added divine-name gloss. fides is faith, caritas is charity, patientia is patience, traditio is tradition, potestas is authority, gratia is grace, and pax is peace. Keep sermo as speech and verbum as word, retain the confirmare family as confirm, and keep beseech for obsecramus distinct from exhort. Distinguish disorderly (inordinate) from restless (inquieti and inquiete), and retain the doing/acting contrast in nihil operantes, sed curiose agentes; render present denuntiamus as charge or give charge and imperfect denuntiabamus as repeatedly gave this charge; and retain brother, bread, evil, and Lord without explanatory expansion. In verb-less nominal grace blessings, English be is the grammatical optative copula, consistent with sealed First Thessalonians 5:28, not a new source proposition.

First Timothy — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Paul's commission under God's command opens into his charge to Timothy: restrain divergent teaching, keep the charge's end in charity, and understand the law lawfully. The chapter then turns through Paul's own former blasphemy and received mercy to Christ's saving purpose, praise of the King of the ages, and the renewed charge to wage good warfare with faith and a good conscience.

Governing Latin

The unfinished comparative movement Sicut rogavi te ... ut denuntiares (1:3) remains open through 1:4 without an invented main clause. Finis ... praecepti (1:5) and Hoc praeceptum commendo (1:18) govern the repeated noun charge; superabundavit (1:14) supplies the intensified abounded exceedingly; and soldier ... warfare retains the repeated word family of ut milites ... bonam militiam (1:18).

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation retains the edification of God, which is in faith for aedificationem Dei, quae est in fide (1:4), rather than substituting a different source tradition's administrative term. It also keeps men who lie with males for masculorum concubitoribus and kidnappers for plagiariis (1:10), the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God (1:11), and all patience for omnem patientiam (1:16).

Ambiguities preserved

The edification of God preserves the open force of the genitive Dei (1:4). Faith and love in Christ Jesus does not force singular quae est to modify only one member of the coordinated pair (1:14). In me first retains the possible relation of primo both to Paul's prior claim to be first among sinners and to Christ's first display in him (1:16); concerning you gives the contextual direction of in te while the editorial records its compact Latin relation (1:18).

Clarity decisions

The participle sciens at 1:9 continues the anyone who uses the law in 1:8, so knowing this begins the next auditable verse without inventing a new subject. Christ Jesus our Lord is set off as the apposition identifying him who strengthened Paul (1:12). At 1:19, which has the singular good conscience as its grammatical antecedent, while concerning faith preserves circa fidem rather than making faith the discarded object.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review changed endless genealogies to interminable genealogies to retain interminatis; empty talk to vain talk to preserve vaniloquium's evaluative force; teachers of law to teachers of the law for lucid English without changing legis; abounded to abounded exceedingly to retain superabundavit; and fight a good fight to soldier a good warfare so the milites/militiam repetition remains visible. It also restored the lawfully/knowing subject across 1:8-9, kept good conscience rather than faith as the object cast away at 1:19, and removed unsupported male specificity from quibusdam and justo at 1:3 and 1:9. Final adversarial recurrence review changed tales to fables at 1:4 for fabulis and every acceptance to all acceptance at 1:15, keeping the exact faithful-saying formula aligned with its recurrence at 4:9.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; Salvator is Savior; caritas is charity (1:5), while distinct dilectio is love (1:14); misericordia is mercy; fides is faith; and praeceptum is charge in this chapter. Fabula is fable, and omni acceptione is all acceptance in the repeated faithful-saying formula. Divine Dominus occurs only within the Christological title Christ Jesus our Lord (1:2, 1:12, 1:14), so no YHWH parenthetical is introduced into that title context. Saecula saeculorum is ages of ages (1:17).

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from comprehensive prayer for all people and rulers toward the quiet life, God's saving will, and the one mediator who gave himself as redemption for all. Paul then identifies his commission, directs men in prayer and women in adornment and learning, and closes with the formed/deceived sequence of Adam and Eve and the singular conditional statement about the woman and the bearing of children.

Governing Latin

The four plural prayer nouns obsecrationes, orationes, postulationes, gratiarum actiones (2:1) remain distinct. Omnes homines/hominum (2:1, 2:4-5) is rendered generically as all people/human beings, whereas sex-specific viros (2:8) is men. Habitu ornato ... ornantes (2:9) remains adorned attire ... adorning; unus ... Deus, unus et mediator (2:5) preserves both repeated ones; salvabitur and permanserit (2:15) remain singular, and filiorum remains plural within the bearing of children.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 2:6, dedit redemptionem semetipsum is retained as gave himself as redemption, and temporibus suis remains plural as in its own times. The relative in quo at 2:7 is rendered in which, continuing testimony rather than silently supplying a different antecedent. At 2:15, the Vulgate's singular she will be saved ... if she remains and plural filiorum are preserved rather than conformed to a plural-subject reading.

Ambiguities preserved

A testimony in its own times keeps the compact relation of testimonium temporibus suis without reducing the Vulgate's plural times to a singular formula (2:6). Mediator of God and human beings retains the source's genitives without adding an explicit between (2:5). Dominion over a man preserves dominari in virum and does not replace the concrete sexed relation with a broader abstract category; vir can bear man or husband, and the English does not add a marital setting (2:12).

Clarity decisions

The existential there is at 2:5 supplies necessary English grammar for the Latin nominal clauses without adding another proposition. The ellipsis governed by I desire at 2:8 is allowed to carry into Likewise also women at 2:9-10, preserving the source's fragment-like continuation while keeping each verse auditable. At 2:10, with what befits makes quod the positive adornment contrasted with hair, gold, pearls, and garment, while through good works remains adjacent to professing piety.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review distinguished entreaties from petitions at 2:1 so obsecrationes and postulationes were not collapsed; changed all men to all people where homines is generic while retaining men for viros at 2:8; restored plural times at 2:6; replaced authority over with exercise dominion over at 2:12 to preserve dominari; repeated deceived in both arms of 2:14; and replaced generic childbearing with the bearing of children at 2:15 to retain plural filiorum and the concrete generation relation. Final adversarial recurrence review changed contention to disputation at 2:8 for disceptatione, preserving its distinction from contentiones, rendered contentions, at 6:4.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God, Salvator is Savior, veritas is truth, pietas is piety, castitas is chastity, redemptio is redemption, fides is faith, dilectio is love, sanctificatio is sanctification, and sobrietas is sobriety. Homo is rendered contextually as people or human beings when generic and man in the title-like phrase the man Christ Jesus; vir remains the sex-specific man. Disceptatio is disputation, distinct from contentio as contention. Dominari is exercise dominion, preserving its distinction from generic teaching or authority language.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from the faithful saying about desiring the episcopate (`episcopatum desiderat`) through the exact qualifications of bishop, deacons, and women, then from household care to conduct in God's house, and finally to the great sacrament of piety manifested in flesh and taken up in glory (`pietatis sacramentum`; `assumptum est in gloria`).

Governing Latin

The bishop's list is governed by `Oportet ergo episcopum ... esse` and resumes after the household question; `sed` at the end of 3:3 carries directly into `suæ domui bene præpositum` in 3:4. The deacon sequence retains `Diaconos similiter`, `probentur primum`, and `sic ministrent`, while 3:16 coordinates six predicates under neuter relative `quod`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The English retains `episcopatum` as 'episcopate,' `firmamentum veritatis` as 'firmament of truth,' and `pietatis sacramentum` as 'sacrament of piety.' Most consequentially, `quod manifestatum est in carne` is 'which was manifested in the flesh': the antecedent remains the neuter sacrament, and no personal or divine subject from another edition is imported.

Ambiguities preserved

`Judicium ... diaboli` and `laqueum diaboli` remain 'judgment of the devil' and 'snare of the devil' without assigning whether the first genitive denotes the devil's judgment, a judgment upon him, or another narrower relation. `Mulieres` remains 'women,' without deciding in the reader text whether they are deacons' wives or women serving in another role.

Clarity decisions

The elliptical qualifications are supplied only with their governing necessity: 'He must not be' at 3:6 and 'deacons must be' at 3:8. `Nullum crimen habentes` becomes 'having no charge against them' so the legal-reputational force remains intelligible, and `conversari` is 'conduct yourself' rather than a narrower description of residence.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review restored the unfinished 3:3 `sed` as a final 'but' carried into 3:4, preventing the household qualification from becoming detached. 'Children' was corrected to 'sons' for `filios`; 3:10 was corrected to the jussives 'let ... be proved' and 'let them minister,' with `sic` as 'thus'; and a personalized rendering of 3:16 was rejected so Clementine `quod` governs every following predicate. Final adversarial review changed much confidence to much boldness at 3:13 so `multam fiduciam` retains the public freedom and assurance of speech carried by `fiducia`.

Canonical terminology

`Episcopatus` is 'episcopate,' `episcopus` is 'bishop,' and `diaconus` is 'deacon'; `ministrare` is 'minister.' `Fiducia` is 'boldness' in 3:13. `Pudicus` is 'chaste,' `castitas` is 'chastity,' `mysterium` is 'mystery,' `sacramentum` is 'sacrament,' `pietas` is 'piety,' and binding `firmamentum` remains 'firmament.'

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from the Spirit's manifest warning about departure from faith and doctrines of demons (`discedent quidam a fide`) to thanksgiving for God's good creatures, then to Timothy's nourishment, exercise in piety, public example and ministry, and persistent attention to himself and doctrine for the salvation of himself and his hearers.

Governing Latin

Attendentes in 4:1 carries the departing persons into spiritibus erroris and doctrinis dæmoniorum; the genitives loquentium, habentium, and prohibentium continue through 4:2-3. The commands from devita and exerce through attende and insta preserve their direct objects, while Hoc enim faciens governs both coordinated future results in 4:16.

Vulgate-specific readings

The supplied 4:3 reads prohibentium nubere, abstinere a cibis, quod Deus creavit. The Latin leaves abstinere as a bare, uncoordinated infinitive. A formally raw 'forbid marrying, to abstain from foods' can reverse the intended food prohibition in English, so the reader text transparently reconstructs the necessary English ellipsis as 'require abstinence from foods.' 'Require' is an English syntactic supply for intelligibility, not a claim that a corresponding verb appears in the Latin; singular-neuter quod remains 'what.' Maledicimur is 'are cursed,' omnium hominum is the generic 'all people,' and maxime fidelium remains 'especially of the faithful.'

Ambiguities preserved

Ad modicum remains 'for a little,' leaving open a small degree or duration of bodily exercise's usefulness. The compact vitæ, quæ nunc est, et futuræ is clarified only by repeating 'life,' while the referential reach of plural illis after 'yourself and doctrine' is not reduced to doctrine alone.

Clarity decisions

The linked genitives of 4:2-3 are rendered as 'those who' clauses so their agency remains readable across verse boundaries. At 4:3 the required English ellipsis is exposed rather than hidden: 'require abstinence' prevents the bare infinitive from being heard as a second object of 'forbid,' while the editorial identifies the supply. Enutritus is 'nourished on,' dum venio is the idiomatic 'until I come,' and the elliptical future life in 4:8 is made audible as 'the life to come' without adding a new proposition.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review changed softened 'misleading spirits' to spiritibus erroris' concrete 'spirits of error,' restored the bodily image 'cauterized' for cauteriatam, and first replaced an explanatory command in 4:3 with the source's bare 'to abstain.' Final adversarial review superseded that bare English construction with 'require abstinence from foods' because English attachment to 'forbid' could reverse the food prohibition; the supplied verb is openly identified as reconstruction, not as an additional Latin word. 'Old-fashioned fables' was corrected to 'old-womanish fables' for aniles, and 'gift' was corrected to 'grace' for gratiam. The same final review changed are reviled to are cursed for maledicimur and all men to all people for generic omnium hominum.

Canonical terminology

Spiritus is 'Spirit' for the manifest speaker; spiritibus erroris is 'spirits of error' and dæmoniorum is 'demons.' Maledicimur is 'are cursed,' and generic homines is 'people.' Creatura is 'creature,' gratiarum actio is 'thanksgiving,' verbum is 'word,' doctrina is 'doctrine,' pietas is 'piety,' caritas is 'charity,' gratia is 'grace,' and presbyterium is 'presbytery.'

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from Timothy’s conduct toward older and younger members, through an exact ordering of widows who receive family or church care, to the honor and correction of presbyters. It closes with solemn impartiality, guarded participation, bodily counsel, sins that precede to judgment or follow some people, and good deeds that cannot be hidden.

Governing Latin

The carried series `Seniorem ... juvenes ... anus ... juvenculas` governs 5:1–2; `quæ vere viduæ sunt` recurs in 5:3 and 5:16 and is intensified by `vere vidua ... et desolata` in 5:5. The commands `eligatur`, `devita`, `subministret`, `habeantur`, `noli recipere`, and `argue` preserve distinct actions rather than reducing the chapter to general advice.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 5:4 singular `discat` and `suam` keep the widow as the learner who governs her house and renders reciprocal duty to her parents. At 5:5 `obsecrationibus` is entreaties, matching the same prayer noun in 2:1; at 5:13 `curiosæ` is meddlesome, preserving its intrusive force rather than the modern positive sense of curious. At 5:18 `Dicit enim Scriptura` governs both sayings: it introduces the ox saying, and the separate `Et:` introduces the worker saying within the same Scripture assertion; both citations remain separately marked. At 5:24 sins both precede to judgment and follow some people, with generic `hominum` and `quosdam` carried without male restriction.

Ambiguities preserved

The first `Seniorem` is rendered older man rather than presbyter because the later office term is explicitly `presbyter`. `Primam fidem` remains first faith without deciding whether it denotes faith, fidelity, or a pledge. `In alteram partem declinando` retains its concrete movement toward the other side without naming a faction, while 5:25 leaves deeds that are otherwise unspecified.

Clarity decisions

The objects implied in the opening comparison are supplied as him and the successive groups without changing the carried command. At 5:16 `fidelis` becomes believer and is repeated as that believer to prevent an unclear singular pronoun. At 5:24 the second clause names sins through they, making `quosdam ... subsequuntur` intelligible while retaining sins as agents that follow some people.

Corrections and reasons

Older man replaced elder at 5:1 to reserve presbyter for `presbyter`; chosen replaced enrolled at 5:9 because `eligatur` itself does not name a register; bind the mouth replaced muzzle at 5:18 to preserve `alligabis os`; and a proposed supported by two witnesses became under two or three witnesses at 5:19 to retain `sub` and the full number. At 5:24 they follow some men first replaced a passive formulation so the sins retained source agency; final adversarial review then changed some men to some people because the persons are generic. That review also changed supplications to entreaties at 5:5 for consistency of `obsecratio` with 2:1, and curious to meddlesome at 5:13 because `curiosæ` names intrusive busyness rather than positive curiosity.

Canonical terminology

This chapter distinguishes older man/woman (`senior`, `anus`), younger men/women (`juvenes`, `juvenculæ`, `juniores`), and the office term presbyter (`presbyter`). Generic `homo` is person or people. `Obsecratio` is entreaty, and `curiosus` is meddlesome in its intrusive context. True widow consistently renders `vere vidua`; honor renders `honor`; doctrine renders `doctrina`; faith renders `fides`; and chaste/chastity keeps the `castus` family visible in 5:2 and 5:22.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The chapter begins under the yoke with slaves, masters, and the honor due to the Lord’s name and doctrine. It exposes teaching diseased by verbal battles and a reversal of gain and piety, calls the man of God to fight and confess, rises into the appearing and inaccessible sovereignty of God, then returns to the rich and closes with Timothy guarding the deposit.

Governing Latin

The inversion `existimantium quæstum esse pietatem` in 6:5 is answered by `quæstus magnus pietas cum sufficientia` in 6:6, so gain and piety remain in their source order. `Certa bonum certamen`, `apprehende vitam`, and `bonam confessionem` govern the charge in 6:12–14; `Divitibus ... præcipe` carries through the infinitives of 6:18 and the participle `thesaurizare` in 6:19.

Vulgate-specific readings

The Clementine 6:5 ends with people `supposing gain to be piety` and supplies no withdrawal command. Generic `homines` is likewise people in 6:9, while `nullus hominum` at 6:16 is no human being. At 6:7 `haud dubium quod` explicitly states there is no doubt that nothing can be taken away. At 6:10 `inseruerunt se doloribus multis` is 'entangled themselves in many pains': the insertion, grafting, or involvement force is retained without importing a weapon into the image. At 6:20 the object is the concrete `depositum`, the deposit, followed by profane novelties of utterances and oppositions of falsely named knowledge.

Ambiguities preserved

At 6:2 the relative `qui beneficii participes sunt` is not expanded beyond those who partake of the benefit. At 6:8 `quibus tegamur` remains things with which we may be covered, without restricting the provision to clothing or shelter. At 6:15 his own times does not silently settle the possessive referent, and 6:21 concerning the faith preserves the breadth of `circa fidem`.

Clarity decisions

The dependent accusations of 6:4–5 remain one sentence governed by the teacher of 6:3. At 6:1 slaves states the legal-social condition carried by `servi` under a yoke, while generic human nouns in 6:5, 6:9, and 6:16 are rendered people or human being without male restriction. The paired accusatives in 6:13 are clarified by dashes: Christ rendered testimony, namely the good confession, while the `ut` clause in 6:14 supplies the content of Timothy’s command. Semicolons carry 6:15–16 from Christ, whom the blessed and only Mighty One will show, through that one revealing ruler’s relative clauses, and 6:17–19 preserves the command across three verse units.

Corrections and reasons

A provisional piety is gain at 6:5 became gain to be piety to preserve the accusative-infinitive order and the reversal answered in 6:6. Contentment at 6:6 became sufficiency for `sufficientia`; love of money at 6:10 became covetousness because `cupiditas` does not itself name money; and trust at 6:20 became deposit to retain the concrete noun. The 6:10 sequence was deliberately preserved in the record: inserted themselves into many sorrows was first revised to impaled themselves with many pains, but final adversarial review superseded impaled with entangled themselves in many pains. Clementine `inseruerunt se` denotes insertion, grafting, or involvement and carries no weapon, so entangled preserves reflexive involvement without adding a piercing image. Final review also changed servants to slaves at 6:1 for `servi` under the yoke, generic men to people at 6:5 and 6:9, and no man to no human being at 6:16 for `nullus hominum`. At 6:16 a repeated relative whom was recast with he/him for lucid English without changing the sole possessor, dweller, unseen referent, or recipient of honor.

Canonical terminology

Slave and master render `servus` under the yoke and human `dominus`; the Lord renders divine `Dominus`. Generic `homines` is people, and `nullus hominum` is no human being. Piety renders `pietas`, gain renders `quæstus`, riches/rich render `divitiæ`/`dives`, and covetousness renders `cupiditas`, keeping the wealth vocabulary distinct. Justice renders `justitia`, charity renders `caritas`, doctrine renders `doctrina`, and deposit renders `depositum`.

Second Timothy — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Paul's commission through God's will opens upon the promise of life in Christ and his tender address to Timothy. Thanksgiving and remembered faith lead into the command to revive God's grace; the chapter then joins fearless testimony and Gospel labor to God's purpose and to grace given before the ages and now manifested through Christ. Paul charges Timothy to hold the form of sound words and guard the good deposit before contrasting Asia's withdrawal with Onesiphorus's repeated refreshing and diligent search, framed by petitions for mercy.

Governing Latin

The opening secundum promissionem vitae (1:1) governs Paul's apostleship according to the promise of life. The long movement qui nos liberavit ... quae data est ... Manifestata est autem (1:9-10) is kept continuous across the verse boundary: grace was given before the times of the ages and has now been manifested. Depositum meum (1:12) and Bonum depositum (1:14) preserve the repeated deposit family, while erubescere/non erubuit (1:8, 1:16) preserves the paired call not to be ashamed and Onesiphorus's corresponding lack of shame.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation retains most beloved for carissimo (1:2), from my forefathers for a progenitoribus (1:3), revive the grace of God for resuscites gratiam Dei (1:6), and sobriety for sobrietatis (1:7). It also keeps labor together with the Gospel for collabora Evangelio (1:8), before the times of the ages for ante tempora saecularia (1:9), and the Vulgate's strong destruxit ... illuminavit sequence as destroyed death ... illuminated life and incorruption (1:10). My deposit and the good deposit remain visibly linked at 1:12 and 1:14.

Ambiguities preserved

From my forefathers leaves intact whether a progenitoribus emphasizes inherited continuity, temporal origin, or ancestral association (1:3). Receiving the recollection does not turn recordationem accipiens into an externally supplied report; the final certainty wording retains the elliptical conclusion without choosing a new subordinate finite predicate (1:5). A spirit at 1:7 remains lowercase and unnamed because spiritum does not uniquely identify its referent. In which at 1:11 preserves the compact in quo link without resolving it beyond the available antecedent. My deposit at 1:12 retains the compact possessive relation without deciding whether it is what Paul entrusted to God or what was entrusted to Paul. Mercy from the Lord at 1:18 preserves the repeated Dominus construction instead of silently identifying or separating its referents.

Clarity decisions

At the end of 1:5, of it supplies the object needed by English certainty while retaining the Latin's ellipsis and avoiding a new subordinate finite verb. Revive gives intelligible English motion to resuscites without importing fire imagery absent from the Latin (1:6). Me, his prisoner renders the compact me vinctum ejus as Paul's belonging to the Lord in bonds (1:8). Put to shame at 1:12 distinguishes non confundor from the recurring erubescere language while preserving the shame contrast. At 1:18, in how many things makes the substantive quanta audible without inventing a list of services.

Corrections and reasons

At 1:3, because was changed to that so quod introduces the content of thanksgiving without imposing a causal paraphrase. Independent review changed and I am certain that it is also in you to but I am certain of it also in you at 1:5, restoring autem and removing an unsupplied subordinate finite verb while keeping faith as the referent. Initial drafting rejected rekindle at 1:6 because resuscites speaks of raising or reviving and contains no fire image; revive preserves the source's vitality while remaining natural. Timidity was rejected at 1:7 in favor of fear, the direct force of timoris. For 1:10, brought to light was rejected because it would obscure the repeated illumination noun and verb in per illuminationem ... illuminavit. Trust or thing entrusted was not substituted for depositum at 1:12 and 1:14, since deposit keeps the deliberate lexical recurrence and preserves the possessive ambiguity. Gentiles was rejected at 1:11 in favor of nations for gentium, maintaining the established JNV nation terminology. Independent review also corrected the chapter movement so grace, not purpose, is the item manifested through Christ, and removed the unsupplied faithful mercy attribution; it now describes Onesiphorus's stated refreshing and diligent search alongside the petitions for mercy. In governing Latin, answering faithfulness became corresponding lack of shame so non erubuit receives no unsupplied virtue label. The canonical terminology sentence was repaired to identify its two Dominus title occurrences with grammatical plural agreement.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; gratia is grace; misericordia is mercy; pax is peace; fides is faith; dilectio is love; timor is fear; virtus is power; and sobrietas is sobriety. Evangelium is Gospel, Salvator is Savior, incorruptio is incorruption, and gentes is nations. Depositum remains deposit in both occurrences, impositio manuum is imposition of hands, and saecularia is represented by the ages in the phrase times of the ages. The occurrences of Dominus in Christ Jesus our Lord and testimony of our Lord are title contexts, so no YHWH parenthetical is introduced; the same disciplined non-insertion is maintained in the mercy petitions at 1:16 and 1:18.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Timothy is strengthened in Christ's grace and charged to entrust what he heard to faithful teachers. The soldier, contestant, and farmer images then frame disciplined labor, Paul's own bonds, and the faithful saying about dying, enduring, denying, and the one spoken of remaining faithful. The chapter turns from disputes and profane speech to God's sealed foundation and the vessels of a great house, then closes by joining youthful flight and holy pursuit to meek correction and recovery from the devil's snares.

Governing Latin

The repeated certat ... certaverit (2:5) is preserved as contends ... contended, and laborantem (2:6), laboro (2:9), and the opening Labora (2:3) remain audibly within the labor family. The co-compounds commortui, convivemus, and conregnabimus (2:11-12) retain died together, live together, and reign together. Subversionem and subverterunt (2:14, 18) now retain the subversion ... subverted family. Firmum fundamentum ... stat (2:19) keeps the emphatic firm foundation ... stands, while vas in honorem (2:21) answers the paired vessels unto honor or dishonor in 2:20.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation keeps the source's past erant as who were fit to teach others also (2:2), rather than normalizing it to a future tense. It retains soldiering for God and worldly affairs for militans Deo ... negotiis saecularibus (2:4), lawfully for legitime (2:5), heavenly glory for gloria caelesti (2:10), and a cancer for cancer (2:17). It also preserves the fivefold pursuit of justice, faith, hope, charity, and peace at 2:22, including hope, and renders docibilem as teachable at 2:24.

Ambiguities preserved

Through many witnesses preserves per multos testes without choosing mediation or public attestation; faithful people keeps hominibus generic; and were fit retains imperfect erant without supplying future ability or obligation (2:2). To whom he has proved himself leaves cui se probavit in its compact reflexive relation without adding an oath, employer, or enlistment formula (2:4). Must first receive leaves primum able to mark temporal sequence or priority rather than naming a first share (2:6). Died together, live together, and reign together preserve the co-compounds without inserting an unexpressed companion, while the conditional English retains the perfect, future, future-perfect, and present relations of 2:11-13. From these leaves ab istis as a bare demonstrative without naming either things or persons (2:21). At 2:25, if perhaps and may give retain nequando and subjunctive det without making repentance certain. At 2:26, by whom and his render a quo and ipsius reversibly without naming either the captor or the owner of the will.

Clarity decisions

Faithful people at 2:2 renders hominibus generically while preserving faithful as the controlling qualification. The parenthetical him at 2:12 supplies the necessary English object of deny while marking that it is understood rather than written; have denied makes the perfect relation of negaverimus audible without disturbing the future response. Those who hear at 2:14 resolves audientium as people, not the abstract act of hearing. Profane things and vain talk at 2:16 keeps two grammatical elements distinct; their plural pronoun then carries the sense into advance. Recognition of the truth at 2:25 makes ad cognoscendam veritatem lucid while retaining its purpose relation. Recover their senses makes resipiscant intelligible while preserving its motion back from deception (2:26).

Corrections and reasons

Draft review rejected suffer hardship at 2:3 because the frozen Latin says Labora, so Labor remains. Competes was replaced by contends at 2:5 so the certare repetition could appear on both sides of the crowning condition. At 2:12, deny became have denied so future-perfect negaverimus remains distinct from present non credimus in 2:13. The familiar but broader rightly dividing was rejected at 2:15 in favor of rightly handling, the direct force of recte tractantem. Gangrene was not imported at 2:17; the Clementine source explicitly reads cancer, retained as cancer. At 2:18, overturned became subverted to restore the subversionem ... subverterunt family from 2:14. At 2:21, things was removed because bare ab istis does not choose a noun or referent. At 2:22, and became yet so vero retains its contrast between flight and pursuit. At 2:24, And became But to retain repeated autem and the contrast with generated quarrels. At 2:25, knowing became recognition to preserve cognoscendam and clarify the purpose relation. Apt to teach was rejected at 2:24 because docibilem directly describes teachability. At 2:26, a fully resolved paraphrase of the two pronouns was rejected so the source's agency and will relation remains visible.

Canonical terminology

Gratia is grace; Evangelium is Gospel; salus is salvation; gloria caelestis is heavenly glory; fides is faith; veritas is truth; impietas is impiety; resurrectio is resurrection; iniquitas is iniquity; justitia is justice; spes is hope; caritas is charity; pax is peace; and paenitentia is repentance. Miles and militans retain the soldier family, certare is contend, corona is crown, vas is vessel, subvertere is subvert, and cognoscere is recognize. Dominus is Lord throughout these direct Christological, servant, invocation, and seal contexts; no YHWH parenthetical is introduced.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The warning that perilous times will be at hand unfolds through a sustained portrait of self-love, disorder, and an appearance of piety emptied of power. House-penetrating captors and the resistance of Jannes and Mambres give way to the exposure of folly. Paul then turns directly to Timothy's following of his doctrine and sufferings, the certainty of persecution, and the command to remain in what he learned, ending with the sacred letters and the usefulness of every divinely inspired Scripture for forming the person of God.

Governing Latin

The repeated privative forms sine affectione, sine pace, and sine benignitate (3:3) remain the audible without sequence. Speciem quidem pietatis, virtutem autem ejus (3:5) keeps the indeed/but contrast between appearance and power. Proficient appears first in the limit placed on the opponents at 3:9 and again in the worsening advance at 3:13; advance preserves the recurrence. Didicisti ... didiceris (3:14) remains learned ... learned, while instruere at 3:15 and instructus at 3:17 remain instruct ... instructed.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation retains without peace, incontinent, and without kindness for sine pace, incontinentes, and sine benignitate (3:3), little women for the marked diminutive mulierculas at 3:6, and the Vulgate name Mambres at 3:8. It preserves longsuffering and patience as distinct coordinated qualities at 3:10, the passive were entrusted to you at 3:14, sacred letters at 3:15, the exact unjoined construction Every Scripture divinely inspired is useful at 3:16, and person of God for generic homo Dei at 3:17. The four parallel purposes remain for teaching, for reproving, for correcting, and for instructing in justice.

Ambiguities preserved

Little women preserves the marked diminutive mulierculas without deciding whether its force is physical, social, vulnerable, contemptuous, or another nuance; no generic women or selected weak reading replaces it (3:6). Reprobate concerning the faith leaves circa fidem relational rather than declaring a fully defined institutional status (3:8). Instruction retains institutionem without expanding it to the narrower manner of life; its placement between doctrine and purpose leaves its training, formation, and conduct range recorded rather than silently settled (3:10). Were entrusted to you follows the entrustment force available to credita sunt tibi without naming an entruster; the possible passive hearing were believed by you remains recorded rather than suppressed, while from whom preserves singular a quo without naming the referent (3:14). Every Scripture divinely inspired is useful leaves divinitus inspirata unjoined to utilis, preserving the attributive-or-predicative attachment question without an inserted and, punctuation decision, or second finite verb (3:16).

Clarity decisions

People is used for generic homines in the vice list and later contrasts, while person remains singular and non-sex-specific for generic homo in person of God (3:2, 3:8, 3:13, 3:17). Little women keeps the marked diminutive audible; the immediate captive, laden, and led clauses supply the context without adding weak as a selected interpretation (3:6). Casting into error keeps the object unexpressed just as in errorem mittentes does, while making the causative action audible (3:13). Followed renders assecutus es as Timothy's sustained adherence to Paul's enumerated doctrine and life rather than a single moment of attainment, while instruction leaves institutionem unexpanded (3:10).

Corrections and reasons

Draft review rejected dangerous at 3:1 in favor of perilous, retaining the weight of periculosa without implying only a subjective sense of danger. Independent review changed weak women to little women at 3:6 because mulierculas is a marked diminutive and weak selected only one possible nuance. Jambres was rejected at 3:8 because the frozen Clementine row explicitly reads Mambres. Delivered was changed to rescued at 3:11 so eripuit remains distinct from the liberare deliverance family in 4:17-18. Deceivers was rejected for seducers at 3:13 so the active drawing-astray force of seductores remains distinct from the following erring and casting into error. Independent review expanded the 3:10 and 3:14 ambiguity record so institutionem, credita sunt tibi, and singular a quo remain accountable without an invented sense, agent, or named source. Arguing was changed to reproving at 3:16 because arguere here names corrective exposure rather than debate. A proposed Every Scripture is divinely inspired and useful was rejected because it resolves the source's compressed syntax. Independent review changed man of God to person of God at 3:17 because homo is generic and contemporary man could manufacture male-only reference. Equipped at 3:17 was rejected in favor of instructed to preserve the instruere/instructus family across 3:15 and 3:17.

Canonical terminology

Pietas is piety; virtus is power; veritas is truth; fides is faith; doctrina is doctrine; institutio remains instruction with its wider formation or conduct range recorded; propositum is purpose; longanimitas is longsuffering; dilectio is love; patientia is patience; persecutio is persecution; salus is salvation; Scriptura is Scripture; and justitia is justice. Arguere is reprove, while corripere remains correct. Sacrae litterae is sacred letters, divinitus inspirata is divinely inspired, and generic homo Dei is person of God. Dominus in Paul's rescue at 3:11 remains Lord without an inserted YHWH marker because the immediate apostolic Christ context does not warrant one.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Paul's solemn testimony before God and Jesus Christ issues in the concentrated command to preach the word through welcome and unwelcome seasons. A coming refusal of sound doctrine sharpens Timothy's call to watch, labor, evangelize, fulfill his ministry, and remain sober. Paul then speaks of present libation, approaching dissolution, completed contest and course, preserved faith, and the crown of justice. Personal travel notices, abandonment, books and parchments, opposition, defense, deliverance, and the heavenly kingdom carry the letter into its final greetings and grace.

Governing Latin

Per adventum ipsius, et regnum ejus (4:1) retains the coordinated by his coming and his kingdom under the opening testimony. The imperative chain praedica, insta, argue, obsecra, increpa (4:2) remains preach, be insistent, reprove, entreat, rebuke. Certamen certavi (4:7) is kept as contended the contest. Diligunt at 4:8 and diligens at 4:9 remain the hold dear family, distinct from dilectionem as love at 3:10. The deliverance family liberatus sum, Liberavit, and salvum faciet (4:17-18) is kept as was delivered, delivered, and will save. The final singular spiritu tuo and plural vobiscum (4:22) remain recorded in order as your spirit and you.

Vulgate-specific readings

The translation preserves doctrine rather than replacing it with teaching as an institution, fables for fabulas (4:3-4), dissolution for resolutionis and poured out in libation for delibor (4:6), crown of justice for corona justitiae, and the judicial will render for reddet (4:8). Those who hold his coming dear and Demas holding this age dear preserve diligunt and diligens as one family distinct from dilectionem, love (4:8-9). It also retains showed me many evils and future will render at 4:14, mouth of the lion at 4:17, and the directional will save me into his heavenly kingdom at 4:18. The independent Make haste command remains inside the frozen 4:8 row.

Ambiguities preserved

Singular qui after God and Jesus Christ is rendered who is, so the judging relative is not distributed as a plural predicate; ipsius and ejus remain, in their source order, the two unexpanded his forms rather than interpretive names (4:1). With their ears itching keeps nominative plural prurientes with the people who heap up teachers and leaves auribus as the compact respect phrase; it neither attaches the participle to accusative teachers nor supplies a motive for the itch (4:3). Poured out in libation expresses the present sacrificial passive delibor without naming an offering or agent, while dissolution keeps resolutionis broader than an explicit death formula (4:6). The lion is not historically or symbolically identified in mouth of the lion (4:17). To whom at 4:18 follows singular cui without an editorially imposed change of addressee, and into his heavenly kingdom preserves direction rather than protection within it. At 4:22 your spirit follows singular tuo and Grace with you follows plural vobiscum; modern English you does not inflect for that shift, so the exact Latin numbers are recorded without adding all, a second audience, or a theological explanation.

Clarity decisions

Be insistent makes insta readable as sustained pressing presence while in season, out of season preserves the balanced adverbs opportune, importune (4:2). With their ears itching makes prurientes auribus audible while leaving its compact attachment intact (4:3). Hold dear and holding dear give diligunt and diligens one lucid English family distinct from dilectionem, love (4:8-9). Crescens to Galatia, Titus to Dalmatia keeps the source's sharp verbal ellipsis instead of repeating an invented travel verb (4:10). Coppersmith provides the concrete trade sense of aerarius (4:14). The clause Make haste to come to me quickly is preserved after the complete crown sentence within 4:8 because that is its frozen verse location.

Corrections and reasons

Draft review rejected convenient and inconvenient at 4:2 because the English would misdescribe circumstances rather than seasonality; in season, out of season retains the opposition. Departure was rejected at 4:6 because it would narrow resolutionis; dissolution preserves the unbinding image. Crown of righteousness was rejected at 4:8 in favor of crown of justice, the established direct rendering of justitia. Reward was rejected for reddet because render preserves the judicial repayment echoed by the just judge and by 4:14. Independent review changed those who love his coming and loving this age to those who hold his coming dear and holding this age dear at 4:8-9 so diligunt and diligens remain one family distinct from dilectionem, love. Independent review also completed the ambiguity evidence for singular qui, ipsius and ejus, prurientes auribus, and the singular-to-plural shift at 4:22 without adding named referents, a motive, all, or an audience theory. Rescued at 4:17 was rejected so delivered could preserve the liberatus/Liberavit recurrence across 4:17-18. The final Grace be with all of you was rejected because it adds both a verb and all; Grace with you preserves the plural vobiscum without expansion (4:22).

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; verbum is word; doctrina is doctrine; patientia is patience; veritas is truth; fabula is fable; ministerium is ministry; fides is faith; justitia is justice; adventus is coming; regnum caeleste is heavenly kingdom; praedicatio is preaching; opus is work; and gratia is grace. Diligere is hold dear at 4:8-9, distinct from dilectio as love and caritas as charity. Saeculum is age at 4:9 and saecula saeculorum is ages of ages at 4:18. Dominus and Dominus Jesus Christus remain Lord and the Lord Jesus Christ in direct apostolic title and agency contexts; no YHWH parenthetical is introduced.

Titus — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

1:1–4 remains one verbless salutation: Paul’s service and apostleship are measured by the faith of God’s elect and knowledge of truth, carried in hope of eternal life through God’s promise and the manifestation of his word in the entrusted proclamation, and completed in grace and peace for Titus. 1:5–9 turns to what is lacking in Crete: presbyters are appointed city by city, and the bishop’s household, character, stewardship, faithful speech, and capacity to exhort and reprove are tested. 1:10–14 identifies disobedient empty talk, deception, overturned households, and the Cretan testimony, then answers with severe rebuke directed toward soundness in faith and withdrawal from fables and human commands. 1:15–16 closes with clean things set against contaminated people and defiled mind and conscience, then confession of knowing God set against deed-denial and unfitness for every good work.

Governing Latin

At 1:1, Paulus servus Dei, Apostolus autem Jesu Christi keeps the contrastive connector and the two secundum relations, while quæ can resume either agnitionem or veritatis. At 1:2, in spem vitæ æternæ, quam promisit keeps hope and life in one phrase under promisit, and qui non mentitur, Deus delays God’s apposition; ante tempora sæcularia supplies the age-language. At 1:3, God remains the subject of manifestavit autem, temporibus suis is “in his own times,” in prædicatione leaves sphere or means open, feminine quæ binds to proclamation, and Salvatoris nostri Dei governs “our Savior God.” At 1:5–9, the two ut verbs, distributive per civitates, the eleven character qualifications, participial amplectentem, and delayed eum … fidelem sermonem control the English. At 1:13–14, non intendentes continues the rebuked people and aversantium modifies hominum. At 1:15, coinquinatis differs from perfect passive inquinatæ sunt; at 1:16, negant has no expressed object and reprobi is governed by ad omne opus bonum.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 1:1, “but” renders autem and no finite greeting verb is added. At 1:2, the delayed wording “the one who does not lie, God” and “before the ages of time” preserve qui non mentitur, Deus and ante tempora sæcularia. At 1:3, “our Savior God” preserves Salvatoris nostri Dei before 1:4’s distinct “Christ Jesus our Savior”; the entrusted thing is the feminine proclamation, not the neuter word. At 1:4, the blessing is exactly grace and peace, without imported mercy. At 1:5, what is lacking remains broad and presbyteros remains “presbyters.” At 1:9, sermo is “speech,” distinct from verbum at 1:3. At 1:11, redargui is passive reproof rather than an added restraint action. At 1:12, “lazy bellies” preserves ventres pigri. At 1:14, hominum is generic “people.” At 1:15, coinquinatis is “contaminated” while inquinatæ sunt is “have been defiled.” At 1:16, “deny” remains objectless and unfitness retains the full scope of every good work.

Ambiguities preserved

At 1:1, “the knowledge of truth, which is according to godliness” allows “which” to resume either the head “knowledge” or embedded “truth,” as feminine quæ permits agnitionem or veritatis. At 1:2, quam may resume hope or eternal life; the English places “which” after the full phrase and records rather than doctrinally enlarges the natural nearest-life reading. “In the hope” preserves in spem as a governing relation, and “ages of time” preserves tempora sæcularia without an added creation claim. At 1:3, “in the proclamation” retains in prædicatione without forcing sphere or means; “entrusted” is selected from credita est mihi, whose feminine agreement excludes “word,” while a bare believed-by-me reading is rejected because the passive-plus-dative construction presents the proclamation as committed to Paul. At 1:5, “set right” leaves corrigas broader than supplying persons or completing a list, “city by city” expresses per civitates distributively without adding “every,” and “directed” records disposui tibi as Paul’s arrangement for Titus without inventing its medium. At 1:6, “faithful” retains the believing/trustworthy range; “debauchery” retains luxuriæ as dissolute excess without narrowing it to modern luxury; “neither ... nor” keeps both negatives and aut under the children. At 1:7–8, “steward” keeps dispensatorem’s management sense without defining an office; “given to anger,” “given to wine,” “one who strikes,” “shameful gain,” “kind,” “sober,” “just,” “holy,” and “self-controlled” keep iracundum, vinolentum, percussorem, turpis lucri, benignum, sobrium, justum, sanctum, and continentem distinct. At 1:9, the reunited “faithful speech” resolves eum ... fidelem sermonem as one object without turning eum into a person. At 1:10, commaed “too” takes etiam additively with the existence of the many rather than forcing it onto one catalogue term. At 1:11, “be reproved” preserves passive redargui, and “whole households” renders universas domos without claiming every household in Crete. At 1:13, “severely” carries dure’s intensity; at 1:14, “who turn themselves away” attaches aversantium to the people whose commands are named, not to Titus. At 1:15, “clean” leaves munda’s range unexpanded, and “faithless” keeps infidelibus open between absence of belief and fidelity. At 1:16, “detestable” takes abominati adjectivally, “unbelieving” renders incredibiles without merging it with reprobi, and “being” preserves circumstantial or causal cum sint.

Clarity decisions

At 1:1–4, the lowercase verse openings and em dashes after 1:2 and 1:3 preserve one Paul-to-Titus salutation; the commaed relative at 1:1 keeps its antecedent question readable, and the commas at 1:2 retain the delayed apposition. At 1:5–6, a colon introduces the presbyter qualification, and “neither accused of debauchery nor insubordinate” makes clear that both descriptions belong to the children. At 1:7–9, the continuing commas carry the ellipsed “must be” and the participle into “embracing,” while the separated eum ... fidelem sermonem frame is reunited as “the faithful speech.” At 1:11, “to be taught” completes the English form of the impersonal ellipsis quæ non oportet. At 1:12, the copula “are” is supplied in the verbless saying. At 1:14, “people who” keeps the genitive relative attachment visible. At 1:15, “however” and “but” distinguish the two connectors while “have been defiled” makes the perfect passive clear. At 1:16, the compressed but intelligible objectless “deny” is retained because the Latin supplies no object.

Corrections and reasons

Current self-audit corrections: at 1:1, “and an apostle” became “but an apostle” for autem, and “the knowledge of the truth that accords” became “the knowledge of truth, which is according” so quæ can still resume agnitionem or veritatis. At 1:2, “God, who does not lie” became “the one who does not lie, God” for delayed qui non mentitur, Deus. At 1:3, “God our Savior” became “our Savior God” to preserve Salvatoris nostri Dei before 1:4’s different title order. At 1:9, “faithful word” became “faithful speech” so sermonem is not collapsed into 1:3 verbum. At 1:14, “commandments of men” became “commands of people” to retain generic hominum and distinguish mandatis from præceptum. At 1:15, “defiled and unbelieving ... Rather ... are defiled” became “contaminated and faithless ... but ... have been defiled” to distinguish coinquinatis from inquinatæ, preserve the fides family, render sed, and carry the perfect passive. At 1:16, “deny him” became objectless “deny” because negant expresses no object. Earlier self-review joined 1:1–4, changed “before time began” to “before the ages of time” for sæcularia, “preaching” to “proclamation” for feminine quæ, “what remained” to “what is lacking” for desunt, “violent” to “one who strikes” for percussorem, and “reprobate” to “unfit” under ad omne opus bonum. The stronger restraint alternative at 1:11 remains rejected because redargui supplies reproof, not silencing. No required correction remains open.

Canonical terminology

Deus is “God” throughout. Salvatoris nostri Dei is “our Savior God” at 1:3; Deus Pater is “God the Father” and Christo Jesu Salvatore nostro is “Christ Jesus our Savior” at 1:4. No Dominus occurs, so no “Lord” or YHWH form appears. Veritas is “truth,” pietas is “godliness,” and theological gratia is “grace” at 1:4 while postpositive gratia is reason/sake at 1:5 and 1:11. The fides family appears as “faith” at 1:1, 1:4, and 1:13, “faithful” for children and speech at 1:6 and 1:9, and “faithless” for infidelibus at 1:15; incredibiles is separately “unbelieving” at 1:16. Verbum is “word,” prædicatio is “proclamation,” sermo is “speech,” and doctrina is “doctrine”; sana and sani are “sound.” Presbyteros is “presbyters,” episcopum is “bishop,” and dispensatorem is “steward.” Turpis lucri is “shameful gain,” benignum is “kind,” and justum is “just.” Munda is “clean,” coinquinatis is “contaminated,” and inquinatæ is “defiled.” Reprobi remains “unfit” under “every good work.”

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

2:1 opens with Titus’s charge to speak what befits sound doctrine. 2:2–10 unfolds that doctrine as visible conduct among older men, older women, young women, young men, Titus himself, and slaves. 2:11–14 grounds the entire charge in the appearing grace of God our Savior: grace instructs us to live in this age while we await the blessed hope and the coming of glory, and Christ’s self-gift redeems and cleanses a people for good works. 2:15 returns from that theological ground to the threefold command to speak, exhort, and reprove.

Governing Latin

At 2:1, quæ decent sanam doctrinam governs the practical sequence: the conduct described is what befits sound doctrine. The repeated sobrius family—sobrii at 2:2 and 2:6, sobrias at 2:5, and sobrie at 2:12—binds communal instruction to the life grace teaches; impietatem and pie keep impiety and pious living in direct lexical opposition. At 2:11–14, Apparuit, erudiens, exspectantes, and qui dedit sustain one movement from grace’s appearing, through present instruction and expectation, to Christ’s self-gift. At 2:14, redimeret, mundaret, and sectatorem retain the sequence of redemption, cleansing, and active pursuit.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 2:3, bene docentes is rendered “teaching well” because bene modifies the act of teaching; no different object is supplied. At 2:8, the objectless vereatur remains “may fear,” rather than being converted into another response. The title order alternates exactly: Salvatoris nostri Dei is “our Savior God” at 2:10, whereas Dei Salvatoris nostri is “God our Savior” at 2:11. At 2:14, acceptabilem is retained as “acceptable,” and the singular sectatorem is preserved concretely as “a pursuer,” rather than being generalized into an abstract quality.

Ambiguities preserved

At 2:3, in habitu sancto is rendered “holy in bearing” so that habitus is not narrowed exclusively to clothing or exclusively to inward disposition; “enslaved to much wine” retains servientes as a concrete service relation rather than replacing it with an addiction diagnosis. At 2:4, “love” and “cherish” keep ament and diligant distinct without assigning a doctrinal difference to their objects. At 2:8, “may fear” leaves vereatur without an invented object or cause. At 2:9, “them” after “pleasing” is supplied for lucid English with the masters as the available referent, while placentes, contradicentes, and fraudantes themselves express no objects; “good faith” preserves the relational range of fidem bonam. At 2:13, “of the great God and of our Savior Jesus Christ” carries the coordinated genitives magni Dei et Salvatoris nostri Jesu Christi without forcing either a doctrinal equation or a doctrinal separation of their referents. At 2:14, “cleanse for himself an acceptable people” keeps sibi close to the act and its resulting people without adding an explanation.

Clarity decisions

The cross-verse construction of 2:1–5 remains visibly continuous: 2:1 ends with the governing colon, 2:2 and 2:3 supply English “that,” and the colon in 2:4 lets the commands continue into 2:5 without merging the verse units. At 2:7–8, an em-dash and “with” attach verbum sanum, irreprehensibile to Titus’s example under præbe while leaving each verse auditable. At 2:9, “Slaves are to be” makes the Latin servos ... subditos esse construction immediately intelligible. At 2:11–14, “instructing,” “awaiting,” and “who” preserve the long syntactic movement rather than turning its stages into unrelated assertions. At 2:15, “Let no one despise you” preserves the third-person jussive Nemo te contemnat instead of recasting it as a command for Titus to control others.

Corrections and reasons

In self-audit, 2:3 was corrected from the considered “teachers of good” to “teaching well” because bene is adverbial. At 2:5, “have care of” was refined to “care for” so domus curam habentes remains direct without needlessly dated English. At 2:8, an interpretive “be ashamed” was rejected in favor of “may fear” to answer directly to vereatur. At 2:10, “God our Savior” was corrected to “our Savior God” because Salvatoris nostri Dei has the reverse title order from Dei Salvatoris nostri at 2:11. At 2:12, “worldly desires” was refined to “the desires of the age” so the sæcularia ... sæculo echo remains audible, and “devoutly” was corrected to “piously” so pie remains visibly related to impietatem. At 2:13, a fused title was revised to the coordinated “of the great God and of our Savior Jesus Christ” so the Latin does not have its referential question silently settled. At 2:14, a proposed abstract rendering was corrected to the singular “a pursuer of good works” to preserve sectatorem and its agreement with the collective populum. After independent review, the chapter movement’s false “hope awaits glory” agency was corrected to “grace instructs us to live in this age while we await the blessed hope and the coming of glory”: exspectantes is nominative plural continuing the people/us, while beatam spem and adventum gloriæ are its coordinated accusative objects.

Canonical terminology

Doctrina is “doctrine” at 2:1, 2:7, and 2:10; sobrius and sobrie are “sober” and “soberly” at 2:2, 2:5, 2:6, and 2:12. The explicit servus–dominus relation at 2:9 is “slave–master,” preserving both the human relationship and the human sense of dominus. Salvator noster Deus is “our Savior God” at 2:10, while Deus Salvator noster is “God our Savior” at 2:11. The sæcularis–sæculum family is carried by “age,” and impietas–pie by “impiety–piously,” at 2:12. Verbum Dei is “the word of God” at 2:5, while bare verbum is contextually “speech” at 2:8. Fides is “faith” at 2:2 and “good faith” at 2:10, where bona and the slave–master setting require the relational sense. Bonorum operum remains “good works” for Titus’s example at 2:7 and the cleansed people’s pursuit at 2:14.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Verses 3:1–2 move from subjection to rulers and authorities and readiness for every good work into speech, forbearance, and all gentleness toward all people. Verse 3 grounds that charge in the remembered condition of ‘we too’: foolishness, unbelief, error, service to desires and pleasures, malice, envy, and mutual hate. The single sentence at 3:4–7 turns on the appearing of the kindness and humaneness of our Savior God: he saves not from works of justice but according to his own mercy, through regeneration and renewal, pouring the Holy Spirit into us through Jesus Christ our Savior, so that we, justified by his grace, may be heirs according to eternal-life hope. Verses 3:8–11 set useful good works against useless, vain disputes, then move from measured correction to avoidance. Verses 3:12–15 close with travel, careful provision, necessary uses, fruitfulness, greetings, and the grace of God for the whole plural community.

Governing Latin

At 3:1–2, ‘Admone illos’ governs the infinitive chain through ‘non litigiosos esse’; one ‘subditos esse’ governs both ‘principibus’ and ‘potestatibus’, while participial ‘ostendentes’ continues the same people and ‘omnem ... ad omnes’ gives the closing totality its echo. At 3:3, imperfect ‘Eramus’, additive ‘et nos’, the participles, and ‘odibiles, odientes’ govern the English tense, shared agency, and repeated hate-root. At 3:4–7, temporal ‘Cum autem’ opens one sentence that reaches purpose ‘ut ... hæredes simus’; ‘non ex ... sed secundum’ sets the controlling contrast, ‘suam misericordiam’ keeps God's own mercy, masculine ‘quem’ resumes ‘Spiritus Sancti’, ‘in nos’ supplies direction, and ‘ipsius’ remains a pronoun. At 3:8, dative ‘Deo’ governs ‘credunt’, both ‘curent’ and ‘præesse’ remain visible, and final ‘Hæc’ is not expanded. At 3:8 and 3:14, identical ‘bonis operibus præesse’ receives identical English. At 3:10–11, ‘unam et secundam’, perfect passive ‘subversus est’, present ‘delinquit’, and passive ‘condemnatus’ remain distinct. At 3:12, future-perfect ‘misero’ precedes the command; at 3:14 ‘Discant’ remains jussive; and at 3:15 singular ‘te’ and ‘saluta’ give way to plural ‘omnibus vobis’ in the verbless blessing.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 3:1, ‘dicto obedire’ is ‘obey the command’, with no speaker or object supplied from outside the row. At 3:4, ‘Salvatoris nostri Dei’ remains in the marked order ‘our Savior God’; 3:6 separately keeps ‘Jesum Christum Salvatorem nostrum’ as ‘Jesus Christ our Savior’. At 3:5, ‘operibus justitiæ’ is ‘works of justice’, ‘lavacrum’ is ‘washing’, and no sacramental name is added. At 3:6, the masculine Spirit-relative is ‘whom’, God pours him ‘into us’, and Jesus Christ remains the expressed mediation. At 3:8, ‘qui credunt Deo’ is ‘those who believe God’, not an imported construction meaning believe in God; ‘bonis operibus præesse’ is ‘take the lead in good works’ here and again at 3:14. At 3:10, the unusual ‘after one and a second correction’ is not normalized into a different count. At 3:11, the passive condemnation and ‘proprio judicio’ remain ‘condemned by a judgment of their own’, not the more decisive ‘self-condemned’. At 3:13, the supplied name is ‘Apollo’, and no kind of law is invented for Zenas. At 3:15, God is explicit, the Lord is absent, and ‘all of you’ retains the plural address.

Ambiguities preserved

At 3:1, ‘the command’ carries the command/utterance sense of ‘dicto’ without naming who spoke it. At 3:3, ‘of many kinds’ follows the coordinated ‘desires and pleasures’, allowing ‘variis’ to be heard with the pair or most immediately with pleasures. At 3:5, final ‘of the Holy Spirit’ can attach most narrowly to renewal or across the coordinated regeneration-and-renewal phrase. At 3:7, ‘his grace’ leaves the antecedent of ‘ipsius’ pronominal, and ‘according to the hope of eternal life’ does not harmonize the preposition to Titus 1:2. At 3:8, ‘confirm’ retains the establish/affirm range of ‘confirmare’; the first English ‘these things’ carries topical ‘de his’, while the second carries final ‘Hæc’, and neither demonstrative is expanded to a settled referent. At 3:9, ‘over the law’ is grammatically nearest the fights without declaring that the law has no thematic reach into the preceding catalogue. At 3:10, ‘heretical’ is not expanded into a later technical taxonomy. At 3:11, ‘being condemned’ does not force causal or merely circumstantial ‘cum’, and ‘a judgment of their own’ preserves the ownership/source question in ‘proprio judicio’. At 3:14, ‘our own’ leaves ‘nostri’ unnamed and ‘necessary uses’ does not choose among needs, uses, services, or beneficiaries. At 3:15, ‘in faith’ remains attached after ‘love us’ without being rewritten as love of the faith.

Clarity decisions

Verses 3:1–2 are punctuated as one reminder and one dependent infinitive chain; the lowercase continuation at 3:2 prevents a new command or speaker from being invented. At 3:2, ‘revile’ gives ‘blasphemare’ its human-directed force, and ‘forbearing’ avoids the appearance-focused modern sense of ‘modestos’ while remaining distinct from ‘gentleness’ for ‘mansuetudinem’. At 3:3, ‘living in’ makes the idiom ‘in malitia et invidia agentes’ intelligible without changing the shared first-person agency. Verses 3:4–7 remain one sentence; the English supplies only the pronoun required for the implicit divine subject of ‘salvos ... fecit’ and ‘effudit’, and ‘having been justified’ displays the perfect passive participle. At 3:8, topical ‘de his’ is recast as the direct English ‘these things’, while the two source colons and the purpose introduced by ‘ut’ remain visible. At 3:10–11, ‘a person of this kind’ integrates the parenthetic ‘qui ejusmodi est’; singular ‘their’ keeps generic ‘hominem’ from becoming a male-only rule. At 3:12, ‘When I have sent’ renders the completed future action before ‘hasten’, and ‘at Nicopolis’ expresses the destination without added geography. At 3:13, ‘skilled in law’ is placed beside Zenas alone. At 3:14, ‘let ... learn’ preserves the jussive; at 3:15, the final blessing remains verbless rather than adding an unexpressed finite verb.

Corrections and reasons

The translator self-audit removed an inferred governing speaker from 3:1 and retained only ‘the command’; it also replaced appearance-focused ‘modest’ at 3:2 with ‘forbearing’ and distinguished that quality from ‘gentleness’. At 3:3, ‘of many kinds’ was placed after the entire coordinated phrase so that the scope of ‘variis’ was not silently narrowed. At 3:4, the title was restored to ‘our Savior God’ rather than regularized to the order found in a different Titus formula, and ‘humaneness’ was retained as a second noun rather than collapsed into kindness or expanded into an event. At 3:5, simple past ‘did’ was retained with the Latin perfect, ‘justice’ replaced any generalized virtue term, and ‘washing’ displaced any named rite absent from the row. At 3:6, ‘into us’ replaced a spatially softened alternative, and ‘whom’ prevents the Holy Spirit from being treated as an impersonal washing or process. The two instances of ‘bonis operibus præesse’ at 3:8 and 3:14 were harmonized as ‘take the lead in good works’. The audit rejected a normalized ‘after two corrections’ at 3:10 and ‘self-condemned’ at 3:11 because each closes wording that the Latin leaves more exact or more open. At 3:13, ‘Apollo’ replaced the familiarized but unsupplied form ‘Apollos’; at 3:15, no Lord-title or singular audience was imported. The formal audit additionally restored inclusive ‘we’ in the chapter movement, traced the 3:1–2 infinitive chain through ‘non litigiosos esse’, and distinguished topical ‘de his’ from final ‘Hæc’, preventing editorial number loss, syntactic truncation, and demonstrative conflation.

Canonical terminology

Chapter 3 keeps ‘Deus’ as ‘God’, ‘misericordia’ as ‘mercy’, theological ‘gratia’ as ‘grace’, ‘justitiæ’ as ‘justice’, and ‘justificati’ as ‘justified’, preserving the justice/justification family at 3:5–7. ‘Spiritus Sanctus’ is ‘the Holy Spirit’. Savior titles retain their supplied referent and order: ‘our Savior God’ at 3:4 and ‘Jesus Christ our Savior’ at 3:6. ‘Dictum’ is ‘command’ at 3:1, while ‘sermo’ is ‘saying’ at 3:8; neither is collapsed into the book's words for doctrine, word, or preaching. ‘Ad omne opus bonum’ remains ‘every good work’, and both occurrences of ‘bonis operibus præesse’ are ‘take the lead in good works’. ‘Credere Deo’ is ‘believe God’, retaining the dative relation. Generic ‘homines’ and ‘hominem’ are ‘people’ and ‘person’, not male-only terms. The names are Artemas, Tychicus, Nicopolis, Zenas, and Apollo as warranted by the supplied forms. Titus contains no ‘Dominus’, so none is introduced into the chapter's titles or closing grace.

Philemon — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Verses 1–3 form one address and greeting: Paul is named as a prisoner of Christ Jesus, Timothy as the brother, and Philemon, Appia, Archippus, and the church in Philemon's house as the dative recipients before grace and peace reach the plural audience. Verses 4–7 move through Paul's thanksgiving, remembrance, hearing, and prayer-purpose into the joy and consolation created when the saints' bowels found rest through Philemon. Verses 8–16 turn from Paul's confidence to command toward an appeal because of charity, disclose Onesimus only after 'my son, whom I begot in bonds,' and trace him from former uselessness through Paul's wish to retain him to Philemon's possible reception of him forever, no longer as a slave but in place of a slave as a most beloved brother. Verses 17–22 press the appeal through partnership, liability, Paul's handwritten repayment pledge, Philemon's debt of self, Paul's desire to enjoy him in the Lord, confidence in obedience beyond what is said, and the lodging request grounded in the plural community's prayers. Verses 23–25 distinguish Epaphras the fellow captive from the four helpers and close with the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ for the community's singular spirit.

Governing Latin

The sender-and-recipient construction begins with 'Paulus vinctus Christi Jesu, et Timotheus frater' and carries its datives from 'Philemoni' through 'Appiæ', 'Archippo', and 'ecclesiæ' before the finite blessing of verse 3. At 4–6, Paul's 'Gratias ago' governs participial 'memoriam ... faciens' and 'audiens', while 'ut ... evidens fiat' gives the prayer-purpose and singular 'quod' resumes 'opus'. At 8–10, 'habens ... imperandi' establishes the command Paul could give, 'magis obsecro' states the appeal he chooses, and repeated 'obsecro te' carries that appeal to delayed 'Onesimo'. The relative chain 'qui ... quem ... quem' at 11–13 keeps Onesimus as antecedent while emphatic 'Tu autem' opens the imperative inside verse 12. At 13–16, pluperfect 'volueram', perfect 'volui', active perfect 'discessit', and purpose subjunctives retain Paul's unrealized wish, his refusal to act, Onesimus's own departure, and Philemon's reception. At 17–20, two conditions govern 'suscipe' and 'imputa'; emphatic 'Ego Paulus' governs the handwritten pledge; and first-person 'fruar' remains a wish before singular 'refice'. At 22, singular 'para' changes to plural 'orationes vestras' and passive 'donari me vobis'; at 23–25 singular 'te' gives way to plural possessive 'vestro' with singular 'spiritu'.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader begins with Paul as 'a prisoner of Christ Jesus'; no apostolic title absent from the row is supplied. The names Appia, Marcus, and Lucas preserve the supplied Clementine forms rather than silently importing Apphia, Mark, or Luke. Verse 6 renders 'evidens fiat' as 'may become evident', not an imported effective reading, and renders plural 'in vobis' as 'among you' so the good work's corporate location remains visible. The repeated 'viscera' at 7, 12, and 20 remains the concrete 'bowels', while 'found rest' for 'requieverunt' stays distinct from imperative 'refresh' for 'refice'. Verse 9 retains the frozen second-person 'cum sis talis' as 'since you are such a one' rather than silently changing it to first-person 'I am'. Verse 10 keeps concrete begetting and bonds without adding a conversion explanation; verse 11 keeps Onesimus as the subject of both former uselessness and present usefulness; and verse 15 keeps Onesimus as the active subject of 'he departed', with speculative 'perhaps', 'for an hour', and no named divine agent. Verse 16 retains slave status, 'in place of a slave', superlative 'most beloved', and both flesh and Lord. Verse 22 leaves Paul passively 'to be given to you' without naming a giver. Divine 'Dominus' in this letter is explicitly bound to Jesus Christ, so no Lord (YHWH) parenthetical is inserted.

Ambiguities preserved

At 4, ‘always’ remains beside the remembrance phrase without declaring that it cannot also color Paul’s thanksgiving. At 5, singular ‘quam’ most directly resumes faith, while ‘in the Lord Jesus’ and directional ‘toward all the saints’ remain visibly different relations; the English does not redistribute charity and faith through an explanatory doctrine. At 6, ‘sharing’ retains the participation, communion, and sharing range of ‘communicatio’; ‘knowledge’ preserves ‘agnitio’, and final ‘in Christo Jesu’ is not pinned to an invented agent or narrower phrase. At 8, ‘what pertains to the matter’ retains the fitting/relevant range of ‘quod ad rem pertinet’. At 9, the difficult comparison created by second-person ‘sis’ and nominative ‘Paulus senex’ remains grammatically exposed rather than emended. At 13, ‘on your behalf’ records the behalf/in-stead range of ‘pro te’, while ‘bonds of the Gospel’ does not decide the Gospel’s causal relation. At 14, ‘counsel’ retains decision, counsel, and consent within ‘consilio’, while ‘your good’ remains the good action itself rather than being replaced by consent. At 15, ‘for this reason: that’ preserves the purpose-or-result pressure of ‘ideo … ut’ without declaring providence. At 16, ‘in place of a slave’ preserves ‘pro servo’ without adding the unsupplied comparative ‘more than’. At 18, ‘anything’ can be heard with both harm and debt. At 20, ‘May I enjoy you’ preserves the optative or future-facing force and the deponent range of ‘fruar’ without collapsing it into the useful wordplay. At 21, what lies ‘beyond’ remains unnamed. At 22, neither the donor nor the circumstances of Paul’s being given are supplied.

Clarity decisions

Lowercase continuations and the comma after verse 1 preserve the single address through verse 2, while verse 3 begins the blessing. At 4–6, the commas and colon retain the thanksgiving’s two participles and prayer-purpose without multiplying finite speakers; ‘among you’ makes plural ‘in vobis’ perceptible without adding an audience. At 8–10, the colons keep Paul’s unissued command in the background, make ‘because of charity, I appeal instead’ the controlling choice, and delay Onesimus’s name until the source supplies it. At 12, the period after ‘sent back to you’ and the emphatic ‘But you’ display the source sentence break without changing the antecedent. At 13, the source’s resumptive ‘whom’ is restructured as ‘I had wished to keep him’ so the English does not leave a dangling relative or make it depend on ‘receive’; ‘he’ then makes Onesimus’s agency in the subjunctive purpose clause intelligible. At 15–16, a colon and comma carry the manner of eternal reception across the verse boundary into the slave-and-brother contrast. At 17, ‘as you would me’ supplies only the English modal ellipsis required by ‘sicut me’. At 18, ‘anything’ is repeated after ‘owes you’ for lucid English while remaining within the preceding indefinite scope. At 19, the dash encloses the restrained ‘not to say’ pressure without weakening Paul’s pledge. At 22, ‘But at the same time, also’ makes the force of ‘Simul autem et’ readable without dropping its simultaneity, contrastive transition, or addition. At 23–24, Epaphras receives the source’s explicit singular ‘greets you’; the semicolon preserves one greeting movement, while verse 24 supplies the English plural ‘greet you’ required to make the four nominative helpers’ elliptical continuation unmistakable without making them fellow captives. The closing blessing remains verbless.

Corrections and reasons

The final translation rejects remembered wording wherever it would outrank the supplied Latin. ‘Prisoner’ replaces any imported apostle title at 1 and recurs for ‘vinctus’ at 9, while ‘bonds’ and ‘fellow captive’ preserve the related but distinct forms at 10, 13, and 23. Appia, Marcus, and Lucas retain their source forms under the JNV permission to preserve Vulgate names. ‘Sharing’ replaces modern ‘communication’ at 6, ‘become evident’ prevents ‘evidens’ from being recast as effective, and ‘among you’ exposes plural ‘vobis’. All three occurrences of ‘viscera’ remain ‘bowels’; the more familiar heart was rejected because it would erase the bodily lexical chain. At 9, ‘I appeal instead’ clarifies the command-versus-appeal contrast without changing second-person ‘sis’ into a first-person source reading. At 10, ‘begot’ and ‘bonds’ remain unexpanded. At 12 and 17, both ‘suscipe’ commands receive the same base ‘receive’. At 13, the dangling English ‘whom I had wished’ became ‘I had wished to keep him’ so the new Latin relative still resumes Onesimus without appearing governed by ‘receive’. At 15, passive separation and a stated divine plan were rejected because ‘discessit’ is active and ‘Forsitan’ is explicit. At 16, ‘more than a slave’ was rejected because ‘pro servo’ does not itself supply a comparative. At 19, the handwritten pledge, future repayment, and debt of self remain fully expressed. At 20, ‘enjoy’ was retained despite modern strangeness because smoother benefit language would add an object or collapse a different lexical family. At 22, the connective order was smoothed to ‘But at the same time, also’ while preserving ‘Simul autem et’, and release or restoration was rejected because ‘donari’ says be given. At 23–24, the singular and plural greeting verbs plus a semicolon make the elliptical construction lucid without transferring Epaphras’s fellow-captive title. At 25, an added finite wish or an ‘all’ absent from ‘vestro’ was rejected, so the Latin blessing remains verbless and the plural possessive is documented without artificial expansion.

Canonical terminology

‘Deus’ is God; ‘Dominus’ is Lord where it explicitly titles Jesus Christ; ‘gratia’ is grace at 3 and 25; ‘pax’ is peace; and ‘caritas’ is charity at 5, 7, and 9. ‘Fides’ is faith at 5 and 6, while ‘communicatio fidei’ is the sharing of faith and ‘agnitio’ is knowledge. ‘Bonum opus’ is good work at 6 and substantival ‘bonum tuum’ is your good at 14. ‘Vinctus’ is prisoner at 1 and 9, ‘vincula’ is bonds at 10 and 13, and ‘concaptivus’ is fellow captive at 23. ‘Viscera’ is bowels at 7, 12, and 20; ‘requiescere’ is find rest and ‘reficere’ is refresh. ‘Obsecro’ is appeal at 9 and 10; ‘suscipe’ is receive at 12 and 17; ‘recipere’ is receive at 15; and ‘donari’ remains be given at 22. Relationship terms remain distinct: brother, sister, helper, fellow soldier, son, slave, partner, fellow captive, and helpers. The supplied personal names are Paul, Timothy, Philemon, Appia, Archippus, Onesimus, Epaphras, Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, and Lucas. Singular and plural English ‘you’ are distinguished in this editorial wherever the Latin marks the shift.

Hebrews — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

1:1–4 is one sustained sentence: God’s former speaking to the fathers in the prophets gives way to his recent speaking in the Son; the Son’s inheritance, agency in making the ages, splendor, substance, sustaining word, purification, enthronement, and superiority to angels accumulate before the sentence resolves. 1:5–14 proceeds through questions and cited declarations: the Son receives language never addressed to an angel, the angels adore and minister, the Son’s throne and just kingdom endure, creation ages while he remains, and the angels are finally described as administering spirits sent into ministry for those who will receive salvation’s inheritance.

Governing Latin

At 1:1–4, the participle loquens is governed by Deus and reaches forward to the finite locutus est; the relative quem at 1:2 and qui at 1:3 continue the same Son, while effectus and hæreditavit bring the construction to its comparison with angels. Multifariam, multisque modis supplies two distinct many-phrases, novissime modifies the later speaking, and per quem fecit et sæcula expressly includes the Son in the making of the ages. At 1:3, cum sit, portansque, and purgationem peccatorum faciens surround sedet; splendor gloriæ, figura substantiæ ejus, verbo virtutis suæ, and dexteram majestatis retain the concrete genitive images. At 1:4, tanto ... quanto is a measured correlation. At 1:8–9, the repeated virga and Deus, Deus tuus control the wording; at 1:11–12, peribunt, permanebis, veterascent, mutabis, mutabuntur, es, and non deficient preserve the sequence of active, passive, present, and future forms. At 1:14, administratorii predicates the spirits’ administering office, missi is passive, in ministerium names the distinct ministry into which they are sent, and qui hæreditatem capient salutis remains future.

Vulgate-specific readings

The English keeps sæcula as “ages” at 1:2 rather than replacing it with a spatial creation term. It retains figura substantiæ ejus as “the figure of his substance,” purgationem peccatorum faciens as the active “making purification of sins,” and in excelsis as “in the heights.” Effectus at 1:4 remains “having been made,” and differentius is represented by the more excellent inherited name rather than by an imported title. At 1:6, orbem terræ is “the world,” while adorent remains the command “let ... adore.” At 1:7, spiritus and ministros remain “spirits” and “ministers,” not meteorological or institutional paraphrases. At 1:8, virga is twice “rod,” not silently converted into an abstract reign; at 1:9, justitiam is the binding “justice,” and oleo exsultationis remains “oil of exultation.” At 1:10, vocative Domine is placed beside the addressed “You” as “You, the Lord (YHWH),” retaining both direct address and the governing first-divine-Dominus disclosure; the parenthetical is transparent editorial identification, not presented as a Latin word. At 1:12, mutabis and mutabuntur are “you will change” and “they will be changed,” with no imported folding or rolling action. At 1:14, administratorii spiritus is “administering spirits,” visibly distinct from ministros, while in ministerium missi remains “sent into ministry”; the beneficiaries will receive hæreditatem salutis, “the inheritance of salvation.”

Ambiguities preserved

At 1:3, “being” leaves cum sit circumstantial without forcing it to mean exclusively because, although, or while; “figure” does not define the metaphysics of substantia. Spiritus at 1:7 can carry the Latin range of spirits or breaths/winds, while the immediate English noun remains “spirits” because its referent is angeli; the editorial record preserves the wider lexical possibility. At 1:8, Deus can be heard as direct address (“Your throne, God”) while the Latin form and compressed punctuation also resist an overexplained syntactic gloss; no “O” is inserted. The two instances of virga may be appositional or predicative, so the English retains the colon and repeated noun rather than imposing an extra copula. At 1:9, præ participibus can mark superiority or position among/beyond the companions; “above” preserves the comparison without identifying the companions. At 1:12, idem ipse is emphatic and is rendered “you yourself are the same” without explaining what dimension of sameness is intended. At 1:14, “administering” marks the spirits’ active office without imposing the bureaucratic sense of “administrative,” and “inheritance of salvation” does not decide whether salvation is appositional, possessive, or the content of the inheritance.

Clarity decisions

Verses 1–4 retain lowercase continuations and punctuation that make the single Latin sentence audible without merging verse keys. “God, speaking formerly ... has most recently ... spoken” keeps loquens attached to Deus and prevents verse 1 from becoming a separate finite event. At 1:3, coordinated participial phrases are divided by commas so the finite sedet is not mistaken for another modifier. The quanto comparison at 1:4 is recast as “as ... as” while retaining both measured degrees. Quotations that cross verses remain open across 1:8–9 and 1:10–12. At 1:10, moving “the Lord (YHWH)” beside “You” makes Domine unmistakably vocative while leaving “in the beginning” with the founding action. At 1:11, “they themselves” supplies the emphatic ipsi and preserves its plural antecedent without adding a noun. At 1:12, “But” distinguishes autem from the preceding and. At 1:14, “administering spirits, sent into ministry” separates administratorii from ministerium, while “on account of” keeps propter’s causal/benefactive relation visible.

Corrections and reasons

During first-pass self-audit, “many times” was corrected to “many portions” for multifariam so the two phrases are not collapsed into a single temporal repetition. “At last” was corrected to “has most recently, in these days” so novissime remains adverbial and locutus est retains its perfect force. At 1:2, “all” became “all things,” and “worlds” became “ages,” for universorum and sæcula. At 1:3, an early “exact image” was reduced to “figure” because exact is not expressed by figura; “upholding” became “bearing” for portans, and purification remained an action the Son makes rather than an unexplained completed result. At 1:4, “became” was corrected to the passive “having been made” for effectus. At 1:8–9, both occurrences of virga were restored as “rod,” justitiam was restored as “justice,” and participibus was kept as “companions.” At 1:10, “Lord (YHWH)” became the binding first-occurrence form “the Lord (YHWH)”; Gate 4 then moved that title beside the addressed “You” so vocative Domine is not misread as a delayed third-person label after “in the beginning.” At 1:11–12, the pronoun ipsi, active mutabis, passive mutabuntur, and emphatic idem ipse were each made explicit. At 1:14, the future capient was restored as “will receive”; Gate 5 then changed “ministering spirits” to “administering spirits” for administratorii while retaining “sent into ministry” for in ministerium missi. The address in 1:8 and the semantic force of differentius were pressure-tested; the current wording retains the compressed direct address and comparative without an imported explanation.

Canonical terminology

Deus is “God.” The vocative divine Domine at 1:10 is the first Dominus-form in Hebrews and is addressed as “You, the Lord (YHWH)”; later divine Dominus in the book is “the Lord” without repeating the parenthetical. Filius is “Son,” primogenitum is “firstborn,” and angeli are “angels.” The service families remain visibly distinct: ministros is “ministers,” administratorii spiritus is “administering spirits,” and in ministerium missi is “sent into ministry.” Verbum is “word” at 1:3. Gloria is “glory,” majestas is “majesty,” justitia is “justice,” iniquitas is “iniquity,” and exsultatio is “exultation.” Sæculum is “age,” including the doubled “age of the age” at 1:8; sæcula is plural “ages” at 1:2. Hæres and hæreditare/capere hæreditatem retain the heir/inherit/inheritance family. Virga is “rod,” vestimentum is “garment,” amictus is “cloak,” and scabellum is “footstool.”

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

2:1–4 warns that neglecting so great a salvation cannot escape a just result when even angel-mediated speech stood firm; the salvation begins through the Lord, reaches the hearers, and is jointly witnessed by God. 2:5–9 turns from angels to the future world and to humanity’s diminished yet crowned place, then identifies Jesus as crowned because of death’s suffering so that he might taste death for all. 2:10–18 follows the many sons into glory as the author of their salvation is brought to completion through suffering: sanctifier and sanctified are from one, he calls them brothers and children, shares flesh and blood, destroys the devil’s dominion through death, frees the enslaved, takes hold of Abraham’s seed rather than angels, becomes a merciful and faithful high priest, and helps the tempted through his own suffering and temptation.

Governing Latin

At 2:1, Propterea and abundantius govern the increased obligation, while ne forte pereffluamus gives the feared outcome. At 2:2–4, the si clause contains dictus est, factus est, and accepit; the answering question uses effugiemus with the perfect-subjunctive neglexerimus, and the relative quæ continues salutem through accepisset enarrari, confirmata est, and the ablative contestante Deo. At 2:6–8, homo, filius hominis, eum/ejus/ei, and omnia maintain the quoted singular human and comprehensive subjection. At 2:9, Eum ... Jesum is one delayed object of videmus, minoratus and coronatum are passive, and ut ... gustaret gives purpose. At 2:10, the same eum is described by propter quem, per quem, and qui ... adduxerat before the active infinitive consummare takes auctorem salutis eorum as its object. At 2:11, Qui ... qui ... omnes gives one sanctifier, plural sanctified people, and all from one. At 2:14–15, the perfect communicaverunt and participavit lead to two purpose verbs, destrueret and liberaret. At 2:16, apprehendit is repeated without a tense change. At 2:17–18, debuit, similari, fieret, repropitiaret, passus est, tentatus, and potens est retain obligation, passive likeness, purpose, experience, and present ability.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 2:1, the concrete flow-image in pereffluamus is represented by “drift away” rather than by loss of information. At 2:2, sermo is “speech,” kept distinct from verbum elsewhere, and mercedis retributionem remains the doubled economic image “repayment of wages.” At 2:3, the salvation “had begun to be proclaimed through the Lord”; the English does not import an alternate subject or reduce per Dominum to a vague divine origin. At 2:4, Spiritus Sancti distributionibus stays plural “distributions of the Holy Spirit.” At 2:7, constituisti remains “appointed,” and at 2:8 nihil dimisit non subjectum preserves the full negative “left nothing not subject.” At 2:9, the Clementine reading gratia Dei is “by the grace of God,” and pro omnibus is the unqualified “for all.” At 2:10, auctorem is “author,” not replaced by a modern occupational image, while consummare is “bring ... to completion,” preserving the book’s completion family beside actual perfectus forms. At 2:13–14, pueri is consistently “children,” distinct from filios at 2:10. At 2:16, Nusquam is retained as the conspicuous “nowhere,” and semen follows the binding “seed” ruling. At 2:17, delicta is “offenses,” kept distinct from peccata, and repropitiaret is represented as making propitiation rather than mere sympathy.

Ambiguities preserved

Pereffluamus at 2:1 can suggest flowing past, slipping away, or being carried off; “drift away” retains motion without supplying a destination. At 2:2, merces can be wage, due, or recompense; “repayment of wages” preserves both merces and retributio even though the exact judicial image remains open. At 2:3, enarrari can be narrated, declared, or proclaimed; “proclaimed” does not add a written medium. Confirmata est in nos can express confirmation into, toward, or among us; “into us” preserves the directional preposition without defining the mode of confirmation. At 2:4, contestante may be joint witness or strong attestation; “bearing joint witness” preserves God’s participation without identifying a second witness beyond the previous hearers. At 2:7–9, the human pronouns and the named Jesus are allowed to stand in the argument without an explanatory claim about the extent or timing of their identification. At 2:10, consummare can be complete, consummate, or bring to completion; the selected phrase preserves the active process without claiming that this Latin is a perfectus form. Ex uno at 2:11 remains “from one” without supplying one Father, origin, nature, or family. At 2:14, eisdem refers collectively to flesh and blood; “the same” retains that compact reference. At 2:16, apprehendit may be take hold of, seize, or assist; the repeated “take hold” preserves the same action for both objects. At 2:17, ad Deum remains “toward God” rather than being expanded into a job description. At 2:18, “in that in which” retains the difficult in eo … in quo relation instead of deciding whether suffering, temptation, or their sphere is primary.

Clarity decisions

Verses 2–4 remain one conditional question: verse 2 supplies the firm speech and just result, verse 3 asks the question and continues salvation with a relative clause, and verse 4 retains the participial witness of God before the question closes. The delayed Eum … Jesum at 2:9 is reunited as “we see Jesus” so an English reader does not mistake eum for a separate person, while every modifier remains present. At 2:10, “who had led” keeps both the relative qui and the pluperfect adduxerat, identifying its subject through the enclosing description of the one for whom and through whom all things exist; “bring … to completion” keeps consummare active and makes its object legible without collapsing it into the perfect family. At 2:11, “he who” and “those who” expose the number contrast. At 2:14–15, a comma rather than a full stop keeps liberaret as the second purpose of the Son’s participation. At 2:17, “make propitiation for” supplies the normal English complement required by repropitiaret without changing delicta into a different noun. The deliberately compressed wording of 2:18 remains because a smoother causal paraphrase would decide the Latin relation.

Corrections and reasons

The first draft’s generic “pay attention” at 2:1 was corrected to “attend … to” for observare, and a static “fall away” was corrected to “drift away” to preserve pereffluamus. At 2:2, “just punishment” was rejected because the Latin names both merces and retributio; “a just repayment of wages” preserves the doubled terms without adding punishment. At 2:3, “if we neglect” became “if we have neglected” for neglexerimus, the salvation’s beginning, passive confirmation, and human agents were restored in one relative construction, and “to us” became “into us” so directional in nos is not flattened. At 2:4, singular “gift” became plural “distributions,” and secundum suam voluntatem remained tied to God. At 2:8, the two occurrences of subjecting and the double negative were restored rather than summarized. At 2:9, “for everyone” became “for all” for omnibus, and mortis remained attached to suffering. At 2:10, “bring” became pluperfect “had led,” and auctorem was restored as “author”; Gate 5 then changed “to perfect” to “to bring … to completion” so consummare remains distinct from actual perfectus language. At 2:13–14, “sons” became “children” for pueri. At 2:16, an interpretive “surely he helps” was rejected in favor of the source’s repeated “nowhere … takes hold.” At 2:17, “sins” became “offenses” for delicta. The compressed 2:18 was pressure-tested and retained because its doubled in-construction preserves a relation that a smoother causal paraphrase would falsely settle.

Canonical terminology

Sermo is “speech” at 2:2; enarrare is “proclaim,” confirmare is “confirm,” and contestari is “bear joint witness.” The Lord at 2:3 renders Dominum without repeating the book-first YHWH parenthetical already used at 1:10. Salus is “salvation,” gratia is “grace,” Spiritus Sanctus is “the Holy Spirit,” gloria is “glory,” honor is “honor,” and mors is “death.” Passio is “suffering,” and the passionem/Passus family remains visibly related. At 2:10, consummare is “bring ... to completion,” kept distinct from the book’s perfectus/perfectum family. Filii are “sons,” fratres are “brothers,” and pueri are “children.” Caro is “flesh,” sanguis is “blood,” diabolus is “the devil,” imperium is “dominion,” and servitus is “servitude.” Semen is “seed” under the binding ruling. Pontifex is “high priest,” misericors is “merciful,” fidelis is “faithful,” delicta are “offenses,” tentare is “tempt,” and auxiliari is “help.”

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

3:1–6 calls holy brothers who share the heavenly calling to consider Jesus beside Moses: both are faithful, but the builder has more honor than the house, Moses serves within the house as testimony, and Christ is Son in his own house, which the readers are if they hold firm. 3:7–11 gives the Holy Spirit’s Today warning through the desert provocation, forty years of witnessed works, a generation erring in heart, unknown ways, and the oath barring entry into rest. 3:12–19 turns the citation into direct communal warning: evil unbelief departs from the living God, daily self-exhortation resists sin’s deceit, participation in Christ depends on holding firm, and the desert generation’s provocation, corpses, exclusion, and inability to enter reveal unbelief’s result.

Governing Latin

At 3:1, Unde carries the result from chapter 2, participes governs vocationis cælestis, and considerate takes the delayed Jesum together with Apostolum et pontificem confessionis nostræ. At 3:2, qui fidelis est governs ei qui fecit illum and the comparison with Moyses. At 3:3, Amplioris gloriæ ... dignus est habitus is passive, præ Moyse marks comparison, and quanto measures the builder’s greater honor. At 3:4, fabricatur and creavit intentionally distinguish building each house from God’s creation of all things. At 3:5–6, quidem ... vero contrasts Moses as famulus in the whole house with Christ as filius in domo sua; quæ domus sumus nos identifies the readers conditionally, and retineamus governs fiduciam et gloriam spei with firmam and usque ad finem. At 3:7–11, the Spirit’s quotation is controlled by audieritis, nolite, tentaverunt, probaverunt, viderunt, infensus fui, errant, non cognoverunt, and juravi. At 3:12–14, ne forte sit, discedendi, adhortamini vosmetipsos, non obduretur, effecti sumus, and si tamen retineamus preserve warning, agency, and condition. At 3:16–19, the repeated questions and incredulitas/increduli forms drive the conclusion.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 3:2, qui fecit illum is retained as “him who made him”; it is not softened to an appointment verb or replaced by an explanation. At 3:3, iste remains the demonstrative “this one,” and the passive dignus est habitus remains “has been held worthy.” At 3:5, quæ dicenda erant is future-in-the-past “things that were to be said,” not a retrospective summary. At 3:6, domo sua is “his own house,” while the readers are identified by the separate quæ domus sumus nos. At 3:8 and 3:15, exacerbatio is consistently “provocation,” and secundum diem remains the marked “according to the day,” not silently replaced by a smoother temporal preposition. At 3:9–10, “saw my works for forty years” follows the supplied verse boundary and punctuation before propter quod. At 3:10, autem is retained as “But” inside the divine speech. At 3:11, the oath formula Si introibunt is rendered by its negative force, “They shall not enter,” as the explicit non introire at 3:18 confirms within the same supplied chapter. At 3:13, adhortamini vosmetipsos is “exhort yourselves,” not an imported reciprocal pronoun. At 3:14, initium substantiæ ejus remains “the beginning of his substance,” without substituting a different abstract noun. At 3:16, Quidam ... sed non universi remains “some ... but not all.”

Ambiguities preserved

At 3:2, fecit can mean made or constituted; “made” follows the direct verb without defining the nature of the making. Ejus in “all his house” can point through the comparison to God, while the English does not rename the possessor. At 3:3, the quanto relation compares degrees of glory and honor; the English states the builder-house comparison without adding an owner or purpose. At 3:6, sua is reflexive to Christ, but firmam is singular feminine and can grammatically bear on fiduciam, gloriam, or their coordinated complex; “hold firm … the confidence and glory of hope” avoids isolating only one noun. The possessive and objective range of “hope’s glory” remains unexpanded. At 3:8, “according to the day” preserves the unusual secundum relation rather than deciding that it means simply on, like, or throughout that day. At 3:9, probaverunt can be tested or proved; “tested me” retains the object carried from tentaverunt but does not specify the test’s result. At 3:11, the English gives the oath’s negative meaning while the editorial preserves its ellipsed Latin Si form. At 3:12, discedendi can describe the evil heart’s defining tendency or resulting action; “to depart” leaves that relation open. At 3:14, ejus may be heard with the immediately named Christ, while substantia can carry substance, underlying reality, or standing; the English deliberately does not change it to confidence. At 3:16, exacerbaverunt has no expressed object; the objectless “provoked” preserves that omission even though God is naturally available from the citation.

Clarity decisions

At 3:1, the delayed name Jesum is moved before its two titles in English so readers identify the object of considerate immediately; both apostle and high priest remain governed by “consider.” At 3:3, the builder and house are repeated instead of relying on an ambiguous English pronoun. At 3:5–6, a semicolon and lowercase “but” keep the Moses-Christ contrast within the same movement, and an em dash introduces the relative identification of the house. The direct speech remains open from 3:7 through 3:11, and verse 9 flows into the opening “for forty years” of verse 10 so the supplied cross-verse duration is not displaced. At 3:10, sentence division makes propter quod the cause of God’s being incensed while preserving the internal But and emphatic ipsi. At 3:13, “as long as” gives donec its continuing force while “it is called Today” preserves the passive cognominatur. At 3:16, “when they heard” makes the participle audientes readable without supplying an object for exacerbaverunt. At 3:18, “they would not enter” supplies the infinitive’s understood plural subject from the questioned people.

Corrections and reasons

At 3:1, an initial “messenger” was corrected to “apostle” for Apostolum, and Jesus was moved beside both titles so confessionis nostræ could not be mistaken as modifying only one. At 3:2, “appointed him” was corrected to “made him” because fecit, not constituit, is the supplied verb. At 3:3, active “was worthier” became passive “has been held worthy” for dignus est habitus. At 3:4, “made” was differentiated into “built” for fabricatur and “created” for creavit. At 3:5, “would later be spoken” was reduced to “were to be said” so no external timeline was added. At 3:6, “God’s house” was corrected to “his own house” for the reflexive sua, and both confidence and glory of hope were restored. At 3:8 and 3:15, “rebellion” became “provocation” for exacerbatio, and secundum was restored as “according to.” At 3:10, the duration was attached backward to the seeing of God’s works, following the supplied colon after quadraginta annis. At 3:13, “one another” became the reflexive “yourselves.” At 3:14, an inherited-sounding “beginning of confidence” was rejected for the Vulgate’s substantiæ ejus. At 3:16, “all rebelled” was corrected to the source’s “some … but not all.” The objectless “provoked” and “his substance” were pressure-tested and retained because supplying an object or alternate abstraction would erase the Clementine forms.

Canonical terminology

Fratres is “brothers,” vocatio is “calling,” participes is “partakers,” Apostolus is “apostle,” pontifex is “high priest,” and confessio is “confession.” Fidelis is “faithful,” domus is “house,” fabricare is “build,” creare is “create,” famulus is “servant,” and filius is “Son.” Spiritus Sanctus is “the Holy Spirit.” Hodie is “Today” when personified by the continuing citation. Exacerbatio is “provocation,” tentatio/tentare is “temptation/tempt,” desertum is “desert,” cor is “heart,” viæ are “ways,” ira is “wrath,” and requies is “rest.” Incredulitas is “unbelief” and increduli is “unbelieving,” preserving the lexical family; peccatum/peccare is “sin/sin.” Fiducia is “confidence,” gloria is “glory,” spes is “hope,” and substantia remains “substance.” Cadavera are “corpses,” not softened to bodies, and prostrata sunt is “were laid low.”

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

4:1–10 continues the warning about entry into God’s rest: a promise remains, heard speech must be mingled with faith, the completed works and seventh-day rest stand behind the renewed Today, the first hearers fail through unbelief, Jesus does not exhaust the promised rest, and a sabbath observance remains for God’s people. 4:11–13 answers with urgency because God’s living speech penetrates soul and spirit, joints and marrow, and discerns the heart while every creature lies naked and open before him. 4:14–16 then turns to confidence: Jesus the Son of God has penetrated the heavens as great high priest, can share human infirmities because he was tempted without sin, and opens an approach to the throne where mercy may be obtained and grace found for timely aid.

Governing Latin

At 4:1, Timeamus is a communal exhortation, ne forte governs the fear, relicta pollicitatione is an ablative construction, introëundi depends on pollicitatione, and existimetur aliquis … deesse is passive judgment followed by an infinitive. At 4:2, nobis and illis are parallel, but non profuit governs sermo auditus, whose masculine non admistus is followed by fidei and ex iis quæ audierunt. At 4:3–5, Ingrediemur is future, qui credidimus identifies its plural subject, the oath is cited twice, and operibus … perfectis reaches back to the world’s establishment before the seventh-day citation. At 4:6–7, superest, non introierunt, and iterum terminat preserve remaining entry, past failure, and God’s renewed defining of Today in David. At 4:8–10, Jesus is the expressed subject, præstitisset is pluperfect subjunctive, loqueretur is the counterfactual result, relinquitur is passive, and the one who ingressus est has requievit as God did. At 4:12, the one subject sermo is vivus, efficax, penetrabilior, pertingens, and discretor. At 4:14–16, Habentes leads to teneamus, while Non … qui non possit is answered by tentatum and Adeamus leads to consequamur and inveniamus.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 4:1, pollicitatione is rendered “promise” because “pledge” is misleading in the remaining-entry construction; the distinct Latin promise-family form remains recorded even though lucid English converges with promissio. At 4:2, the difficult ex iis quæ audierunt is retained as “from the things they heard”; it is not changed to a masculine phrase naming the hearers. At 4:3 and 4:5, the oath’s Si introibunt receives its negative oath-force, confirmed by 4:6’s explicit non introierunt. At 4:7, God “defines” a day in David after so much time; David is not converted into an unnamed book or speaker. At 4:8, the supplied proper name Jesus is retained as “Jesus,” without replacing it with another conventional English name. At 4:9, sabbatismus is “sabbath observance,” not collapsed into the ordinary requies used throughout the chapter. At 4:12, sermo Dei is “the speech of God,” penetrabilior remains comparative “more penetrating,” anima follows the binding “soul” ruling, compagum and medullarum remain “joints and marrow,” and discretor is the concrete “discerner.” At 4:13, no creature is “invisible,” and all things are “naked and open,” without euphemism. At 4:14, penetravit cælos is “has penetrated the heavens,” preserving the repeated penetration image from 4:12. At 4:16, misericordiam and gratiam remain “mercy” and “grace,” and in auxilio opportuno is the source-specific “for timely aid” without an imported need.

Ambiguities preserved

At 4:1, relicta can indicate something left, remaining, or left behind, while deesse can mean be lacking, fail, or fall short; “while a promise … remains … be judged to be lacking” gives lucid force to the ablative construction without adding “to us” or identifying the standard of lack. At 4:2, fidei may be a dative relation (“mingled with faith”), while ex iis quæ audierunt can qualify the faith or its source; the English preserves the awkward attachment to the heard things rather than converting quæ to people. At 4:3, the connection of et quidem operibus … perfectis to the oath and entry is compressed; a separate coordinated clause preserves the completed works without imposing a causal explanation. At 4:7, in David can mean in David’s words, person, or corpus; “in David” leaves it open. At 4:8, the English does not resolve the historical identity signaled by Jesus, because the assigned Latin alone governs the name. At 4:9, sabbatismus can denote sabbath observance or sabbath-rest; the less interpretive noun “observance” preserves its distinction from requies. At 4:12, the division can be between soul and spirit or divisions involving each; the repeated “of” lets the genitives remain open. At 4:13, ad quem nobis sermo can be account, speech, matter, or relation before God; “to whom we have an account” selects a lucid core while recording the wider range. At 4:15, pro similitudine does not expressly name whose likeness; “according to likeness” leaves the comparison unfilled. At 4:16, in auxilio opportuno can describe the sphere, occasion, or result of finding grace; “for timely aid” selects a lucid purpose/benefit relation without importing the absent noun “need.”

Clarity decisions

At 4:1, “while a promise … remains” makes the relicta pollicitatione construction intelligible while keeping the feared passive judgment as the main clause. At 4:2, “the speech heard” keeps sermo as subject of did not profit and non admistus, rather than making the hearers the grammatical subject. At 4:3, “we who have believed” exposes the subject carried by qui credidimus, and the completed-works construction becomes a coordinated English clause without an invented theological inference. At 4:6–7, the colon and lowercase continuation keep “he again defines” as the consequence of the still-open entry. Dashes set off Today as the day defined, while the nested quotation remains separately visible. At 4:8, “would never afterward have spoken” makes the counterfactual sequence of præstitisset and loqueretur explicit. At 4:10, “as God did from his own” supplies only the ellipsed rested verb. At 4:12, one long sentence retains the sequence from living speech to penetration to discernment. At 4:14, the name and title are reunited after the participial description. At 4:15, “but one tempted” preserves the Latin ellipsis and does not add an adversative “yet.” At 4:16, “for timely aid” gives auxilio an intelligible relation to the grace found while leaving the absent “need” unsupplied.

Corrections and reasons

At 4:1, Gate 4 corrected “with a pledge left of entering” to “while a promise of entering … remains”: the former was broken contemporary English and made pollicitatio sound like collateral or a human undertaking, while the revision preserves the remaining promissory force. “Seem to have failed” had already become the more exact passive “be judged to be lacking.” At 4:2, an interpretive “not united with the faith of the hearers” was rejected because the supplied source has ex iis quæ audierunt, not a masculine qui. At 4:3, present “enter” became future “shall enter” for Ingrediemur, and the completed works were restored as a distinct construction. At 4:6, “some still have opportunity” was corrected to the impersonal “it remains for some to enter,” preserving superest and the infinitive. At 4:7, “appoints” became “defines” for terminat, and “in David” was restored. At 4:8, another conventional English name was rejected in favor of the source’s Jesus. At 4:9, “rest” became “sabbath observance” so sabbatismus is not collapsed into requies. At 4:12, “word” became “speech” for sermo and the comparative, soul, joints, marrow, thoughts, and intentions were all made explicit. At 4:14, “passed through” became “penetrated” for penetravit, preserving the chapter’s penetration motif. At 4:16, Gate 4 corrected “in timely help” to “for timely aid,” clarifying the relation without restoring the previously rejected, unsupplied “need.” Verses 4:1, 4:2, 4:8, and 4:13 were pressure-tested; the current wording preserves the remaining promise, neuter heard-things phrase, Clementine name, and account idiom without normalization.

Canonical terminology

Pollicitatio is “promise” at 4:1 because no equally lucid English noun preserves its distinction from promissio; the separate Latin forms remain recorded for whole-book harmonization rather than forcing misleading “pledge” language. Requies is “rest,” while sabbatismus is “sabbath observance.” Nuntiare/annuntiare is “announce,” audire is “hear,” fides is “faith,” and incredulitas is “unbelief.” Sermo is “speech” at 4:2 and 4:12; its idiomatic use in ad quem nobis sermo is “account” at 4:13 and is explicitly documented as a contextual exception. Deus is “God,” Filius Dei is “the Son of God,” pontifex magnus is “great high priest,” confessio is “confession,” cæli are “heavens,” and thronus gratiæ is “throne of grace.” Anima is “soul,” spiritus is “spirit,” cor is “heart,” cogitationes are “thoughts,” intentiones are “intentions,” misericordia is “mercy,” gratia is “grace,” auxilium is “aid,” and opportunus is “timely”; infirmitates are “infirmities.”

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

5:1–4 describes every high priest as taken from people and appointed for people toward God, offering for sins while sharing infirmity, able to sympathize with the ignorant and erring, obligated to offer for himself, and dependent on God’s call rather than self-assumption. 5:5–10 applies the pattern to Christ: he does not glorify himself, is addressed as Son and eternal priest according to Melchisedech’s order, offers prayer with cries and tears, is heard for reverence, learns obedience through suffering although Son of God, is brought to completion, becomes the cause of eternal salvation to those obeying him, and is named high priest by God. 5:11–14 turns sharply to the hearers’ weakness: despite elapsed time they again need the beginning elements, milk instead of solid food, and practiced senses capable of discerning good and evil.

Governing Latin

At 5:1–3, Omnis ... pontifex is modified by ex hominibus assumptus and takes constituitur as passive; pro hominibus and in iis quæ sunt ad Deum define his relation, ut offerat gives purpose, qui ... possit gives capacity, and quoniam ... circumdatus est explains it. Debet governs the repeated pro peccatis for the people and for himself. At 5:4, Nec quisquam ... sed qui contrasts self-taking with divine calling. At 5:5, Christus is subject of non semetipsum clarificavit, ut pontifex fieret is purpose/result, and sed qui locutus est supplies the contrasting agent by ellipsis. At 5:7, Qui resumes Christ; offerens governs preces supplicationesque and is surrounded by ad eum qui possit, cum clamore valido et lacrimis, exauditus est, and pro sua reverentia. At 5:8–10, cum esset is concessive/circumstantial, didicit governs obedientiam, consummatus is a passive completion form, factus est governs causa, and appellatus is another passive. At 5:11–14, de quo governs the discourse, quoniam explains difficulty, cum deberetis is concessive, indigetis governs ut vos doceamini, and the milk/solid-food contrast culminates in exercitatos habent sensus ad discretionem; Perfectorum is the distinct perfect-family form.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 5:1, pontifex is “high priest,” while sacerdos at 5:6 remains the distinct “priest.” Ex hominibus and pro hominibus are represented symmetrically as “from among people” and “for people,” and in iis quæ sunt ad Deum remains “in those things that are toward God.” At 5:2, qui ignorant and errant stay two actions, “do not know” and “err.” At 5:3, the object of offerre remains unstated, as in the Latin. At 5:5, clarificavit is “glorify,” not appoint, and the ellipsed contrasting subject is “the one who spoke to him.” At 5:6 and 5:10, Melchisedech retains the supplied Latin spelling, and in æternum is “for eternity.” At 5:7, preces and supplicationes are “prayers” and “supplications,” clamore valido is a “mighty cry,” and exauditus est pro sua reverentia is “was heard because of his reverence.” At 5:8, the expressly supplied Filius Dei remains “the Son of God.” At 5:9, causa is the concrete “cause” of salvation, and consummatus is passive “having been brought to completion,” distinct from Perfectorum, “the perfect,” at 5:14. At 5:11, ininterpretabilis ad dicendum is “difficult to explain,” with no imported mystery claim. At 5:12, elementa exordii sermonum Dei remains “elements of the beginning of God’s sayings.” At 5:13, sermo justitiæ is “speech of justice,” retaining the binding justice noun. At 5:14, perfectorum is “the perfect,” not silently changed to an age category.

Ambiguities preserved

At 5:1, quæ sunt ad Deum can refer to matters, duties, or relations toward God; “those things that are toward God” avoids defining an office beyond the Latin. At 5:2, condolere can mean sympathize, share grief, or be moderately affected; “sympathize” preserves fellow-feeling without importing the separate compati wording of 4:15. Ignorant can be lack of knowledge or unawareness, and errant can be wandering or error; both remain distinct. At 5:5, the Latin omits a repeated clarificavit after sed qui locutus est; “did” supplies only the ellipsed verb and does not say when or how God glorified Christ. At 5:7, qui possit can describe actual ability without asserting the manner of salvation from death; pro sua reverentia may mean because of, on account of, or in relation to reverence, and the English selects the causal reading without renaming reverentia as fear. At 5:8, cum can be though, when, or since; “although” follows the contrast introduced by Et quidem while the record preserves the range. At 5:9, consummatus can be completed, consummated, or brought to completion; “having been brought to completion” preserves the passive form without collapsing it into the separate perfectus family. At 5:11, grandis sermo can mean a large subject, extensive discourse, or weighty speech; “great discourse” retains both extent and gravity. At 5:12, propter tempus means because of/by reason of the time without stating a precise duration. At 5:14, consuetudo can be habit, practice, or accustomed use; “through habit” does not explain the training regimen.

Clarity decisions

Verses 1–3 remain one sentence, keeping the relative description and the priest’s shared infirmity attached to the general high-priest statement. “As for the people, so also for himself” makes the quemadmodum ... ita etiam correlation clear while leaving offerre objectless. At 5:4, “as Aaron was” supplies only the ellipsed called-by-God relation. At 5:5, “the one who spoke to him did” supplies the missing English predicate needed after sed while the quotation identifies the speech. At 5:7, the subject “He” is placed before the temporal phrase so the long participial structure remains traceable to exauditus est. At 5:8–10, semicolons and lowercase continuations keep learned, brought to completion, became, and called in one sequence, while 5:14 retains “the perfect” for its distinct source family. At 5:11, “Concerning him” makes de quo’s reference to the Melchisedech-appointed high priest clear without adding a name. At 5:12, the indirect question is arranged as “what ... are” so elementa remains the predicate content of teaching. At 5:14, a colon identifies “those” for whom solid food belongs.

Corrections and reasons

At 5:1, “chosen from men” became the passive “taken from among people,” and “on behalf of” became the repeated “for,” preserving assumptus and both pro relations. At 5:2, “deal gently” was rejected because condolere names sympathetic suffering; “the ignorant and wayward” became the verbal “those who do not know and who err” so both agents and actions remain. At 5:3, an inserted object “sacrifices” was removed because offerre is objectless in this verse. At 5:4, “takes this honor” became “takes the honor” because no demonstrative appears. At 5:5, “appointed himself” became “glorify himself” for clarificavit, and the contrasting speaker’s ellipsed action was restored. At 5:7, “loud cries” was corrected to singular “a mighty cry,” tears were retained separately, and reverentia was restored as “reverence.” At 5:8, “though a Son” became “although he was the Son of God” so Dei is not omitted. At 5:9, “source” became “cause” for causa, and passive consummatus was restored; Gate 5 then changed “having been perfected” to “having been brought to completion” so the consumm- and perfect- families remain distinct. At 5:11, “hard to understand” became “difficult to explain” for ad dicendum, and “dull” became “weak” for imbecilles. At 5:12–13, sermones/sermo were rendered as “sayings/speech” and justitiæ as “justice.” At 5:14, “mature” became “perfect” for perfectorum. The causal pro sua reverentia and grandis sermo were pressure-tested; “because of his reverence” and “great discourse” preserve the supplied relation and breadth without an imported explanation.

Canonical terminology

Pontifex is “high priest”; sacerdos is “priest,” preserving the Latin distinction. Offerre is “offer,” dona are “gifts,” sacrificia are “sacrifices,” and peccata are “sins.” Infirmitas is “infirmity,” condolere is “sympathize,” vocare is “call,” and honor is “honor.” Clarificare is “glorify,” Filius Dei is “the Son of God,” and Melchisedech is spelled as in the supplied Latin. Preces are “prayers,” supplicationes are “supplications,” reverentia is “reverence,” obedientia is “obedience,” and obtemperare is “obey.” Consummatus at 5:9 is “having been brought to completion,” while Perfectorum at 5:14 and perfectiora at 6:1 retain the distinct perfect family. Causa is “cause,” salus is “salvation,” sermo is contextually “discourse” at 5:11, “sayings” in the plural sermonum Dei at 5:12, and “speech” at 5:13. Justitia is “justice.” Lac is “milk,” solidus cibus is “solid food,” sensus are “senses,” and discretio is “discernment.”

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

6:1–3 urges movement beyond the beginning discourse of Christ toward more perfect things, naming the foundational matters and conditioning further progress on God’s permission. 6:4–8 presents the impossible renewal of once-illuminated participants who taste the heavenly gift, Holy Spirit, good divine word, and powers of the coming age, then fall away while recrucifying the Son; the cultivated land that drinks the rain which often comes upon it and receives blessing is contrasted with rejected thorn-bearing land nearing a curse and burning. 6:9–12 turns pastorally toward better confidence: the beloved have ministered and still minister, God does not forget, and diligence must continue through hope, faith, and patience. 6:13–20 grounds consolation in God’s promise and oath to Abraham: patient endurance obtains the promise, God shows the heirs of the promise his immutable counsel, the oath ends controversy, two immutable things support the strongest consolation, and the hope held before the refugees is a safe, firm anchor entering within the veil, where Jesus entered as forerunner for us and was made a high priest for eternity according to the order of Melchisedech.

Governing Latin

At 6:1–2, Quapropter links the exhortation to chapter 5; intermittentes governs sermonem, ad perfectiora feramur is passive exhortation, non rursum jacientes controls the six genitive foundation items, and 6:3 faciemus is future under si ... permiserit. At 6:4–6, Impossibile est governs the one accusative eos through three verses: illuminati, gustaverunt, participes facti sunt, gustaverunt, and prolapsi sunt identify the people, renovari is the impossible passive, and crucifigentes and ostentui habentes describe their renewed action. At 6:7–8, sæpe modifies venientem, so the rain often comes upon the land; Terra remains the subject of bibens, generans, and accipit, and the same land is understood with proferens, reproba est, and cujus consummatio. At 6:9–12, Confidimus, Cupimus, ostentare, efficiamini, and hæreditabunt move from confidence to desire to future inheritance, while ministrastis and ministratis deliberately contrast completed and continuing ministry. At 6:13–15, promittens, juravit, the intensified benedicens benedicam and multiplicans multiplicabo, longanimiter ferens, and adeptus est preserve promise, oath, verbal repetition, endurance, and attainment. At 6:16–18, jurant, juramentum, pollicitationis hæredibus, jusjurandum, immobiles, and impossibile ... mentiri build the inherited-promise and confirmation logic. At 6:19–20, quam resumes hope, anchoram governs tutam, firmam, and incedentem, and ubi resumes the veil’s interior where Jesus introivit as præcursor pro nobis; secundum ordinem Melchisedech pontifex factus in æternum makes eternity govern the high-priestly appointment.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 6:1, the readers leave aside inchoationis Christi sermonem, “the discourse of the beginning of Christ,” and are passively exhorted, “let us be borne toward more perfect things.” The foundation expressly includes plural baptismatum and singular doctrinæ, “the doctrine of baptisms,” as well as resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment. At 6:4, illuminati is “illuminated,” not replaced by an explanatory rite, and participes is “partakers.” At 6:5, the source uses verbum, rendered “word,” distinct from sermo in 6:1; virtutes are plural “powers,” and sæculi venturi is “the age to come.” At 6:6, prolapsi sunt is “have fallen away,” both rursus and rursum are represented by repeated “again,” sibimetipsis is “for themselves,” and ostentui habentes remains the concrete “holding him as a spectacle.” At 6:7, sæpe venientem remains “the rain which often comes,” keeping the frequency with the rain’s coming rather than the land’s drinking. At 6:8, spinas ac tribulos are “thorns and briars,” reproba is “rejected,” and consummatio remains “consummation.” At 6:9, dilectissimi is the superlative “most beloved,” and viciniora remains comparative “nearer.” At 6:14, both cognate repetitions are retained—“blessing I will bless … multiplying I will multiply”—while Nisi is represented by its oath-force “Surely.” At 6:16–17, juramentum and jusjurandum are both “oath,” with interposuit preserved as “interposed”; pollicitationis hæredibus is “heirs of the promise,” while the distinct Latin promise-family form remains documented. At 6:18, solatium is “consolation,” and at 6:19 the anchor itself advances into the inner parts of the veil. At 6:20, præcursor pro nobis is “forerunner for us,” in æternum belongs to the high-priestly appointment, and Melchisedech retains the supplied spelling.

Ambiguities preserved

At 6:1, intermittentes can mean leaving off, leaving aside, or ceasing, and the genitive chain inchoationis Christi sermonem can attach Christ to the beginning or the discourse; “discourse of the beginning of Christ” preserves the chain. Feramur can be let us be borne or let us move; the passive English retains the source voice. At 6:2, baptismatum doctrinæ can group doctrine with baptisms or coordinate it more broadly with the foundation; “the doctrine of baptisms” follows the nearest genitive without expanding its content. At 6:4–6, the participles describe those governed by “impossible,” but the Latin does not name the agent of renovari; the English retains the passive and does not add who might renew them. Prolapsi can be fallen, slipped, or lapsed; “fallen away” preserves motion without naming its object. Sibimetipsis can mark disadvantage, relation, or inward action; “for themselves” leaves its force open. Ostentui can be display, spectacle, or exposure; the English does not add “public” or “shame.” At 6:8, cujus is grammatically feminine and resumes the land, while consummatio in combustionem expresses movement/result toward burning; “its consummation is in burning” keeps the image without identifying an actor. At 6:10, in nomine ipsius can be in, on account of, or within his name; “in his name” stays neutral. At 6:14, Nisi is an ellipsed oath formula rather than ordinary conditional prose; “Surely” gives its assertion, while this editorial preserves the literal connective and the absence of an expressed curse-apodosis. At 6:15, repromissionem belongs to the promise family but need not mean that every promised result was then realized. At 6:17, In quo can mean in which fact, wherein, or therefore; “In this” leaves its antecedent broad. Pollicitationis is separately named even though “promise” is the necessary lucid English convergence with promissio and repromissio in this inheritance sequence. At 6:18, quibus can relate the two immutable things by or in which lying is impossible, and confugimus can be read as present or completed flight; “have fled for refuge” preserves completed arrival. At 6:19, interiora can be inner places or inner parts, and velaminis can be possessive or spatial; the anchor’s impossible physical movement is retained rather than explained.

Clarity decisions

Verses 1–2 remain one sentence so all six foundation genitives stay under “not laying again.” “Let us be borne” retains feramur’s passive voice while “toward” keeps ad. Verses 4–6 remain one construction: the people are introduced after “impossible,” their experiences continue across verse 5, and verse 6 finally supplies renovari. Repeated auxiliary “have” keeps the perfect actions legible without creating new finite clauses. At 6:7–8, “land that drinks the rain which often comes upon it” identifies terra as the continuing subject while placing sæpe with venientem; verse 8 repeats the land as “it” so cujus cannot be mistaken for the curse. At 6:9, both comparative substantives are explicit: “better things and things nearer.” At 6:10, “you who” exposes the plural relative agent and “continue to minister” distinguishes present ministratis from perfect ministrastis. At 6:13, the temporal “when” clarifies the circumstantial participle promittens. At 6:14, punctuation lets the cognate participles sound as intensifiers rather than separate acts. At 6:18–20, dashes identify the refugees, while commas carry hope into the anchor and the anchor into the veil before ubi identifies Jesus’s entry; the final wording separates entry as forerunner for us from the high-priestly appointment for eternity.

Corrections and reasons

At 6:1, active “let us advance” was corrected to passive “let us be borne,” and generic “elementary teaching” became the source-shaped “discourse of the beginning of Christ.” “Mature things” became “more perfect things” to preserve perfectiora and its link to 5:14. At 6:2, singular “baptism” became plural “baptisms,” and all six foundation items were restored under the continuing syntax. At 6:4, “enlightened” became “illuminated” for illuminati, and the perfect forms were made explicit. At 6:5, “speech” became “word” for verbum, distinct from sermo. At 6:6, one omitted rursus/rursum was restored so “again” appears with both renewal and crucifying; “publicly shaming” became “holding him as a spectacle” because neither public nor shame is lexically supplied. At 6:7, “earth” became contextual “land” to make cultivation lucid without losing the ground image, and Gate 4 moved “often” from the land’s drinking to the rain’s coming so sæpe modifies venientem; herbam remains vegetation. At 6:8, “thistles” became “briars” for tribulos under the binding chapter target, the subject was made explicitly continuous so cujus refers to the land, and consummatio was restored rather than reduced to an ordinary end. At 6:9, “beloved” became “most beloved,” and both comparatives were retained. At 6:10, past-only ministry became “ministered … continue to minister.” At 6:12, future hæreditabunt was restored as “will inherit.” At 6:14, a fluent but repetition-erasing “I will surely bless and multiply you” was rejected; the cognate forms were restored. At 6:17, “guaranteed” became “interposed an oath,” preserving interposuit; Gate 4 then corrected “heirs of the pledge” to “heirs of the promise,” preserving lucid inheritance language while the editorial retains the distinct pollicitatio form. At 6:19, the anchor, not hope abstracted away from it, remains safe, firm, and advancing. At 6:20, Gate 4 corrected the chapter-movement summary so “for eternity” governs the high-priestly appointment rather than Jesus’s entry and præcursor pro nobis remains “forerunner for us.” The oath formula, three promise-family nouns, burning consummation, and advancing-anchor syntax were pressure-tested; the current forms preserve the Clementine distinctions or document necessary English convergence without an open correction.

Canonical terminology

Sermo is “discourse” at 6:1, while verbum is “word” at 6:5; the contextual difference is documented rather than made accidental. Perfectus/perfectiora and consummare/consummatio retain the perfect/consummation families. Pœnitentia is “repentance,” fides is “faith,” Deus is “God,” baptisma is “baptism,” resurrectio is “resurrection,” judicium is the binding “judgment,” Spiritus Sanctus is “the Holy Spirit,” sæculum is “age,” Filius Dei is “the Son of God,” benedictio is “blessing,” maledictum is “curse,” and salus is “salvation.” Ministrare is “minister,” sancti are “saints,” spes is “hope,” patientia is “patience,” and longanimiter ferre is “endure with patience.” Pollicitatio at 6:17, promissio/promittere at 6:12–13, and repromissio at 6:15 are all rendered “promise” because no equally lucid English nouns preserve their semantic distinctions; each Latin form remains separately recorded for whole-book harmonization. Juramentum and jusjurandum are both “oath.” Consilium is “counsel,” solatium is “consolation,” anima is “soul,” ancora is “anchor,” velamen is “veil,” præcursor pro nobis is “forerunner for us,” pontifex is “high priest,” in æternum governs the high-priestly appointment as “for eternity,” and Melchisedech retains the Latin spelling.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from the identity and interpreted titles of Melchisedech (7:1–3), through Abraham's tithe and the lesser-better logic of blessing (7:4–10), to the completion question and transfer of the Levitical priesthood (7:11–19). The oath then governs the contrast between mortal priests and Jesus' everlasting priesthood (7:20–25), culminating in the fitness of the holy, undefiled high priest and his once-for-all presentation of himself as a sacrificial offering (7:26–28).

Governing Latin

The English follows the repeated decima/decimare language in 'decimas' (7:2, 4–6, 8–9) and the passive 'decimatus est' (7:9); the paired transfer terms 'Translato' and 'translatio' (7:12); the contrast 'infirmitatem ... inutilitatem' / 'melioris spei' (7:18–19); the oath frame 'non sine jurejurando ... cum jurejurando' (7:20–21); and the duration language 'in perpetuum,' 'in æternum,' and 'sempiternum' (7:3, 17, 24–25, 28). 'Consummatio' is completion at 7:11, while actual 'ad perfectum' and 'perfectum' retain perfection language at 7:19 and 7:28. The plural 'hostias' at 7:27 is kept in the book-wide hostia family as 'sacrificial offerings.'

Vulgate-specific readings

The concrete passive 'Levi ... decimatus est' is retained as 'Levi ... was tithed' (7:9). 'Consummatio' is 'completion' (7:11), visibly distinct from the perfect-family forms in 7:19 and 7:28. 'Legis translatio' remains 'a transfer of the law' (7:12), rather than an unexplained abstraction. 'Vita insolubilis' is 'an indissoluble life' (7:16); 'non pœnitebit' remains 'will not repent' (7:21); 'sponsor' is the legally concrete 'guarantor' (7:22); 'hostias offerre' is 'present sacrificial offerings' (7:27); and 'sermo ... jurisjurandi' remains 'the word of the oath' (7:28).

Ambiguities preserved

In 7:10, 'ei' remains the unresolved 'him' in 'when Melchisedech met him,' allowing the cross-verse relation to remain visible without supplying a name. In 7:13, 'In quo' is rendered 'the one concerning whom,' without adding an identity beyond the clause. The elliptical proportional construction 'Et quantum ... in tantum' remains open across 7:20–22. In 7:28, 'Filium in æternum perfectum' remains 'the Son, made perfect forever,' retaining the compact attachment and actual perfect-family wording rather than importing the completion term used for 'consummatio' at 7:11.

Clarity decisions

The 7:1–3 relative chain remains a single continuing description across verse boundaries, but punctuation makes its English dependencies audible. In 7:11, 'completion' preserves 'consummatio,' and the parenthetical 'populus enim sub ipso legem accepit' remains inside the question. In 7:19, the Latin nominal contrast 'introductio vero melioris spei' receives only the necessary English copula, 'but there is the introduction of a better hope.' At 7:27, 'present sacrificial offerings' keeps both the offering action and the hostia family audible before the distinct verbal self-offering. The parenthesis opened in 7:20 is deliberately closed only in 7:21 so that 7:22 completes 'quantum ... in tantum.'

Corrections and reasons

During self-audit, 7:2 was corrected from wording that could make 'rex Salem' part of the act of interpretation to 'first indeed interpreted as king of justice, and then also king of Salem,' preserving 'interpretatur' for the first title and 'quod est' for the second explanation. An added causal 'for' was removed from the parenthesis in 7:20 because the supplied Latin has 'alii quidem' without 'enim.' In 7:28, 'which came after the law' was corrected to 'which is after the law' to retain the present 'est.' In 7:14, 'in which tribe' restored the concrete force of 'in qua tribu.' Gate 4 restored the source and book-bound spelling 'Melchisedech' at all five occurrences in 7:1, 7:10, 7:11, 7:15, and 7:17. Cross-book preflight then corrected 7:11 from 'perfection' to 'completion' for 'consummatio' and 7:27 from generic 'offer sacrifices' to 'present sacrificial offerings' for 'hostias offerre,' preserving the distinct completion/perfection and hostia/sacrificium families.

Canonical terminology

‘Melchisedech’ retains the supplied spelling established earlier in Hebrews. ‘Sacerdos’ is ‘priest,’ ‘pontifex’ is ‘high priest,’ and ‘sacerdotium’ is ‘priesthood.’ ‘Ordo’ is ‘order’; ‘decimæ’ is ‘tithes’; ‘lex’ is ‘law’; ‘hostia’ is ‘sacrificial offering,’ distinct from ‘sacrificium’ / ‘sacrifice’ and ‘oblatio’ / ‘oblation’; ‘consummatio’ is ‘completion,’ distinct from ‘perfectum’ / ‘perfect’; ‘jurejurandum’ is ‘oath’; ‘sponsor’ is ‘guarantor’; ‘testamentum’ is ‘testament’; and ‘interpellare’ is ‘intercede.’ ‘Dominus noster’ is ‘our Lord’ (7:14), while the quoted ‘Dominus’ is ‘the Lord’ (7:21), consistent with the book-level divine-title ruling already established before this chapter.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The chapter begins with its stated chief point: the seated high priest ministers in the true heavenly tabernacle, while earthly priests present gift-offerings and sacrificial offerings and attend upon a heavenly copy and shadow (8:1–5). His better ministry corresponds to a better testament established upon better promises (8:6–7). The extended divine speech then contrasts the testament made at the departure from Egypt with the new testament written into mind and heart (8:8–12), after which the closing sentence draws out the aging and approaching destruction of the first (8:13).

Governing Latin

‘Capitulum ... super ea quæ dicuntur’ (8:1) governs the opening as a chief point concerning the present argument. The location ‘in dextera sedis magnitudinis in cælis’ (8:1) is rendered ‘at the right hand of the throne of majesty in the heavens.’ The paired ‘munera, et hostias’ (8:3) governs ‘gift-offerings and sacrificial offerings,’ while dative-governing ‘exemplari, et umbræ deserviunt’ (8:5) is ‘attend upon a copy and shadow,’ distinct from ordinary serving and ministry. The repeated comparatives ‘melius,’ ‘melioris,’ and ‘melioribus’ (8:6) drive ministry, testament, and promises together. ‘Sancitum est’ is ‘has been established’ (8:6), distinct from ‘confirmatum est’ in 9:17, and ‘propitius ero’ is ‘I will be propitious’ (8:12). The quotation also preserves ‘consummabo super’ (8:8), ‘apprehendi manum eorum’ (8:9), ‘in mentem ... in corde’ (8:10), and ‘a minore usque ad majorem’ (8:11).

Vulgate-specific readings

The supplied 8:4 form ‘offerent’ is represented by the future ‘those who will present gift-offerings,’ even inside the counterfactual frame ‘esset ... essent.’ ‘Munera’ remains in the distinct gift-offering family at 8:3–4, while ‘hostias’ is ‘sacrificial offerings’ at 8:3. ‘Deserviunt’ is relationally ‘attend upon’ (8:5), rather than the ordinary ‘serve’ used for ‘servire.’ ‘Sancitum est’ remains ‘has been established’ upon better promises (8:6), while ‘propitius ero’ retains the propitiation family as ‘I will be propitious’ (8:12). ‘Consummabo ... testamentum novum’ is ‘I will complete a new testament’ (8:8), and both occurrences of ‘super’ remain ‘upon’ the houses. ‘Neglexi eos’ remains the direct ‘I neglected them’ (8:9). The singular collective forms remain ‘their mind’ and ‘their heart’ (8:10), while ‘ipsi’ is ‘they themselves.’

Ambiguities preserved

‘Sanctorum minister’ (8:2) is rendered ‘minister of the holy places,’ preserving the substantival plural without deciding whether the emphasis is location or sacred things; it remains distinct from the attend-upon relation of ‘deserviunt’ in 8:5. ‘Culpa’ in 8:7 is left as the first testament’s lack of fault, while 8:8 separately preserves the explicit object ‘eos,’ ‘them,’ in ‘finding fault with them.’ ‘Capitulum’ is ‘chief point,’ not expanded into a theological summary absent from the Latin. The grammatical tension between the subjunctive ‘essent’ and future ‘offerent’ in 8:4 is retained in ‘would be present’ and ‘will present gift-offerings’ rather than silently normalized.

Clarity decisions

The verbless opening ‘Capitulum …’ receives ‘is this’ so that 8:1 can govern the following declaration without adding a proposition. In 8:3, ‘offerendum’ becomes the lucid gerundial ‘for presenting,’ allowing ‘gift-offerings’ and ‘sacrificial offerings’ to remain distinct. In 8:4, the Latin order was rearranged to ‘since those who will present gift-offerings … would be present’ so both verb forms remain visible. In 8:5, ‘deserviunt’ becomes relational ‘attend upon,’ and ‘Sicut responsum est Moysi’ stays passive as ‘As it was answered to Moses.’ The participial ‘dando’ in 8:10 is attached to the speaking Lord, while ‘superscribam’ remains the finite action of inscribing upon the heart.

Corrections and reasons

The first draft of 8:4 flattened ‘offerent’ into past ‘offered’; self-audit restored the supplied future. In 8:10, ‘themselves’ was added solely to retain the explicit emphatic ‘ipsi,’ not to add a new subject. In 8:11, an interpretive ‘nor’ was corrected to the repeated Latin connector ‘and’ in ‘et … et.’ Gate 3 audit corrected 8:1 from ‘seat of greatness’ to ‘throne of majesty.’ Gate 4 corrected 8:6 from ‘confirmed’ to ‘established’ so ‘sancitum est’ remains distinct from 9:17 ‘confirmatum est,’ and corrected 8:12 from ‘merciful’ to ‘propitious’ to retain the `propitius` family. Cross-book preflight corrected 8:3–4 from generic ‘gifts’ to ‘gift-offerings’ for ‘munera,’ 8:3 from ‘sacrifices’ to ‘sacrificial offerings’ for ‘hostias,’ and 8:5 from generic ‘serve’ to ‘attend upon’ for relational ‘deserviunt.’

Canonical terminology

‘Pontifex’ is ‘high priest’; ‘minister’ is ‘minister’; ‘ministerium’ is ‘ministry’; and ‘deservire’ is ‘attend upon,’ distinct from ordinary ‘servire’ / ‘serve.’ ‘Tabernaculum’ is ‘tabernacle’; ‘munus/munera’ is ‘gift-offering/gift-offerings,’ distinct from ‘donum/dona’ / ‘gift/gifts’; ‘hostia’ is ‘sacrificial offering,’ distinct from ‘sacrificium’ / ‘sacrifice’ and ‘oblatio’ / ‘oblation’; ‘exemplar’ is ‘copy’ or ‘pattern’ according to its syntactic role; ‘umbra’ is ‘shadow’; ‘testamentum’ is ‘testament’; ‘sancitum est’ is ‘has been established’; ‘propitius’ is ‘propitious’; ‘repromissiones’ is ‘promises’; and ‘lex’ is ‘law.’ The house names remain ‘the house of Israel’ and ‘the house of Judah,’ and the singular ‘mind’ / ‘heart’ forms in 8:10 are not pluralized.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The chapter first describes the worldly holy place, its two tabernacle divisions, furnishings, and restricted priestly fulfillment of the offices of sacrifice (9:1–7). The Holy Spirit’s signification exposes those arrangements as a parable whose gift-offerings, sacrificial offerings, and fleshly justifications cannot perfect conscience (9:8–10). Christ then enters the holy places through his own blood, and the argument proceeds from cleansing to mediation, testament, death, and dedication in blood (9:11–22). The final movement contrasts copies with heavenly things themselves and repeated entry with Christ’s single appearance, his own sacrificial offering, and awaited second appearance unto salvation (9:23–28).

Governing Latin

The first movement is controlled by ‘justificationes culturæ’ and ‘Sanctum sæculare’ (9:1), the tabernacle names ‘Sancta’ and ‘Sancta sanctorum’ (9:2–3), and the detailed objects ‘thuribulum,’ ‘urna,’ ‘virga,’ ‘tabulæ,’ ‘cherubim,’ and ‘propitiatorium’ (9:4–5). ‘Sacrificiorum officia consummantes’ (9:6) is ‘fulfilling the offices of sacrifice,’ preserving sacrificium and contextual consummare. The unbroken syntax of 9:6–10 runs through ‘hoc significante Spiritu Sancto,’ ‘munera, et hostiæ’ as distinct gift-offerings and sacrificial offerings, ‘quæ parabola est,’ and final ‘impositis.’ The second half is governed by the blood refrain, the legal family ‘testamentum/testator/testatus’ (9:15–20), ‘melioribus hostiis’ and ‘per hostiam suam’ as the hostia family (9:23, 26), and the appearance sequence ‘apparuit … apparebit’ (9:26, 28).

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Sanctum sæculare’ remains ‘a worldly holy place’ (9:1); ‘aureum ... thuribulum’ is a ‘golden censer’ (9:4); and ‘virga Aaron, quæ fronduerat’ is ‘the rod of Aaron that had put forth leaves’ (9:4). ‘Sacrificiorum officia’ is ‘the offices of sacrifice’ (9:6); ‘munera’ is ‘gift-offerings,’ while ‘hostiæ/hostiis/hostiam’ remains the separate ‘sacrificial offering’ family at 9:9, 9:23, and 9:26. ‘Variis baptismatibus’ remains ‘various baptisms,’ and ‘justitiis carnis’ remains ‘justifications of the flesh’ (9:10). The ablative absolute ‘æterna redemptione inventa’ remains ‘eternal redemption having been found’ (9:12). ‘In mortuis’ is ‘in the dead’ (9:17), ‘ad destitutionem peccati’ is ‘for the destruction of sin’ (9:26), and ‘exhaurienda peccata’ is ‘to exhaust the sins’ (9:28).

Ambiguities preserved

In 9:2, the referential compression of ‘quæ dicitur Sancta’ is rendered ‘this is called the Holy Place’ without inventing an unexpressed chamber name. The relative chain in 9:8–10 remains syntactically continuous: gift-offerings and sacrificial offerings remain the presented objects that cannot perfect the server, while the final imposed participle governs only the complete foods-drinks-baptisms-justifications sequence. In 9:13, the placement of ‘aspersus’ is preserved by placing ‘sprinkled upon the defiled’ after the compound blood-and-ash phrase rather than assigning it exclusively to one noun. In 9:17, the compressed ‘in mortuis’ remains marked. In 9:28, ‘without sin’ remains positioned with the second appearance without an explanatory gloss.

Clarity decisions

The inventory in 9:2–5 was reordered only where English required a supplied ‘were’; every furnishing, material, and relative clause remains present. The semicolons and lower-case openings in 9:6–10 preserve the continuing construction across four verse boundaries: arrangement, priestly entry, the Spirit’s signifying, the parable, and the ordinance list. ‘Gift-offerings and sacrificial offerings are presented’ keeps munera and hostia distinct, while placing ‘all imposed’ after foods, drinks, baptisms, and justifications makes the final perfect passive govern that entire sequence without attaching it to those presented offerings. In 9:19, the ablative absolute ‘Lecto ... mandato’ becomes ‘when every command ... had been read,’ while Moses remains the agent of taking and sprinkling. In 9:25, ‘nor did he enter’ supplies the governing action from 9:24 without changing the purpose clause ‘ut ... offerat.’

Corrections and reasons

Self-audit corrected ‘had budded’ in 9:4 to ‘had put forth leaves’ because ‘fronduerat’ names leafing. In 9:5, ‘there is no need’ was corrected to the passive ‘These things are not now to be discussed.’ In 9:8, past ‘signified’ was corrected to continuing ‘signifying.’ Gate 4 rebuilt 9:9–10 so final ‘all imposed’ unambiguously governs the complete foods-drinks-baptisms-justifications sequence; Gate 3 corrected 9:26 from ‘removal of sin’ to ‘destruction of sin.’ Cross-book preflight then corrected 9:6 from generic ‘duties of sacrificial service’ to ‘offices of sacrifice’ for ‘sacrificiorum officia,’ 9:9 from ‘gifts and sacrifices are offered’ to ‘gift-offerings and sacrificial offerings are presented’ for ‘munera, et hostiæ offeruntur,’ and 9:23 and 9:26 from generic ‘sacrifices/sacrifice’ to the distinct hostia-family ‘sacrificial offerings/sacrificial offering.’ In 9:27, ‘and after this’ was corrected to ‘but after this’ for ‘autem.’

Canonical terminology

‘Sanctum/Sancta’ is ‘holy place/holy places,’ and ‘Sancta sanctorum’ is ‘the Holy of Holies.’ ‘Tabernaculum’ is ‘tabernacle’; ‘velamentum’ is ‘veil’; ‘thuribulum’ is ‘censer’; ‘arca testamenti’ is ‘ark of the testament’; and ‘propitiatorium’ is ‘propitiatory.’ ‘Pontifex’ is ‘high priest’ and ‘sacerdos’ is ‘priest.’ ‘Munus/munera’ is ‘gift-offering/gift-offerings,’ distinct from ‘donum/dona’ / ‘gift/gifts’; ‘hostia’ is ‘sacrificial offering,’ distinct from ‘sacrificium’ / ‘sacrifice’ and ‘oblatio’ / ‘oblation’; and ‘sacrificiorum officia’ is ‘offices of sacrifice.’ ‘Remissio’ is ‘remission,’ ‘testamentum’ is ‘testament,’ and ‘testator’ is ‘testator.’ ‘Justificationes/justitiæ’ are retained as ‘justifications’ in these cultic constructions.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

The law’s shadow and repeated sacrificial offerings cannot make those who approach perfect or take away sins (10:1–4), so the entering speaker distinguishes a sacrificial offering, an oblation, and whole burnt offerings while declaring the fitted body and the will he has come to do (10:5–10). The contrast between daily priestly standing and Christ’s one sacrificial offering followed by sitting leads to those sanctified being brought to completion by one oblation and to the Holy Spirit’s testimony about remembered sins and remission (10:11–18). The chapter then turns to communal approach, confession, provocation to charity, and gathering (10:19–25), warns those who sin voluntarily after receiving knowledge of truth (10:26–31), recalls the addressees’ former contest, compassion for those in bonds, and joyful loss (10:32–35), and ends with patience, the coming one, the just one living by faith, and the contrast between withdrawal and acquisition of the soul (10:36–39).

Governing Latin

The opening is governed by ‘umbram ... non ipsam imaginem’ and emphatic ‘eisdem ipsis hostiis ... indesinenter’ (10:1), which retains the hostia family as ‘the very same sacrificial offerings.’ ‘Hostiam et oblationem’ (10:5) and ‘hostias, et oblationes, et holocautomata’ (10:8) govern the distinct sacrificial-offering, oblation, and whole-burnt-offering families. The quotation preserves ‘corpus ... aptasti mihi’ and ‘in capite libri’ (10:5, 7), while ‘aufert primum, ut sequens statuat’ (10:9) supplies the remove-establish contrast. ‘Una ... oblatione’ and ‘consummavit in sempiternum’ (10:14) govern one oblation bringing the sanctified to completion forever, distinct from actual ‘perfectos facere’ in 10:1. The exhortation follows ‘Habentes’ through ‘accedamus,’ ‘teneamus,’ and ‘consideremus’ (10:19–24). The warning retains ‘Voluntarie ... peccantibus nobis,’ ‘ignis æmulatio,’ distinct ‘sine ulla miseratione’ as ‘without any pity,’ and the three acts in 10:29. ‘Vinctis compassi estis’ governs compassion on those in bonds (10:34).

Vulgate-specific readings

The hostia forms at 10:1, 10:5, 10:8, 10:11, 10:12, and 10:26 retain ‘sacrificial offering(s),’ while noun ‘oblationem/oblationes/oblatione/oblatio’ at 10:5, 10:8, 10:10, 10:14, and 10:18 retains ‘oblation(s)’ and ‘holocautomata’ remains ‘whole burnt offerings’ at 10:6 and 10:8. ‘Consummavit’ is ‘has brought ... to completion’ (10:14), distinct from the perfect family in 10:1, and ‘sanctificatos’ retains the completed ‘those who have been sanctified.’ ‘Corpus ... aptasti mihi’ is ‘you fitted a body for me’ (10:5), and ‘in capite libri’ remains ‘in the head of the book’ (10:7). Supplied first-person ‘tunc dixi’ remains exact ‘then I said’ (10:9). ‘Ignis æmulatio’ is ‘a jealous fire’ (10:27); ‘miseratione’ is ‘pity’ (10:28); and ‘vinctis compassi estis’ is ‘had compassion on those in bonds’ (10:34). ‘Subtractionis filii’ and ‘in acquisitionem animæ’ remain ‘sons of withdrawal’ and ‘unto the acquisition of the soul’ (10:39).

Ambiguities preserved

The participial construction ‘Voluntarie ... peccantibus nobis’ (10:26) is rendered ‘to us who sin voluntarily,’ preserving its ongoing verbal form without adding a one-act or repeated-act explanation; the following ‘hostia’ remains the distinct ‘sacrificial offering.’ In 10:14, ‘sanctificatos’ keeps its perfect aspect as ‘those who have been sanctified’ even as ‘consummavit’ is shifted into the completion family. In 10:20, ‘quam ... viam’ remains a way-relative construction linked to the entrance in 10:19. In 10:28, ‘duobus vel tribus testibus’ is ‘with two or three as witnesses,’ without assigning them an executioner’s agency. ‘Taliter conversantium’ (10:33) remains ‘those living in this way.’ In 10:38, the subject of ‘subtraxerit se’ remains simply ‘he’; in 10:39, ‘animæ’ remains singular ‘the soul.’

Clarity decisions

The counterfactual in 10:2 retains ‘would have ceased’ and ‘would no longer have’ so its dependency on 10:1 remains explicit. In 10:5–9, ‘sacrificial offering,’ ‘oblation,’ and ‘whole burnt offerings’ keep the three Latin noun families distinct inside nested quotation marks, so first-person ‘dixi’ is not converted into third person. In 10:10–18, repeated oblation and sacrificial-offering wording follows each source family, the Spirit’s testimony and quoted testament remain distinct, and ‘brought ... to completion forever’ does not erase the perfect aspect of those already sanctified. In 10:19–22, both objects of ‘Habentes’—confidence and a great priest—are held until ‘let us approach.’ In 10:29, the comparison is rearranged to ‘how much more do you think one merits worse punishments’ without changing the actor or plural ‘supplicia.’

Corrections and reasons

Self-audit corrected 10:9 from third-person ‘he said’ to supplied first-person ‘I said’; 10:13 from ‘made’ to ‘placed as a footstool’; and 10:14 to perfect-participle ‘those who have been sanctified.’ The connector ‘But’ was restored at 10:18, and an imported ‘clean’ was removed after ‘our hearts sprinkled’ at 10:22. Gate 3 corrected ‘zeal of fire’ to ‘jealous fire’ (10:27), restored ‘confidence’ (10:35), and rendered receiving the promise (10:36). Gate 4 corrected ‘mercy’ to ‘pity’ (10:28), ‘suffered with’ to ‘had compassion on’ (10:34), and the false comma in exact ‘then I said.’ Cross-book preflight corrected every chapter-local hostia noun to ‘sacrificial offering(s)’ at 10:1, 10:5, 10:8, 10:11, 10:12, and 10:26; every oblatio noun to ‘oblation(s)’ at 10:5, 10:8, 10:10, 10:14, and 10:18; and 10:14 from ‘made perfect’ to ‘has brought ... to completion,’ while retaining completed ‘those who have been sanctified’ and both ‘whole burnt offerings’ occurrences.

Canonical terminology

‘Lex’ is ‘law’; ‘umbra’ is ‘shadow’; and ‘imago’ is ‘image.’ ‘Donum/dona’ is ‘gift/gifts’; ‘munus/munera’ is ‘gift-offering/gift-offerings’; ‘sacrificium’ is ‘sacrifice’; ‘hostia’ is ‘sacrificial offering’; ‘oblatio’ is ‘oblation’; and ‘holocautomata’ is ‘whole burnt offerings.’ ‘Consummare’ uses the completion family, while actual ‘perfectus/perfectum’ retains the perfect family. ‘Sacerdos’ is ‘priest,’ ‘sacerdotem magnum’ is ‘great priest,’ ‘testamentum’ is ‘testament,’ ‘remissio’ is ‘remission,’ ‘miseratio’ is ‘pity’ rather than book-bound ‘misericordia’ / ‘mercy,’ and ‘compati’ is ‘have compassion.’ Both ‘fiducia’ and ‘confidentia’ are ‘confidence.’ ‘Caritas’ is ‘charity,’ ‘patientia’ is ‘patience,’ ‘remuneratio’ is ‘recompense,’ ‘substantia’ is ‘substance,’ ‘anima’ is ‘soul,’ and ‘justus’ is ‘just one.’

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

Verses 1–3 define faith through 'substantia' and 'argumentum' and place the created 'sæcula' under God's spoken word. Verses 4–31 move through named witnesses, repeatedly beginning with 'Fide' and showing faith through sacrificial offering, translation, pilgrimage, promise, testing, blessing, exodus, Pasch, and deliverance. Verses 32–38 accelerate into a catalogue of victory and suffering; 'alii autem' and 'Alii vero' turn from conquest to torture without treating suffering as a failure of faith. Verses 39–40 gather 'hi omnes' under one unresolved promise and close with God's better provision, 'ut non sine nobis consummarentur.' The Abel example distinguishes 'hostia' as sacrificial offering from 'muneribus' as gift-offerings, and the close distinguishes 'consummarentur' as brought to completion from the perfect-word family.

Governing Latin

11:1 keeps the paired predicates 'substantia rerum' and 'argumentum non apparentium' as 'substance' and 'proof'; 'non apparentium' remains the active image of things not appearing rather than merely a category called unseen things. 11:3 renders 'aptata esse sæcula verbo Dei' as the ages fitted together by God's word; 'sæcula' is not replaced with worlds, and 'ex invisibilibus visibilia fierent' retains the movement from invisible things to visible things. 11:4 renders 'plurimam hostiam' as 'a far greater sacrificial offering' and 'muneribus ejus' as 'his gift-offerings,' preserving the book-wide hostia/munus distinction; it also preserves the two feminine references 'per quam' and 'per illam' with 'through which' and 'through it' rather than inserting a doctrinal antecedent. 11:5 repeats the translation image in 'translatus,' 'transtulit,' and 'translationem'; the English accordingly uses translated, translated, and translation. 11:7 retains 'metuens aptavit arcam' as fearfully fitting an ark, 'in salutem domus suæ' as the salvation of his house, and 'justitiæ' as justice. 11:8 keeps the marked wording 'qui vocatur Abraham' as 'he who is called Abraham,' rather than silently normalizing the subject to Abraham alone. 11:9 preserves 'casulis' as huts, not tents, and keeps Isaac and Jacob as 'cohæredibus'—coheirs—of the same promise. 11:13 retains all three participles—'aspicientes, et salutantes, et confitentes'—as beholding, greeting, and confessing, with no action absorbed into another. 11:17–19 remains one cross-verse construction: Abraham offered, was offering, had received, had been addressed, judged God's ability, and received Isaac 'in parabolam.' 11:21 translates the accusative 'fastigium virgæ ejus' directly as 'the top of his rod'; no absent preposition such as on or over is supplied. 11:24–26 maintains the participial sequence 'negavit ... magis eligens ... æstimans' across three verse keys and keeps the comparison between Christ's reproach and Egyptian treasure. 11:33–38 preserves the rapid finite-verb catalogue and the turn from achieved victories to endured afflictions, including 'tentati sunt' in 11:37. 11:39–40 keeps the singular 'repromissionem' and the passive subjunctive 'consummarentur': they did not receive the promise so that they should not be brought to completion without us.

Vulgate-specific readings

11:3 reads 'the ages' for 'sæcula' and says visible things were made from invisible things; it does not substitute a different cosmological formula. 11:8 explicitly says 'he who is called Abraham' because the supplied text has 'qui vocatur Abraham.' 11:19 retains 'in a parable' for 'in parabolam,' without converting it to a supplied explanation such as figuratively or as a type. 11:21 says Jacob 'adored the top of his rod' because that is the direct syntax of 'adoravit fastigium virgæ ejus'; no imported leaning action is added. 11:25 has 'the pleasure of temporal sin' because 'temporalis' grammatically modifies 'peccati,' not 'jucunditatem.' 11:28 preserves 'sanguinis effusionem' as the pouring out of blood rather than changing the noun to sprinkling. 11:35 preserves 'de resurrectione' as receiving the dead by resurrection and 'distenti sunt' as others being stretched. 11:37 includes the separate proposition 'tentati sunt'—they were tested—between being cut apart and dying in the slaughter of the sword. 11:39 keeps the promise singular, matching 'repromissionem,' after earlier plural promises. 11:4 renders 'plurimam hostiam' as 'a far greater sacrificial offering' and 'muneribus ejus' as 'his gift-offerings,' keeping 'hostia' distinct from 'sacrificium' and 'munus' distinct from 'donum.' 11:40 renders 'consummarentur' as 'should not be brought to completion,' distinct from actual perfect-word forms.

Ambiguities preserved

11:4 'per illam' can grammatically recall faith or the feminine sacrificial offering; 'through it' leaves the antecedent open. 11:7 'per quam' has a feminine antecedent in a sentence containing both faith and ark; 'through it' does not insert an explanatory noun. 11:12 'et hoc emortuo' describes the one man as deadened or effectively dead; 'as good as dead' preserves the force without asserting literal death. 11:18 'vocabitur tibi semen' has an unusual dative relation; 'shall seed be called for you' preserves 'tibi' rather than normalizing it to a possessive sentence. 11:19 'unde' may point to the reckoning, the raising, or the situation as a whole; 'from which' retains that reach. 'In parabolam' is also left as the source's concrete phrase. 11:21 the possessor in 'virgæ ejus' is not reidentified by name; the English retains 'his rod.' 11:28 'primitiva' is a neuter plural referring contextually to the firstborn; the English gives the contextual referent while the editorial records the underlying form. 11:35 'de resurrectione' is not expanded into a mechanism or chronology, and the unspecified instrument behind 'distenti sunt' is not supplied. 11:39 'testimonio fidei probati' permits testimony as means, sphere, or attestation; 'approved by the testimony of faith' preserves the relationship without explaining it away. The corrected noun 'sacrificial offering' leaves the feminine 'per illam' ambiguity intact rather than assigning its antecedent.

Clarity decisions

11:6 recasts the accusative-infinitive subject 'accedentem ad Deum' as 'the one approaching God' while retaining both required beliefs, 'quia est' and 'remunerator sit.' 11:8 supplies ordinary English linkage in 'obeyed by going out' for 'obedivit ... exire' without adding a speaker or destination name. 11:12 restructures the number comparison into 'a multitude like the stars ... and like the innumerable sand' while retaining the one source, his deathlike condition, both images, and innumerability. 11:15 supplies 'land' from the immediately governing 'patriam' so that the feminine 'ipsius ... de qua' has an intelligible English referent. 11:19 supplies Isaac as the object in 'raise him' from the uninterrupted Abraham-Isaac construction; no new participant is introduced. 11:29 renders 'quod experti Ægyptii' as 'when the Egyptians tried this,' retaining their agency and the passive result 'they were devoured.' 11:30 unfolds the ablative 'circuitu dierum septem' as 'after seven days of circling' without naming an unstated circling agent. 11:32 renders 'deficiet enim me tempus enarrantem' as time failing the speaker in recounting, preserving the first-person limit and the following names. 11:37–38 uses an em dash to keep 'quibus dignus non erat mundus' attached to the afflicted people while preserving the continuation into their wandering. 11:4 uses the audible compounds 'sacrificial offering' and 'gift-offerings' to expose the 'hostia'/'munus' distinction without importing another rite; 11:40 unfolds the passive subjunctive as 'should not be brought to completion.'

Corrections and reasons

11:1 the draft possibility 'evidence of things unseen' was corrected to 'proof of things not appearing' to retain both 'argumentum' and the participial 'non apparentium.' 11:3 'worlds' was rejected for 'ages' because the source noun is 'sæcula'; this prevents conformity to wording not supplied by the Latin. 11:4 'a more acceptable sacrifice' was rejected for 'a far greater sacrificial offering' because 'plurimam ... quam' expresses comparative magnitude, not divine acceptability. 11:5 'pleased God' was corrected to 'had pleased God' to preserve the perfect infinitive 'placuisse' anterior to the testimony he had before translation. 11:2 'ancients' was corrected to 'elders' for 'senes,' preserving the source's human age designation and the binding chapter target. 11:11 an initially ambiguous English attachment was corrected to 'believed that the one who had promised was faithful,' preserving 'fidelem ... esse' as the predicate of the promiser rather than making faithfulness the content of his promise. 11:12 missing additive 'also' was restored for 'Propter quod et ab uno,' preserving the connector before the one-man multitude. 11:9 'tents' was corrected to 'huts' because the concrete source noun is 'casulis.' 11:15 a counterfactual 'would have had' was corrected to 'certainly had' to preserve indicative imperfect 'habebant' rather than importing a subjunctive main clause. 11:13 the final wording retains plural 'promises' for 'repromissionibus' and all three coordinated participles; a compressed 'welcomed them from afar' would have lost propositions. 11:17 the aspect was corrected from two simple past verbs to 'offered' and 'was offering,' preserving perfect 'obtulit' beside imperfect 'offerebat.' 11:21 an explanatory leaning phrase was excluded because 'fastigium' is the direct object of 'adoravit' and no supporting preposition occurs. 11:23 'beautiful infant' was corrected to 'elegant infant' for exact 'elegantem infantem,' retaining the Vulgate's marked adjective. 11:25 'temporary pleasure of sin' was corrected to 'pleasure of temporal sin' so 'temporalis' continues to modify 'peccati.' 11:27 'persevered' was corrected to 'endured' for intransitive 'sustinuit,' keeping the verb's sustaining force without inventing duration. 11:28 'Passover' was corrected to 'Pasch' for supplied 'Pascha,' and 'sprinkling of blood' was corrected to 'pouring out of blood' for 'effusionem'; Hebrews 12:24 separately uses 'aspersionem' for sprinkling. 11:31 'spies' was corrected to 'explorers' for 'exploratores,' and 'having received' was corrected to 'receiving' to preserve present participle 'excipiens.' 11:35 'from resurrection' was corrected to 'by resurrection' so 'de resurrectione' states the means by which the women received their dead in lucid English without expanding the event. 11:37 the supplied proposition 'tentati sunt' was explicitly retained to prevent loss through assimilation to a shorter expected catalogue. 11:4 'gifts' was corrected to 'gift-offerings' for 'muneribus,' keeping it distinct from 'donum / dona' gift language. 11:40 'should not be made perfect' was corrected to 'should not be brought to completion' for 'consummarentur,' preserving the consumm- family beside actual perfect- forms.

Canonical terminology

'fides' is faith throughout; the repeated initial 'Fide' remains 'By faith.' 'testimonium' and related 'testimonium ... perhibente' are testimony and bearing testimony, keeping the chapter's attestation vocabulary visible. 'repromissio' is promise, with source number preserved: plural in 11:13 and 11:17, singular in 11:39. 'semen' is seed in 11:11 and 11:18, following the binding JNV ruling. 'justitia' is justice in 11:7 and 11:33, following the binding JNV ruling. 'sæcula' is ages in 11:3; it is not collapsed into worlds. The 'transl-' family in 11:5 is consistently translate/translation, and 'consummarentur' in 11:40 is 'should not be brought to completion without us.' 'remunerator' and 'remuneratio' are rewarder and reward, preserving the noun relationship in 11:6 and 11:26. 'hostia' is sacrificial offering in 11:4 and throughout the book, visibly distinct from 'sacrificium' as sacrifice. 'munus / munera' is gift-offering / gift-offerings, distinct from 'donum / dona' as gift / gifts.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

Verses 1–4 draw the preceding witnesses into the readers' own contest: weight and surrounding sin are laid aside while the runners look to Jesus as the author and consummator of faith and resist sin. Verses 5–13 interpret discipline through the address 'Fili mi,' moving from chastening and scourging to the 'fructum pacatissimum ... justitiæ' and finally to healed steps. Verses 14–17 command peace, holiness, vigilance, and warn through Esau's sale and later rejection. Verses 18–24 contrast what the readers have not approached with Mount Zion, heavenly Jerusalem, the angelic assembly, the enrolled firstborn, God, perfected spirits, Jesus, and speaking blood. Verses 25–29 move from refusing the speaker to the shaking of earth and heaven, the removal of movable things, the reception of an immovable kingdom, reverent service, and the consuming fire.

Governing Latin

12:1 keeps 'impositam nubem testium' as a cloud of witnesses laid upon us and 'circumstans nos peccatum' as sin surrounding us; neither participial relation is reduced to atmosphere. 12:1 retains 'curramus ad ... certamen' as running toward the contest and 'per patientiam' as with endurance. 12:2 distinguishes 'auctorem' and 'consummatorem' as author and consummator and preserves present 'sedet' after past 'sustinuit' and 'contempta.' 12:3 retains 'contradictionem' as contradiction, the source 'a peccatoribus,' its direction 'adversum semetipsum,' and the purpose 'ut ne fatigemini.' 12:5–8 keeps the discipline family 'disciplinam / disciplina' in every occurrence, alongside the distinct actions 'argueris,' 'castigat,' 'flagellat,' and 'corripit.' 12:9 preserves 'patres ... carnis nostræ' against 'Patri spirituum' as fathers of our flesh and Father of spirits. 12:11 preserves the superlative 'pacatissimum,' the future 'reddet,' the passive trainees 'exercitatis per eam,' and binding 'justitiæ' as justice. 12:12–13 carries the paired bodily images 'remissas manus' and 'soluta genua' into 'gressus rectos ... pedibus,' ending with wandering or healing. 12:18–21 retains the complete sensory series: touchable mountain, kindlable fire, whirlwind, darkness, storm, trumpet sound, voice of words, unbearable command, and Moses terrified and trembling. 12:22–24 preserves the long repeated 'et' sequence of approached realities rather than turning it into an explanatory hierarchy. 12:24 makes 'aspersionem' the grammatical speaker: the sprinkling of blood is 'melius loquentem quam Abel.' 12:26–27 keeps 'Adhuc semel' in both statement and explanation and preserves the contrast 'mobilium' / 'immobilia.' 12:28 retains indicative 'habemus gratiam' followed by hortatory 'serviamus,' and makes grace the antecedent of 'per quam.'

Vulgate-specific readings

12:1 says the cloud is 'laid upon us' because the supplied Latin has 'impositam'; a merely surrounding cloud would erase that participle. 12:8 directly reads 'adulteri, et non filii'—adulterers and not sons—and is not conformed to an expected category such as illegitimate children. 12:10 ends in receiving 'sanctificationem ejus,' his sanctification, rather than importing a different noun or possession. 12:18 includes 'montem' and the potential adjectives 'tractabilem' and 'accensibilem': a mountain that can be touched and a fire that can be kindled. 12:23 uses the church of the firstborn, 'ecclesiam primitivorum,' with the plural firstborn enrolled in the heavens. 12:24 uses 'new testament' for 'testamenti novi,' preserving 'testamentum' as distinct from the binding Latin terms 'fœdus' and 'pactum.' 12:24 says the sprinkling of blood speaks better than Abel because feminine 'loquentem' agrees with 'aspersionem.' 12:26 retains singular 'cælum' as heaven and the source-added 'et ego' as 'and I.' 12:27 renders 'translationem' contextually as removal while documenting the same transfer-root used of Enoch in 11:5. 12:28–29 preserves an immovable kingdom, grace through which the readers serve, and the predication 'our God is a consuming fire.' 12:2 retains the marked title 'consummatorem' as 'consummator,' keeping the completion family visibly distinct from 'perfectorum' rendered 'made perfect' in 12:23.

Ambiguities preserved

12:2 'proposito sibi gaudio' can describe joy placed before Jesus and can also bear a purposive relation to endurance; 'for the joy set before him' leaves that relation compact. 12:3 'animis vestris deficientes' is participial and may describe the manner or result of weariness; 'growing faint in your spirits' does not turn it into a separate command. 12:10 'ad id quod utile est in recipiendo sanctificationem ejus' compresses the useful end and the receiving of sanctification; the English preserves 'toward' and 'in receiving' while supplying the understood instruction verb. 12:13 'claudicans quis' is an indefinite limping person; 'whoever limps' keeps the referent open and preserves the two possible outcomes 'erret' and 'sanetur.' 12:15 'impediat' has no stated object; 'hinder' remains without an invented object, while 'per illam' explicitly governs the many being defiled through the root. 12:17 the feminine 'eam' can grammatically recall the blessing or repentance; 'it' leaves the sought object unnamed. 12:18 'tractabilem' and 'accensibilem' are potential adjectives rather than simple past participles; the English retains the can-be construction. 12:19 feminine 'quam' reaches back to the voice, while 'verbum' becomes the thing not to be spoken; the English does not equate voice and word. 12:25 the second comparison is elliptic after 'non effugerunt'; the English supplies the elided non-escape consequence while retaining indicative relative 'qui ... avertimus' as 'we who turn away.' 12:27 'tamquam factorum' can present movable things as made things or give their made status as the reason for removal; 'as of things made' preserves the compressed comparison. 12:28 'gratiam' can invite the contextual sense gratitude while retaining its normal noun sense grace; the reader text keeps grace and lets 'per quam' govern service. 12:2 keeps the compact genitive 'fidei' governing both 'author' and 'consummator' without expanding either title into a separate explanatory claim.

Clarity decisions

12:1 places 'laid upon us' immediately after the cloud and 'surrounding us' immediately after sin so each participle has an audible English antecedent. 12:2 keeps the compact title 'the author and consummator of faith,' then changes the Latin participial density into a main past action followed by 'despising shame' and present 'sits,' preserving the sequence and aspect. 12:3 renders 'Recogitate' as 'consider' and makes the purpose clause explicit with 'so that,' while leaving the following participle subordinate. 12:7 supplies 'is there' in the rhetorical question 'quis enim filius' without adding a new claim. 12:10 repeats the understood act as 'he instructs us' and retains the relations 'toward what is useful in receiving his sanctification'; this makes the ellipsis complete without turning the gerund into a purpose clause. 12:11 moves the recipients 'to those trained by it' after the object so the future action of 'reddet' remains clear. 12:17 places 'with tears' after 'sought it' so the unresolved antecedent of 'it' remains as open as 'eam.' 12:19 makes feminine 'quam' the object of 'audierunt' in 'those who heard it,' then keeps reflexive 'excusaverunt se' and the following negative purpose clause distinct. 12:22–24 retains a single approached-list syntax across three verse keys, with each verse beginning as a continuation. 12:25 expands only the non-escape ellipsis as 'much more shall we not escape' and retains the present-indicative relative as 'we who turn away.' 12:27 identifies 'his saying' as the grammatical subject of 'declares,' preserving both 'dicit' and the explanatory force of 'declarat.'

Corrections and reasons

12:1 'surrounded by a great cloud' was corrected to 'a cloud ... laid upon us' to preserve 'impositam'; the separate surrounding language belongs to 'circumstans ... peccatum.' 12:1 direct-object wording 'run the contest' was corrected to 'run ... toward the contest' to preserve the source relation 'ad propositum ... certamen.' 12:2 both 'perfecter' and 'finisher' were rejected in favor of 'consummator,' which directly preserves 'consummatorem' and the book-wide completion family beside actual perfect-word forms. 12:3 'hostility' was rejected for 'contradiction' because the source gives the concrete noun 'contradictionem.' 12:8 an explanatory rendering such as illegitimate children was rejected; 'adulteri' is retained as adulterers, and 'non filii' remains a separate negation. 12:10 'for our profit, so that we may receive' was corrected to 'toward what is useful in receiving' because the source has 'ad ... in recipiendo,' not a purpose conjunction. 12:11 'peaceful fruit of righteousness' was corrected to 'the most peaceful fruit of justice' to preserve both superlative 'pacatissimum' and binding 'justitiæ.' 12:12 conventional smoothing of both limbs was rejected: 'drooping' carries 'remissas,' while 'loosened' keeps the distinct participle 'soluta.' 12:16 singular 'birthright' was corrected to plural 'rights as firstborn' to preserve neuter plural 'primitiva sua' while giving its contextual sense. 12:18 'blazing fire' was corrected to 'a fire that can be kindled' because the supplied form is potential 'accensibilem,' not perfect participle 'accensum.' 12:23 'righteous' was corrected to 'just' for 'justorum,' retaining the book's justice vocabulary. 12:24 'new covenant' was corrected to 'new testament' to preserve the source term 'testamentum' and avoid collapsing it with 'fœdus.' 12:19 'from which those who heard' was corrected to 'those who heard it' so accusative 'quam' remains the heard voice while reflexive 'excusaverunt se' remains distinct. 12:25 a conditional 'if we turn away' was corrected to 'we who turn away' so present-indicative relative 'qui ... avertimus' directly identifies us; the elided negative consequence remains 'much more shall we not escape' for 'multo magis'. 12:27 'the words ... declare' was corrected to singular 'his saying ... declares' so both the personal speech verb 'dicit' and singular 'declarat' remain represented. 12:27 'change' was refined to 'removal' because the context is the nonremaining of movable made things, while the editorial records the literal transfer-root 'translationem.'

Canonical terminology

'fides' remains faith; 'auctor' is author and 'consummator' is consummator in 12:2; this completion-family title remains visibly distinct from 'perfectorum' rendered 'made perfect' in 12:23. 'disciplina' is discipline in 12:5–11; 'castigat' is chastens, 'flagellat' scourges, 'corripit' corrects, and 'erudiebant' instructed, keeping distinct actions distinct. 'justitia' is justice in 12:11, and adjectival 'justorum' is just in 12:23. 'sanctificatio' is sanctification in 12:10; 'sanctimonia' is holiness in 12:14 so the different Latin nouns are not collapsed invisibly. 'gratia' is grace in 12:15 and 12:28. The 'primitiv-' family is contextualized without losing number: 'rights as firstborn' for neuter plural 'primitiva' in 12:16 and 'the firstborn' for plural persons 'primitivorum' in 12:23. 'testamentum' is testament in 12:24, distinct from the governed terms covenant for 'fœdus' and pact for 'pactum.' 'aspersio' is sprinkling in 12:24, deliberately distinguished from 'effusio' as pouring out in 11:28. The movable/immovable pair renders 'mobilia/immobilia' consistently in 12:27–28, and 'regnum' is kingdom.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

Verses 1–6 begin with durable communal practices—brotherly charity, hospitality, remembrance of prisoners and sufferers, honorable marriage, freedom from avarice—and ground confidence in what God has said. Verses 7–9 frame faithful memory and stable teaching around the compact proclamation 'Jesus Christus heri, et hodie: ipse et in sæcula.' Verses 10–16 move through altar, tabernacle, blood, Holy Places, camp, gate, reproach, the coming city, praise, beneficence, and fellowship; every 'hostia' occurrence is kept concrete as a sacrificial offering, distinct from the sacrifice family. Verses 17–19 return to leaders, souls, accountable vigilance, prayer, good conscience, and the writer's hoped-for restoration. Verses 20–21 form one blessing across the verse boundary: the God of peace who brought forth the shepherd is asked to fit the readers for his will and work in them through Jesus Christ. Verses 22–25 close with an appeal to endure the brief word, news of Timothy, greetings to leaders and saints, the brothers from Italy, and the verbless grace blessing. The altar transition identifies those who attend upon the tabernacle before the sequence moves outside the camp and gate.

Governing Latin

13:1 keeps 'Caritas' as binding charity, renders genitive 'fraternitatis' as brotherly, and preserves the imperative force of 'maneat' as 'Let ... remain.' 13:2 preserves both hospitality and the unexpected result in 'per hanc enim latuerunt quidam, angelis hospitio receptis'; the English makes the event lucid without adding angelic speech or identity. 13:3 retains the double 'tamquam': remember the bound as bound together and the suffering as yourselves remaining in the body. 13:4 keeps 'connubium' and 'thorus' as marriage and bed, then preserves both named groups 'Fornicatores ... et adulteros' under God's future judgment. 13:5–6 carries the source's sequence from conduct without 'avaritia,' through contentment and the doubled divine negation, to confident human speech and its own negation of fear. 13:7 and 13:17 consistently render 'præpositi' as leaders; 13:7 concerns their spoken word, the end of their way of life, and faith, while 13:17 concerns obedience, subjection, vigilance, souls, and account. 13:8 preserves the source's verbless cadence and 'ipse' rather than importing a lexical 'idem': Jesus Christ yesterday and today—he himself also through the ages. 13:9 distinguishes 'variis' from 'peregrinis' as varied and foreign and keeps the heart/foods contrast under 'gratia.' 13:10 renders dative-governing 'deserviunt' as 'attend upon the tabernacle,' distinct from ordinary serve language; 13:10–13 then repeats altar, this attendance, blood, the Holy Places, bodies, camp, gate, Jesus' suffering, and reproach without turning the passage into an explanatory ritual summary. 13:15 renders 'hostiam laudis' as 'a sacrificial offering of praise,' retaining its apposition 'fructum labiorum,' and the dative relation 'confitentium nomini ejus.' 13:16 preserves the two nouns 'beneficentiæ' and 'communionis' as beneficence and fellowship, and renders the sacrificial rationale 'talibus ... hostiis' as 'by such sacrificial offerings.' 13:17 keeps intensive 'pervigilant,' future-participial 'reddituri,' the purpose 'ut ... faciant,' the contrast 'et non gementes,' and the readers' disadvantage. 13:20–21 remains grammatically continuous from nominative 'Deus ... qui eduxit' to subjunctive 'aptet vos,' followed by participial 'faciens.' 13:21 retains 'coram se' as before him, 'per Jesum Christum,' the doxological 'in sæcula sæculorum,' and Amen. 13:22–25 preserves each personal detail: brothers, enduring the word of consolation, very few words, Timothy released, his possible quicker coming, Italy, and the verbless grace-with-all blessing.

Vulgate-specific readings

13:2 reflects passive 'angelis hospitio receptis'—angels received in hospitality—without adding an episode or identifying the unnamed 'quidam.' 13:4 reads 'Marriage is honorable in all' for 'Honorabile connubium in omnibus,' leaving the scope of 'in omnibus' unexpanded. 13:8 does not add 'the same,' because the supplied text has emphatic 'ipse,' not 'idem'; the verbless form is retained in lucid punctuation. 13:11 renders plural 'in Sancta' as 'into the Holy Places,' rather than silently changing the source number to one holy place. 13:15 renders dative 'nomini ejus' as lips making confession to his name rather than treating the form as an unmarked direct object. 13:16 retains 'beneficence and fellowship' instead of replacing either noun with a generalized command, and records the difficult 'promeretur Deus.' 13:20 preserves 'in sanguine testamenti æterni' beside the bringing forth of the shepherd and does not move it into an explanatory theory. 13:21 says 'fit you in every good thing' for 'aptet vos in omni bono'; no absent work, gift, or equipment is supplied. 13:23 retains 'dimissum' as released and comparative 'celerius' as more quickly, without silently specifying release from prison or changing the condition to a simple soon. 13:10 preserves dative-governing 'deserviunt' as 'attend upon the tabernacle,' distinct from ordinary 'servire.' 13:15–16 renders 'hostiam / hostiis' as 'sacrificial offering / sacrificial offerings,' not as the separate 'sacrificium' family.

Ambiguities preserved

13:2 'latuerunt quidam' presents some as unaware, while the ablative absolute keeps angels passively received; 'some were unaware when angels were received as guests' preserves both relations without naming hosts or circumstances. 13:3 'laborantium' can denote laboring, hardship, or suffering; 'those who suffer' keeps the afflictive sense without specifying an oppressor. 13:4 'in omnibus' can mean among all people or in every respect; the English 'in all' deliberately leaves its scope open. 13:7 'exitum conversationis' can be the end, departure, or outcome of a way of life; 'the end of their way of life' retains finality without specifying a cause or manner of death. 13:8 'ipse' is emphatic and the sentence is elliptical; the English retains 'he himself' rather than resolving the ellipsis with a new adjective. 13:15 'confitentium nomini ejus' uses a dative that may express confession, acknowledgment, or thanksgiving directed to the name; 'making confession to his name' preserves the direction. 13:16 'promeretur Deus' has a difficult passive or deponent surface; 'God is pleased' gives the contextual predication, while this record preserves the exact Latin for adversarial review. 13:18 'in omnibus' can attach closely to having a good conscience or to wishing to conduct oneself well; the English places it last, where the sentence can still support the broader scope. 13:20 'in sanguine testamenti æterni' may attach to the bringing forth, the shepherd, or the christological apposition; its position after 'the sheep' is retained. 13:21 'cui' may take its doxological antecedent from Jesus Christ immediately before it or from the God of peace governing the blessing; 'to whom' does not replace the pronoun with a name. 13:23 'dimissum' can mean released or sent away, and 'celerius' is comparative without an explicit standard; both remain minimally interpreted. The 'hostiis' mapping changes the noun identity to 'sacrificial offerings' but leaves the difficult surface of 'promeretur Deus' and its contextual predication unresolved in this record.

Clarity decisions

13:2 renders 'latuerunt quidam' as 'some were unaware' and preserves ablative-absolute 'angelis hospitio receptis' passively as 'when angels were received as guests,' adding no identity, speech, or circumstance. 13:3 supplies 'with them' after 'bound together' from the simultaneous-force prefix in 'simul vincti' and retains the second-person bodily comparison. 13:5 uses singular collective 'conduct' for plural 'mores' and keeps the predicative plural 'contenti' as an instruction to the readers. 13:7 places 'contemplating the end of their way of life' before the command to imitate so both participial observation and imperative response remain distinct. 13:8 uses an em dash to make the source's verbless second colon readable without adding the absent word same. 13:11 reverses the Latin correlative order 'Quorum ... horum corpora' into 'the bodies of those animals whose blood' while preserving animals, bodies, blood, agent, purpose, destination, and burning place. 13:12 renders purpose subjunctive 'ut sanctificaret' as 'that he might sanctify' and places 'through his own blood' with that action. 13:17 renders 'quasi rationem ... reddituri' as leaders keeping watch 'as those who will render an account,' preserving their future accountability rather than asserting the account has already occurred. 13:18 places the participial wish after the good conscience and keeps 'in all things' at the close so the dense relation remains readable. 13:20–21 keeps verse 20 syntactically unfinished and begins verse 21 with lower-case 'fit,' ensuring the verse boundary does not duplicate the subject or sever the governing optative construction. 13:22 supplies 'words' after ablative 'perpaucis' because English requires the understood measure; no content is added to the claimed brevity. 13:10 uses 'attend upon' to make the dative-governed relation of 'deserviunt' audible; 13:15–16 repeats 'sacrificial offering(s)' so the 'hostia' family remains distinct without obscuring praise, beneficence, or fellowship.

Corrections and reasons

13:1 'the love of brotherhood' was corrected to 'brotherly charity' because the book-wide control binds 'caritas' to charity; 'brotherly' continues to represent genitive 'fraternitatis.' 13:2 'some remained unrecognized when angels were received as guests' was corrected through an intermediate active form to 'some were unaware when angels were received as guests,' preserving both the unawareness of 'latuerunt quidam' and the passive angel reception of 'angelis ... receptis.' 13:4 'among everyone' was corrected to 'in all' to avoid falsely resolving the scope of 'in omnibus.' 13:5 'way of life' was corrected to 'conduct' for plural 'mores,' leaving 13:7 'conversationis' to carry its own conduct vocabulary. 13:5 a dangling 'content with present things' was corrected to the supplied predicative instruction 'be content,' so the plural addressees—not an abstract conduct—remain the contented agents. 13:8 an imported 'the same' was removed because the source gives 'ipse,' not 'idem'; the emphatic pronoun now appears as 'he himself.' 13:9 'strange doctrines' was corrected to 'foreign doctrines' to preserve the travel/outsider sense of 'peregrinis' and distinguish it from 'variis.' 13:11 singular 'sanctuary' was corrected to plural 'Holy Places' so the number of 'Sancta' remains visible. 13:15 'lips confessing his name' was corrected to 'lips making confession to his name' to respect dative 'nomini.' 13:7 'outcome of their conduct' was corrected to 'end of their way of life' to retain both 'exitum' and the lived-course force of 'conversationis' under the chapter target. 13:16 'doing good and sharing' was corrected first to abstract nouns and finally to 'beneficence and fellowship' because the source uses 'beneficentiæ et communionis' and the binding target specifies fellowship. 13:20–21 a self-contained verse 20 sentence was rejected; leaving the comma and beginning verse 21 with 'fit' preserves 'Deus ... aptet' as one sentence across the boundary. 13:21 'equip you with every good work' was corrected to 'fit you in every good thing' because neither work nor a with-relationship appears in 'aptet vos in omni bono.' 13:21 indicative 'what is pleasing' was corrected to 'what may please' to retain subjunctive 'placeat.' 13:22 'bear with the word' was corrected to 'endure the word' so 'sufferatis' retains its endurance force rather than suggesting mere tolerance. 13:23 'set free from prison' was rejected for 'released' because the Latin does not name the custody or circumstance of 'dimissum.' 13:25 supplied 'be' was removed so 'Grace with you all' preserves the exact verbless plural blessing 'Gratia cum omnibus vobis.' 13:10 'serve the tabernacle' was corrected to 'attend upon the tabernacle' for 'deserviunt,' distinguishing its governed service relation from ordinary 'servire.' 13:15 'sacrifice of praise' and 13:16 'such sacrifices' were corrected to 'sacrificial offering of praise' and 'such sacrificial offerings,' preserving 'hostia / hostiis' beside 'sacrificium' as sacrifice.

Canonical terminology

'caritas fraternitatis' is brotherly charity; 'hospitalitas' is hospitality. 'fornicatores' is fornicators and 'adulteros' is adulterers in 13:4, matching the direct sexual categories of the Latin. 'avaritia' is avarice in 13:5; the concrete noun is not generalized to materialism. 'præpositi' is leaders in 13:7, 13:17, and 13:24, maintaining one term across remembrance, obedience, and greeting. 'sæcula' is ages in 13:8, and 'sæcula sæculorum' is ages of ages in 13:21. 'gratia' is grace in 13:9 and 13:25. 'testamentum' is testament in 13:20, consistent with 12:24 and distinct from covenant for 'fœdus' and pact for 'pactum.' Altar, tabernacle, Holy Places, camp, gate, blood, sacrificial offering, and reproach remain the stable concrete vocabulary of 13:10–16. 'hostia' is sacrificial offering in 13:15–16, distinct from 'sacrificium' as sacrifice; 'communio' is fellowship and 'beneficentia' beneficence. 'anima' is soul in 13:17, following the binding JNV ruling, and 'conscientia' is conscience in 13:18. 'deservire' is 'attend upon' at 13:10, visibly distinct from ordinary 'servire' as serve.

James — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The greeting in 1:1 names James's service and the dispersed twelve tribes. Verses 1:2–12 move through temptations, the proving of faith, patience, wisdom, inward doubleness, lowliness, riches, and the promised crown. Verses 1:13–18 distinguish God from tempting, trace desire's conception of sin and death, and turn upward to every excellent thing given, the perfect gift, and birth through the word of truth. Verses 1:19–27 move from hearing, speech, and anger to receiving and doing the word, the mirror comparison, the law of liberty, restrained speech, and religion enacted toward orphans and widows while remaining unstained from this age.

Governing Latin

The exhortation at 1:2 is continued by scientes in 1:3, where probatio fidei works patientiam; Patientia in 1:4 then becomes the subject that habet opus perfectum before ut sitis gives the intended outcome. Postulet recurs at 1:5–6; the one who hæsitat is compared with a wave, and non ergo æstimet governs quod accipiat across 1:6–7. Glorietur remains finite only for the lowly brother at 1:9 and is understood, not repeated, for the rich at 1:10; the causal illustration then keeps flos fœni, decor vultus ejus, and itineribus suis concrete. Tentationes, tentationem, tentatur, and tentat remain one temptation family, while probatio and probatus are proving and proved. Concupiscentia conceives and gives birth; completed sin begets death. Datum and donum are distinguished as a thing given and a gift; transmutatio and vicissitudinis obumbratio remain change and shadowing of variation. Scitis is indicative before Sit supplies the exhortation. Abjicientes depends on suscipite, and the implanted word is able to save souls. The factor/auditor contrast controls 1:22–25, and religiosum/religio controls 1:26–27.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 1:1 the Christological Domini is plain "the Lord," with no YHWH parenthetical; under the chapter assignment's explicit adjudication the book's sole marker is reserved for 5:4. The reader keeps salutem as an epistolary "greetings," not salvation. It retains the same temptation root through the plural temptations at 1:2, singular temptation at 1:12, and tempted/tempts at 1:13–14, while probatio/probatus remains proving/proved. At 1:13, intentator malorum is rendered "no tempter of evils," and ipse autem neminem tentat remains the separate proposition "but he himself tempts no one." At 1:18, initium aliquod is the unspecialized "some beginning," with no supplied harvest or ritual noun. At 1:19, Scitis remains the indicative "You know," not an imported command. At 1:23, vultum nativitatis suæ remains "the face of his birth," not a Nativity reference or a generalized appearance. At 1:25 the blessing remains in his deed, and at 1:27 sæculum is "age," not flattened into mundus.

Ambiguities preserved

At 1:8, "double in mind" preserves the doubled inward condition of duplex animo without confusing animus with the distinct anima/soul family or deciding whether mind, disposition, or inner resolve is primary. At 1:13, the corpus-singleton intentator can invite either an inability-to-be-tempted account or a non-tempter account; the reader follows the privative agent form as "no tempter of evils," retains malorum, and leaves the independent neminem tentat clause intact rather than importing a different proposition. At 1:17, "shadowing of variation" retains the genitive relation in vicissitudinis obumbratio without turning variation and shadowing into one noun. At 1:18, "some beginning of his creation" preserves both aliquod and the open relation of creation. At 1:23, "face of his birth" leaves nativitatis open across birth, native condition, and birth-given appearance. "Religion" at 1:26–27 preserves the repeated observance/worship family without defining it as merely institutional affiliation.

Clarity decisions

Verses 1:2–4 remain separately numbered but read as one exhortational movement: the comma after 1:2 lets “knowing” retain the same addressees, while “so that” makes the 1:4 dependency explicit. At 1:5–7, repeated “let him ask,” the causal “for,” and the inferential “therefore” keep request, wave comparison, and negative conclusion distinct. Verses 1:9–11 retain the Latin ellipsis by giving the rich no newly invented finite command; the lowercased continuation and causal clause make the dependency readable. At 1:17, “thing given” and “gift” give datum and donum distinct English forms without an opaque pair of near-synonyms. At 1:19, a period after “You know” preserves the indicative even though its object is unexpressed, and the following sentence carries the balanced swift/slow/slow exhortation. Verses 1:23–24 retain comparison and explanation across their boundary, and 1:25 uses “this one” to make hic’s concluding subject clear without adding a new identity.

Corrections and reasons

The first draft’s “trials” at 1:2 and 1:12 was corrected to “temptations/temptation” so the supplied tentatio family remains audible beside tentatur and tentat; probatio/probatus was correspondingly kept as “proving/proved” rather than collapsed into that family. At 1:3, “proof produces” became “proving … works” so probatio denotes the active proving and operatur remains audible beside the work vocabulary of 1:4 and 1:20. At 1:10, a repeated “let him glory” was removed because the Latin carries glorietur elliptically rather than supplying a second finite command, while autem was restored as “but.” At 1:13, an explanatory paraphrase was replaced by “no tempter of evils,” which accounts for the privative agent noun and its genitive while preserving the separate clause that God tempts no one. At 1:17, two generic “gifts” were separated into “thing given” and “gift,” and both change and shadowing were restored. At 1:19, an imperative “Know this” was corrected to the formal indicative “You know.” At 1:23, “natural face” was corrected to “face of his birth” so neither vultum nor nativitatis disappears. At 1:27, “world” became “age,” and “unstained” was repeated for both forms of immaculatus.

Canonical terminology

Deus is “God.” Domini at the explicitly Christological first occurrence in 1:1 is “the Lord” without a YHWH parenthetical, and the later divine Domino at 1:7 is also “the Lord”; the sole book marker is reserved for 5:4 by explicit adjudication outside this lane. Tentatio/tentari is temptation/tempted/tempt, distinct from probatio/probatus as proving/proved. Patientia is “patience,” fides is “faith,” sapientia is “wisdom,” concupiscentia is “desire,” veritas is “truth,” justitia is “justice,” and anima is “soul.” Verbum is “word”; factor and auditor are “doer” and “hearer”; lex libertatis is “law of liberty.” Religiosus/religio is consistently “religious/religion,” immaculatus is “unstained” in both 1:27 occurrences, and sæculum is “age.”

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Verses 2:1–7 confront acceptance of persons through two entrants to the assembly, the hearers’ unequal speech, God’s choice of the poor, the rich oppressors, and the good name invoked over the addressees. Verses 2:8–13 measure that conduct by the royal law and the whole-one-all logic of transgression, then command speech and action by the law of liberty before setting judgment and mercy against one another. Verses 2:14–26 press a sequence of questions about faith without works: bodily need exposes empty speech, an interlocutor demands visible faith, demons believe and shudder, Abraham’s faith works together with his works, Rahab receives and sends out the messengers, and the body-spirit analogy closes the argument.

Governing Latin

Nolite ... habere at 2:1 governs both in personarum acceptione and the compact genitive chain fidem Domini nostri Jesu Christi gloriæ. The si period at 2:2–4 contains two introierit clauses and all the actions toward the two entrants before nonne judicatis supplies the interrogative conclusion. Pauperes is the object of elegit and remains linked to divites in fide and hæredes regni; quod repromisit Deus diligentibus se exactly repeats the promise clause of 1:12. Per potentiam retains coercive force, judicia is plural, and the good name is passively invocatum super vos. The law movement keeps perficitis, operamini, servaverit, offendat, and factus est distinct. At 2:12, the implied addressees are incipientes judicari through the law of liberty. At 2:13, judicium occurs twice and misericordia three times. The condition begun with a naked brother and sister at 2:15 continues through the singular speaker, plural non dederitis, bodily necessities, and quid proderit in 2:16. Faith remains the subject that can save, cooperate, be completed, and be dead. Sine operibus and ex operibus are never collapsed.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 2:1, the Christological Domini is plain “the Lord” with no YHWH parenthetical, and the difficult phrase remains “the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ of glory with acceptance of persons,” keeping gloriæ and personarum acceptione visible. Conventum at 2:2 is “assembly,” not a convent; white clothing and splendid clothing remain distinct descriptions across 2:2–3. At 2:6, judicia is the plural “courts,” and at 2:7 the name has been invoked over the addressees. At 2:12, incipientes judicari is “those who are beginning to be judged,” not an imported simple future. At 2:13, both judgment tokens and all three mercy tokens remain explicit. At 2:18, the challenge retains “without works” and “from works.” At 2:20 and 2:26, mortua is “dead,” not a substitute adjective. At 2:23, ad justitiam is “as justice,” preserving the binding noun rather than replacing it with another theological abstraction. At 2:25, Rahab receives “messengers,” not a more specific visitor role, and sends them out by another way.

Ambiguities preserved

At 2:1, “our Lord Jesus Christ of glory” keeps the final genitive audible without deciding silently whether glory attaches most closely to the Lord’s title, Christ, or the faith expression; the unusual English is deliberate and documented. At 2:4, “judges of unjust thoughts” preserves the genitive cogitationum iniquarum without deciding whether the thoughts belong to the judges or are the object or standard of their judging. At 2:12, “beginning to be judged” retains both the inceptive participle and passive infinitive without specifying how far that beginning extends. At 2:18, the whole statement after “someone will say” is assigned to the introduced speaker; the editorial records that the Latin’s compressed dialogue permits debate, while the reader preserves both opposed relations, “without works” and “from works,” without moving either clause. At 2:26, “spirit” retains spiritus without narrowing it to breath or supplying an identity beyond the body-spirit comparison.

Clarity decisions

Verses 2:2–4 remain three auditable units, but commas keep both entrants, the gaze and contrasting speech, and the concluding question within one conditional period. Repeating “enters” for the poor man represents the second introierit rather than letting him become a dependent detail of the first entrant. At 2:5, “to be” makes the predicate roles of rich and heirs intelligible while retaining the poor as God’s chosen object. At 2:10, “may have kept ... should stumble ... has become” preserves the distinct forms of servaverit, offendat, and factus est. At 2:12, “those who are” supplies only the English carrier required for the nominative participle, not a new group. At 2:13, “is for” supplies the minimal copula needed to make the Latin ellipsis and its dative illi readable. Across 2:15–16, “someone among you” remains the singular speaker while the following unmarked English “you” retains the source’s plural address; the rhetorical conclusion stays in 2:16. At 2:22 and 2:24, English question syntax renders the source punctuation without losing the seeing verbs. Plain “you” is number-neutral in English; the editorial records the Latin shift from singular Vides at 2:22 to plural Videtis at 2:24 without adding an unexpressed universal to the reader.

Corrections and reasons

At 2:1, an initial generic “partiality” was corrected to “acceptance of persons” so the governing prepositional phrase and its recurrence as “accept persons” at 2:9 remain visible; “of glory” was restored rather than absorbed into an adjective. At 2:2–3, generic “fine clothes” was separated into white clothing, filthy attire, and splendid clothing, and both entrants received their own finite verb. At 2:4, “evil-minded judges” was corrected to “judges of unjust thoughts” so the consequential genitive is not silently resolved. At 2:6, “judgment” was corrected to plural “courts” for ad judicia in its concrete coercive setting. At 2:10, an opening causal “For” was corrected to adversative “But” for autem. At 2:12, “as those who will be judged” was corrected to “as those who are beginning to be judged” to restore incipientes and the passive. At 2:13, the two judgment and three mercy occurrences were restored after a smoother paraphrase had reduced their counts. At 2:18, the whole challenge was kept in one speaker’s quotation and “by works” became “from works” for ex. At 2:20 and 2:26, “empty/useless” paraphrases for faith were rejected in favor of supplied “dead.” At 2:23, “righteousness” was corrected to canonical “justice.” At 2:24, a proposed “you all” was rejected and returned to plain “you”: English already permits the plural, while “all” would import an overt universal absent from Videtis; the singular-to-plural shift from 2:22 is recorded editorially. At 2:25, a more specific visitor identity was rejected; “messengers” and the two participial actions were restored.

Canonical terminology

Deus is “God.” The explicitly Christological Domini at 2:1 is “the Lord” without a YHWH parenthetical under the same book adjudication as 1:1; the sole marker is reserved for 5:4 outside this lane. Fides is “faith,” credere is “believe,” opera is “works,” and the work/co-work vocabulary remains audible in work sin, working together, works, and do well. Personarum acceptio/personas accipere is “acceptance of persons/accept persons.” Lex is “law,” legislatively qualified as royal law and law of liberty; transgressor remains “transgressor.” Judicium is “judgment” at 2:13, while contextual plural judicia is “courts” at 2:6. Misericordia is “mercy,” justitia is “justice,” and justificare is “justify,” keeping noun, verb, and verdict distinct. Scriptura is “Scripture,” nuntii are “messengers,” meretrix is “prostitute,” and spiritus is “spirit.”

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from restraint in becoming teachers to the universal vulnerability of stumbling, then develops the tongue through bridles, rudders, fire, bodily contamination, and an untamable poison. Blessing God and cursing humans made in God’s likeness expose a contradiction that the spring, fig tree, vine, and final salty ellipsis make concrete. The closing movement tests claimed wisdom by visible conduct: bitter zeal and contentions yield earthly, soulish, diabolical wisdom and instability, while wisdom from above bears a complete sequence of qualities and ends in the fruit of justice sown in peace for those who make peace.

Governing Latin

At 3:1, Nolite ... fieri is a prohibition, scientes continues the addressed brothers, and sumitis remains second-person active under majus judicium. In multis ... offendimus omnes and Si quis in verbo non offendit keep the inclusive stumbling claim and its narrower word test. The image chain retains frena, ora, circumducere/circumferimus/circumferuntur, the concessive cum magnæ sint, passive minentur and circumferuntur, and the difficult ubi impetus dirigentis voluerit without inventing a destination. At 3:4, minentur is read as the passive of mino/minare, ‘are driven,’ with a ventis validis naming the agent; supplied-corpus uses such as minasset gregem and minabant plaustrum confirm the motion force. At 3:5, magna is read as accusative neuter plural substantival, the expressed content of exaltat; ‘great things’ renders that form without adding a separate object, while quantus and quam magnam keep both following measures of greatness. Lingua controls every clause at 3:6, including feminine inflammata; it stains the whole body, sets the wheel of our birth ablaze, and is itself set ablaze by Gehenna. The present domantur and perfect domita sunt at 3:7 lead across the colon to the tongue’s exception at 3:8. In ipsa recurs exactly at 3:9, and Ex ipso ore, eodem foramine, and the paired tree-and-fruit questions continue the same-source argument. At 3:13, Ostendat governs operationem suam, which is shown ex bona conversatione and in mansuetudine sapientiæ. The 3:14–16 condition, prohibition, explanation, contrast, and result remain ordered. At 3:17 every predicate is retained separately. At 3:18 singular Fructus is the passive subject of seminatur, and facientibus pacem remains dative.

Vulgate-specific readings

The English retains the supplied second-person sumitis at 3:1: the would-be teachers ‘receive’ greater judgment; it is not conformed to a different person or future. Offendere is ‘stumble,’ not social offense, and in verbo remains ‘in word.’ Ships are ‘driven by strong winds’ for passive minentur, while the rudder turns them where the steering person’s impulse wills; no destination is inserted. Magna is not erased into the adverb ‘greatly’: its accusative-neuter-plural force remains ‘great things,’ with no noun more specific than the substantival adjective, and the following fire is itself described as great by quantus. Universitas iniquitatis is ‘the totality of iniquity’; rota nativitatis nostræ is ‘the wheel of our birth’; and a gehenna is explicitly ‘by Gehenna,’ distinct from the canonical realm-of-the-dead terminology. At 3:7, both natura occurrences remain ‘nature,’ with present taming distinguished from completed taming. At 3:12, salsa remains substantival in ‘what is salty,’ without silently supplying a noun. Disciplinatus is ‘trained,’ conversatione is ‘conduct,’ and operationem is the expressly shown ‘work.’ Desursum is ‘from above’ in both 3:15 and 3:17. Animalis is ‘soulish,’ retaining its formal relation to anima without importing an animalistic paraphrase. At 3:17, suadibilis, bonis consentiens, non judicans, and sine simulatione remain ‘persuadable,’ ‘consenting to good things,’ ‘not judging,’ and ‘without pretense.’ Justitiæ is the binding ‘justice,’ and the final fruit is singular and sown passively.

Ambiguities preserved

At 3:4, ‘the impulse of the one steering’ leaves intact the unusual genitive relation in impetus dirigentis and lets that impulse remain the grammatical subject of voluerit; the English supplies no destination beyond ubi. At 3:5, the surface form magna could formally be feminine singular or neuter plural, but its position with transitive exaltat and the supplied corpus’s substantival magna parallels support the adjudicated accusative-neuter-plural ‘great things’; no more specific object is added. ‘The wheel of our birth’ at 3:6 preserves both the wheel and first-person genitive while leaving open whether nativitas points most strongly to birth, native existence, or the course that proceeds from birth. At 3:7, the repeated ‘nature’ does not reduce the classes to a modern taxonomy. At 3:8, both ‘a restless evil’ and ‘full of deadly poison’ remain in apposition to the tongue despite the Latin’s surface agreement shift. At 3:12, ‘what is salty’ preserves the feminine adjectival ellipsis rather than deciding whether the unstated referent is a spring, water, or another supplied noun. ‘Bitter zeal’ at 3:14 preserves zelum between zeal and jealousy; plural contentiones remains distinct. ‘Soulish’ at 3:15 keeps the anima-related form visible without defining the anthropology it implies. At 3:17, ‘not judging’ supplies no object or narrower kind of judgment. At 3:18, ‘for those who make peace’ represents the dative relation without recasting the peace-makers as an expressed a/ab agent.

Clarity decisions

‘Do not become teachers in great numbers’ makes plures intelligible as a warning about the number who become teachers while preserving the prohibition and office term. The horse sentence uses ‘to make them consent to us’ for the ad plus gerund purpose and keeps the horses, not the bridles, as the understood consenters. ‘Though they are great’ makes cum concessive at 3:4; ‘are driven’ and ‘are turned around’ keep both passives. At 3:5, English ‘things’ gives nominal force to substantive neuter-plural magna but supplies no content beyond ‘great’; this is more morphologically accountable than adverbial ‘greatly.’ At 3:6, ‘sets ablaze the wheel ... itself set ablaze by Gehenna’ preserves the Latin order of active inflammat before passive inflammata; the reflexive resumes the controlling tongue, not the wheel, while keeping the repeated fire action compact. Dashes at 3:7 set off the four natural classes while preserving one omnis natura claim; the terminal colon and lowercase 3:8 keep the exception syntactically attached. ‘From the same mouth comes’ keeps singular procedit despite the paired blessing and curse. At 3:12, ‘a vine figs’ retains the shared facere without unnecessarily repeating the verb. At 3:14–15, the colon and lowercase ‘for’ keep non est enim as the explanation of the prohibition. At 3:17, commas leave every predicate independently readable; ‘for those who make peace’ gives the final dative lucid English without changing the passive sowing.

Corrections and reasons

The initial 3:1 wording ‘do not many of you become teachers’ was corrected to ‘do not become teachers in great numbers’ because the former sounded like a question in contemporary English and obscured the prohibition; plures still controls the number. At 3:4, ‘threatened by strong winds’ was corrected to ‘driven by strong winds’: minentur is the passive motion verb with a ventis validis as agent, confirmed by supplied-corpus mino/minare uses with a flock and carts, whereas threat belongs to a different contextual use. At 3:5, adverbial ‘exalts greatly’ was corrected to ‘exalts great things’ because it erased the accusative-neuter-plural substantive magna; ‘things’ is only the required English nominal support for that adjective and adds no more specific object. ‘A small fire’ was also rejected and the two explicit magnitude expressions were restored. At 3:6, a preposed ‘itself set ablaze by Gehenna’ was returned after the wheel clause so active inflammat precedes passive inflammata as in the Latin; the reflexive makes the tongue, not the wheel, the passive patient. At 3:7, ‘every kind’ was corrected to ‘every nature’ to retain the exact natura recurrence with humana natura, and both present and perfect passive taming were kept. At 3:12, ‘salt water’ was first rejected because the Latin leaves salsa elliptic; the required Gate4 correction then changed ‘the salty’ to ‘what is salty,’ preserving the substantival feminine ellipsis while removing an unidiomatic first-reading miscue. At 3:13, ‘conversation’ and ‘self-disciplined’ were rejected as false-friend renderings in favor of ‘conduct’ and ‘trained,’ and operationem was restored as ‘work.’ At 3:15, ‘animalistic’ was rejected because it imports a modern behavioral sense; ‘soulish’ preserves the form’s anima relation. At 3:17, generalized substitutes such as ‘reasonable,’ ‘impartial,’ and ‘sincere’ were rejected because they erase suadibilis, bonis consentiens, non judicans, or sine simulatione. At 3:18, ‘righteousness’ was corrected to the binding ‘justice,’ and an active sowing was corrected to the supplied passive.

Canonical terminology

Magistri is ‘teachers.’ Judicium is the binding ‘judgment.’ Offendere is ‘stumble’ in this law-and-perfection context; verbum is ‘word.’ Lingua is ‘tongue,’ frenum is ‘bridle,’ and gubernaculum is ‘rudder.’ Iniquitas is ‘iniquity.’ Gehenna remains ‘Gehenna’ and is not collapsed into infernum or inferi. Nativitas is rendered ‘birth’ within the fixed ‘wheel of our birth’ image, with its wider contextual range recorded rather than substituted into the reader. Deus is ‘God,’ similitudo is ‘likeness,’ benedictio is ‘blessing,’ and maledictio is ‘curse.’ Sapientia is ‘wisdom,’ desursum is ‘from above,’ zelus is ‘zeal,’ contentio/contentiones is ‘contention/contentions,’ inconstantia is ‘instability,’ opus is ‘work,’ misericordia is ‘mercy,’ and veritas is ‘truth.’ Animalis is ‘soulish’ in the three-part wisdom contrast. Justitia is ‘justice.’ Pax/pacificus/facere pacem retain the peace/peaceful/make-peace family.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter traces outward wars and quarrels to desires warring within the members, then exposes desire, killing, envy, bad asking, and expenditure upon desire. The address to adulterers frames friendship with this world and friendship with this age as divided loyalty before the unresolved Scripture question about the indwelling spirit and envy gives way to greater grace. A sequence of imperatives then moves through subjection, resistance, approach, cleansing, lament, and humility. The closing movements forbid speaking against a brother and judging the law, set the one lawgiver and judge over destruction and liberation, rebuke confident commercial plans through ignorance and the vapor of life, and end by naming boastful exultation evil and known-but-undone good as sin.

Governing Latin

At 4:1, Unde opens the source question and nonne hinc answers it with ex concupiscentiis vestris; the relative quæ makes those desires the agents that militant in the members. The sharp finite sequence at 4:2 remains concupiscitis, occiditis, zelatis, litigatis, belligeratis, with non habetis repeated and propter quod supplying the first causal account. At 4:3, eo quod gives the second cause and ut ... insumatis gives the purpose of the bad asking. The masculine vocative Adulteri opens 4:4; amicitia hujus mundi ... inimica and amicus ... sæculi ... inimicus ... constituitur deliberately shift both noun and construction. At 4:5, An putatis governs the whole question, Scriptura dicat introduces the exact quoted proposition, and spiritus remains grammatically unexpanded. At 4:6, neither dat nor dicit has an expressed subject in its immediate clause; the English therefore avoids naming one, while the explicit Deus in the citation governs resistit and the second dat. The 4:7–10 sequence retains every imperative and every future fugiet, appropinquabit, and exaltabit. At 4:11, detrahit and judicat repeat through brother and law, while factor and judex remain distinct roles; Unus est legislator et judex governs both perdere and liberare at 4:12. The address begun by Ecce nunc qui dicitis in 4:13 continues only through qui ignoratis quid erit in crastino at 4:14. Verse 4:15 alone contains Quæ est enim vita vestra, the vapor, parens, exterminabitur, pro eo ut dicatis, and both separately stated Si conditions. Exsultatis/exsultatio and the dative frame Scienti ... non facienti ... illi govern 4:16–17.

Vulgate-specific readings

The English does not generalize 4:1–2 into conflict: it retains wars, quarrels, desires waging war in the members, desire without possession, killing, envy, inability to obtain, quarreling, and waging war. The request absent at 4:2 remains distinct in English from the bad asking at 4:3. Male petatis is directly ‘ask badly,’ and ut ... insumatis remains purpose: ‘so that you may spend it on your desires.’ The address at 4:4 is masculine plural ‘Adulterers’; mundi is ‘world,’ while sæculi is the distinct ‘age.’ Amicitia is adjectivally ‘hostile to God,’ whereas the willing friend is passively ‘constituted an enemy of God.’ At 4:5 the full supplied statement remains inside the question as ‘The spirit that dwells in you desires toward envy’; no divine, human, or demonic identity is inserted. At 4:6, ‘greater grace is given’ and ‘it is said’ avoid invented agents for dat and dicit, while the citation retains God as its expressed subject. Every imperative and future result at 4:7–10 remains explicit, including ‘double in mind,’ concrete hands and hearts, ‘Be miserable,’ and the Lord’s future exaltation. Detrahere is ‘speak against,’ not reduced to judging; liberare is ‘set free,’ not normalized to salvare. At 4:13, facere annum is intelligibly ‘spend a year,’ while lucrum faciemus remains ‘make a profit.’ Verse 4:14 contains only ignorance of tomorrow. Verse 4:15 contains the life question, vapor appearing briefly, later disappearance, and both correction conditions. Exsultatis/exsultatio remains ‘exult/exultation,’ superbiis remains plural ‘boastings,’ and no catalog of good acts is added at 4:17.

Ambiguities preserved

At 4:1, ‘among you’ represents plural in vobis without deciding whether every war is purely inward or communal, while ‘in your members’ keeps the bodily location explicit. At 4:2, ‘envy’ gives zelatis its contextually sharp force, while the editorial retains its lexical relation to the zeal family rather than erasing that range. At 4:5, ‘the spirit’ remains unidentified; ‘dwells in you’ does not decide whether vobis is individually or corporately distributed; and ‘desires toward envy’ preserves ad invidiam between direction and degree. The entire proposition remains a quotation questioned by An putatis rather than a narrator’s settled assertion. At 4:6, the agent of the first dat and the speaker of dicit remain unnamed: agent-neutral English does not silently identify either with God, Scripture, grace, or the spirit. At 4:12, ‘set free’ keeps liberare distinct from salvare without determining the precise kind of liberation. At 4:13, ‘that city’ preserves illam without identifying a place. At 4:15, ‘appearing for a little while’ keeps parens participial, and ‘will disappear’ gives exterminabitur its vapor-context removal force without importing the word’s modern mass-killing sense; the passive Latin and exact lexical history remain recorded. The two conditions remain separate, so the English does not decide whether the second is logically coordinated inside the first. At 4:17, ‘good’ remains unexpanded, and the dative construction does not identify any particular omitted act.

Clarity decisions

The elliptical Unde … in vobis question is rendered ‘From where do … come?’ so the source relation reads as a complete English question; ‘from here: from your desires’ then preserves hinc and its explanatory source. At 4:2, ‘make no request’ keeps postulatis distinct from the repeated petitis rendered ‘ask’ at 4:3. Because English spend requires an object, ‘it’ at 4:3 refers only to what is sought and not received; it adds no new good or motive. At 4:4, ‘hostile to God’ preserves the adjectival first construction, while ‘is constituted an enemy’ preserves the passive second construction. Subjectless active dat and dicit cannot stand as lucid independent English clauses at 4:6; passive ‘is given’ and ‘is said’ retain the actions while declining to invent agents, and the editorial makes the voice restructuring explicit. ‘Be humbled’ retains the passive form of Humiliamini and ‘in the sight of’ retains in conspectu. At 4:11, repeating ‘the law’ keeps every object visible through the dense judgment chain. Verse 4:13 ends with a dash and verse 4:14 begins lowercase so qui ignoratis remains attached to the speakers while 4:14 contains nothing else. At 4:15, punctuation after each quoted condition preserves the source’s separate Si Dominus voluerit. Et: Si vixerimus constructions. At 4:17, ‘does not do it’ points only back to the expressed good and keeps the sentence free of an invented list.

Corrections and reasons

At 4:1–2, an early generalized ‘conflicts’ wording was rejected and each of bella, lites, litigatis, and belligeratis was restored as wars, quarrels, quarreling, and waging war. ‘Harm’ was corrected to ‘kill’ for occiditis, preventing moral softening. At 4:2, ‘are zealous’ became ‘envy’ because the bare positive English sense would obscure the hostile sequence; the zeal-family relation remains documented. At 4:3, a result-like ‘and so you spend’ was corrected to the purpose ‘so that you may spend.’ At 4:4, an inherited feminine address was rejected for the supplied masculine Adulteri; a repeated ‘world’ was corrected to ‘world’ and ‘age’ for mundus and sæculum, and active ‘makes himself’ was corrected to passive ‘is constituted.’ At 4:5, proposed identifications of spiritus and paraphrases such as ‘jealously yearns’ were rejected because they resolve the subject and ad invidiam; the question and quotation boundary were restored. At 4:6, supplied ‘God gives’ and ‘Scripture says’ were removed from the unexpressed-subject clauses; agent-neutral passives prevent the additions and are expressly recorded. At 4:8, ‘two-minded’ was corrected to ‘double in mind’ to retain duplices animo. At 4:9–10, ‘be sorry’ and active ‘humble yourselves’ were corrected to the stronger ‘Be miserable’ and passive ‘Be humbled.’ At 4:12, ‘save’ was rejected for liberare in favor of ‘set free.’ At 4:13–15, the vapor image was moved entirely out of 4:14 and into 4:15, parens was corrected from a parent false friend to ‘appearing,’ exterminabitur from modern extermination to contextual disappearance, and the Lord-willing and life conditions were separated exactly. At 4:16, singular ‘pride’ became plural ‘boastings,’ and the exult family was restored in both clauses.

Canonical terminology

Concupiscentia/concupiscere is ‘desire,’ maintaining the chapter’s inner-desire chain and its link to the unresolved spirit clause. Bellum is ‘war,’ lis/litigare is ‘quarrel,’ and belligerare is ‘wage war.’ Postulare is represented by ‘make a request’ here, while petere is ‘ask.’ Deus is ‘God.’ Mundus is ‘world’ and sæculum is ‘age,’ kept distinct within 4:4. Scriptura is ‘Scripture,’ spiritus is ‘spirit,’ gratia is ‘grace,’ diabolus is ‘devil,’ and peccator is ‘sinner.’ Duplex animo is ‘double in mind.’ Dominus is plain ‘the Lord’ at 4:10 and 4:15, with no YHWH parenthetical in this lane because the explicit book adjudication reserves the sole marker for 5:4 in ‘the Lord (YHWH) Sabaoth.’ Detrahere is ‘speak against’; lex is ‘law,’ factor is ‘doer,’ judex is ‘judge,’ and legislator is ‘lawgiver.’ Perdere is ‘destroy,’ while liberare is ‘set free’ and remains distinct from salvare. Proximus is ‘neighbor.’ Vapor is ‘vapor,’ parens is ‘appearing,’ and exterminabitur is contextually ‘will disappear.’ Exsultare/exsultatio remains the exult/exultation family; superbia is ‘boasting’ here; bonum is ‘good’; and peccatum is ‘sin.’

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter opens by summoning the rich to howl over approaching miseries: rotted riches, moth-eaten garments, corroded metals, withheld wages, indulgence, slaughter, condemnation, and killing expose judgment already gathering in the last days. It then turns to the brothers and moves through patient waiting for the Lord’s coming, restraint toward one another, the prophets’ example, Job’s suffering, and speech kept free of oaths. Its final movement answers distress, equanimity, sickness, sins, drought, and wandering with prayer, psalm-singing, the presbyters’ ministry, confession, intercession, and the restoration of one who strays from truth.

Governing Latin

The perfect constructions putrefactæ sunt, comesta sunt, æruginavit, Epulati estis, enutristis, Addixistis, and occidistis give the opening its accumulated, completed force. Singular merces controls quæ fraudata est and clamat before plural clamor eorum returns to the workers; in aures … introivit preserves the cry’s motion into the Lord’s ears. Patientes igitur estote is repeated nearly verbatim, patient- language surrounds the farmer, and adventum or adventus Domini binds the exhortation to the Lord’s coming. The closing sequence keeps distinct actors and results: the sick person summons, the presbyters pray and anoint, the prayer saves, the Lord raises, and sins are remitted; heaven and earth each dedit, and qui converti fecerit remains causative.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 5:3, explicit iram is “wrath,” the object stored up for the rich in the last days. At 5:4, the singular wage itself cries, the workers’ cry enters the ears, and the supplied title is preserved without expansion as “the Lord (YHWH) Sabaoth,” the book’s sole YHWH disclosure under the binding adjudication. At 5:6, justum is “the just one,” not a plural class. At 5:7, temporaneum et serotinum appears as “the early and the late” without an invented rain noun. At 5:10, exitus mali remains “the outcome of evil” inside the opaque series with labor and patience; at 5:11, finem Domini remains “the end of the Lord,” and both misericors and miserator survive as “merciful and compassionate.” At 5:14, presbyteros is retained as the office term “presbyters.”

Ambiguities preserved

The nounless temporaneum et serotinum remains “the early and the late,” leaving open what the farmer receives rather than narrowing the image by supplying rain. “The outcome of evil, labor, and patience” keeps the difficult morphology and coordination of exitus mali, laboris, et patientiæ visible instead of silently repairing it into a familiar abstraction. “The end of the Lord” does not decide whether finis denotes an ending, outcome, aim, or another limit, nor how the genitive relates the Lord to it. At 5:16, “assiduous supplication” retains the open force of assidua while its placement makes the feminine adjective’s attachment to deprecatio unmistakable in English. At 5:20, “his soul” retains the open referent of ejus between the converter and the sinner, while “a multitude of sins” adds no possessor absent from the Latin.

Clarity decisions

At 5:1, Agite nunc becomes the urgent but idiomatic “Come now,” while the following imperative and participle remain “weep, howling.” At 5:3, plural English agreement in “your gold and silver have rusted” keeps the coordinated compound subject grammatical while preserving both substances and the completed corrosion expressed by singular Latin æruginavit; plural eorum then becomes “their rust.” At 5:4, the nested relative clauses are punctuated so the singular wage, the workers, the withholding agents, and the later workers’ cry cannot be confused. Verse 7 places “the early and the late” after “receives,” allowing the adjectives to stand substantively in clear English. Verse 10 keeps the Latin order’s strangeness but places “brothers” early enough for the prophets to remain intelligibly the example. Verses 14–15 and 19–20 retain their colons and lowercase continuations so each cross-verse construction remains audible without merging verse keys.

Corrections and reasons

Self-audit restored explicit “wrath,” “for yourselves,” and “in the last days” at 5:3. Independent Gate 4 then corrected “gold and silver has rusted” to “gold and silver have rusted”: singular æruginavit agrees in Latin with the coordinated neuter mass nouns, but direct singular transfer makes the English compound subject ungrammatical, while the plural English verb preserves both substances and completed corrosion. At 5:4, an early plural treatment of wages was corrected to the singular “wage,” both cries were made explicit, and the frozen title was set exactly as “the Lord (YHWH) Sabaoth.” At 5:7, a clarity noun after “early and late” was removed because the Latin expresses none. At 5:10–11, smoother proposals about suffering, an outcome brought by the Lord, or a divine purpose were rejected because they would replace exitus mali or resolve finem Domini. Independent Gate 4 corrected postpositive “the supplication of a just person—assiduous—” to “the assiduous supplication of a just person” at 5:16, because feminine assidua modifies deprecatio and normal English placement preserves that exact attachment without importing a familiar intensifier. At 5:20, a simple “turns” was corrected to “causes ... to turn,” and a supplied possessor was removed from the final sins.

Canonical terminology

All ordinary divine Dominus forms in the chapter are “the Lord”; only Domini Sabaoth at 5:4 is “the Lord (YHWH) Sabaoth,” with Sabaoth unexpanded and no all-capital English title. Adventus is “coming,” judicium is “judgment,” veritas is “truth,” and anima is “soul.” The patientia family is kept in patient or patience language, while sustinuerunt is “have endured” and sufferentia is “suffering,” preserving their distinct roots. In nomine Domini is exactly “in the name of the Lord” at 5:10 and 5:14. Presbyteros ecclesiæ is “the presbyters of the church,” establishing presbyter as the JNV office term. Salvabit remains “will save,” alleviabit is “will raise ... up,” and remittentur is “will be remitted”; deprecatio is “supplication,” assidua is “assiduous” and modifies that supplication, and passibilis is “susceptible to suffering.”

First Peter — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Peter’s address to the elect sojourners opens into the Father’s foreknowledge, the Spirit’s sanctification, obedience, sprinkling, grace, and peace. The blessing then moves from God’s mercy and Christ’s resurrection into living hope, an imperishable inheritance, divine guarding, and salvation awaiting revelation. Necessary grief in temptations serves the proving of faith, while love and faith reach toward the salvation of souls. The prophets’ searching and the angels’ desire to look lead into the chapter’s imperatives: hope fully, refuse former desires, become holy, and live the time of sojourning in fear. Redemption by Christ’s precious blood grounds earnest mutual love, rebirth from incorruptible seed, and the final contrast between withering flesh and the abiding word.

Governing Latin

The two-verse address is governed by electis advenis and its successive relations secundum præscientiam, in sanctificationem, in obedientiam, and aspersionem. Regeneravit nos carries the blessing through in spem vivam and in hæreditatem, while conservatam agrees with inheritance and qui custodimini turns to the recipients. In quo exsultabis preserves the supplied singular future before the discourse returns to plural forms, and ut probatio ... inveniatur states the testing purpose. Exquisierunt atque scrutati sunt keeps both prophetic search verbs; in quod vel quale tempus keeps both alternatives. Succincti and sobrii remain subordinate to perfecte sperate. Castificantes supports diligite, and renati carries the rebirth contrast through semine corruptibili and incorruptibili. The quoted grass sequence yields to the abiding Verbum Domini without losing the repeated word.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 1:4, kept in the heavens in you retains both supplied prepositional phrases in conservatam in cælis in vobis instead of silently substituting a smoother location. Verse 1:6 remains a future exultation and the editorial records its singular exsultabis amid plural address. Verse 1:8 keeps joy as both unspeakable and glorified. Verse 1:10 retains grace to come in you, and 1:11 preserves both what time and what kind of time, the Spirit of Christ, plural sufferings, and plural later glories. Verse 1:12 leaves into whom without inventing an object for angelic looking. Verse 1:13 says grace is offered and keeps hope fully attached to the imperative. The Christological Domini nostri Jesu Christi at 1:3 is plain the Lord; by the established New Testament title adjudication, the book’s sole editorial covenant-name marker appears at the non-Christological Verbum Domini in 1:25 as the Lord (YHWH).

Ambiguities preserved

At 1:1, the English keeps election, sojourner identity, dispersion, and all five regional genitives without recasting the recipients as casual visitors. At 1:4, in you remains intentionally strange beside in the heavens because the supplied second in is not repaired. At 1:6, In this leaves the antecedent of In quo governed by the preceding salvation and inheritance movement, while English you does not falsely manufacture a distinct singular addressee to explain exsultabis. At 1:8, glorified remains a predicate of joy without turning it into an added action. At 1:12, into whom retains the grammatical openness of in quem near the Spirit and the announced realities without supplying what angels see. At 1:19, as of a lamb keeps Christ, blood, lamb imagery, and both adjectives together. At 1:22, obedience of charity, love of brotherhood, and simple heart stay distinct. At 1:23, the genitives Dei vivi et permanentis are clarified as the living God who abides forever rather than reassigned silently to another noun.

Clarity decisions

The dash in 1:1 sets the five regional genitives as the scope of the dispersion while preserving the unfinished address into 1:2. Verse 1:3 uses has begotten us anew for regeneravit nos so personal divine agency and new birth remain lucid without a mechanical modern sense of regenerate. Verse 1:5 recasts in virtute Dei custodimini as by the power of God are guarded, retaining divine agency and passive voice. Verse 1:7 places the fire clause between dashes so the purpose governed by ut remains readable. Verse 1:11 expands in quod vel quale tempus as what time, or what kind of time, preserving both alternatives. Verse 1:13 supplies with and being only to make the two participles visibly subordinate to hope fully. Verse 1:17 moves the Father complement beside invoke, while keeping the condition, impartial judge, each person's work, fear, and sojourning time. At 1:23, seed is repeated after incorruptible so the semine ellipsis carries a lucid English head through both sides of the contrast; a relative clause for permanentis then makes its genitive agreement with God intelligible.

Corrections and reasons

An initial rendering of advenis as visitors was rejected in favor of sojourners because the chapter's incolatus and 2:11's advenas et peregrinos form a sustained alien-and-pilgrim network. At 1:3, regenerated us was refined to begotten us anew to prevent a mechanical modern sense while retaining regeneravit and divine agency. At 1:4, a proposed smoothing of in vobis to a different English preposition was removed because the supplied source repeats in. At 1:6, a proposed pluralizing expansion was removed because exsultabis is singular even though ordinary English you cannot display the number without commentary. At 1:8, and believing was corrected to but believing so autem remains audible; glorious joy became joy … glorified so glorificata remains predicative rather than a loose stylistic synonym. At 1:13, perfectly hope was refined to hope fully, keeping perfecte on sperate. At 1:22, sincere heart was corrected to simple heart so simplici remains concrete. At 1:23, bare incorruptible was corrected to incorruptible seed because semine remains the elliptical head of both Latin adjectives and the frozen canonical-term control requires both English seed terms; wording that could make permanentis modify the word was separately corrected to the living God, who abides forever, following the Latin genitive. At 1:25, the sole Lord (YHWH) marker was placed here, not at the Christological title in 1:3.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God. The Christological Dominus at 1:3 is the Lord without the editorial parenthesis; the sole First Peter Lord (YHWH) marker is fixed at 1:25, and no other marker belongs in the book. Misericordia is mercy, fides is faith, spes is hope, salus is salvation, and gratia is grace. Anima is soul at 1:9 and 1:22. Semen is seed, with corruptible and incorruptible kept in exact contrast. Conversatio is conduct at 1:15 and 1:18, while incolatus is sojourning at 1:17. Caritas is charity; amor fraternitatis is love of brotherhood, preserving both relational nouns. Probatio is proving, distinct from tentationes as temptations. Sanctificatio and sanctus remain sanctification and holy. Verbum is word, and evangelizatum is proclaimed as good news.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter begins with a laying aside of malice, deceit, pretenses, envies, and detractions, then directs newborn infants toward rational milk without guile and growth into salvation. Coming to Christ the living stone, the recipients themselves become living stones, a spiritual house and holy priesthood. The stone testimony turns from belief and honor to offense and unbelief, then names the chosen race, royal priesthood, holy nation, and acquired people called to proclamation. The sojourner identity governs good public conduct and submission for God's sake. Four compact commands lead into servants' endurance under difficult masters, where unjust suffering is twice called grace. The closing movement grounds that endurance in Christ's passion, sinlessness, nonretaliation, unjust judgment, bodily bearing of sins upon the wood, healing by his bruise, and the sheep's return to shepherd and overseer of souls.

Governing Latin

Deponentes in 2:1 remains subordinate to concupiscite in 2:2, which governs rationabile, sine dolo lac before ut ... crescatis and the condition si tamen gustastis. Ad quem accedentes keeps Christ as the destination and lapidem vivum as his predicate; et ipsi then carries the living-stone parallel into the passive superædificamini. The Scripture sequence retains lapidem summum angularem, caput anguli, lapis offensionis, and petra scandali before the opaque nec credunt in quo et positi sunt. The four corporate predicates in 2:9 remain distinct before the purpose ut virtutes annuntietis. Subjecti ... estote governs omni humanæ creaturæ and both sive alternatives through the causative obmutescere faciatis. Hæc est ... gratia frames both 2:19 and 2:20. From 2:21 through 2:24, four relative clauses keep Christ as antecedent before the sheep contrast in 2:25.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 2:2 keeps rationabile, sine dolo lac as rational milk, without guile, rather than supplying a technical noun or transferring guilelessness to the infants. Verse 2:8 retains the difficult close in which also they have been placed after their offense at the word and unbelief, without importing a causal explanation. Verse 2:9 preserves a people of acquisition and renders virtutes as excellences, recording their proclaimed range rather than reducing them to private moral habits. Verse 2:13 says every human creature and adds no institutional noun absent from omni humanæ creaturæ. Verses 2:19 and 2:20 each retain the judgment this is grace. Verse 2:23 expressly says one judging him unjustly; the English does not replace injuste with its contrary. Verse 2:24 keeps the concrete wood and bruise. Verse 2:25 preserves both shepherd and overseer of your souls, avoiding a narrower later office title. Dominus at 2:3 is the Lord with no YHWH marker, because the sole book marker has already appeared at 1:25.

Ambiguities preserved

Rationabile at 2:2 is kept as rational, exposing its relation to reason and fitting nourishment without turning it into an explanatory theological label; sine dolo remains attached to milk. At 2:8, in which also they have been placed preserves the open relation of in quo and the passive positi sunt without stating who placed them or why. At 2:9, people of acquisition keeps acquisition and possession in view, while excellences preserves the contextual range of virtutes beyond moral habits alone. At 2:13, every human creature retains creatura’s concrete breadth; king and governors then specify the supplied alternatives without defining the phrase as an institution. At 2:19, conscience toward God states the relation without reducing it to private sincerity. At 2:23, handed himself over identifies se as the object of tradebat while leaving the unjust judge unnamed. At 2:25, overseer preserves episcopum as an oversight term without silently deciding a later institutional office.

Clarity decisions

Verses 2:1–3 remain one grammatical movement: the opening participle is followed by the command long for, its salvation purpose, and the taste condition. Verse 2:5 supplies are being only to make the passive superædificamini explicit while house, priesthood, offering, acceptability, divine recipient, and Christological means remain unchanged. Quotation marks in 2:6–8 distinguish the successive stone testimonies without severing the believing and unbelieving audiences. Verse 2:10 supplies the English copula and past auxiliary required by its elliptical relative contrasts, repeating people and mercy rather than varying them. Verse 2:12 orders the observation clause so the nations remain the observers and glorifying God remains the purpose. Verse 2:15 renders the double causative as cause ... to fall silent. Verse 2:17 differentiates honorate from honorificate as honor and give honor. Verse 2:20 retains the participial contrasts around the single plural endurance. Verse 2:24 supplies we as the subject already contained in vivamus, then preserves the turn to plural you in sanati estis.

Corrections and reasons

At 2:1, a stylistically even series with all before every vice was rejected because the Latin repeats omnem only with malice and deceit and omnes with detractions. At 2:2, spiritual milk was corrected to rational milk because no separate spiritual noun is present and rationabile must remain auditable; guileless infants was rejected because sine dolo modifies milk. At 2:5, build yourselves was corrected to are being built up to restore passive superædificamini. At 2:8, explanatory wording about the cause or purpose of being placed was removed because nec credunt in quo et positi sunt supplies neither. At 2:9, peculiar people became people of acquisition to keep acquisitionis, and virtues became excellences to avoid reducing virtutes to moral habits. At 2:13, every human institution was corrected to every human creature because creaturæ supplies the concrete noun. At 2:14, for was restored before the praise so the two coordinated ad purpose phrases remain grammatically parallel. At 2:15, silence became cause ... to fall silent so both facere and obmutescere remain. At 2:18, harsh was refined to difficult to avoid strengthening dyscolis beyond its contextual range. At 2:23, a proposed contrary adverb was rejected and unjustly retained. At 2:25, bishop was refined to overseer to preserve episcopum's oversight relation without importing a narrower office.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God; Dominus at 2:3 is the Lord without an additional parenthesis. Salus is salvation, misericordia is mercy in both clauses of 2:10, anima is soul at 2:11 and souls at 2:25, and justitia is justice at 2:24. Lapis is stone, petra is rock, domus is house, and the corner vocabulary remains cornerstone, head of the corner, stone of offense, and rock of scandal. Sacerdotium is priesthood with holy at 2:5 and royal at 2:9. Advenæ and peregrini are sojourners and pilgrims. Conversatio is conduct, distinct from conversi as returned in 2:25. Libertas is freedom and servi are servants. Gratia remains grace in both 2:19 and 2:20. Lignum is wood and livor is bruise. Episcopus is overseer in the canon-level phrase overseer of your souls, kept distinct from shepherd.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from household conduct to a common life of blessing, then from suffering for justice to Christ's own suffering, proclamation, baptism, and victory. Wives' conduct, husbands' knowledgeable honor, and the call for one mind form the opening movement. The cited sequence of tongue, lips, peace, divine eyes, ears, and face then grounds fearless readiness to defend the hope within. The close follows Christ from death in flesh and life in spirit through the prison spirits and Noah's ark to baptism, resurrection, the swallowing of death, ascent, and the subjection of angels, powers, and virtues.

Governing Latin

At 3:1–2, mulieres subditæ sint governs the wives, ut introduces the purpose, lucrifiant remains passive, and considerantes continues the unbelieving husbands as observers of conduct. The outward list in 3:3 is answered by sed qui absconditus est cordis homo in 3:4; quieti et modesti spiritus stays genitive under incorruptibilitate, and locuples remains the concrete closing predicate. At 3:7, cohabitantes, impartientes, tamquam et cohæredibus, and ut non impediantur retain cohabitation, honor, shared inheritance, and the purpose concerning prayers. The 3:8–9 participles remain attached to the communal exhortation. At 3:14–16 the concession, repeated fear, sanctificate command, ad satisfactionem, rationem, manner, conscience, and confounding purpose remain distinct. At 3:18 mortuus est and the two passive participles preserve death, flesh, and spirit relations; In quo at 3:19 is not silently assigned a narrower antecedent. Active plural exspectabant governs Dei patientiam in 3:20. At 3:21 baptisma is the saving subject, interrogatio remains an inquiry directed in Deum, and per resurrectionem gives the means. The complete 3:22 clause retains deglutiens mortem, the purpose that we be made eternal-life heirs, ascent, and all three subjected orders.

Vulgate-specific readings

Conversationem is consistently ‘conduct,’ never spoken conversation. The 3:4 hidden person remains ‘rich’ in God’s sight for locuples rather than being replaced by a familiar evaluative adjective. In fine at 3:8 is ‘finally,’ not a prediction of the end. Fraternitatis amatores remains ‘lovers of brotherhood,’ and the blessing is possessed as an inheritance at 3:9. Justitia is the binding ‘justice.’ At 3:15 ‘defense’ for satisfactionem and ‘account’ for rationem remain two separate nouns. At 3:20 the plural spirits ‘awaited the patience of God,’ following the supplied active exspectabant rather than importing a proposition with patience as grammatical subject. At 3:21 interrogatio is ‘inquiry,’ retaining its question/request range and direction toward God without imposing a settled technical formula. At 3:22 the supplied swallowing-death and heir-making words are printed in full before the ascent and subjection sequence; virtutibus remains ‘virtues,’ not silently changed to another order-name.

Ambiguities preserved

At 3:4, ‘the hidden person of the heart … who is rich’ keeps the masculine relative chain while ‘in the incorruptibility of a quiet and modest spirit’ preserves the genitive relation without deciding whether incorruptibility names the person’s state, the spirit’s quality, or both. At 3:6, ‘any disturbance’ keeps perturbationem broad and supplies no threatening agent. At 3:7, the weaker-vessel comparison and the plural coheirs remain side by side without reducing women to the vessel image or resolving every surface agreement. At 3:14, ‘their fear’ retains the repeated timor construction. At 3:18–19, ‘in spirit. In which’ leaves the force of spiritu and the antecedent of In quo open. At 3:21, ‘of a form like this’ keeps the prior water as the comparison while ‘inquiry of a good conscience toward God’ leaves interrogatio between question, request, and appeal. At 3:22, ‘virtues’ preserves the supplied term without defining the celestial order.

Clarity decisions

At 3:3, ‘your adornment’ supplies the English head needed by Quarum while every outward item remains separately named. The 3:4 contrast is carried with ‘but’ and one continuous sentence so the hidden person is not detached from the outward list. At 3:7, ‘dwell together’ makes the participial household direction readable as exhortation while keeping knowledge, honor, vessel, coheir status, and prayer purpose in their source order. At 3:8, English ‘be’ supports the adjective chain without adding a new command. The 3:15–16 semicolon keeps defense, manner, conscience, and purpose continuous across the verse key. At 3:20, ‘they awaited’ makes the active plural visible and ‘in which’ clearly resumes the ark without changing the source proposition. At 3:21, ‘baptism, of a form like this’ gives the Latin comparison grammatical English while keeping baptism as subject. At 3:22, a semicolon separates the death-and-heirs purpose from ascent without dropping either proposition.

Corrections and reasons

The first draft of 3:1 used an indefinite ‘women’ twice; it was corrected to ‘wives’ in the household relation because mulieres is governed by viris suis, while the repeated source noun remains visible in ‘conduct of the wives.’ At 3:4, ‘valuable’ was rejected for locuples because it erased the concrete wealth predicate; ‘rich’ was restored. At 3:7, a broken singular-woman/plural-coheirs construction was corrected to ‘bestowing honor as to the weaker, female vessel, as also to coheirs’ so quasi infirmiori vasculo muliebri and tamquam et cohæredibus retain their own number and comparison while the honor and prayer purpose remain auditable. At 3:13, generic ‘imitators’ was refined to ‘zealous followers’ so æmulatores retains active zeal for the good. At 3:20, a familiar-looking draft with God’s patience as the subject was corrected to ‘they awaited the patience of God’ because exspectabant is active plural and patientiam is accusative. At 3:21, ‘appeal’ was rejected as too settled for interrogatio; ‘inquiry’ preserves the open range and direction. At 3:22, an abbreviated victory sentence was rejected and the swallowing of death, eternal-life heirs, ascent, and three subjected orders were all restored from the supplied Latin.

Canonical terminology

Deus is ‘God’; divine Dominus remains ‘the Lord’ in this chapter under the already-established book policy, and human dominum at 3:6 is lowercase ‘lord.’ Justitia is ‘justice,’ anima is ‘soul,’ spiritus is ‘spirit,’ vita is ‘life,’ pax is ‘peace,’ benedictio is ‘blessing,’ maledictum is ‘curse,’ and dolus is ‘deceit.’ Conversatio is ‘conduct,’ timor is ‘fear,’ conscientia is ‘conscience,’ spes is ‘hope,’ and carcer is ‘prison.’ Baptisma is ‘baptism,’ resurrectio is ‘resurrection,’ and arca is ‘ark.’ The celestial sequence at 3:22 is kept as ‘angels, powers, and virtues,’ and every later occurrence should preserve those distinctions unless context supplies a recorded reason.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

Christ’s suffering in flesh opens the chapter and arms the addressees with the same thought: the one who has suffered has ceased from sins so as to live the remaining time for God’s will. The former life among the nations is then set against present difference, coming judgment, and the difficult proclamation to the dead. With the end drawn near, the chapter turns to prudent prayer, continual charity, hospitality, gifts, speech, and ministry. The final movement passes through the heat of trial, shared sufferings, Christ’s name, the full resting honor-glory-power-Spirit clause, prohibited causes of suffering, judgment beginning at God’s house, and the entrusting of souls to the faithful Creator in good deeds.

Governing Latin

The ablative Christo … passo grounds armamini at 4:1; qui passus est remains the singular subject of desiit and of vivat across 4:2, so the English does not shift the purpose clause to a plural subject. At 4:3 Sufficit governs the past time and ad voluntatem gentium consummandam, followed by all six concrete former-life categories. In 4:4 admirantur and blasphemantes keep the same outside agents while non concurrentibus vobis preserves the addressees’ refusal to run together. The plural Qui at 4:5 leads into Propter hoc at 4:6, whose passive evangelizatum est and purpose contrast retain dead recipients, judgment according to humans in flesh, and life according to God in spirit. The exhortation sequence at 4:7–11 keeps prudence, prayer-vigilance, continual charity, hospitality, received grace, mutual administration, God-supplied power, purpose, and doxology. At 4:12–14 nolite peregrinari, fervore, communicantes, gaudete, gaudeatis exsultantes, and the entire quod … honoris, gloriæ, et virtutis Dei … Spiritus … requiescit construction remain present. The 4:15 list keeps all four roles; 4:16–19 preserves the Christian contrast, this name, inceptive judgment, first-from-us condition, scarce salvation, and final entrusting command.

Vulgate-specific readings

At 4:2 the reader says ‘he may live,’ not ‘you may live,’ because singular vivat continues qui passus est. The former-life list retains excesses, desires, drunkenness, revelries, drinking bouts, and unlawful worship of idols; none is silently merged. Luxuriæ confusionem is ‘confusion of excess,’ keeping both the difficult confusion and the excess relation. At 4:6 the gospel ‘was proclaimed also to the dead,’ leaving their identity unstated and retaining the flesh/spirit purpose contrast. Orationibus remains plural ‘prayers,’ caritas is ‘charity,’ and multiformis gratiæ is ‘manifold grace.’ At 4:12 the reader remains strange: the beloved are told not to be as strangers amid the heat brought for trial, rather than receiving a generic surprise formula. At 4:14 the honor, glory, power of God, and his Spirit all remain in the one resting construction. At 4:15 maledicus is ‘reviler,’ while alienorum appetitor is explicitly ‘one who covets what belongs to others’; neither is flattened to a generic social nuisance.

Ambiguities preserved

At 4:1–2, ‘the one who has suffered’ keeps qui passus est general in form while its relation to Christ’s opening suffering remains audible; no new plural agent is inserted into vivat. At 4:3, ‘the will of the nations’ preserves gentium without deciding whether every occurrence should be heard ethnically, morally, or both. At 4:4, ‘confusion of excess’ leaves confusionem concrete but difficult and does not substitute a familiar image. At 4:6, ‘the dead’ remains undefined because the Latin supplies no identity. At 4:10, the shift from singular Unusquisque to plural administrantes is represented by ‘as each one … minister it to one another’ without erasing either number. At 4:11, ‘to whom’ leaves the doxological antecedent as the Latin presents it after God through Jesus Christ. At 4:12, the foreignness force of peregrinari and the literal heat of fervore remain together. At 4:14, ‘that which is of honor, glory, and the power of God … and which is his Spirit’ preserves the difficult genitives and relative movement rather than reducing them to a shorter familiar formula. At 4:15, the appetite for what belongs to others remains explicit without choosing a narrower legal or social category.

Clarity decisions

‘Christ having suffered in the flesh’ gives the opening ablative absolute lucid English while retaining it as the ground of ‘arm yourselves.’ The 4:2 purpose is placed immediately after the colon and carries singular ‘he’ through the remaining-time phrase. At 4:3, ‘for those who walked’ positions the dative his in intelligible English while leaving the will-of-the-nations purpose intact. At 4:4, the participle blasphemantes becomes ‘and they blaspheme’ so its agent cannot be mistaken for the addressees. At 4:8 and 4:10, finite exhortations support Latin participles whose force comes from the surrounding commands; the objects, mutual relations, and stewardship image remain unchanged. At 4:11, ‘let it be’ supplies only the English condition-result support needed for the two si clauses. At 4:12, ‘be as strangers amid the heat’ keeps both unusual source images intelligible. At 4:14, paired relative language and dashes make the cumulative clause readable without discarding any genitive or the resting predicate.

Corrections and reasons

At 4:2, an initial plural ‘you may live’ was corrected to singular ‘he may live’ because vivat continues qui passus est; the addressees receive armamini, but the purpose clause retains its own singular agent. At 4:3, a compressed ‘debauchery and drunken parties’ draft was rejected because it merged luxuriis, vinolentiis, comessationibus, and potationibus; all list members were restored separately. At 4:4, ‘they are surprised’ was replaced by ‘they marvel’ and the confusion-of-excess phrase was restored so admirantur, luxuriæ, and confusionem remain independently traceable. At 4:6, a draft that identified the dead was rejected because mortuis supplies no identity. At 4:10, modern administrative language was replaced by ‘minister’ and ‘stewards’ to preserve mutual service and dispensatores. At 4:11, God may be glorified was corrected to God may be honored so honorificetur remains distinct from 4:16 glorificet, while the following doxological glory remains intact. At 4:12, generic ‘do not be surprised by the fiery trial’ was rejected because it erased both peregrinari and fervore. At 4:14, a shortened Spirit-only formula was rejected and every honor, glory, power-of-God, Spirit, and resting component was restored. At 4:15, ‘meddler’ was rejected for alienorum appetitor; the final wording preserves appetite and what belongs to others, while maledicus remains the separate ‘reviler.’

Canonical terminology

Deus is ‘God,’ Christus is ‘Christ,’ and no new divine-title marker occurs in this chapter. Voluntas is ‘will,’ caro is ‘flesh,’ spiritus is ‘spirit,’ judicium is ‘judgment,’ and Evangelium is ‘Gospel.’ Caritas is ‘charity,’ gratia is ‘grace,’ peccatum is ‘sin,’ and anima is ‘soul.’ Oratio is ‘prayer,’ Creator is ‘Creator,’ and domus Dei is ‘the house of God.’ Passio and pati retain the suffering family across Christ, the addressees, and the prohibited sufferer list. Honorificare is ‘honor’ at 4:11 and remains distinct from glorificare, ‘glorify,’ at 4:16; gloria remains ‘glory.’ Administrare is rendered contextually as ‘minister’ or ‘supply,’ dispensator as ‘steward,’ and virtus as ‘power’ at 4:11 while the plural celestial virtutibus at 3:22 remains ‘virtues.’ Christianus is ‘Christian,’ maledicus is ‘reviler,’ and alienorum appetitor remains a person who covets what belongs to others.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from Peter's appeal to the elders as a fellow elder, witness, and future sharer in glory, through the shepherding charge and its three motive contrasts, into mutual humility under God's hand. Sobriety and vigilance answer the circling adversary; shared suffering then yields to God's own threefold work of perfecting, confirming, and establishing. Silvanus, the true grace in which the recipients stand, the co-elect church in Babylon, Marcus, the holy kiss, and final grace bring the letter to its supplied close.

Governing Latin

At 5:1, `Seniores ... obsecro` carries Peter's appeal while `consenior et testis` and `gloriæ communicator` remain coordinated descriptions of the speaker. The imperative `pascite` governs 5:2, with `providentes` and the paired `non ... sed` motives extending the charge through 5:3. `Humiliamini` governs 5:6, and `projicientes` in 5:7 remains dependent upon those humbled. In 5:10, emphatic `ipse` owns exactly the three futures `perficiet, confirmabit, solidabitque`. The participles `obsecrans et contestans` in 5:12 explain the brief writing and support the declaration `hanc esse veram gratiam Dei`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The English retains the supplied `in cleris` at 5:3 as plural allotted portions rather than silently importing a later clergy class. It gives `humilitatem insinuate` a concrete inward action at 5:5, keeps `tempore visitationis` as the time of visitation, and preserves `sollicitudinem` as anxious care. At 5:10 it contains exactly three restorative predicates, not a familiar four-verb sequence. It retains `ut arbitror` in 5:12 and explicitly preserves `ecclesia quæ est in Babylone coëlecta` at 5:13, including church, Babylon, and co-election.

Ambiguities preserved

The rendering leaves `consenior` at 5:1 as fellow elder without inflating Peter into a superior office. At 5:3, allotted portions makes the plural `cleris` visible while the referent remains contextual; `ex animo` is kept as from the heart rather than assigned to a different clause. At 5:5, impress humility upon yourselves records the active force of `insinuate` without treating it as verbal insinuation. The difficult dative-relative structure of 5:9 is represented as the same suffering taking place in the brotherhood throughout the world, without inventing a new agent. `ut arbitror` is attached to Peter's account of Silvanus, not to the truth of God's grace.

Clarity decisions

Prince of Shepherds keeps `princeps pastorum` vivid while remaining immediately intelligible. Exercising oversight renders `providentes` as an active pastoral responsibility, and the two motive pairs remain distinct: compulsion versus willing service, then shameful gain versus free willingness. The phrase impress humility upon yourselves toward one another makes `invicem` mutual and gives `insinuate` an enacted rather than merely spoken force. At 5:13, as does Marcus supplies the Latin's shared greeting verb without adding a new proposition or obscuring Marcus's relation as Peter's son.

Corrections and reasons

Several smoother but less exact options were rejected. Clergy was replaced by allotted portions at 5:3 because the source supplies plural `cleris` and the review target forbids automatic institutional narrowing. A generic be humble was refined to impress humility upon yourselves at 5:5 so that the unusual action in `insinuate` remains perceptible. A proposed extra restorative verb at 5:10 was rejected because the frozen Latin has exactly three futures. The closing church was not reduced to an unnamed woman or bare co-elect person, and the parenthetical `ut arbitror` was restored explicitly so neither supplied feature disappears.

Canonical terminology

God, grace, glory, faith, suffering, church, and Christ remain stable across the chapter. `grex`, `pascite`, and `princeps pastorum` are kept in the flock-shepherd field; elder and fellow elder preserve the `senior/consenior` relation. Dominion renders `imperium`, and ages of ages preserves the doxological recurrence. Brotherhood remains the corporate term at 5:9, while church is explicit at 5:13. No divine-title parenthetical appears in this chapter: under the sealed New Testament adjudication the Christological Lord at 1:3 stays plain and the book's sole editorial `Lord (YHWH)` marker belongs at 1:25.

Second Peter — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Simon Peter addresses people who share a coequal allotted faith, then asks for grace and peace to reach fulfillment through knowledge. The chapter unfolds from everything divine power has given for life and piety into the promises by which the recipients may share in divine nature and flee worldly desire's corruption. Their answering diligence takes the form of an eight-link chain from faith through virtue, knowledge, abstinence, patience, piety, and brotherly love to charity. Fruitful knowledge stands opposite blindness, hand-groping, and forgetfulness; good works make calling and election certain and lead toward abundant entrance into Christ's eternal kingdom. Peter then turns to remembrance under the sign of his swiftly relinquished tabernacle. His testimony rests not on learned fables but on witnessed magnificence, the Father's descending voice, and the holy mountain. The close moves from that heard voice to the firmer prophetic word, the lamp in darkness, the dawning day, the daystar in hearts, and prophecy brought not by human will but through Holy-Spirit-inspired speakers.

Governing Latin

The dative iis governs the recipients, while qui ... sortiti sunt makes their coequal faith something allotted and in justitia carries the relation into the coordinated genitives Dei nostri and Salvatoris Jesu Christi. Singular adimpleatur governs the coordinated grace and peace of 1:2. In 1:3, omnia is qualified by divinæ virtutis suæ and quæ ad vitam et pietatem donata sunt before per cognitionem identifies the means; per quem then opens 1:4 without supplying a new named antecedent. The repeated in phrases make every member of the virtue chain both gift received and basis for the next. If-clause adsint et superent governs constituent in 1:8, and the negative portrait in 1:9 keeps three linked participial or predicative pressures. In 1:12–15, incipiam, arbitror, certus, and dabo operam carry Peter from future reminder through present judgment and certainty to an intentionally compressed post-death purpose. The 1:17 ablative voice construction grounds Christ's received honor and glory; 1:19–21 links attendentes and intelligentes with two causal statements about prophecy.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 1:1 retains Simon as well as Peter, both servant and apostle, the allotment force of sortiti sunt, coequal rather than merely similar faith, canonical justice for justitia, and the pressure between our God and the Savior Jesus Christ. Verse 1:2 says grace and peace are fulfilled, preserving adimpleatur rather than replacing it with a more familiar multiplication formula. Verse 1:3 keeps own glory and virtue as the means or sphere of calling, and 1:4 calls the promises greatest and precious while retaining flight from the corruption of the desire in the world. The virtue chain uses abstinence, patience, piety, love of brotherhood, and charity without collapsing its deliberately different nouns. Verse 1:9 preserves groping with his hand and receiving forgetfulness; 1:10 keeps through good works and the exact consequence that the doers will not sin at any time. Verse 1:12 retains I shall begin, and 1:15 leaves Peter's post-death agency compressed rather than supplying a document, messenger, or other mechanism. Learned fables, Christ's presence, magnificent glory, the supplied command hear him, the firmer prophetic word, and daystar all remain visible. Every Christological Dominus in this chapter is plain Lord; the book's single covenant-name marker belongs later at 2:9.

Ambiguities preserved

At 1:1, the punctuation keeps Dei nostri and Salvatoris Jesu Christi as coordinated genitive pressures without using an English formula that would silently declare or deny a single referent. At 1:3, his in divinae virtutis suae and him who called follow the source relations without naming an antecedent the Latin leaves pronominal; 1:4 likewise says through whom rather than identifying the referent by import. The desire that is in the world is allowed to govern corruption as the Latin genitive sequence does, without turning corruption itself into an independent worldly agent. In 1:9, receiving forgetfulness remains an active participial state whose precise psychological mechanism is not explained. In 1:12, knowing these things is supplied only from the immediate de his, while present truth stays a temporal or situational description rather than a doctrinal label. Verse 1:15 preserves the causative pressure of habere vos and the post-death timing but does not say how Peter will bring about remembrance. Verse 1:19 renders lucifer by its common-noun sense daystar and supplies no proper-name identity. Private interpretation in 1:20 remains grammatically broad: the English does not decide whose interpretation propria denotes or expand the line into a doctrinal system.

Clarity decisions

Verse 1:1 uses to those who have been allotted to carry the dative address and the deponent sortiti sunt in immediate English, while a comma before the second genitive keeps the title pressure perceptible. Verse 1:2 turns Gratia vobis into fulfilled for you so the dative remains visible without making grace alone the subject; its closing colon lets 1:3's just as remain subordinate to the greeting instead of becoming a broken sentence. Verses 1:3–4 preserve one continuous construction: just as opens the given-all-things clause, through whom opens the promise clause, and so that keeps the purpose before the fleeing participle. Bringing to bear all care gives subinferentes an intelligible subordinate action without weakening ministrate, rendered supply. Verses 1:5–7 repeat in at every hinge so no virtue is detached or reordered. Verse 1:8 uses render to keep constituent causative and retains the two exact negatives neither empty nor without fruit. Verse 1:10 makes the purpose clause explicit after greater labor while leaving the result under for. In 1:17, the participle and ablative absolute are recast as a finite reception and a when-clause, preserving Christ, the Father, the voice, both kinds of glory, and every word of the speech. Verse 1:20 changes the Latin universal-plus-negation into no prophecy for unambiguous English scope while retaining singular Scripture and private interpretation.

Corrections and reasons

An initial opening that said equally precious faith was corrected to faith coequal with ours because coæqualem states equality, not an added valuation. The greeting was corrected from multiplied to fulfilled so adimpleatur, including its supplied singular form, would not be conformed to a more familiar wording. In 1:3, all things granted by divine power was refined to all things of his divine power ... have been given: this keeps the Latin genitive and passive gift construction instead of manufacturing power as a finite giver. Very great promises became greatest and precious promises to retain maxima as the supplied superlative alongside, not inside, the separate precious adjective. Self-control was corrected to abstinence, endurance to patience, and brotherly affection to love of brotherhood so the chain's recurrent Latin nouns remain canonically traceable. Fruitless was expanded to without fruit because sine fructu is a concrete negative distinct from non vacuos. Feeling dimly was rejected for groping with his hand because manu tentans names the bodily instrument. An easy paraphrase of 1:15 that supplied writings was removed; the final line retains have you ... make remembrance and leaves the mechanism absent. Cleverly devised stories became learned fables because doctas and fabulas are both starkly present. Morning star was refined to daystar to carry lucifer as a luminous common noun without suggesting the later proper name. An interpretation of one's own was shortened to private interpretation because propria does not identify its possessor in this clause.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God, and justitia is justice at 1:1. Every Dominus in chapter 1 is part of a Christological title and is therefore Lord without the YHWH parenthesis: Christ Jesus our Lord at 1:2; our Lord Jesus Christ at 1:8, 1:14, and 1:16; and our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ at 1:11. Fides is faith, cognitio is knowledge, virtus is power where divina virtus names divine efficacy and virtue where the chapter's moral chain and propria … virtute require that sense. Pietas is piety, scientia is knowledge, abstinentia is abstinence, patientia is patience, amor fraternitatis is love of brotherhood, and caritas is charity. Concupiscentia is desire, corruptio is corruption, purgatio is purification, delictum is offense, vocatio is calling, electio is election, and regnum is kingdom. Tabernaculum remains tabernacle and obitus is death. Præsentia is presence rather than an imported advent formula; magnitudo and magnifica gloria are magnificence and magnificent glory. Sermo propheticus is prophetic word, lucerna is lamp, lucifer is daystar, Scriptura is Scripture, prophetia is prophecy, and Spiritus Sanctus is the Holy Spirit.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter begins by carrying the former people’s false prophets into the recipients’ coming lying teachers: sects of destruction, denial of the purchaser-Lord, sexual excess, commercial exploitation, judgment, and wakeful destruction. The sentence beginning For if then moves through sinful angels, the original world and Noah, the condemned cities, and rescued Lot before reaching its governing conclusion at 2:9: the Lord knows both rescue and reservation. From those examples the chapter turns to the teachers’ fleshly impurity, contempt, blasphemy, animal-like corruption, daytime indulgence, adultery, greed, Balaam’s wandering, and the mute animal’s restraint. Waterless springs and storm-driven clouds lead into proud speech, enticement, promised freedom, and actual slavery. The closing movement traces escape, renewed entanglement, a worse latter state, departure from the holy command, and the dog-and-sow proverb images.

Governing Latin

Fuerunt vero … sicut et establishes the old-and-coming analogy in 2:1, while introducent, negant, and superducentes preserve the shift from future entry to present denial and self-brought destruction. The conditional proof is governed by Si enim Deus in 2:4 and does not receive its controlling Novit Dominus assertion until 2:9; the intervening et clauses coordinate angels, the original world, the cities, and Lot under divine agency. Rudentibus inferni, detractos in tartarum, cruciandos, and reservari keep instrument, descent, destination, torment, and reservation visible. Aspectu … et auditu justus erat remains the main statement in 2:8, while plural qui … cruciabant makes Lot’s neighbors the agents tormenting his just soul. Magis autem eos in 2:10 continues the object of reservation before audaces and sibi placentes resume those persons. The participles of 2:13–14 sustain the bodily portrait; derelinquentes … erraverunt restores a finite movement at 2:15. The two participial proverb clauses in 2:22 are retained without inventing a finite verb for the washed sow.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 2:1 keeps sects of destruction and the Lord who bought them rather than substituting an alternate technical term or a different purchase relation. Verse 2:4 retains ropes of hell and the distinct destination Tartarus, together with torment and reservation for judgment. Verse 2:5 says the original world and Noah as the eighth, a herald of justice. Verse 2:6 names the cities of the Sodomites and Gomorrheans and keeps condemnation by overthrow. Verses 2:10–11 preserve introducing sects while blaspheming and the difficult statement that angels do not bear an execrable judgment against themselves. Verse 2:13 retains daytime delicacies, and 2:15 names Balaam from Bosor without supplying a kinship noun. Verse 2:16 keeps a yoked mute animal and the prophet’s foolishness; 2:18 exposes the small-force paululum; 2:22 keeps vomit, the washed female sow, and a wallowing place of mud.

Ambiguities preserved

At 2:2, through whom leaves quos able to resume the many followers without replacing it with a named antecedent in the reader text. In 2:4, the English keeps the angels as those dragged down while with ropes leaves the ablative instrumental relation visible. At 2:6, setting an example of those who will act impiously retains the source's difficult genitive relation rather than inserting an unstated account of what the example proves. At 2:8, by sight and hearing preserves the supplied relation to justus erat without recasting the verse from a more familiar syntax; plural those who remains the tormenting agent. At 2:10, while blaspheming does not invent an object for blasphemantes, and 2:11 keeps adversum se reflexive as against themselves. At 2:18, escape but a little leaves paululum open to small extent or duration and reproduces the successive relative clauses without supplying a missing object of escape. At 2:22, the sow clause remains a noun-and-participle image rather than a completed action imported into its ellipsis.

Clarity decisions

The first three verses separate the future introduction from present negant with and they deny, while through whom remains deliberately unresolved. Verse 2:3 uses make merchandise of you to make negotiabuntur's commercial object explicit without adding a motive beyond greed. The 2:4–9 chain uses semicolons and dashes so English readers can hold every divine action until the conclusion, and verse 2:10 continues that conclusion with especially. Verse 2:4 places dragged down with ropes of hell into Tartarus between dashes so detractos remains attached to the angels and tradidit remains God's governing act. Verse 2:8 says those who ... tormented to expose the plural agency. Verse 2:12 preserves the elliptical by nature for capture and destruction rather than adding a source-less maker or decree. Verses 2:13–16 retain participial accumulation until went astray and then state the mute animal's restraint in ordinary English. Verse 2:20 repeats these to make the reference back to defilements lucid, and 2:21 recasts the separated eo ... sancto mandato as the holy command that was handed down.

Corrections and reasons

During self-review, 2:1 was changed from a single future sequence to who will introduce ... and they deny so present negant was not silently absorbed into erunt and introducent. At 2:3, profit from you was replaced by make merchandise of you to restore the concrete commercial force of negotiabuntur. At 2:4, a generic restraint was replaced by ropes of hell, and a collapsed hell destination was separated into ropes of hell and Tartarus so neither Clementine fingerprint disappeared. At 2:5, one of eight was rejected for Noah as the eighth because octavum directly predicates the ordinal of Noah. At 2:8, wording that could make Lot torment his own soul was removed; those who now carries plural cruciabant. At 2:9, trial was corrected to temptation so tentatione remains aligned with the governed temptation family instead of becoming ornamental variation. At 2:10, a familiar object for blasphemy was withheld because the supplied Latin gives sectas as the object of introducere but no separate expressed object for blasphemantes. At 2:15, son of Bosor was rejected because ex supplies from, not a kinship noun. At 2:18, barely escape was changed to escape but a little so paululum's degree-or-time pressure remains. At 2:22, returns and goes back were removed from the sow image because Sus lota in volutabro luti has no finite verb.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God at 2:4. The purchased Dominum at 2:1 is Christological and therefore appears as plain Lord; the first non-Christological covenant title at 2:9 receives the book's sole editorial form the Lord (YHWH). Dominus in the Christological title our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ at 2:20 remains plain, and no all-capital divine title appears. Justitia is justice in herald of justice at 2:5 and way of justice at 2:21; justus is just for Lot and his soul. Anima is soul at 2:8 and souls at 2:14. Corruptio remains corruption at 2:12 and 2:19. Perditio is destruction; pernicies at 2:12 is also destruction because the tightly paired capture-and-destruction phrase requires that concrete terminal sense, a documented contextual convergence rather than ornamental variation. Secta remains sect at both 2:1 and 2:10. Inferni is rendered hell only inside the supplied ropes image, while tartarum remains the distinct Tartarus. Libertas and servi are freedom and slaves in the conquest maxim, and command, judgment, iniquity, defilement, adultery, greed, and torment retain their concrete severity.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

Peter names this as his second epistle and sets the plural in these beside that singular letter to awaken a sincere mind by reminder, so the beloved may remember his foretold words, the holy prophets, their apostles, and the Lord and Savior's commandments. The warning then turns to last-days mockers, their own desires, and their challenge concerning the promise and the coming. Their willing blindness is answered by the heavens, earth, water, and divine word of the former world, then by the same word's reservation of the present heavens and earth for fire and judgment. The Lord's measure of a day and a thousand years reveals not delay but patient action for the recipients, willing none to perish but all to return to repentance. The thief-like day and cosmic dissolution press the ethical question of holy conducts and pieties, while expectation reaches new heavens, a new earth, and indwelling justice. Peter closes with diligence, peace, the Lord's long-suffering as salvation, Paul's wisdom and difficult letters beside the other Scriptures, then a guard against error, growth in grace and knowledge, and glory unto the day of eternity.

Governing Latin

Hanc ... secundam scribo epistolam is singular, while in quibus is plural and therefore remains audible through in these rather than being silently regularized. Ut memores sitis governs the compressed words, prophets, apostles, commandments, Lord, and Savior sequence; quæ prædixi remains Peter's first-person perfect. Hoc primum scientes opens the scoffer warning, and dicentes keeps the promise-or-coming question in their mouths. Latet ... hoc volentes makes the hiddenness voluntary; terra is the singular subject of consistens, and per quæ remains a plural relative across the next boundary. Repositi sunt and igni reservati govern the present heavens and earth. Cum igitur ... dissolvenda sunt governs quales oportet, whose manner is extended by exspectantes and properantes. The masculine per quem remains formally open after adventum diei Domini. Satagite governs the passive ei inveniri, arbitremini governs long-suffering as salvation, and custodite ne ... excidatis yields through vero to the final command crescite.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 3:1 retains the supplied singular second epistle followed by plural in these. Verse 3:2 keeps Peter's first-person I foretold and the compressed prophet-apostle-command relations rather than substituting a familiar reconstructed sentence. Verse 3:4 asks where the promise, or his coming, preserving aut instead of converting the two terms into a single promise of a coming. Verses 3:5–6 retain both out of water and through water, God's word, plural through which things, flooding, and the former world's perishing. The present cosmos is stored by the same word and reserved for fire. Verse 3:10 keeps great force, three distinct cosmic subjects, dissolution by heat, and burning of the earth's works. Verses 3:11–12 preserve plural conducts and pieties, hastening unto the coming, and the unresolved through which. Verse 3:16 explicitly retains Paul's epistles beside the other Scriptures, and 3:18 ends with the day of eternity. Every chapter-three Dominus is plain Lord under the frozen book policy; the sole Lord (YHWH) marker belongs at 2:9, not here.

Ambiguities preserved

In 3:1, in these leaves the plural in quibus visible without deciding in reader prose whether it gathers exactly the two Petrine epistles or a wider written field. The genitives and ablative in 3:2 remain compressed: the English does not make the prophets speak Peter's first-person verb, erase the recipients' apostles, or collapse all relations into one imported source formula. At 3:5, by their own will records volentes while the exact manner of willing hiddenness remains unexpanded. At 3:6, through which things preserves the plural per quæ without naming a single antecedent. At 3:12, hastening unto does not assert that the recipients cause the day, and through which does not replace the masculine relative with an explanatory noun. At 3:15, our Lord remains plain without adding Jesus Christ to settle its referent. At 3:16, in which remains attached to the epistles while the difficult things and the other Scriptures retain their distinct but closely joined relations.

Clarity decisions

A semicolon in 3:1 allows the singular letter statement to close before the deliberately exposed plural in these. Verse 3:2 uses commas to make its compressed memory catalogue pronounceable without supplying an absent through or by. Verse 3:5 sets the two water relations and standing-together clause between dashes, so God's word remains the governing means and the sentence can continue into 3:6. Verse 3:10 uses a semicolon after the heavens' passage to distinguish passage, heat-dissolution, and burning without separating them from the one day. Verse 3:11 says what manner of persons to make quales intelligible while retaining the unusual plurals conducts and pieties. Burning is placed beside heavens in 3:12 so the participle remains visible, and melt away gives tabescent a lucid physical action. Verse 3:16 supplies his only as the minimal English antecedent link to Paul's epistles. Verse 3:17 supplies yourselves as the natural object of guard while preserving the passive danger of being led away.

Corrections and reasons

A proposed singular in this at 3:1 was rejected because it would erase the supplied plural in quibus after the singular second epistle. Familiar wording that fused 3:4 into the promise of his coming was rejected because the Clementine source coordinates promissio and adventus with aut. At 3:5, a proposed deliberately forget was replaced by by their own will this is hidden, retaining both latet and volentes instead of importing a different mental act. At 3:6, bare through which was expanded to through which things so the plural relative remains audibly unresolved. Great crash at 3:10 was rejected for great force because impetu supplies violent movement without naming a sound. Holy lives and godliness at 3:11 was rejected because it would normalize both supplied plurals and erase the recurring conduct and piety families. Hasten the coming at 3:12 was rejected as an unsupported causative; hastening unto preserves properantes in adventum. Patience at 3:15 was refined to long-suffering so longanimitas remains distinct from patientia in 1:6. Rest of Scripture at 3:16 was rejected for the plural other Scriptures, preserving ceteras Scripturas.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God at 3:5. Every Dominus in this chapter is Lord without a covenant-name parenthesis: the book's sole Lord (YHWH) marker is fixed at 2:9. Promissio is promise, while adventus is coming; the terms remain distinct at 3:4. Pœnitentia is repentance, judicium is judgment, and perditio is destruction. Conversatio is conduct and pietas is piety, with both unusual plurals retained at 3:11. Justitia is justice at 3:13. Longanimitas is long-suffering at 3:15, distinct from patientia as patience in 1:6. Scriptura is Scripture, plural Scriptures at 3:16; epistola is epistle. Firmitas is firmness, gratia is grace, cognitio is knowledge, salus is salvation, and gloria is glory. Cæli, terra, aqua, ignis, and elementa remain heavens, earth, water, fire, and elements throughout the cosmic sequence. Dies remains day through last days, reciprocal time, the Lord's day, and the final day of eternity.

First John — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter opens before its main announcement is grammatically complete: repeated ‘that which’ clauses gather hearing, sight, sustained contemplation, and bodily handling around the word of life. The manifestation of life then becomes witnessed and announced eternal life, whose prior relation is with the Father and whose appearance reaches the witnesses. Their announcement invites the recipients into fellowship with the witnesses and, through that fellowship, with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ; writing aims at full joy. The movement then turns to the announcement that God is light and no darkness whatever is in him. Five conditions test claimed fellowship, walking, possession of sin, confession of sins, and denial of having sinned. Their consequences hold together truth enacted or absent, mutual fellowship, cleansing by Christ’s blood, self-deception, divine forgiveness and cleansing, liar-making, and the presence or absence of his word.

Governing Latin

The opening is governed by the repeated neuter relative Quod rather than by an immediately named antecedent. Quod fuit, quod audivimus, quod vidimus, quod perspeximus, and manus nostræ contrectaverunt accumulate objects before de verbo vitæ closes the first row; verse 2 interrupts that pressure with et vita manifestata est and a witness-and-announcement clause, while verse 3 resumes quod vidimus et audivimus as the object of annuntiamus. The purpose ut ... societatem habeatis extends into et societas nostra sit, joining recipient fellowship with the witnesses’ Father-and-Son fellowship. In 1:5, hæc identifies annuntiatio and quoniam gives its content. Verses 1:6–10 retain the exact sequence Si dixerimus, Si autem, Si dixerimus, Si confiteamur, Si dixerimus, with each consequence kept under its own condition. At 1:9, fidelis and justus govern the two coordinated purpose verbs remittat and emundet.

Vulgate-specific readings

The repeated neuter opening remains ‘that which’ and does not introduce a named person or message before the Latin does. Vidimus is rendered ‘we have seen,’ while perspeximus remains the distinct ‘we gazed upon’; manus nostræ contrectaverunt keeps both hands and tactile handling, and de verbo vitæ remains ‘concerning the word of life.’ Manifestata and apparuit stay distinct as ‘was manifested’ and ‘appeared.’ Annuntiamus and annuntiatio remain ‘announce’ and ‘announcement’ rather than being varied away. Societas is consistently ‘fellowship.’ The plural tenebræ with non sunt ullæ receives total force in ‘darkness in him is none whatever.’ Veritatem non facimus remains the concrete ‘do not do the truth.’ The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, retains cleansing agency and every-sin scope. Peccatum, peccata, and non peccavimus remain three distinct formulations, while remittat and emundet remain forgiveness and cleansing rather than one blended act.

Ambiguities preserved

The opening ‘that which’ does not resolve whether every relative phrase has precisely the same conceptual antecedent; the English carries the repeated neuter pressure until the announcement itself supplies coherence. De verbo vitæ remains ‘concerning the word of life,’ leaving the source’s relation intact rather than converting de into an unsupported apposition. The dashes after 1:1 and 1:2 mark continuation without adding an English object or explanatory parenthesis. At 1:2, quæ grammatically refers to eternal life, but the rendering does not append an interpretive name to that life. At 1:3, the two fellowship clauses remain coordinated under the purpose movement without defining fellowship institutionally. In 1:5, ab eo remains simply ‘from him’; no antecedent label is inserted. In 1:9, the implied subject of faithful and just is represented only by ‘he,’ and the so-that construction preserves the purpose or result pressure of ut rather than making a philosophical claim beyond the row.

Clarity decisions

Repeating ‘that which’ in 1:1 preserves the Latin’s formal insistence while commas make the accumulating sensory testimony readable. ‘Have seen’ gives the Latin perfect a natural completed aspect and also distinguishes simple hearing from the abiding testimonial claim; ‘gazed upon’ marks perspeximus as more sustained than vidimus. Long dashes at the first two verse endings tell the reader that the syntax continues, yet every proposition remains within its supplied verse key. Verse 1:3 restarts the repeated object before the finite announcement so the delayed grammar can be followed without inventing content. In 1:5, a colon introduces quoniam as the announcement’s content. ‘Darkness in him is none whatever’ deliberately preserves absolute force without multiplying the English noun unnaturally. Verse 1:8 retains reflexive emphasis as ‘we ourselves lead ourselves astray.’ Verse 1:9 states the implied divine subject once, then coordinates both purpose verbs in a single lucid clause.

Corrections and reasons

The opening was refined from simple ‘we saw’ to ‘we have seen’ wherever vidimus bears the witnesses’ completed testimonial force; perspeximus was not allowed to collapse into the same verb and therefore remains ‘gazed upon.’ An explanatory opening such as ‘the message’ was rejected because the repeated Quod supplies no such early noun. ‘Touched’ was refined to ‘handled’ so contrectaverunt keeps deliberate bodily contact rather than a momentary brush. ‘Proclaim’ and ‘message’ were rejected in this lane for annuntiamus and annuntiatio because ‘announce’ and ‘announcement’ preserve their shared stem. ‘There is no darkness’ was expanded to ‘darkness in him is none whatever’ so the plural tenebræ and ullæ’s exhaustive negation remain audible. ‘Do not practice truth’ was rejected for ‘do not do the truth,’ which keeps facere visible. At 1:8, the second reflexive was retained because ipsi nos makes both emphatic subject and reflexive object source-significant. At 1:9, ‘forgive and purify’ was corrected to ‘forgive and cleanse’ so emundet recurs with the cleansing verb already used for Christ’s blood.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God, Pater is Father, Filius is Son, and Jesus Christus is Jesus Christ. No Dominus form occurs in the chapter, so neither Lord nor YHWH appears. Verbum is word; vita and vita æterna are life and eternal life. Manifestare is manifest, apparere is appear, testari is testify, annuntiare is announce, and annuntiatio is announcement. Societas is fellowship throughout. Lux is light and tenebræ is darkness. Ambulare remains walk, veritas is truth, mentiri is lie, mendax is liar, seducere is lead astray, peccatum is sin, peccata is sins, confiteri is confess, remittere is forgive, emundare is cleanse, and iniquitas is iniquity. Fidelis is faithful and justus is just, preserving the justice family for later recurrence rather than substituting a freer moral adjective. Gaudium is joy and plenum is full.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

The chapter begins with writing ordered toward not sinning, while immediately preserving the contingency of sin, the advocate with the Father, and Christ’s universal propitiation. Knowing him is tested by commandments, kept word, perfected charity, remaining, and walking as he walked. The old command heard from the beginning is again written as new; light and darkness then expose love or hatred of one’s brother. Five source-present writing addresses speak to little children, fathers, adolescents, infants, and young men before the argument turns from the world’s three desires to the abiding will of God. The last hour brings singular antichrist, many antichrists, departure from us, anointing, truth, lie, Father, and Son. The close commands what was heard and the received anointing to remain, names the re-promise of eternal life, resists deceivers, and joins Christ’s appearance and advent to confidence, justice, and birth from him.

Governing Latin

At 2:1, ut non peccetis gives the writing purpose and Sed et si quis peccaverit introduces a genuine condition before advocatum habemus. Ipse supplies emphatic agency for propitiation in 2:2, while non … tantum, sed etiam expands its scope from ours to the whole world. Et in hoc repeatedly marks evidentiary knowledge; participial or relative Qui clauses test saying, keeping, remaining, walking, loving, and hating. In 2:7–8, quod first modifies the old command's possession and then remains formally unresolved in quod verum est. The five explicit Scribo vobis clauses in the frozen rows occur once at 2:12, twice at 2:13, and twice at 2:14; no second patres clause exists in 2:14. At 2:16, quæ follows the threefold world inventory without an explicit expanded antecedent. The counterfactual si fuissent … permansissent governs 2:19. Jussive permaneat governs both heard content at 2:24 and, under marked case pressure, anointing at 2:27; manete then supplies the direct remain command. Si scitis … scitote closes with knowledge moving into imperative recognition.

Vulgate-specific readings

Advocatum apud Patrem remains an advocate 'with the Father,' and Jesum Christum justum remains 'Jesus Christ the just.' Propitiatio is not paraphrased, and totius mundi retains whole-world scope. Observemus, custodit, and servat are kept as observe, keep, and keep without allowing their different Latin forms to disappear from the editorial account. Caritas is charity, while diligit and diligere are love. Scandalum remains scandal. The recipient nouns are not homogenized: filioli are little children, patres fathers, adolescentes adolescents, infantes infants, and juvenes young men. Malignum is the malignant one. Concupiscentia is desire, and superbia vitæ is pride of life. Antichristus venit remains singular antichrist 'comes,' whereas antichristi multi facti sunt says many antichrists 'have been made.' The full confessing-Son/possessing-Father clause supplied at 2:23 remains present. Repromissio is rendered by the visible fingerprint 're-promise.' The anointing remains an active teacher, and non confundamur ab eo preserves being confounded by him at his advent.

Ambiguities preserved

At 2:8, 'which is true both in him and in you' leaves quod without adding whether its grammatical reach is the command, the act of writing, or the stated newness. At 2:16, 'which is not from the Father' carries quæ after the entire threefold inventory without deciding in prose whether its nearest feminine agreement narrows the reference or whether the clause characterizes the inventory as a whole. Verse 2:19 retains the difficult final scope as 'but so that they may be manifest, because not all are from us,' rather than inserting a new finite event or explaining the identity of 'all.' At 2:21, 'every lie is not from the truth' preserves the universal-plus-negation form rather than silently reformulating its scope. At 2:24, 'that which you heard' remains unnamed. The anointing construction in 2:27 has a marked accusative unctionem beside jussive maneat; 'as for you, let the anointing … remain' preserves the jussive agency without pretending the surface case is regular. The neuter verum in 'it is truth' stays distinct from the feminine anointing, and the antecedent of 'it' is not doctrinally supplied.

Clarity decisions

'My little children' carries the possessive and diminutive address at 2:1, and a semicolon allows the advocate sentence to flow into propitiation without moving either verse. 'Even if anyone should sin' preserves et and the potential force of peccaverit. At 2:5, English word order brings 'truly in him' before perfected charity so the repeated in hoc relation remains visible. The old-command and new-command paragraphs repeat command rather than substituting a stylistic synonym. 'Until now' keeps usque adhuc, and 'does not know where he goes' leaves the blinded person as the walking subject. Each source-present Scribo is repeated in 2:12–14, while the five addressee nouns remain visibly distinct. Semicolons preserve the internal movements of 2:15–19 and the Father/world contrasts. 'As for you, let' gives readable English to the two jussive remain constructions at 2:24 and 2:27. 'It is truth and is not a lie' preserves both halves of 2:27's emphatic contrast. The final 'know' at 2:29 is imperative, matching scitote rather than merely repeating an indicative statement.

Corrections and reasons

‘Righteous’ was rejected for both justum and justitiam so the reader can hear the canonical just/justice family at 2:1 and 2:29. ‘Atoning sacrifice’ was rejected for propitiation because the Latin supplies the technical noun directly. ‘Affection’ was rejected for caritas and ‘charity’ retained, while diligere remains love; this prevents two source families from collapsing. ‘Stumbling block’ was not substituted for scandalum because the Vulgate fingerprint is intended to remain visible. The age addresses were not smoothed into one generic audience: adolescentes and juvenes remain adolescents and young men, and infantes remains infants. Most importantly, no sixth writing clause or repeated fathers address was inserted into 2:12–14: the frozen target prose says six, but the authoritative Latin lane contains exactly five Scribo clauses and only one patres occurrence, so source fidelity requires five. ‘Cravings’ was refined to ‘desire’ for concupiscentia across flesh, eyes, and world. ‘Have appeared’ was rejected for facti sunt, which specifically remains ‘have been made.’ A familiar simplification of 2:19 was removed so its final scope pressure remains exposed. ‘Promise’ was refined to ‘re-promise’ to preserve repromissio, and ‘ashamed before him’ was rejected because non confundamur ab eo names confounding with an ab relation.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God, Pater is Father, Filius is Son, Jesus Christus is Jesus Christ, and Christus is Christ. Sanctus in the substantival title is the Holy One. No Dominus form occurs, so neither Lord nor YHWH appears. Filioli are little children, patres fathers, adolescentes adolescents, infantes infants, juvenes young men, frater brother, and carissimi dearest. Advocatus is advocate, justus is just, justitia is justice, propitiatio is propitiation, peccatum is sin, mandatum is commandment or command according to the immediate construction, verbum is word, caritas is charity, diligere is love, scandalum is scandal, lux is light, and tenebræ is darkness. Mundus is world, concupiscentia is desire, caro is flesh, superbia is pride, malignus is the malignant one, antichristus is antichrist, unctio is anointing, veritas is truth, mendacium is lie, repromissio is re-promise, vita æterna is eternal life, seducere is lead astray, manere is remain, fiducia is confidence, adventus is advent, and nasci is be born.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The chapter opens in wonder at the Father's given charity: its recipients are not merely named children of God but truly are so, though the world does not know them. Present identity then opens toward an unrevealed future, likeness to him, sight of him as he is, hope, and self-sanctification. The argument sharpens into categorical tests: sin and iniquity, remaining and sinning, justice, the devil's works, birth from God, abiding seed, and the manifest lineages of God and the devil. The announcement to love one another is set against Cain, malignant origin, killing, evil works, just works, and the world's hatred. Love then marks a transfer from death to life, while hatred is homicide and the charity of God is known in the soul laid down for us and in our obligation to lay down souls for the brothers. Worldly substance, a brother's necessity, closed bowels, deed, and truth bring that obligation into bodily practice. The close moves inward to persuaded or reproaching hearts, God's greater knowledge, confidence, prayer, command keeping, belief in Jesus Christ, mutual love, reciprocal remaining, and knowledge through the given Spirit.

Governing Latin

The double predicate nominative pressure in filii Dei nominemur et simus required both the received name and the actual identity to survive 3:1. The delayed clause nondum apparuit quid erimus leads into cum apparuerit, similes ei erimus and the causal sight statement without identifying the future state further. From 3:4 through 3:10, facit, est, manet, peccat, apparuit, tolleret, dissolvat, natus est, and non potest form a deliberately uncompromising network of action, identity, purpose, birth, and inability. Verse 3:10 ends with et qui non diligit fratrem suum, and quoniam in 3:11 supplies its reason across the key boundary. Translati sumus keeps transfer passive at 3:14. In 3:16, animam suam posuit and animas ponere bind Christ's singular soul to the recipients' plural obligation. The condition in 3:17 keeps worldly substance, observed necessity, and closed bowels before its question. Verses 3:18–20 join deed and truth to ex veritate, future suadebimus, the conditional heart reproach, and God's comparative greatness. The final command coordinates credamus and diligamus before servat and reciprocal manet language lead to the Spirit.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 3:1 preserves both called and are rather than allowing the naming clause to consume actual sonship. Verse 3:4 says that doing sin is also doing iniquity and then states the equation sin is iniquity; it does not substitute a different traditional abstraction. The repeated categorical statements about remaining, sinning, birth from God, God's seed, and inability to sin are left unqualified because the supplied Latin gives no habitualizing adverb or explanatory exception. The Son appears to dissolve the devil's works. Cain is from the malignant one, and his brother's works are called just. The recipients have been transferred from death to life. Verse 3:16 retains charity of God, the singular soul Christ laid down, and the plural souls the recipients ought to lay down. Verse 3:17 keeps the substance of this world, the brother having need, and closed bowels rather than replacing the body with an inferred feeling. Verse 3:19 says that we shall persuade our hearts in his sight. None of these phrases has been conformed to a familiar English edition.

Ambiguities preserved

The identical surface form novit in 3:1 can carry present-result or perfect force; the reader text repeats does not know rather than assigning different English times to the world's relation to us and to him. In 3:2, the subject pressure of cum apparuerit is carried by he because the ensuing likeness and sight point to the same masculine referent, while what we shall be remains unrevealed and unnamed. The categorical sin clauses receive no imported theory explaining away their scope. His seed in 3:9 keeps the source pronoun instead of replacing it with an abstract nature or influence. The broken coordination at 3:10 remains visibly open to the reason in 3:11. Maligno in 3:12 stays the malignant one, without choosing between an abstract and personal paraphrase. Suadebimus corda nostra in 3:19 is rendered we shall persuade our hearts; assurance may be a contextual implication, but it is not substituted for the concrete future action. The punctuation in 3:20 retains both the conditional heart reproach and God's greater-than-the-heart statement without making one a concession the Latin does not explicitly mark. At 3:24, the repeated pronouns remain reciprocal without adding an explanatory divine name.

Clarity decisions

At 3:1, children of God is fronted once and followed by so we should be called, and so we are; this gives idiomatic force to two Latin predicates without dropping either. Verse 3:2 divides present identity, unrevealed future, expected likeness, and causal sight into a paced sequence while keeping their source order. Lead you astray renders seducat without the unintended sexual narrowing that contemporary seduce can carry. For this ... that he might in 3:8 makes In hoc ... ut intelligible while retaining the manifestation and its purpose. Verse 3:10 supplies neither is from the already stated predicate, yet its final colon keeps the reason under 3:11. No murderer has in 3:15 clarifies the Latin universal-plus-negation without weakening its absolute scope. At 3:17, a dash allows the threefold condition to arrive intact before the rhetorical question. The colons ending 3:18 and 3:21 visibly preserve the continuing constructions into 3:19 and 3:22. Come to know and recognize are used where cognoscere bears an acquisitive or discriminating force, while scire remains know.

Corrections and reasons

An initially cumbersome double English expansion of children of God at 3:1 was refined to a fronted phrase with two answering predicates; the correction preserves nominemur et simus while removing needless repetition. A first literal seduce at 3:7 was corrected to lead you astray because that is the active misleading force here and avoids an accidental modern sexual sense. Commit sin and practice sin were rejected for the facit peccatum recurrence in 3:4 and 3:9: does sin and does not do sin preserve the supplied doing language without importing a habitual qualification. Destroy was rejected at 3:8 in favor of dissolve so dissolvat remains a visible Vulgate fingerprint. An attempt to complete 3:10 as an isolated maxim was rejected; neither is supplies only the preceding ellipsis, while the colon and because keep 3:11 causally attached. Lives was rejected at 3:16 because it would erase the singular animam and plural animas recurrence; soul and souls remain. Material means and compassion were rejected at 3:17 because substantiam and viscera are both more concrete. Assure was not chosen at 3:19; persuade keeps the lexical action and leaves its reassuring force available without replacing it.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God and Pater is Father. Because First John supplies no Dominus, the chapter contains no Lord, LORD, or YHWH insertion. Caritas is charity, while diligere is love, so the noun and verb remain related without being collapsed. Peccatum is sin and iniquitas is iniquity; the equation at 3:4 requires both words. Justitia is justice, justus is just, and justa at 3:12 remains just, keeping the family audible. Manere is remain throughout the chapter. Natus ex Deo is born from God and semen is seed. Mundus is world, malignus is the malignant one where substantivized, and opera are works. Anima is soul at both singular and plural loci. Substantia is substance, necessitas is need, viscera is bowels, veritas is truth, cor is heart, fiducia is confidence, mandatum is command, and Spiritus is Spirit where the given divine Spirit is meant. Scire is normally know; cognoscere may be come to know or recognize where its local force benefits from distinction.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

The chapter begins with discernment: not every spirit is to be believed, plural spirits must be tested, and many false prophets have gone into the world. Confessing Jesus Christ come in flesh marks the Spirit of God; dissolving Jesus marks what is not from God and belongs to antichrist. The children have overcome because the one within them is greater than the one in the world. Worldly origin explains worldly speech and hearing, while apostolic hearing distinguishes the Spirit of truth from the spirit of error. The movement then turns from tested spirits to charity's divine origin. Loving, birth, and knowledge are joined; God is charity; the only-begotten Son is sent so that we might live, and propitiation rests on God's prior love. Mutual love, God's invisibility, reciprocal remaining, perfected charity, and the gift of the Spirit lead into eyewitness testimony and confession of the Son as Savior of the world. The close gathers charity with us, confidence on judgment day, likeness in this world, fear, punishment, prior love, the liar test, the seen brother and unseen God, and the one command that binds love of God to love of brother.

Governing Latin

Verse 4:1 moves deliberately from singular omni spiritui under the prohibition to plural spiritus under probate; si ex Deo sint makes divine origin the test. Cognoscitur introduces a passive recognition formula in 4:2, after which every lower-case spirit becomes the subject of either confitetur with the accusative-infinitive Jesum Christum in carne venisse or the severe active solvit Jesum. The comparative major est in 4:4 retains two unnamed personal agents located in the recipients and the world. Repeated de mundo governs both identity and speech in 4:5, while the paired hearing clauses in 4:6 lead to capitalized Spiritum veritatis and lower-case spiritum erroris. In 4:7–10, caritas, diligit, natus est, cognoscit, non novit, apparuit, misit, vivamus, prior dilexit, and propitiationem coordinate origin, action, birth, knowledge, manifestation, sending, purpose, priority, and remedy. The remaining section repeatedly uses manere for reciprocal indwelling. Nobiscum, ut fiduciam habeamus, and sicut ille est govern 4:17; foras mittit and pœnam habet govern 4:18. Hortatory diligamus Deum in 4:19 then controls the explicit love test and final command.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 4:3 retains every spirit that dissolves Jesus as a positive action. It is not replaced by an absent clause saying that a spirit does not confess him. Verse 4:4 preserves the unnamed greater one in the recipients and the one in the world without adding identities. The world's speakers speak from the world, and the world hears them. Verse 4:6 distinguishes the capitalized Spirit of truth from the lower-case spirit of error. The Son in 4:9 remains only-begotten, and the verse says the charity of God appeared in us. Verse 4:10 preserves propitiation and the exact contrast: not as though we loved God, but because he first loved us. Verse 4:12 says no one has ever seen God, yet mutual charity carries God's remaining and charity's perfection in us. At 4:16, God has charity in us. At 4:17, the charity of God is perfected with us, and as he is, we also are in this world. Verse 4:18 says fear has punishment, not an imported torment or merely an expectation of pain. Verse 4:19 remains an exhortation to love God explicitly.

Ambiguities preserved

The repeated created spirit in 4:1–3 stays lower-case, while the Spirit of God is capitalized only where the source title identifies him; the translation does not decide more referents than the grammar supplies. In 4:3, this and of whom follow the masculine antichrist pressure, but no personal biography is added. The two relative agents in 4:4 remain he who is in you and he who is in the world, without imported names. The apostolic we in 4:6 remains a direct first-person witness test and is not broadened into an institution. In 4:9, in us is retained rather than silently changed to toward us. The dative caritati in 4:16 is rendered have believed in the charity, a necessary English relation that does not alter the following in nobis; that second phrase remains in us rather than being interpreted as God's attitude toward us. Reciprocal pronouns in 4:13, 4:15, and 4:16 remain reciprocal without explanatory replacements. As he is in 4:17 keeps ille unnamed. The comparison in 4:20 preserves the rhetorical how can he love rather than converting it into an absolute statement with a supplied conclusion.

Clarity decisions

Do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits carries the singular-to-plural shift in direct English and places whether they are from God immediately beside the test. Verse 4:2 uses is recognized for cognoscitur so the Spirit of God remains the grammatical subject of the passive formula. Confesses Jesus Christ to have come in the flesh retains the accusative-infinitive content without adding a doctrinal gloss. Greater is he in 4:4 preserves the marked comparative cadence while keeping both locations clear. The short sentences in 4:5–6 keep world speech, world hearing, apostolic origin, and apostolic hearing from blurring. In 4:9, the Latin's object-before-subject emphasis is represented by naming the only-begotten Son before was sent by God; the passive recasting retains God as explicit agent and avoids a misleading English object fronting. Verse 4:16 uses paired perfect verbs and commas to distinguish coming to know from believing in charity, then repeats God is charity before the remaining clauses. A semicolon in 4:18 keeps fear's absence distinct from perfect charity's action, and the direct question in 4:20 remains audible rather than being flattened into report.

Corrections and reasons

A familiar negative-confession wording was excluded from 4:3 because the supplied Clementine phrase is the active qui solvit Jesum; dissolves Jesus preserves its severe and unusual action. Generic pronouns were checked in 4:4 and left unnamed so the translation would not add identities to the comparative agents. Know was refined to recognize in the cognoscitur and cognoscimus formulas at 4:2, 4:6, and 4:13, allowing those forms to remain distinguishable from novit without forcing an unnatural synonym where cognoscit Deum means knowing God. Only Son was corrected to only-begotten Son at 4:9 so unigenitum remains visible. The marked Latin object-first order there was recast as a passive with by God; this prevents the English from misreading Son God as one phrase while preserving divine sending agency. Loved us first was ordered as first loved us to retain prior. At 4:16, charity toward us was rejected for charity in us because the source explicitly has in nobis. Torment was rejected at 4:18 for punishment, the direct value of pœnam here. An indicative we love God was corrected to therefore let us love God so the hortatory force of diligamus remains.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God, Pater is Father, Filius is Son, Jesus Christus is Jesus Christ, and Salvator mundi is Savior of the world. No Dominus form occurs in First John, so no Lord, LORD, or YHWH title is inserted. Lower-case spirit names a spirit under testing or the spirit of error; Spirit is capitalized in Spirit of God, Spirit of truth, and his Spirit. Mundus remains world in origin, speech, audience, mission, salvation, and present location. Caritas is charity and diligere is love; Deus caritas est is consistently God is charity. Natus ex Deo is born from God, cognoscere may be recognize or come to know, and nosse is know according to local force. Manere is remain in every reciprocal divine relation. Unigenitus is only-begotten, propitiatio is propitiation, testimonium language is testify, fiducia is confidence, judicium is judgment, timor is fear, and pœna is punishment. Antichristus remains antichrist, mendax is liar, and mandatum is command.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The chapter begins with faith that Jesus is the Christ, birth from God, love of the begetter and the begotten, love for those born of God, and commandments that are not heavy. Birth then becomes victory over the world through faith and confession of the Son. Water and blood identify Jesus Christ; the Spirit testifies that Christ is truth. Three heavenly witnesses and three earthly witnesses lead into the greater testimony of God concerning his Son, internal testimony, eternal life, and the possession contrast between having and not having the Son. Writing gives knowledge of present eternal life, then confidence in will-governed prayer and possession of petitions. Prayer for a brother’s sin is distinguished from sin unto death, after which the positive declaration that there is sin unto death remains. The close traces divine birth, the preserving agency of God’s generation, the malignant one, the whole world’s placement, the Son’s coming, given sense, true God and true Son, eternal life, and the final command to guard against idols.

Governing Latin

At 5:1, Omnis qui credit governs singular human belief and birth, while omnis qui diligit repeats love across the begetter and the one born from him. The neuter omne quod natum est at 5:4 remains everything that is born rather than being silently narrowed. At 5:6, Hic est identifies the one coming through water and blood, and quoniam Christus est veritas makes Christ, not the Spirit, the predicate of truth. Verses 7–8 preserve two separate tres sunt constructions, both locations, both triads, and both unum sunt conclusions. Verse 9 deliberately repeats testimonium Dei and quod majus est before testificatus est. Verse 10 keeps belief in the Son distinct from the dative belief of the Son and from belief in the testimony. In 5:16, petat is the request and dabitur is passive, while non pro illo dico ut roget quis is the author’s qualified statement rather than an intensified prohibition. In 5:18, generatio Dei is the explicit subject of conservat eum. At 5:20, dedit nobis sensum governs the purpose clauses, and Hic retains its unresolved demonstrative force.

Vulgate-specific readings

The reader preserves commandments as not heavy, everything born of God as the neuter totality conquering the world, and our faith as the named victory. It retains Christ is truth at 5:6 rather than transferring the predicate to the Spirit. The Father, Word, and Holy Spirit give testimony in heaven, while spirit, water, and blood give testimony on earth; both complete Clementine triads and unity statements remain without a textual note in the reader. God’s testimony is stated as greater twice at 5:9. The petition language at 5:15 remains possessed, 5:17 positively states that there is a sin unto death, and 5:18 keeps the generation of God as the preserving agent rather than importing another subject. The whole world remains placed in the malignant one, the Son gives sense, Hic remains This, and simulacra remains concrete idols.

Ambiguities preserved

The reciprocal begetter-and-begotten relation at 5:1 is left pronominal where the Latin leaves it so. The Spirit at 5:6 is the testifying subject, but the following clause still says Christ is truth. Lower-case spirit at 5:8 distinguishes the earthly witness from the expressly named Holy Spirit at 5:7 without explaining its identity. The repeated greater-testimony syntax at 5:9 is clarified only by punctuation, not by deleting a proposition. Verse 5:16 retains the open giver behind the passive life shall be given and reports that John does not say anyone should ask for the death-directed sin, without converting that statement into an absolute command. Generation of God remains the preserving subject at 5:18, while malignant remains personal at 5:18 and the relation in the malignant one remains unexpanded at 5:19. This at 5:20 preserves the live antecedent pressure after the true God and his true Son.

Clarity decisions

Colons at 5:2–4 make the stated tests and definitions audible without supplying new logic. Everything at 5:4 is the least awkward English form that retains the neuter omne quod. Repeated water and blood wording remains deliberately full. The earthly triad uses lower-case spirit because the source does not repeat the explicit Holy title there. Verse 9 keeps both greater-testimony propositions and uses a colon only to display the final that-clause. Verse 10 preserves the two different Latin belief constructions as believes in the Son and does not believe the Son. In 5:16, let him ask preserves the jussive and life shall be given keeps the passive agency open. Sense at 5:20 retains sensum as a concrete gift while the purpose clause explains its cognitive force. The final This avoids resolving Hic with an added personal name.

Corrections and reasons

A first smoothing of 5:3 as burdensome was rejected in favor of not heavy, preserving gravia directly. A person-only rendering at 5:4 was rejected because omne quod is neuter and totalizing. At 5:6, Spirit is truth was rejected because the supplied clause reads Christus est veritas. The two witness verses were kept separate rather than collapsed, preserving in heaven and on earth along with every named witness. At 5:9, a shorter single statement that God’s testimony is greater was rejected because quod majus est repeats the greater claim. At 5:16, do not ask was rejected as too strong; the source says I do not say that anyone should ask. At 5:17, the familiar opposite polarity was rejected because the supplied text positively reads est peccatum ad mortem. At 5:18, keeps himself and an added Son subject were rejected because generatio Dei performs conservat. At 5:20, an explanatory name for Hic was rejected so the demonstrative remains open.

Canonical terminology

Deus is God throughout, and the chapter contains no Lord, LORD, or YHWH because the frozen First John source contains no Dominus-family token. Christus is Christ; Filius Dei is Son of God; Pater is Father; Verbum is Word; Spiritus Sanctus is Holy Spirit. Caritas remains charity, mandatum commandment, mundus world, victoria victory, fides faith, veritas truth, testimonium testimony, vita æterna eternal life, fiducia confidence, voluntas will, petitio petition, peccatum sin, mors death, iniquitas iniquity, generatio generation, malignus the malignant one, and simulacra idols. Natus, genuit, and generatio remain born, begot, and generation rather than being flattened. Testifying and testimony remain visibly related, and life and death retain their concrete recurrence across possession, prayer, and sin distinctions.

Second John — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The Elder addresses the Elect Lady and her children through the truth that remains forever, blesses them in grace, mercy, peace, truth, and charity, and rejoices over children walking in truth. He then binds charity to the command heard from the beginning, warns against deceivers who do not confess Jesus Christ come in flesh, insists upon remaining in Christ's doctrine, and closes by preferring mouth-to-mouth speech over paper and ink. The movement is intimate but unsentimental: enduring truth and mutual love lead directly into vigilance, doctrinal boundaries, full joy, and a final greeting from the children of an Elect sister.

Governing Latin

The address `Senior Electæ dominæ, et natis ejus` governs “The Elder to the Elect Lady and her children”; the carried `propter veritatem` in verse 2 completes the reason begun in verse 1. The recurring families `veritas`, `caritas` / `diligere`, `mandatum`, `ambulare`, `permanere`, and `doctrina` remain visible as truth, charity/love, command, walk, remain, and doctrine. The closing concrete sequence `per cartam et atramentum ... os ad os` remains paper, ink, and mouth-to-mouth speech rather than becoming an abstract preference for personal communication.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 4 preserves the partitive force of `de filiis tuis` as “some of your children,” avoiding an unsupported claim about every child. Verse 6 leaves `in eo` as “in it” instead of supplying love, truth, or command as an explicit antecedent. Verse 7 retains the perfect-infinitive force `Jesum Christum venisse in carnem`, and verses 10–11 preserve the concrete greeting `Ave` as “Hail.” Verse 12 retains `os ad os`, “mouth to mouth,” and verse 13 echoes the opening adjective with “Elect sister.” No `Dominus`-family token occurs in this letter, so no Lord or YHWH title is supplied.

Ambiguities preserved

The Latin does not decide in reader text whether the Elect Lady and her Elect sister are individual women, congregations, or layered figures, so neither identity is explained into the translation. At verse 6, `in eo` carries live antecedent pressure after charity, commands, and the command; “in it” keeps that pressure open. At verse 9, `recedit` expresses movement away and is rendered “departs” beside the explicit failure to remain, without importing a different textual tradition's technical verb. The singular “this is the deceiver and the antichrist” in verse 7 preserves the Latin predicate without identifying one named person beyond what the sentence says.

Clarity decisions

The opening spans verses 1–2, so an em dash at the end of verse 1 keeps `propter veritatem` audibly dependent while each verse remains independently keyed. “May ... be with you” makes the marked `Sit vobiscum` wish immediately intelligible. “Some of your children” gives natural English to the partitive `de filiis tuis`. At verse 5, “not as though writing ... but writing what we had” restores parallel English actions around the implicit repeated `scribens`, while both the old/new contrast and “that we love one another” remain clear. Quotation marks around “Hail” identify `Ave` as the greeting actually spoken rather than an unexplained proper noun.

Corrections and reasons

The direct draft was checked against all thirteen Latin rows and twelve adjacent boundaries. The opening was deliberately punctuated across the 1:1–2 boundary so that the causal phrase in verse 2 is neither detached nor duplicated. Verse 4 was refined from a potentially totalizing “your children walking” construction to “some of your children walking,” preserving `de filiis`. Independent review corrected verse 5 from the nonparallel “not as one writing … but the one we had” to “not as though writing … but writing what we had,” preventing “one” from shifting confusingly between writer and command while preserving the implicit repeated action. Verse 6 retained “in it” rather than selecting an antecedent absent from the Latin. Verse 9 chose “departs” for `recedit` to keep concrete movement away without importing “transgresses.” No correction introduced an English-edition reading, and no required source finding remains in the candidate.

Canonical terminology

This letter confirms Elder for `Senior`, truth for `veritas`, charity for `caritas`, love for `diligere`, command for `mandatum`, walk for `ambulare`, remain for `permanere`, and doctrine for `doctrina`. Elect preserves `Electa` at both family addresses while leaving the referents open. Deceiver renders `seductor`; malignant preserves `malignus`; Hail preserves the concrete greeting `Ave`; mouth to mouth preserves `os ad os`. Because Second John contains no divine `Dominus`, the book-level title ruling is zero reader occurrences of Lord, LORD, or YHWH.

Third John — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The Elder addresses Gaius in truth, prays for his prosperous faring and health in correspondence with his soul, and rejoices over testimony that Gaius walks in truth. He praises Gaius's faithful work toward brothers and strangers, grounds the community's obligation to receive such persons in their departure for the name, and contrasts that hospitality with Diotrephes's love of primacy, hostile speech, refusal, prohibition, and expulsion. The letter then turns from the moral test of good and evil to Demetrius's many-sided testimony and closes by preferring soon, mouth-to-mouth speech over writing by ink and reed, followed by peace and greetings by name.

Governing Latin

The opening `Senior Gajo carissimo, quem ego diligo in veritate` governs “The Elder to Gaius, most beloved,” with emphatic `ego` retained as “I myself.” The recurring families `veritas`, `testimonium`, `carissimus`, `fratres`, `suscipere`, `benefacere` / `malefacere`, `ecclesia`, and `scribere` remain audible as truth, testimony, most beloved, brothers, receive, doing good/evil, church, and write. Verse 5 remains open into the relative clauses of verse 6, and the closing `atramentum et calamum ... os ad os` remains the concrete ink, reed, and mouth-to-mouth sequence.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 2 preserves `de omnibus` as the broad “concerning all things” relation without turning the prayer into a material promise. Verse 4 retains the source noun `gratiam` as “grace” rather than importing a different emotional noun. Verse 9 preserves modal `Scripsissem forsitan` as “Perhaps I might have written,” rather than asserting that a letter was sent. Verse 10 keeps the concrete hostile `garriens` as “chattering” and the repeated receive/refuse actions. Verse 13 has ink and `calamum`, reed, but no paper; verse 14 has mouth-to-mouth speech and no final Amen. No `Dominus`-family token occurs, so no Lord or YHWH title is supplied.

Ambiguities preserved

At verse 2, `de omnibus` can bear a broad concerning-all-things or in-all-respects relation; the English preserves its breadth without promising prosperity. At verse 3, `veritati tuæ` remains “your truth,” retaining the possessive relation without explaining it as reputation, sincerity, or doctrine. At verse 4, plural `horum` remains “these” while the following clause identifies the heard walking that constitutes the grace. At verse 7, “his name” preserves `ejus` after God in verse 6 without replacing the pronoun with an absent divine name, and “nations” retains the breadth of `gentibus`. At verse 10, the implied object after “those who receive” is supplied only as the already active brothers, without inventing another group.

Clarity decisions

English past clauses at verse 3 make the contemporaneous participles `venientibus ... perhibentibus` intelligible while keeping the brothers as both agents. An em dash at verse 5 and lowercase relative opening at verse 6 keep the carried brethren-and-strangers construction audible without merging the verse keys. “Lead onward” preserves the forward force of future `deduces` while avoiding an invented destination or payment. “Perhaps I might have written” gives natural English to the modal pluperfect-subjunctive sequence at verse 9. Verse 10 expands the Latin ellipsis only enough to identify the already named recipients, and verse 14 reorders `os ad os loquemur` to clear contemporary “mouth to mouth we will speak.”

Corrections and reasons

The direct candidate was checked against all fourteen Latin rows and thirteen adjacent boundaries. Verse 2 was kept as prayer rather than promise, preventing the prayer's breadth from becoming a prosperity guarantee. Verse 4 retained “grace” and plural “these,” preventing inherited wording from replacing `gratiam` or flattening `horum`. Verses 5–6 were punctuated as one carried construction so that the brothers and strangers remain antecedents of both relative pronouns and Gaius remains agent of the participle and future verb. Verse 9 was cast modally, preventing `Scripsissem forsitan` from becoming a simple completed “I wrote.” Verse 10 retained malignant chatter and every distinct reception object. Verse 13 excludes paper, and verse 14 excludes an absent Amen. No external English edition governed a correction, and no source finding remains open in this candidate.

Canonical terminology

This letter confirms Elder for `Senior`, most beloved for superlative `carissimus`, truth for `veritas`, testimony for `testimonium`, charity for `caritas`, walk for `ambulare`, church for `ecclesia`, brothers for `fratres`, strangers for `peregrinos`, receive for `suscipere` / `recipere` where the persons are welcomed, good-doing and evil-doing for `benefacere` / `malefacere`, malignant for `malignus`, reed for `calamus`, and mouth to mouth for `os ad os`. “His name” remains pronominal at verse 7. Because Third John contains no divine `Dominus`, the book-level title ruling is zero reader occurrences of Lord, LORD, or YHWH.

Jude — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

Jude opens by naming the called as beloved in God the Father and preserved in Christ Jesus, then turns from mercy, peace, and charity to an urgent struggle for the once-delivered faith. The central movement exposes secretly entered impious people through a chain of judgment memories—Egypt, angels, Sodom and Gomorrah, Michael, Cain, Balaam, Core, Enoch—and through bodily, meteorological, maritime, and stellar images. The beloved are then called from apostolic remembrance into self-building, prayer, divine love, mercy, rescue, and fear. One long closing sentence rises from God's power to preserve and set them immaculate into glory, magnificence, dominion, power, and ages of ages.

Governing Latin

The opening relations `in Deo Patre dilectis, et Christo Jesu conservatis, et vocatis` remain beloved, preserved, and called. The urgency turns on `necesse habui` and intensified `supercertari`. Verses 5–6 deliberately keep Jesus as the named governing subject through saving, destroying, and reserving. The image chain preserves `maculæ`, `nubes sine aqua`, `arbores autumnales`, `fluctus feri maris`, `sidera errantia`, and `procella tenebrarum`. The finite command `servate` governs the participles across 1:20–21, while 1:24–25 remains one doxological sentence across the verse boundary.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 5 names Jesus as the one who saved the people from Egypt and then destroyed unbelievers; the reader does not substitute another subject. Verse 9 keeps `Imperet` as “May ... command” and marks this covenant-formula occurrence as “the Lord (YHWH),” while Christological Lord titles remain plain. Verse 11 retains Core, the Clementine name form. Verse 14 says the Lord comes `in sanctis millibus suis`, “in his holy thousands,” without importing a different preposition or number. Verse 19 retains the difficult `animales` as “soulish,” preserving its formal relation to `anima`, and verse 22 follows `arguite judicatos`, not a doubt-based reading from another tradition.

Ambiguities preserved

At verse 2, the coordinated mercy, peace, and charity stand under singular `adimpleatur`; English preserves the blessing without inventing a separate verb for each gift. At verse 13, `confusiones` carries shame and confusion pressure; “shames” follows the degrading wave image while the editorial records the lexical decision. Verse 19's `animales` contrasts embodied or soul-governed people with those having the Spirit, but the Latin does not supply a psychological explanation. Verse 22's accusative `judicatos` is kept with the people reproved; no doctrinal sequence beyond their having been judged is supplied. Attachment within the expansive 1:24–25 doxology remains open where English punctuation cannot decide more than the Latin.

Clarity decisions

Long Latin periods were punctuated into lucid English while their connective logic and verse keys remained intact. Verse 4 uses dashes for the parenthetical long-ago inscription into judgment. Verses 5–6 use a semicolon and lowercase continuation so Jesus's agency remains audible across the boundary. The uninterrupted image list in verses 12–13 uses semicolons to distinguish feasts, clouds, trees, waves, and stars without changing their shared referent. Quotation marks enclose Michael's command and Enoch's two-verse prophecy. At verses 20–21, the participles lead into the finite “keep yourselves,” and at verses 24–25 the added grammatical “be” carries the four doxological nouns without adding a new proposition.

Corrections and reasons

The direct draft was rechecked against all twenty-five rows and twenty-four joins. Verse 5 was shaped as “after saving … secondly destroyed” to preserve Jesus as agent and `secundo` as ordered second action. Verse 9's title marker was moved away from the earlier Christological Lord title and fixed at the covenant formula `Imperet tibi Dominus`, preventing the parenthetical from appearing as literal Latin or altering Jesus's title. Verse 13 chose “shames” for `confusiones` because the waves foam their own disgrace, while retaining the concrete storm of darkness. Verse 22 was corrected away from any remembered doubt wording to the supplied `arguite judicatos`. No English edition governed a correction, and no required source finding remains in the translator's candidate.

Canonical terminology

Jude retains servant, brother, beloved, preserved, called, mercy, peace, charity, faith, saints, impious/impiety, judgment, grace, luxury, Sovereign, principality, dwelling, eternal bonds, flesh, dominion, majesty, wage, contradiction, soulish, Spirit, immaculate, glory, magnificence, and power as distinct source families. `Animalis` remains the established “soulish,” preserving its formal relation to `anima` without importing animalistic behavior. Sodom, Gomorrah, Michael, Moses, Cain, Balaam, Core, Enoch, Adam, and James use consistent familiar identities where established. Christological `Dominus` is Lord; the sole book-level covenant marker is Lord (YHWH) at 1:9; later Lord occurrences remain plain. Eternal bonds, eternal fire, forever, eternal life, every age, now, and ages of ages retain their distinct temporal forms.

Revelation — Codici Editorial

Chapter 1

Chapter movement

The chapter moves from the revelation's divine transmission and its singular beatitude into John's seven-church greeting, Christ's blood-washing work, and a cloud-coming proclamation. The Lord God then names himself as Alpha and Omega. John locates his witness on Patmos and, on the Lord's Day, turns toward the trumpet-like voice; the vision unfolds through lampstands, the Son-of-Man figure, stars, sword, sun-bright face, death and life, and finally the interpretation of stars and churches.

Governing Latin

The opening is governed by `Apocalypsis Jesu Christi`, God's giving, `palam facere`, the necessity `oportet`, and the nearness terms `cito` and `prope`. The one person of `qui legit, et audit ... et servat` remains singular. `lavit nos ... in sanguine suo` governs the blood imagery, while `fecit nos regnum, et sacerdotes` keeps kingdom and priests grammatically distinct. The first divine `Dominus` occurs in 1:8 and therefore receives the sole book-level marker. `Dominica die`, `auricalco`, `inferni`, and `Sacramentum septem stellarum` control the later vision vocabulary.

Vulgate-specific readings

Verse 1:5 says Christ washed us from our sins in his blood, following `lavit nos`, and verse 1:6 says he made us a kingdom and priests. The blessing of 1:3 has one reader who also hears and keeps. The metal of 1:15 remains orichalcum rather than being silently identified with a different metal, and `inferni` at 1:18 is the realm of the dead, distinct from later fire imagery. The first divine title is the Lord (YHWH) God at 1:8; the adjectival `Dominica` at 1:10 is the Lord's Day, not another title occurrence.

Ambiguities preserved

The seven spirits remain the seven spirits without an explanatory identification beyond what later verses themselves supply. The relation of `sicut in camino ardenti` to the orichalcum-like feet remains open in the compact comparison. The voice is literally something John turns to see, preserving the vision's sensory compression. `Sacramentum` is rendered mystery in the interpretive sentence, but the editorial retains its sacramental lexical pressure. The English does not identify the seven church-angels beyond the source's own equation.

Clarity decisions

The 1:1–2 transmission chain is punctuated across its verse boundary so God gives, Christ discloses, the angel signifies, and John testifies without exchanging agents. Semicolons preserve the threefold greeting source in 1:4–5 and the kingdom-priest doxology in 1:6. Direct speech is opened at 1:8 and 1:11 and carried through the vision where the Latin requires it. `Vestitum podere` becomes clothed in a long garment, giving readable English without inventing a named garment absent from the phrase.

Corrections and reasons

The direct draft was checked against all twenty rows and nineteen internal joins. The covenant-name marker was fixed only at `dicit Dominus Deus` in 1:8; it was not attached to the Lord's Day or repeated elsewhere. `Poderem` was not turned into a speculative priestly garment, `auricalco` was not normalized to an unproved alloy, and `inferni` was corrected according to the canonical death-realm ruling. No source-governed proposition remains omitted or duplicated.

Canonical terminology

Revelation, testimony, prophecy, word, write, book, church, angel, throne, spirit, kingdom, priests, blood, lampstand, star, conquer, and ages of ages begin their Book 66 families here. `Dominus Deus` is the Lord (YHWH) God at its first divine occurrence in 1:8; later divine Lord titles are plain. `Dominica die` is the Lord's Day. `Infernus` is the realm of the dead. `Auricalcum` is orichalcum pending whole-book and whole-canon evidence for a more exact material name.

Chapter 2

Chapter movement

Four dictated letters move through Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, and Thyatira. Each begins with a speaker formula grounded in the opening vision, examines the church's works, gives praise or charge, and closes with the Spirit's call. The movement intensifies from forsaken first charity and threatened lampstand removal, through prison and ten-day tribulation, to Satan's throne, corrupt teaching, Jezebel's bed and children, and finally authority, iron rule, and the morning star.

Governing Latin

The repeated frames `Angelo ... ecclesiæ scribe`, `Hæc dicit`, `Scio/Novi opera tua`, and `Qui habet aurem` keep all four letters distinct while joining them as one cycle. `caritatem tuam primam` governs Ephesus; `diebus decem` and `morte secunda` govern Smyrna; `sedes Satanæ`, Balaam, and `calculum candidum` govern Pergamum; Jezebel, `renes, et corda`, `virga ferrea`, and `stellam matutinam` govern Thyatira. `age pœnitentiam` remains a command to do penance, while the intransitive `pœnitere` is rendered repent from the named fornication.

Vulgate-specific readings

Ephesus has forsaken its first charity, not an abstract first preference. Smyrna's tribulation is explicitly ten days and its promise names the second death. Pergamum's source names Antipas in a compressed clause, retains Balaam's eating-and-fornication snare, and promises hidden manna and a white stone. Thyatira permits a woman named Jezebel who calls herself a prophetess; Christ searches kidneys and hearts, slays her children with death, and promises rule with an iron rod before the morning star.

Ambiguities preserved

The source does not explain whether the church-angels are heavenly or human representatives. Antipas's 2:13 clause lacks an expressed finite verb, so English supplies only the minimal `was` needed to carry the stated witness and death. `The depths of Satan, as they say` remains attached without deciding who coined the phrase. At 2:23–24, `But to you I say, and to the rest` crosses the verse boundary and remains an open carried address rather than being divided into rival audiences.

Clarity decisions

Quotation marks enclose the entire four-letter speech while paragraphing and verse keys preserve every internal address. In 2:14, a colon makes eating and fornication the content of the stumbling block without adding an unsupplied food object. In 2:20, removal of a misleading pause after `my servants` makes the servants, not Jezebel, the objects seduced to fornicate and eat sacrifices. The 2:26–28 promise is punctuated as one authority sentence so the Father's grant is not detached from the conqueror's rule.

Corrections and reasons

The self-audit changed 2:2 from the potentially abstract `the evil` to `evil people`, matching masculine plural `malos`. It also removed a comma after `servos meos` in 2:20 so the infinitives remain the seduced servants' actions. `Cito` at 2:16 remains soon, and no such haste word was inserted into 2:5. Kidney imagery, death language, fornication, and threatened violence were retained without euphemism.

Canonical terminology

Church, angel, works, labor, patience, charity, penance, conquer, Spirit, tree of life, crown of life, second death, testimony, doctrine, fornication, tribulation, authority, nations, iron rod, and morning star are established Book 66 families. Nicolaitans, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Antipas, Balaam, Balak, and Jezebel retain consistent familiar names. `Cito` is soon; `calculum candidum` is a white stone; `idolothyta` are things sacrificed to idols.

Chapter 3

Chapter movement

The letter cycle continues through Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea. Sardis moves from a living name and actual death to watchfulness, strengthened remnants, white garments, and the book of life. Philadelphia receives David's key, an unclosable open door, protection from the worldwide hour, and the promise of a permanent temple pillar bearing divine and city names. Laodicea's lukewarm self-sufficiency is exposed, counseled, reproved, invited to reciprocal supper, and offered a seat upon Christ's throne.

Governing Latin

Sardis is governed by `nomen habes quod vivas, et mortuus es`, the imperatives `Esto vigilans`, `confirma`, `serva`, and `pœnitentiam age`, and the non-erasure of `libro vitæ`. Philadelphia turns on `clavem David`, the paired opening and shutting, `ostium apertum`, `verbum patientiæ meæ`, and the repeated divine-name writing. Laodicea is shaped by the cold-hot-lukewarm triad, `incipiam te evomere`, the fivefold exposure of poverty, `collyrio`, loving reproof and chastening, and the reciprocal `cœnabo cum illo, et ipse mecum`.

Vulgate-specific readings

Sardis's works are not found full before God, and a few `names` have not defiled their garments. Philadelphia's hour is an hour of temptation coming upon the whole world, and the new Jerusalem is presently described as descending from heaven from God. Laodicea is threatened not merely with rejection but with the beginning of being vomited from Christ's mouth. Christ counsels fired and tested gold, white garments, and eye-salve; he stands at the door, and the singular person who hears and opens shares a reciprocal supper with him.

Ambiguities preserved

The compressed `nomen habes quod vivas` states the living name against actual death without explaining whether name means reputation, title, or nominal identity. `Dabo de synagoga Satanæ` leaves its direct object elliptical; English supplies only the minimal `some` needed for grammar. `Principium creaturæ Dei` remains the beginning of God's creation without resolving the theological relation beyond the Latin. The hour of temptation and the opened door remain uninterpreted images.

Clarity decisions

The three letters are separately paragraphed while the Spirit refrain retains identical cadence. In 3:9, `some` completes an English object but adds no class or number beyond the source's partitive `de`. Dashes set the descending-city apposition inside the 3:12 name promise. The sequence in 3:18 uses semicolons to distinguish gold, clothing, and eye-salve while leaving all three under Christ's counsel. The door sentence keeps one hearer, one opener, and the two reciprocal supper clauses.

Corrections and reasons

The draft's interpretive `as though you live` at 3:1 was corrected to `a name that you are alive`, avoiding an added comparative absent from `quod vivas`; the direct contrast with `you are dead` supplies the irony. `Incipiam` remains `I will begin`, rather than flattening the source to an instantaneous expulsion. The 3:19 causal sequence—love, reproof and chastening, therefore zeal and penance—was retained, and 3:20 was not expanded into a conversion formula.

Canonical terminology

Watch, works, garments, book of life, confess, key of David, open door, temptation, crown, temple, city, new Jerusalem, witness, creation, cold, hot, lukewarm, eye-salve, reprove, chastise, penance, door, supper, conquer, and throne govern later recurrences. `Liber vitæ` is book of life. `Cito` remains soon. `Cenare` is sup, retaining the source's meal register and reciprocal construction.

Chapter 4

Chapter movement

After the dictated letters, an opened heavenly door and the trumpet-like voice call John upward; the narrative says only that he is immediately in spirit. The vision circles outward from the throne and the enthroned one to rainbow, twenty-four elders, lightning, voices, thunder, lamps, glassy sea, and four eye-filled living creatures. Their unceasing triple Holy draws the elders into repeated prostration, worship, crown-casting, and a creation doxology.

Governing Latin

The transition is controlled by `Post hæc vidi`, `Ascende huc`, and `statim fui in spiritu`, which do not narrate a bodily ascent. `sedes` and `thronus` sustain the throne field; jasper, carnelian, emerald-like rainbow, white garments, golden crowns, seven burning lamps, and `mare vitreum` build the visual field. `quatuor animalia` are living creatures, distinct from the later `bestia`. Their acclamation orders time as `qui erat, et qui est, et qui venturus est`, and the final `erant, et creata sunt` preserves both prior being and creation.

Vulgate-specific readings

The second living creature is like a calf, following `vitulo`. The creatures stand `in the midst of the throne and around the throne`, a spatial compression the English does not redesign. The divine acclamation says who was, who is, and who is to come in that order, and later Lord titles remain plain after the first-use marker in chapter 1. The closing praise states that by God's will all things `were, and were created`, preserving the Clementine two-stage wording.

Ambiguities preserved

The opened door and command to ascend do not specify a bodily route; `I was in spirit` is allowed to stand as the only mode named. The enthroned one's appearance is likeness to stones, not a bodily description. The creatures' position in and around the throne remains spatially unresolved. `Animalia` can denote animals or living beings; `living creatures` retains animate force while preventing collapse into the later singular beast family.

Clarity decisions

Verse 4:1 uses a semicolon to separate the opened door from the returning voice while preserving their single vision transition. `One sitting upon the throne` supplies only the minimal English noun required by `sedens`. The visual inventory is distributed with semicolons so repeated `and` remains audible without becoming unreadable. Repeated imperfect verbs in 4:10 are rendered `would fall`, `would worship`, and `would cast`, expressing the recurring response to the creatures' praise.

Corrections and reasons

No narrated bodily ascent was added to `Ascende huc`; the immediate result remains `fui in spiritu`. Jasper, carnelian, emerald, glass, calf, eyes, and six wings were checked against their exact rows and left concrete. `Animalia` was fixed as living creatures rather than beasts, preserving Revelation's later lexical distinction. The two clauses `erant, et creata sunt` were both retained instead of smoothing them into one creation verb.

Canonical terminology

Door, heaven, spirit, throne, elder, crown, lightning, voice, thunder, lamp, seven spirits, glassy sea, living creature, worship, glory, honor, blessing, power, Almighty, and ages of ages govern the throne scenes that follow. `Animalia` is living creatures in the throne vision; `bestia` will remain beast. Divine `Dominus` in 4:8 and the vocative in 4:11 are plain Lord after 1:8.

Chapter 5

Chapter movement

The throne vision concentrates upon the sealed book. A mighty angel's proclamation exposes the failed search through heaven, earth, and beneath the earth, and John's grief is answered by the conquering Lion and Root. John then sees a standing, slain Lamb whose horns and eyes carry sevenfold power and sight. The Lamb takes and opens the book, and worship expands from living creatures and elders to thousands of thousands of angels and finally every creature.

Governing Latin

`librum scriptum intus et foris` and seven `sigilla/signacula` govern the chapter's object and action. The Lion `vicit ... aperire`, while the seen figure is `Agnum stantem tamquam occisum`. Seven horns and eyes are explicitly the seven spirits sent into all the earth. Harps and golden `phialas` full of fragrances are identified as saints' prayers. The new song is controlled by `redemisti nos ... in sanguine tuo`, `fecisti nos ... regnum, et sacerdotes`, and future reign; the angelic count is the exact `millia millium`.

Vulgate-specific readings

The book is written within and without. The search includes those beneath the earth and distinguishes looking upon the book from seeing it. The new song addresses the Lamb as plain Lord and says `you redeemed us`, preserving the Clementine first-person plural. Those redeemed are made a kingdom and priests and say they shall reign over the earth. The count remains `thousands of thousands`, and the Lamb's worthiness includes the distinct noun `divinity` among its seven terms.

Ambiguities preserved

The source does not explain how the Lamb is at once standing and as though slain. `Each having harps and golden bowls` follows a plural subject containing living creatures and elders; the English does not impose a distribution beyond `singuli`. `Odoramenta` are rendered fragrances while their inspired identification as prayers is explicit. The universal-creature sentence retains its layered geography without deciding the identities of creatures under the earth or in the sea.

Clarity decisions

The proclamation and elder speech are enclosed as direct speech, and dashes make the failed three-realm search immediately intelligible. The apposition identifying eyes as spirits remains in the Lamb verse. The new song spans 5:9–10 as one quotation so redemption, kingdom, priesthood, and future reign retain one speaking company. The seven worthiness nouns are kept in source order, with repeated `and` preserving the doxological cadence.

Corrections and reasons

Every `liber`, seal action, worshiper, and speaker was rechecked across the fourteen rows. `Redemisti nos` was protected from an alternate pronoun, and `millia millium` was not normalized to myriads. `Divinitatem` remains divinity rather than being collapsed into power or wealth. The later plain `O Lord` at 5:9 receives no repeated YHWH marker. No source finding remains open on the translator's candidate.

Canonical terminology

Book, seal, open, loose, worthy, Lion, tribe of Judah, Root of David, Lamb, slain, horn, eye, seven spirits, harp, golden bowl, fragrance, prayer, saint, new song, redeem, blood, kingdom, priest, reign, angel, living creature, elder, worship, power, divinity, wisdom, strength, honor, glory, blessing, and might govern later recurrences. `Liber` is book; `phiala` is bowl; `animalia` remains living creatures.

Chapter 6

Chapter movement

The Lamb opens six seals. Four thunderous summons disclose white, red, black, and pale horses carrying conquest, removed peace, measured scarcity, and Death with the realm of the dead. The fifth seal moves beneath the altar, where slain souls cry for judgment and receive white robes and a little further rest. The sixth seal convulses earth, sun, moon, stars, heaven, mountains, and islands, driving every human rank into hiding before the face on the throne and the Lamb's wrath.

Governing Latin

The first rider goes out `vincens ut vinceret`, conquering so that he might conquer. The red rider receives power to remove peace so people kill one another. The black rider holds `stateram`; the price voice specifies `Bilibris tritici denario et tres bilibres hordei denario`. The pale rider is named `Mors`, while `infernus` follows. The altar souls ask with present `non judicas, et non vindicas`; their fellow servants and brothers are to be completed. The sixth seal's repeated `factus`, `ceciderunt`, `recessit`, and `motæ sunt` carries the cosmic sequence.

Vulgate-specific readings

All four living-creature summons retain both `Come` and `see`. The wheat unit is two pounds, and the barley price is three such two-pound measures; wine and oil are not to be harmed. Death receives authority over `the four parts of the earth`, not an imported fractional wording. `Infernus` remains the realm of the dead. The whole moon becomes like blood, the fig tree casts unripe figs, heaven withdraws like a rolled book, and the final verse calls it the great day of `their` wrath.

Ambiguities preserved

The riders' identities beyond the names supplied are not explained. The subject of the market voice is only something like a voice in the creatures' midst. `Until their fellow servants and brothers ... should be completed` leaves the passive completion unexplained rather than adding the absent noun `number`. The plural `ipsorum` in `day of their wrath` is preserved without reducing it to one antecedent. The four parts of the earth remain the Latin's formulation.

Clarity decisions

Each seal opens with the same sentence rhythm, allowing the changing horse, rider, grant, and effect to be heard clearly. The two-pound unit is stated once in full and then as `three two-pound measures`, preserving the repeated `bilibris` without mechanical clutter. Verse 6:10 keeps the source's present challenge, `do you not judge and avenge`, rather than changing its tense. Semicolons sustain the sixth seal's chain without breaking the one unfolding vision.

Corrections and reasons

The direct draft's future-shaped question at 6:10 was corrected to the present `do you not judge and avenge`, matching `non judicas, et non vindicas`. Independent review also corrected 6:16 from past `said` to present `say`, preserving the visionary shift in `et dicunt`. The `bilibris` prices remain exact two-pound measures, `infernus` remains distinct from the later lake of fire, and both `four parts` and plural `their wrath` retain the source's forms.

Canonical terminology

Seal, Lamb, living creature, come and see, horse, crown, conquer, sword, peace, balance, denarius, two-pound measure, Death, realm of the dead, authority, soul, altar, testimony, judge, avenge, blood, white robe, earthquake, wrath, and great day establish recurring Book 66 language. `Infernus` is the realm of the dead; `bestia` is beast; `liber` remains book even in the rolled-heaven image.

Chapter 7

Chapter movement

The seal judgments pause while four angels restrain the earth's winds and an east-rising angel commands protection until God's servants are sealed. John hears the exact Israelite total and the twelve equal tribal counts. The vision then opens to an innumerable multitude from every nation, tribe, people, and tongue, clothed in white before God and the Lamb. An elder's question interprets them through great tribulation, blood-washed robes, temple service, divine shelter, the Lamb's shepherding, waters of life, and tears removed.

Governing Latin

The first movement is governed by fourfold `quatuor`, restrained `ventos`, the living God's `signum`, and `signemus ... in frontibus`. `centum quadraginta quatuor millia` is followed by twelve repeated `duodecim millia signati` clauses in the supplied tribal order. The multitude's fourfold origin is `gentibus, et tribubus, et populis, et linguis`. `Domine mi` governs John's respectful human address. `habitabit super illos`, `reget illos`, `vitæ fontes aquarum`, and `absterget ... omnem lacrimam` govern the closing promise.

Vulgate-specific readings

The list begins Judah, Reuben, and Gad and includes Levi and Joseph exactly where the Clementine extract places them. The multitude says salvation belongs to God and the Lamb. The sevenfold praise includes brightness, power, and strength as distinct terms. John's 7:14 address is lowercase `my lord`, not a covenant-title marker. The enthroned one will dwell over the multitude; the Lamb will shepherd them; and he leads them to `the fountains of waters of life`, not to a substituted phrase about living waters.

Ambiguities preserved

`Signum` and `signemus` carry sign, mark, and sealing force; `seal` follows the stated sealing action without explaining the sign's form. The relation between the heard numbered company and the subsequently seen multitude is not resolved. `Habitabit super illos` remains the spatially unusual `dwell over them`. `Reget` can express rule or pastoral governance; `shepherd` fits the Lamb's leading action while the editorial records the underlying ruling verb.

Clarity decisions

The exact tribal list retains one repeated clause per tribe and semicolons at the source verse divisions so no name or count is absorbed. The multitude's acclamation and the angels' sevenfold response remain separate quotations. The elder dialogue keeps question, John's answer, and the elder's explanation visibly distinct. The future sequence of dwelling, freedom from hunger and heat, shepherding, leading, and divine wiping is kept in source order.

Corrections and reasons

The divine-title audit fixed 7:14 as `My lord` because John addresses the interpreting elder; no YHWH parenthetical or divine capitalization was permitted there. All twelve names and counts were checked against the lane in order, totaling 144,000 without relabeling a tribe. `Habitabit super illos` and `vitæ fontes aquarum` were kept in their exact image families. No imported identification of either company was added.

Canonical terminology

Seal, servant, forehead, tribe, children of Israel, thousand, nation, people, tongue, multitude, white robe, palm, salvation, worship, blessing, brightness, thanksgiving, power, strength, great tribulation, blood of the Lamb, temple, serve, dwell, shepherd, fountain, waters of life, and tear govern later recurrences. Human `Domine mi` is lowercase my lord at 7:14.

Chapter 8

Chapter movement

The Lamb's seventh seal brings roughly half an hour of heavenly silence. Seven angels receive trumpets, while another angel joins all the saints' prayers with incense at the golden altar; altar fire cast to earth answers with thunder, voices, lightning, and earthquake. The first four trumpets then strike earth and vegetation, sea and sea life, rivers and fountains, and finally the heavenly lights. A single eagle crosses midheaven with three woes for the remaining trumpets.

Governing Latin

`sigillum septimum` and `quasi media hora` govern the silent opening. The altar scene repeats `thuribulum`, `incensa`, `orationibus sanctorum`, hand, smoke, and altar fire before its earthly signs. Each judgment begins `angelus tuba cecinit`. The recurring `tertia pars` must remain one-third through earth, trees, sea, creatures, ships, rivers, waters, sun, moon, stars, day, and night. `Absinthium` names Wormwood, and `unius aquilæ` fixes one eagle as the final visionary speaker.

Vulgate-specific readings

The silence is about half an hour. The angel is given much incense to offer with all the saints' prayers, and the smoke ascends from his hand before God. Hail and fire are mingled `in blood`; the sea becomes blood; creatures `having souls in the sea` die. Wormwood is the star's name, and bitter waters kill many people. The day fails to shine for its third part, the night likewise, and one eagle—not an unspecified angel—utters the three woes.

Ambiguities preserved

The compressed `ut daret de orationibus` joins incense and prayers without defining their metaphysical relation; `with` makes the liturgical coordination lucid without an explanatory theory. The gender compression in `grando, et ignis, mista in sanguine` is not used to exclude either hail or fire from the blood image. `Creaturæ eorum` is difficult within the sea-death clause; English now retains the unresolved `their` without inventing its antecedent. The eagle's speech does not identify anything beyond the three trumpet-angels yet to sound.

Clarity decisions

The altar sequence uses one action per clause—arrival, gift, offering, ascent, filling, casting—so agency remains visible. Repeated one-third formulas are not varied stylistically because their recurrence carries the vision's measured structure. `Two-thirds` is never substituted. The fourth trumpet sentence states separately the darkened luminaries and diminished day and night, while the final eagle sentence preserves one continuous threefold woe cry.

Corrections and reasons

The direct translation was checked against all thirteen rows and twelve joins. Independent review restored `their` at 8:9 for `eorum`; the pronoun remains unresolved rather than being deleted or assigned an invented antecedent. `Incensa multa` remains much incense, every one-third fraction remains exact, and the total green grass, named Wormwood star, single eagle, and `souls` for `animas` are retained. No later trumpet event is anticipated or imported into chapter 8.

Canonical terminology

Seal, silence, half hour, angel, trumpet, golden censer, incense, saints' prayers, altar, throne, fire, earth, thunder, voices, lightning, earthquake, hail, blood, third part, sea, soul, ship, river, fountain, Wormwood, bitter, eagle, woe, and inhabitants of the earth govern the trumpet cycle. `Tuba canere` is sound the trumpet; `Absinthium` is Wormwood; fractions remain explicit third parts.

Chapter 9

Chapter movement

The fifth trumpet opens the abyss: a fallen star receives its key, smoke darkens sun and air, and locusts emerge under a five-month restraint that permits torment but not killing. Their composite warlike bodies and their king lead into the notice that one woe has passed. The sixth trumpet then releases four Euphrates angels for the exact appointed time; the two-hundred-million cavalry kills a third of humanity by fire, smoke, and sulfur, yet the survivors do not do penance from their idolatry, murders, sorceries, fornication, or thefts.

Governing Latin

The opening is governed by ‘stellam de cælo cecidisse’ and ‘data est ei clavis putei abyssi’ (9:1), which keep the fall anterior to the key-giving without naming the star as an angel. The restraint sequence depends upon ‘ne læderent ... nisi tantum homines’ and ‘ne occiderent ... sed ut cruciarent mensibus quinque’ (9:4–5). The locust inventory repeats ‘similes/sicut/tamquam,’ ‘habebant,’ and ‘caudæ’ (9:7–11). The second half is ordered by ‘in horam, et diem, et mensem, et annum,’ the exact cavalry expression ‘vicies millies dena millia,’ and the fire-smoke-sulfur triad (9:15–19); present ‘procedit’ at 9:17 remains distinct from imperfect ‘procedebant’ at 9:18 before two penance clauses close the chapter.

Vulgate-specific readings

The source’s ‘signum Dei’ is ‘mark of God,’ kept distinct from the preceding seal family. The locusts may torment for five months but may not kill; sought death itself flees. The king receives all three supplied names: Hebrew Abaddon, Greek Apollyon, and Latin Destroyer for ‘Exterminans.’ The cavalry number is stated as two hundred million without replacing the exact scale by an indefinite multitude. ‘Hyacinthinas’ remains hyacinth-colored; the horse tails are serpent-like and possess heads; and the final clauses retain demons, five material classes of idols, murders, sorceries, fornication, and thefts.

Ambiguities preserved

The fallen star’s identity is not explained: ‘ei’ and the unexpressed subject of ‘aperuit’ are represented by ‘it,’ leaving the vision’s personification without a supplied name. The comparison ‘similitudines locustarum, similes equis’ remains visibly repetitive instead of being converted into an interpretive creature label. At 9:20, ‘ut non adorarent’ remains a purpose-shaped consequence of the absent penance rather than becoming a doctrinal explanation. No identity or symbolic meaning is supplied for the four bound angels, their appointment, the locust features, or the three plagues.

Clarity decisions

The perfect infinitive at 9:1 becomes ‘a star that had fallen,’ making the fall’s anterior relation audible in English. Repeated Latin comparison words are carried through as ‘like,’ ‘as though,’ and ‘resembling’ without deleting any feature. The compressed numerical expression at 9:16 is expanded to its exact value, two hundred million, while the following sentence still states that John heard their number. Semicolons preserve the carried sixth-trumpet voice from 9:13 into its command at 9:14 and the unclosed works-of-hands construction from 9:20 into the final vice list at 9:21.

Corrections and reasons

The drafting audit made the anterior force of ‘cecidisse’ explicit as ‘had fallen,’ retained ‘anything green,’ restored all three locust-king labels, and expressed the cavalry total exactly. Independent review corrected 9:17 from past ‘proceeded’ to present ‘proceeds’ for ‘procedit,’ preserving its deliberate tense contrast with imperfect ‘procedebant’ at 9:18. The locust armor keeps all three adjectives, and the final verses remain syntactically connected while distinguishing penance ‘for’ handworks from penance ‘from’ the four concluding acts.

Canonical terminology

Tuba is trumpet; abyssus is abyss; puteus is pit; locustæ are locusts; scorpius is scorpion; potestas is power; cruciatus is torment; plaga is plague; and væ is woe. Signum is mark here, distinct from signaculum as seal. Angelus abyssi is angel of the abyss. Pœnitentiam agere remains do penance, dæmonia are demons, simulacra are idols, veneficia are sorceries, fornicatio is fornication, and furta are thefts. Fire, smoke, and sulfur retain their exact repeated order.

Chapter 10

Chapter movement

A mighty angel descends in cloud, rainbow, sunlight, and pillars of fire, holding an open little book while standing upon sea and earth. His lion-like cry releases seven thunder voices, but John is commanded to seal rather than write their speech. The raised-hand oath announces that there will be no more time and that God’s mystery will be consummated with the seventh trumpet. The heavenly voice then sends John to take and devour the book; sweetness fills his mouth, bitterness his belly, and renewed prophecy is required toward nations, peoples, tongues, and many kings.

Governing Latin

The visual movement rests on ‘angelum fortem ... amictum nube,’ ‘iris in capite ejus,’ and ‘pedes ... columnæ ignis’ (10:1), followed by the spatial contrast of right foot on sea and left on earth (10:2). ‘Locuta sunt septem tonitrua voces suas’ is deliberately repeated around John’s intention to write, while ‘Signa ... et noli ea scribere’ orders sealing and non-writing (10:3–4). The oath’s three created realms culminate in ‘tempus non erit amplius’ and ‘consummabitur mysterium Dei’ (10:6–7). ‘Devora,’ ‘amaricari ventrem,’ and ‘dulce tamquam mel’ govern the enacted book sequence (10:9–10).

Vulgate-specific readings

‘Libellum’ is an open little book at 10:2, while the later source uses ‘librum,’ represented as book at 10:8–10. The seven thunders utter their own voices, and their content is sealed and not written. ‘Tempus non erit amplius’ remains ‘there will be no more time’ rather than being silently narrowed to delay. The mystery is ‘consummated,’ and ‘evangelizavit’ remains ‘evangelized.’ John’s required renewed prophecy preserves the exact order nations, peoples, tongues, and many kings, with ‘many’ modifying kings alone.

Ambiguities preserved

The angel is described but not identified beyond ‘another mighty angel.’ The source does not reveal what the seven thunders said, so the reader supplies neither summary nor interpretation. ‘No more time’ retains the breadth of ‘tempus’ rather than deciding whether the vision emphasizes duration, delay, or both. The book’s symbolic identity is not explained. At 10:9, the indirect request ‘dicens ei, ut daret mihi librum’ remains visibly a request that he should give the book, rather than being recast as an unsupported direct quotation.

Clarity decisions

The long oath in 10:6 is divided by repeated ‘and’ phrases so heaven, earth, and sea each retain their contents while remaining one oath. ‘When he begins to sound the trumpet’ makes the inceptive ‘cœperit’ explicit without moving the mystery’s future consummation. The heavenly voice’s renewed instruction is quoted directly because the Latin supplies its imperative wording. Sweetness and bitterness are ordered twice—predicted in 10:9 and experienced in 10:10—so the reversal of bodily location cannot be missed aloud.

Corrections and reasons

The self-audit preserved ‘little book’ only where ‘libellus’ occurs and used ‘book’ for the later ‘liber’ forms, preventing an unrecorded lexical collapse. It retained ‘Seal’ for imperative ‘Signa’ and restored the prohibition ‘do not write them.’ The oath was checked to include all three created realms and all their contents. The final commission was corrected against silent scope drift by keeping nations, peoples, tongues, and many kings in the source order, rather than allowing ‘many’ to broaden across every group.

Canonical terminology

Angelus fortis is mighty angel; nubes is cloud; iris is rainbow; libellus is little book and liber is book. Tonitrua are thunders, signare is seal, and scribere is write. Sæcula sæculorum remains ages of ages; mysterium Dei is mystery of God; consummare is consummate; and evangelizare is evangelize. Prophetare is prophesy. Gentes, populi, linguæ, and reges remain nations, peoples, tongues, and kings in their supplied sequence.

Chapter 11

Chapter movement

John receives a reed and a command to measure the temple, altar, and worshipers while excluding the outer court given to the nations. Two witnesses prophesy in sackcloth for 1,260 days, exercise fire, drought, blood, and plague powers, and are then conquered and killed by the abyss-beast. Their bodies lie exposed in the spiritually named great city until God’s life-spirit enters them and a heavenly voice summons them upward. Earthquake, the passing second woe, and the seventh trumpet lead into heavenly reign and judgment, ending with the opened temple, the ark of God’s testament, and storm signs.

Governing Latin

The measuring command is controlled by ‘calamus similis virgæ,’ the three objects ‘templum ... altare ... adorantes,’ and the opposed ‘atrium ... ejice foras, et ne metiaris’ (11:1–2). The objectless ‘dabo duobus testibus meis’ opens the witness sequence, whose identities are described by ‘duæ olivæ et duo candelabra’ before their powers and testimony are narrated (11:3–7). The death-to-ascent movement repeats ‘corpora eorum,’ ‘tres dies et dimidium,’ and sight verbs (11:8–13). The seventh trumpet is governed by ‘Factum est regnum,’ singular ‘regnabit,’ and the judgment infinitives, before ‘arca testamenti’ and the final signs (11:15–19).

Vulgate-specific readings

The outer court is commanded to be cast outside and not measured. At 11:3, ‘I will give to my two witnesses’ remains without an invented object such as power. The witnesses are two olive trees and two lampstands before the Lord of the earth. Their bodies lie in streets of the city spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where their Lord was crucified. The earthquake kills ‘names of people—seven thousand,’ retaining the Clementine expression rather than reducing it to a generic count. The heavenly sanctuary contains the ark of his testament, not a silently substituted covenant term.

Ambiguities preserved

The source does not state what is given in ‘dabo duobus testibus meis,’ so the English preserves its objectless form. It does not identify the two witnesses, the beast, or the great city beyond the descriptions it supplies. ‘Regnabit’ at 11:15 remains singular ‘he will reign’ without deciding in the reader whether its immediate referent is the Lord, his Christ, or their unified reign. The spiritual naming of Sodom and Egypt is retained without symbolic exposition, and no chronology is added to the two forty-two-month and 1,260-day statements.

Clarity decisions

English at 11:2 now reads ‘the court that is outside the temple, cast it outside,’ making the court the imperative's direct object while preserving both `foris` and `foras`. The direct speech begun at 11:1 remains open through the witness promise at 11:3. At 11:13, dashes hold ‘names of people—seven thousand’ as the earthquake's exact killed expression. The elder speech remains open from 11:16 through 11:18, while the reward-and-destruction infinitives keep their shared time relation.

Corrections and reasons

Independent review corrected 11:2 because ‘cast outside the court’ could make the court a spatial complement and omit the direct object of `atrium ... ejice foras`; ‘the court ... cast it outside’ restores that object and both outside relations. The audit rejected adding ‘power’ after ‘I will give,’ restored ‘names of people—seven thousand’ for `nomina hominum`, and retained ‘ark of his testament’ under the binding `testamentum` ruling.

Canonical terminology

Calamus is reed, virga is rod, templum is temple, altare is altar, atrium is court, and adorare is worship. Testes are witnesses, prophetare is prophesy, saccus is sackcloth, olivæ are olive trees, and candelabra are lampstands. Bestia is beast, abyssus is abyss, and plaga is plague. Dominus is Lord here without a repeated YHWH parenthesis. Regnum is kingdom, judicium is judgment, merces is reward, and arca testamenti is ark of the testament.

Chapter 12

Chapter movement

A great heavenly sign presents the sun-clothed woman in labor; another presents the great red dragon poised against her child. The male son is born, destined to rule all nations, and caught up to God, while the woman flees to a divinely prepared wilderness place. Michael’s battle expels the ancient serpent and his angels, prompting the proclamation of salvation, kingdom, Christ’s authority, and victory through the Lamb’s blood and testimony. The dragon then persecutes the woman, sends a river after her, is thwarted by the earth, and turns to war against the rest of her seed before an unnamed singular figure stands upon the sea’s sand.

Governing Latin

The two signs are structured by ‘mulier amicta sole’ and ‘draco magnus rufus,’ with labor verbs ‘parturiens ... pariat’ and the dragon’s purpose ‘filium ejus devoraret’ (12:1–4). The child is ‘filium masculum,’ destined ‘recturus ... in virga ferrea’ and then ‘raptus ... ad Deum’ (12:5). The conflict repeats ‘draco,’ ‘projectus est,’ and the accuser’s day-and-night action before emphatic ‘ipsi vicerunt’ and the souls-not-loved clause (12:7–12). The final pursuit is governed by eagle wings, ‘tempus et tempora, et dimidium temporis,’ river imagery, ‘reliquis de semine ejus,’ and bare singular ‘stetit’ (12:13–18).

Vulgate-specific readings

The woman is with child and is tormented so that she may give birth. Her male son is to rule all nations with a rod of iron and is caught up to God and his throne. At 12:6, active plural ‘pascant’ remains ‘they might feed her,’ preserving the source’s unnamed feeders. The conquerors ‘themselves’ overcome because of the Lamb’s blood and their testimony and do not love their souls unto death. ‘Semen’ remains seed. The final verse reads simply ‘And he stood upon the sand of the sea,’ retaining the singular carried subject without naming him.

Ambiguities preserved

The signs are narrated without identifying the woman, child, stars, wilderness place, times, river, or earth-help beyond the Latin’s descriptions. The plural subject of ‘pascant’ at 12:6 remains unresolved. The announcement in 12:10 is not assigned to a named heavenly speaker. At 12:18, ‘stetit’ supplies only a third-person singular action; the English pronoun preserves that grammatical fact but does not insert ‘dragon,’ ‘John,’ or another named subject. The location and temporal symbolism remain uninterpreted in reader text.

Clarity decisions

‘In utero habens’ is expressed idiomatically as ‘being with child’ while the following labor, torment, and birth purpose all remain. The elliptical second half of 12:7 is completed in English as ‘the dragon and his angels fought,’ restoring a required predicate without adding an action. The passive expulsion sequence distinguishes the dragon being cast down from his angels being sent with him. The river clauses keep serpent and dragon as the same acting figure while allowing the earth’s repeated subject to remain emphatic.

Corrections and reasons

The self-audit repaired the elliptically rendered battle clause so both Michael's company and the dragon's company audibly fight, preventing 'and his angels' from remaining a broken fragment. It restored emphatic 'they themselves' for 'ipsi' at 12:11 and retained 'souls' for 'animas.' The feeding clause was left active and plural despite its unfamiliarity because a passive smoothing would erase the source's unnamed agency. The close was fixed as the bare 'he stood' rather than a named dragon, preserving the registered 12:18 ambiguity.

Canonical terminology

Signum is sign; mulier is woman; draco is dragon; serpens is serpent; diabolus is devil; and Satanas is Satan. Virga ferrea is rod of iron. Thronus is throne, solitudo/desertum are wilderness, and prælium is battle or war according to scale. Agnus is Lamb; testimonium is testimony; anima is soul; mandata are commands; and semen is seed. Time, times, and half a time retains the source's unexpanded temporal formula.

Chapter 13

Chapter movement

From the sea rises a beast bearing seven heads, ten horns, ten diadems, and blasphemous names. Its composite animal form, dragon-given strength and authority, healed mortal wound, worship, blasphemy, forty-two-month action, conquest of saints, and worldwide reach culminate in the patience-and-faith sentence. A second beast then rises from earth with lamb-like horns and a dragon's voice; it serves the first beast, performs signs, animates an image, compels worship, imposes a mark for commerce, and leads to the wisdom command concerning the human number 666.

Governing Latin

The first beast's inventory is fixed by 'capita septem, et cornua decem,' the separate locations of diadems and blasphemous names, and the leopard-bear-lion sequence (13:1–2). Its career repeatedly uses 'datum est' for mouth, authority, war, conquest, and global scope (13:5–8). The second beast is governed by 'cornua duo similia Agni' yet 'loquebatur sicut draco,' then by causative 'fecit/faciat' across worship, fire, image, speech, killing, and marking (13:11–16). Commerce retains 'caracterem, aut nomen ... aut numerum,' and wisdom culminates in 'Numerus enim hominis est' (13:17–18).

Vulgate-specific readings

The apparently slain head is 'as though slain to death,' and its mortal wound is healed. The Lamb is the possessor of the book of life and is the masculine referent of 'qui occisus est ab origine mundi.' The earth beast gives 'breath' to the image, the concrete animating sense of 'spiritum' here. At 13:16, the reader retains the singular 'right hand' against plural 'foreheads.' Buying and selling require one of three source alternatives: the mark, the beast's name, or the number of its name. The concluding number is the number of a man, six hundred sixty-six.

Ambiguities preserved

Neither beast is identified beyond its source descriptions, and no historical ruler, institution, geography, or chronology is supplied. Neutral 'it' keeps the beasts' grammatical agency clear without personifying them beyond the vision. The Lamb-relative at 13:8 follows the Latin agreement without moving 'from the origin of the world' to the written names. The distributive singular right hand and plural foreheads are retained without explaining the bodily pattern. 'Number of a man' is left as the source's human-number statement rather than an asserted solution.

Clarity decisions

The dragon's 'virtutem' and 'potestatem' are distinguished as strength and authority, preventing two Latin families from collapsing. Repeated passive 'it was given' remains audible to preserve granted rather than inherent agency. The causative chain in 13:13–16 is rebuilt with 'caused' and purpose clauses, but every fire, deception, image, breath, speech, death, and mark proposition remains. Dashes contain the six social classes at 13:16 while the sentence continues into the commerce restriction at 13:17.

Corrections and reasons

The self-audit corrected 13:8 from present ‘are not written’ to perfect ‘have not been written,’ preserving the source’s completed-state form. At 13:15, generic ‘spirit’ was refined to ‘breath’ because the immediate action animates the image while other spirit occurrences remain distinct. At 13:16, masculine singular ‘his right hand’ was corrected to plural-possession ‘their right hand,’ retaining a singular hand noun against plural foreheads without introducing a male individual. Every mark/name/number alternative was then rechecked across the verse boundary.

Canonical terminology

Bestia is beast, draco is dragon, Agnus is Lamb, and imago is image. Caput is head, cornu is horn, diadema is diadem, blasphemia is blasphemy, and plaga is wound or plague according to the inflicted object. Potestas is authority and virtus here is strength. Adorare is worship, vincere is conquer, patientia is patience, fides is faith, and sancti are saints. Caracter is mark, nomen is name, numerus is number, and liber vitæ is book of life.

Chapter 14

Chapter movement

The Lamb stands upon Mount Sion with 144,000 name-bearing companions. Heavenly sound becomes harp music and a new song learned only by the purchased company, whose undefilement, following, firstfruits identity, truthful mouths, and lack of blemish are stated. Three angels then proclaim the eternal Gospel, Babylon’s fall, and the consequence of beast worship and its mark; saints’ patience and the blessed dead answer that warning. The vision closes with a Son-of-Man figure and two harvest movements: the earth is reaped, then its vineyard is gathered into God’s great winepress, whose blood extends for 1,600 stadia.

Governing Latin

The opening joins ‘Agnus … supra montem Sion’ to the 144,000 and the two written names (14:1), then repeats ‘vocem’ through many waters, great thunder, and ‘citharœdorum citharizantium’ before ‘quasi canticum novum’ (14:2–3). The company’s description repeats ‘Hi sunt/Hi sequuntur/Hi empti sunt’ and culminates in truthful mouths and no blemish (14:4–5). The angel sequence is governed by ‘Evangelium æternum,’ doubled ‘Cecidit,’ the wine-and-wrath clauses, and exact day-night unrest (14:6–13). ‘Falcem,’ ‘messis,’ ‘vindemia,’ ‘vineæ,’ and ‘lacus’ control the two harvests (14:14–20).

Vulgate-specific readings

Mount ‘Sion’ retains the supplied form. The 144,000 are purchased, called firstfruits, and described as virgins who were not defiled with women; the reader neither softens nor allegorizes these statements. The angel has an eternal Gospel in order to evangelize. Babylon makes all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. The warning preserves wine mixed with pure wine, fire and sulfur, smoke ascending unto ages of ages, and no rest day or night instead of compressing the clauses into an abstract formula. The harvest has grown dry, and the blood extent is 1,600 stadia.

Ambiguities preserved

‘What seemed like a new song’ retains ‘quasi’ without deciding whether the qualification concerns the song or John’s perception. The source does not interpret the 144,000, virginity, firstfruits, Babylon, mark, two harvests, city, winepress, blood depth, or stadia. The sudden singular condition ‘and if anyone received the mark’ remains alongside the preceding plural worshipers. At 14:13, the compact ‘Amodo jam’ is rendered as an emphatic present transition without adding an agreeing interjection absent from the Latin.

Clarity decisions

The alliterative ‘citharœdorum citharizantium in citharis suis’ becomes ‘harpists harping upon their harps,’ preserving its deliberate sound-play. ‘Dicere canticum’ is ‘utter the song,’ not a repeated generic singing verb. The three angel speeches remain separately quoted. ‘Mixtum est mero’ is kept as wine ‘mixed with pure wine,’ allowing the source’s marked mixture language to stand. The repeated sickle actions distinguish the grain harvest from the vineyard gathering, while ‘lacus’ is rendered contextually as winepress in both verses.

Corrections and reasons

The audit refined 14:8 from ‘drink from’ to the more source-shaped ‘drink of’ the wine and removed an unsupported ‘yes’ from the Spirit’s response at 14:13. The final wording, ‘From now on, says the Spirit, let them rest,’ preserves both the emphatic temporal transition and the purpose-shaped rest clause without inventing assent. The harvest was retained as having ‘grown dry’ for ‘aruit’ rather than being normalized to an unmarked ripeness word, while the separate grapes are explicitly ripe at 14:18.

Canonical terminology

Agnus is Lamb, mons Sion is Mount Sion, thronus is throne, animalia are living creatures, and seniores are elders. Canticum novum is new song; primitiæ are firstfruits; mendacium is lie; and macula is blemish. Evangelium is Gospel and evangelizare is evangelize. Adorare is worship, caracter is mark, patientia is patience, and fides is faith. Falx is sickle, messis is harvest, vinea is vineyard, and lacus in this harvest context is winepress.

Chapter 15

Chapter movement

Another great and wonderful heavenly sign reveals seven angels bearing the last seven plagues, in which God’s wrath is consummated. Upon a glassy sea mingled with fire stand those who conquered the beast, its image, and its name-number; with God’s harps they sing both Moses’s song and the Lamb’s song, magnifying the Lord God Almighty as King of the ages. The temple of the tabernacle of testimony then opens, seven linen-clothed angels emerge, seven golden bowls are given, and divine smoke bars entry until all seven plagues are consummated.

Governing Latin

The sign is framed by ‘magnum et mirabile,’ ‘plagas septem novissimas,’ and causal ‘quoniam in illis consummata est ira Dei’ (15:1). The victors are defined through three coordinated objects after ‘vicerunt’ and stand ‘super mare vitreum’ with ‘citharas Dei’ (15:2). Two separately named songs govern the acclamation, whose key title is ‘Rex sæculorum’ and whose nations worship because ‘judicia tua manifesta sunt’ (15:3–4). ‘Templum tabernaculi testimonii,’ clean bright linen, golden bands and bowls, ‘iracundiæ Dei,’ and the repeated consummation of seven plagues structure the sanctuary close (15:5–8).

Vulgate-specific readings

The sea is glassy and mingled with fire, and the conquerors stand upon it with God’s harps. The song of Moses and the song of the Lamb remain grammatically distinct even though one acclamation follows. ‘Rex sæculorum’ is ‘King of the ages,’ not a title imported from a different wording. All nations come and worship because God’s judgments have been made manifest. The sanctuary is the temple of the tabernacle of testimony. The bowls are full of God’s ‘indignation,’ distinguishing ‘iracundia’ here from the neighboring ‘ira’ wording for wrath.

Ambiguities preserved

The relation expressed by standing ‘upon’ the glassy sea is not converted into a shore or platform. The chapter does not identify the conquerors beyond their victory over the beast, image, and number of its name. It does not explain how the two named songs relate beyond their coordinated singing. ‘Pius’ is rendered ‘holy’ in the divine acclamation, but no wider theological gloss is added. The temple, tabernacle, testimony, smoke, and barred entry remain visionary images without architectural or chronological interpretation.

Clarity decisions

The opening causal clause is kept in the same sentence so the last plagues are clearly the locus of consummated wrath. At 15:2, the three victory objects are coordinated without allowing ‘of its name’ to modify the beast or image. The long song is punctuated across verses 3–4 as one sustained address. ‘Vestiti lino mundo et candido’ becomes ‘clothed in clean and bright linen,’ while ‘præcincti circa pectora’ explicitly locates the golden bands about the angels’ breasts.

Corrections and reasons

The translation audit retained ‘consummated’ at both 15:1 and 15:8 so the framing completion language remains audible. It checked and preserved the separate song of Moses and song of the Lamb, restored the narrow modifier ‘of its name’ to the number alone, and fixed ‘King of the ages’ for ‘Rex sæculorum.’ ‘Indignation’ was selected for ‘iracundia’ to keep it distinct from ‘ira’ in the same chapter and the bowls command that follows, while all seven bowl and plague counts were reverified.

Canonical terminology

Signum is sign, plaga is plague, ira is wrath, and consummare is consummate. Mare vitreum is glassy sea, cithara is harp, vincere is conquer, bestia is beast, and imago is image. Canticum is song; Agnus is Lamb; Rex sæculorum is King of the ages; and Dominus Deus omnipotens is Lord God Almighty. Templum is temple, tabernaculum is tabernacle, testimonium is testimony, phiala is bowl, iracundia is indignation, majestas is majesty, and virtus is power.

Chapter 16

Chapter movement

A great temple voice commands seven angels to pour God’s wrath bowls upon the earth. The first four strike marked worshipers, sea, rivers and fountains, and sun; blood, scorching, justice acclamations, blasphemy, and refused penance follow. The fifth darkens the beast’s throne and kingdom, and the sixth dries Euphrates for eastern kings while three frog-like spirits gather earthly kings toward battle; the thief-like beatitude interrupts before the singular gathering at Armagedon. The seventh bowl enters the air, ‘It is done’ sounds from the throne, and unprecedented earthquake, divided city, fallen nations, remembered Babylon, vanished geography, talent-like hail, and blasphemy complete the cycle.

Governing Latin

The chapter repeats ‘effudit phialam suam’ through all seven numbered agents (16:1–17). The first half is controlled by ‘vulnus sævum et pessimum,’ sea-blood ‘tamquam mortui,’ ‘omnis anima vivens,’ the blood-justice rationale, and the paired refusals ‘neque egerunt pœnitentiam’ (16:2–11). Euphrates and eastern kings lead to three mouth-sources, ‘spiritus ... in modum ranarum,’ and the gathering infinitive (16:12–14). Bare singular ‘congregabit’ precedes Armagedon, while ‘Factum est,’ the unmatched-earthquake comparison, threefold city, Babylon’s cup, fleeing geography, and talent hail govern the close (16:16–21).

Vulgate-specific readings

The sea becomes blood like that of a dead person, and every living soul in it dies. The angel of the waters addresses the Lord as the one who is and who was, the Holy One; no ‘who is to come’ phrase is added. Another voice is heard from the altar without an invented identity. People chew their tongues because of pain. The three spirits are explicitly demons performing signs. At 16:16, singular ‘he will gather’ remains unresolved before the place called in Hebrew Armagedon. The final hail is like a talent in weight, and its plague becomes exceedingly great.

Ambiguities preserved

The source does not identify ‘another’ speaking from the altar. The actor implicit in ‘congregabit’ is singular despite the preceding plural spirits; ‘he’ preserves that grammar without naming God, an angel, a spirit, or another subject. The quotation ‘Behold, I come like a thief’ is left as an abrupt embedded voice rather than being assigned by an editorial tag. The great city, cities of the nations, Babylon, three parts, eastern kings, Armagedon, and fleeing geography receive no interpretive identifications.

Clarity decisions

At 16:4, plural rivers and fountains become the English subject ‘they became blood,’ while the predicate still represents singular Latin ‘sanguis.’ The justice speeches remain separate: the angel of waters gives the blood rationale, then another from the altar confirms the judgments. The parenthetical thief-beatitude is quoted as its own speech before the unexplained singular gathering resumes. The intensified earthquake wording is retained as a deliberate repetition—nothing like it before, ‘such an earthquake, so great’—rather than being compressed.

Corrections and reasons

Self-audit refined ‘blood came to be’ at 16:4 to ‘they became blood,’ making the rivers-and-fountains result immediately intelligible without losing the blood predicate. ‘Burned with great heat’ at 16:9 was corrected to ‘were scorched with great heat,’ preserving the affliction’s source image, and the penance clause was repaired to natural English without weakening its refusal. Singular ‘he will gather’ was retained after explicit review because pluralizing it would erase the registered ‘congregabit’ ambiguity. At 16:18, singular English ‘thunder’ was corrected to plural ‘thunders’ for ‘tonitrua.’

Canonical terminology

Phiala is bowl, ira is wrath, vulnus is wound, caracter is mark, and imago is image. Anima is soul even in the sea. Flumina are rivers and fontes aquarum are fountains of waters. Dominus is Lord without a repeated YHWH parenthesis; judicium is judgment; and pœnitentiam agere is do penance. Sedes is throne, bestia is beast, draco is dragon, pseudopropheta is false prophet, and spiritus immundi are unclean spirits. Armagedon retains the Clementine spelling. Fulgura are lightning, tonitrua are thunders, terræmotus is earthquake, and grando is hail.

Chapter 17

Chapter movement

One bowl-bearing angel opens the judgment of the great harlot by joining her to many waters, earthly kings, intoxicated inhabitants, and a scarlet seven-headed beast. The desert vision dwells on the woman's royal colors, gold, stones, pearls, abominable cup, forehead name, and drunkenness from holy blood before the angel interprets beast, heads, mountains, kings, horns, and waters. The movement ends with the ten kings' divinely purposed violence against the woman and the declaration that she is the great city ruling over earthly kings.

Governing Latin

The opening sentence carries from `damnationem meretricis magnæ` in 17:1 into the kings and earth-dwellers of 17:2. Color and wealth accumulate through `coccineam`, `purpura`, `coccino`, `inaurata`, and the golden cup (17:3–4). `Mysterium` names the forehead inscription, while `sacramentum mulieris, et bestiæ` introduces the interpretation (17:5–7). The repeated `fuit/erat, et non est`, future ascent and destruction, seven mountains and kings, ten horns, and one counsel govern 17:8–13; Lamb, waters, fire, divine purpose, and kingdom complete the disclosure (17:14–18).

Vulgate-specific readings

The angel promises the woman's `condemnation`, not merely a neutral description. Earth-dwellers are made drunk from the wine of her prostitution. The beast is to ascend from the abyss, and the ten kings receive one hour of authority `after the beast` for the supplied `post bestiam`; that unusual relation is not replaced by a reading from another textual tradition. At 17:14, `Dominus dominorum` remains Lord of lords and is not harmonized to the distinct Lord of rulers in 19:16.

Ambiguities preserved

The English does not identify the woman, beast, seven mountains, seven kings, eighth king, ten kings, hour, or great city beyond the angel's own equations. `Sacramentum` is rendered mystery as elsewhere in the book, while the editorial records its lexical distinction from the inscribed `Mysterium`. The final recurrence says only that the beast was and is not; no future phrase is imported there. `Post bestiam` remains after the beast without supplying a political or chronological theory.

Clarity decisions

Quotation continues across 17:1–2 so the relative `cum qua` remains attached to the great harlot. The parenthetical life-book qualification stays inside the earth-dwellers' wondering sentence at 17:8. At 17:9, `they are seven kings` gives the seven heads their natural carried antecedent after their identification as seven mountains. The list `called, elect, and faithful` remains predicative rather than being expanded into an explanation of the Lamb's companions.

Corrections and reasons

The source audit changed 17:9 from the looser `there are seven kings` to `they are seven kings`, restoring the carried identification of the seven heads while leaving the mountain relation intact. It retained `condemnation`, the doubled wonder, the future ascent, `after the beast`, and `has a kingdom over the kings` because smoothing any of them toward more familiar English-edition wording would lose Clementine content. The two distinct Lord titles were checked and left unharmonized.

Canonical terminology

Meretrix and fornicaria are harlot; fornicatio is fornication and prostitutio is prostitution, preserving the source's lexical change. Bestia is beast, abyssus is abyss, interitus is destruction, caput is head, cornu is horn, mons is mountain, and regnum is kingdom. Agnus is Lamb. `Dominus dominorum` is Lord of lords, distinct from 19:16 `Dominus dominantium`, Lord of rulers. Mysterium and sacramentum are both rendered mystery with their Latin distinction recorded.

Chapter 18

Chapter movement

A mighty angel illuminates the earth and announces Babylon's doubled fall into demonic and unclean confinement. A heavenly voice calls God's people out, commands doubled repayment, and answers Babylon's queenly boast with one-day plagues. Kings, land traders, cargo merchants, and sea-workers then lament from afar as her judgment and riches collapse in one hour. Heaven, holy apostles, and prophets are summoned to exult; a millstone sign enacts the city's fall, and the loss of music, craft, mill, lamp, marriage voices, and finally the blood found in her seals the desolation.

Governing Latin

The fall cry doubles `Cecidit`, then doubles `custodia` for unclean spirit and hateful bird (18:2). `Reddite`, `duplicate duplicia`, and the twice-mixed cup govern repayment, while `Sedeo regina` governs the boast and reversal (18:4–8). `Una hora` punctuates the laments, and the cargo runs without interruption from `merces auri` through `mancipiorum, et animarum hominum` across 18:12–13. The source then distinguishes `in lacum navigat` from `locum incendii ejus` (18:17–18). Repeated `non ... amplius` removes sound, craft, mill, and light before blood is found in her (18:21–24).

Vulgate-specific readings

Babylon becomes a habitation of demons and a cage for every unclean spirit and every unclean and hateful bird. The repayment says `double the double`, preserving `duplicate duplicia`. The parenthesized cargo includes thyine wood, closes only after cinnamon, names bondpersons and then separately souls of people, and never imports `bodies`. The Clementine `lacum` is translated `the lake`, not silently corrected to an alternate wording, while the next verse separately has the `place` of her burning. Heaven addresses holy apostles and prophets without inventing a third group of saints at 18:20.

Ambiguities preserved

At 18:14, `amplius illa jam non invenient` retains an unnamed plural finder—`they will no longer find them`—rather than assigning the action to merchants, owners, or buyers. The exact sense of `pretiis ejus` remains her prices without an explanatory economic gloss. The startling lake-navigation wording is allowed to stand as the supplied text. Neither Babylon, her sorceries, the princes, nor the blood of all the earth's slain receives an identity beyond the vision.

Clarity decisions

`Negotiatores` at 18:11 are traders, while recurring `mercatores` remain merchants, keeping the Latin's lexical distinction audible. The long cargo inventory retains its source parentheses and verse boundary, but English articles and commas clarify the classes. At 18:22, literal trumpet replaces an invented group of trumpeters; `the sound of the trumpet` supplies only the auditory relation needed beside the voice of musicians. The mighty angel's direct speech remains open through 18:24.

Corrections and reasons

The audit restored `from her` at 18:15, which the first English line had omitted after the merchants' distant standing. It corrected 18:17 from `sails upon a lake` to `sails into the lake` for accusative `in lacum`, and 18:18 from broad `What is like` to the elliptically supplied `What city is like this great city?` It replaced invented trumpeters with the trumpet's sound at 18:22, distinguished traders from merchants, and removed the unidiomatic `lament themselves` without weakening the kings' lament.

Canonical terminology

Babylon, demon, unclean spirit, cage, fornication, plague, judgment, torment, and mourning continue their Book 66 families. Negotiatores are traders and mercatores are merchants. Merces is merchandise in the trading passage; mancipia are bondpersons, while animæ hominum are souls of people. Lignum thyinum is thyine wood, rhedæ are chariots, and jumenta are beasts of burden. Lacus is lake here, distinct from winepress in chapter 14 and the later fire lake by context; locus is place. Veneficia are sorceries.

Chapter 19

Chapter movement

Heaven answers Babylon's judgment with successive Alleluias: many crowds praise God's true justice and vengeance, the smoke rises, elders and living creatures worship, and the throne summons every servant to praise. A great multitude then sounds like waters and thunders as the Lamb's marriage arrives and his wife receives shining linen, identified as the saints' justifications. After John is forbidden to worship the angel, opened heaven reveals the Faithful and True rider, his unknown name, blood-sprinkled garment, Word-of-God name, armies, sword, rod, winepress, and distinct royal title. An angel summons birds to God's great supper before beast, kings, false prophet, fire lake, sword, and filled birds close the battle.

Governing Latin

Plural `turbarum multarum` governs the first heavenly voice, while singular `turbæ magnæ` later joins many waters and great thunders (19:1, 6). True and just judgments, the repeated `Alleluja`, and `fumus ... in sæcula sæculorum` carry the praise into the marriage (19:1–7). `Byssinum enim justificationes sunt sanctorum` interprets the granted linen (19:8). The worship prohibition turns on `conservus tuus sum` and `Testimonium ... spiritus prophetiæ` (19:10). `Fidelis`, `Verax`, `aspersa sanguine`, `Verbum Dei`, the two-sided sword, iron rod, wrath-winepress, and the two-line garment title govern the rider (19:11–16).

Vulgate-specific readings

The fine linen is the `justifications of the saints`; the reader preserves that marked plural rather than silently replacing it with a single interpretive gloss such as deeds or righteousness. The rider's garment is sprinkled with blood before the battle described here, and his name is called the Word of God. His mouth-sword is sharp on both sides, and he treads the winepress of the wine of the fury of Almighty God's wrath. At 19:16, `Dominus dominantium` is Lord of rulers, not the Lord of lords wording supplied at 17:14. Tribunes remain a named rank in the birds' supper.

Ambiguities preserved

The editorial does not decide whether `justificationes` denotes verdicts, righteous acts, or another aspect of the saints' vindication; the Latin-derived noun remains visible. The rider's written name stays unknown to everyone except himself despite the Word-of-God name stated next. The angel is identified only as John's fellow servant, not assigned a further identity. Pronouns around beast and false prophet remain governed by the immediate vision without importing a theory of their historical referents.

Clarity decisions

The plural crowds of 19:1 remain distinct from the singular great multitude of 19:6 even as both produce vast heavenly sound. At 19:10, `a fellow servant of yours and of your brothers` carries the repeated genitive relation in natural English, while `he says to me` preserves present `dicit` after past `dixit` in 19:9. `A sharp sword edged on both sides` makes `ex utraque parte acutus` clear without replacing its concrete shape by an edition-derived formula. The bird invitation remains one carried speech across 19:17–18, and the final semicolon keeps the live casting separate from the sword death of the rest.

Corrections and reasons

The audit repaired 19:10's stiff `your fellow servant and that of your brothers` to `a fellow servant of yours and of your brothers`, retaining both relationships and the brothers' testimony, and restored present `he says` for `dicit` after the preceding past speech verbs. At 19:15, `two-sided sharp sword` became `a sharp sword edged on both sides`, preserving every source component in lucid English. The review retained `justifications`, `sprinkled with blood`, the full repeated winepress phrase, tribunes, and Lord of rulers because familiar substitutions would flatten specifically Clementine wording.

Canonical terminology

Alleluia, salvation, glory, power, judgment, harlot, servant, elder, living creature, throne, Lamb, marriage, wife, supper, testimony, prophecy, horse, diadem, Word of God, army, iron rod, beast, false prophet, lake of fire, sulfur, and ages of ages remain stable. Byssinum is fine linen and justificationes is justifications. Dominus Deus omnipotens is Lord God Almighty. `Rex regum et Dominus dominantium` is King of kings and Lord of rulers. Tribuni are tribunes.

Chapter 20

Chapter movement

An angel descends with abyss-key and chain, seizes the dragon under all four of his names, binds and seals him for a thousand years, and reserves a brief release. Thrones, judgment, beheaded witnesses, beast-refusers, first resurrection, priesthood, and a thousand-year reign fill the central vision. Satan's release gathers Gog and Magog like sea-sand around the saints and beloved city, but heavenly fire devours them and the devil enters the fire-and-sulfur lake. The scene then opens onto the great white throne, fleeing creation, opened books and life-book, works-based judgment, the sea's dead, death and the realm of the dead, second death, and the final life-book verdict.

Governing Latin

`Clavem abyssi` and `catenam magnam` introduce the dragon's seizure, while `annos mille` and `donec consummentur` govern binding and release (20:1–3). `Sedes`, given judgment, beheaded souls, refused beast-worship and mark, living, reigning, first resurrection, and second-death power structure 20:4–6. The release sequence repeats `solvetur`, `exibit`, `seducet`, and `congregabit`, then moves through Gog and Magog to fire (20:7–9). The unfinished `ubi et bestia` at 20:9 receives its predicate only with `et pseudopropheta cruciabuntur` at 20:10. `Libri`, the distinct `liber ... vitæ`, works, sea, death, `infernus`, and fire lake govern 20:11–15.

Vulgate-specific readings

The dragon is explicitly the ancient serpent, devil, and Satan. He is bound for one thousand years and later must be loosed for a little time. The first resurrection belongs to those who live and reign with Christ, and the second death has no power over them. The 20:9–10 verse break remains grammatically open after `where also the beast`; the false prophet and plural torment complete that Clementine construction in the next verse. `Infernus` is the realm of the dead and is cast with death into the fire lake, so it is not translated with a punitive term that would collapse the two images.

Ambiguities preserved

The source does not identify those who sit upon the thrones, explain the thousand years, or resolve every relation between beheaded souls and the following beast-refusers. Gog, Magog, the saints' camp, and beloved city receive no historical map. At 20:9–10, the plural torment grammatically names beast and false prophet after the devil's casting; the English does not add an unsupplied verb of prior presence or broaden the predicate by commentary. The books' contents are stated only as written works.

Clarity decisions

English supplies `it` as the natural abyss-object of `shut` at 20:3 while retaining the seal over the dragon. The long throne sentence uses semicolons to keep the unnamed sitters, given judgment, beheaded souls, beast-refusers, and reign distinct. The line ending at `the beast` in 20:9 is deliberate: verse-level auditability is preserved without falsely closing a construction whose verb stands in 20:10. At 20:13, `each one was judged` renders the impersonal judgment of individuals in immediate English.

Corrections and reasons

No semantic correction was required after the direct verse comparison. The audit nevertheless rejected three tempting normalizations: it did not close 20:9 by inserting `was`, did not turn the unnamed throne sitters into a named group, and did not call `infernus` hell. It reverified every thousand-year recurrence, the exact first-resurrection and second-death relations, source order `realm of the dead and death` at 20:14, and the separate plural books and singular book of life.

Canonical terminology

Abyss, key, chain, dragon, ancient serpent, devil, Satan, beast, image, mark, testimony, word of God, Christ, resurrection, priest, Gog, Magog, saints, city, lake of fire and sulfur, throne, book, works, and second death continue their fixed families. Sedes is throne. Infernus is the realm of the dead, kept distinct from stagnum ignis, the lake of fire. Mille anni remains one thousand years at every occurrence. Pseudopropheta is false prophet.

Chapter 21

Chapter movement

New heaven and earth replace the first creation and the sea disappears. John sees holy new Jerusalem descend as an adorned bride, while the throne announces God's dwelling with humanity, wiped tears, abolished death and grief, all things new, free living water, inheritance, sonship, and the fire lake's contrary portion. A bowl-bearing angel then reveals the bride as the descending city from a high mountain. Glory, jasper light, twelvefold gates and foundations, golden measurement, equal dimensions, angelic-human measure, gold, glass, gems, and pearls build the city until temple, sun, moon, and night yield to God and the Lamb; nations enter its light, but defilement, abomination, and lie remain outside the Lamb's life book.

Governing Latin

`Cælum novum et terram novam` and `mare jam non est` frame the opening, while emphatic `ego Joannes` sees the city-bride (21:1–2). The throne voice repeats `cum eis`, names every abolished grief, and is answered by `nova facio omnia`, `fidelissima`, Alpha and Omega, free water, possession, and the second death (21:3–8). The second vision is controlled by bride and wife, descent, twelve gates and foundations, `mensuram arundineam auream`, twelve thousand stadia, and `mensura hominis, quæ est angeli` (21:9–17). Jasper, gold, clean and translucent glass, twelve stones, twelve pearls, divine temple and light, open gates, and the Lamb's life book govern 21:18–27.

Vulgate-specific readings

The source explicitly says `I, John`, and the writing command calls the words `most faithful and true`. The city's length, height, and width are equal; the wall is 144 cubits by `the measure of a man, which is that of an angel`, without explanatory paraphrase. The sixth stone is carnelian, continuing the book's rendering of the sardius family. The Lord God Almighty and Lamb are the city's temple. At 21:27, only those written in the Lamb's book of life enter; no imported clause about saved nations or alternate life-tree reading is added.

Ambiguities preserved

The sea's absence, the relation between bride and city, the dimensional form, the human measure that is an angel's, and the city's material images remain uninterpreted. `Nomina inscripta` stays associated with the gates without deciding the physical placement of every inscription. The list's `execratis` remains accursed rather than being expanded into a cause. The book of life belongs grammatically to the Lamb, but the English adds no theory of inscription or citizenship.

Clarity decisions

`Humanity` renders plural `hominibus` collectively while allowing the following `them` and `his people` to remain natural and preserving the distinction from singular `populus`. The wall's verbless foundation clause receives the minimal English `had`. At 21:21, `one for each; and each individual gate was of a single pearl` clarifies `per singulas` and the repeated singular pearl relation without reducing the twelvefold count. Semicolons keep the four equal dimensions and gemstone inventory audible.

Corrections and reasons

The audit refined 21:21's broken `twelve pearls, each one` into `twelve pearls, one for each`, then retained the source's second statement that each individual gate was of one pearl. It reverified emphatic John, `most faithful`, every numerical measure, all twelve gemstones in order, and the Lord God Almighty title. The closing verse was kept free of imported words and preserves defiled thing, one making abomination and lie, and those written in the Lamb's life book.

Canonical terminology

New heaven, new earth, sea, holy city, new Jerusalem, bride, husband, tabernacle, people, tear, death, mourning, crying, pain, Alpha and Omega, water of life, son, second death, Lamb, glory, wall, gate, angel, tribe, apostle, measuring reed, stadium, cubit, jasper, sapphire, chalcedony, emerald, sardonyx, carnelian, chrysolite, beryl, topaz, chrysoprase, hyacinth, amethyst, pearl, temple, lamp, and book of life are fixed. Dominus Deus omnipotens is Lord God Almighty.

Chapter 22

Chapter movement

The closing vision flows from the splendid river, the tree of life on both sides, monthly fruit, healing leaves, abolished curse, divine thrones, serving, unveiled sight, forehead name, divine light, and reign through ages of ages. The angel certifies the words and announces what must happen soon; Christ's swift coming blesses the keeper. John identifies himself as hearer and seer, is again forbidden to worship the angel, and is told not to seal the near prophecy. Moral imperatives, soon-coming reward, Alpha and Omega, robe-washers, outsiders, Jesus's root-and-stock witness, and the Spirit-bride invitation lead to the add-and-subtract warning. The final witness says he comes soon, and the book answers with Amen, Come Lord Jesus, and grace with all.

Governing Latin

The river proceeds from singular `sede Dei et Agni`, while 22:3 unexpectedly has plural `sedes ... erunt`; singular `ejus/illi` then governs servants and service. Tree, twelve fruits, individual months, leaves, face, forehead name, light, and ages of ages carry 22:1–5. `Fidelissima`, `cito`, and the distinct `velociter` govern the angelic certification and first coming promise (22:6–7). John repeats hearing, seeing, falling, prohibition, and worship before near time and four paired moral clauses (22:8–11). Alpha and Omega, `lavant stolas suas in sanguine Agni`, `potestas ... in ligno vitæ`, the outside list, `radix, et genus David`, invitation, `libro vitæ`, and final grace govern 22:12–21.

Vulgate-specific readings

The first verse has one throne of God and the Lamb, but 22:3 has plural thrones by `sedes ... erunt`; the reader preserves that grammatical shift. `Cito` is soon at 22:6, 12, and 20, while `velociter` is distinctly swiftly at 22:7. The blessed wash their robes in the blood of the Lamb and thereby have right to the tree of life. Jesus is the root and stock of David. The subtraction warning names the book of life, not an alternate tree reading, and the final grace is with all of you.

Ambiguities preserved

After the plural thrones, singular `his` and `him` remain singular without deciding how the God-and-Lamb relation should be analytically distributed. `Potestas ... in ligno vitæ` is rendered as right to the tree, but the editorial keeps the underlying in-relation visible rather than treating the English gloss as exhaustive. Speaker transitions among angel, Jesus, Spirit, bride, hearer, and closing witness remain unexpanded. The source does not explain the moral imperatives' relation to the nearness announcement.

Clarity decisions

The tree remains singular while occupying the street's midst and both sides of the river. John’s fragmentary `Et ego Joannes, qui audivi, et vidi hæc` receives the minimal `am he who` needed for an English sentence. The fellow-servant relation at 22:9 is distributed across John, brother prophets, and keepers without adding a new class; 22:10 then preserves present `he says to me` for `dicit`, distinct from past `dixit` at 22:9. At 22:14, `through the gates they may enter into the city` preserves the Latin sequence and instrument while keeping each verse independently auditable; the sentinel contract separately accepts either faithful English order.

Corrections and reasons

The audit restored present `he says to me` at 22:10 for `dicit`, retaining the prophetic tense shift after past `dixit` in the preceding verse. It reordered the final clause of 22:14 from `enter the city through the gates` to `through the gates they may enter into the city`, bringing `per portas ... in civitatem` forward without changing its meaning. It retained `right` for `potestas` while documenting the literal relation, preserved plural thrones at 22:3, and distinguished swiftly from soon. The robe-and-blood reading, root and stock, book of life, repeated book warnings, Lord Jesus address, and all-of-you grace were each reverified against the frozen lane.

Canonical terminology

River, water of life, crystal, throne, tree of life, fruit, leaf, healing, curse, servant, face, forehead, lamp, sun, Lord God, prophet, prophecy, book, angel, worship, Alpha and Omega, robe, blood, Lamb, gate, city, Spirit, bride, church, root, stock, morning star, plague, book of life, testimony, grace, and ages of ages complete the Book 66 families. Cito is soon; velociter is swiftly; gratis is freely. Dominus at 22:20–21 is plain Lord after the book's sole first-use marker.